BOOK REVIEW DIGEST

1930

PERIODICAL DEPARTMENT

PERIODICAL DEPARTMENT

THE
BOOK REVIEW DIGEST

TWENTY-SIXTH ANNUAL CUMULATION
(MARCH 1930 TO FEBRUARY 1931 INCLUSIVE)

BOOKS OF 1930

EDITED BY
MARION A. KNIGHT, MERTICE M. JAMES,
and RUTH N. LECHLITNER

NEW YORK
THE H. W. WILSON COMPANY
1931 x51

B64 26 II

838743

PERIODICAL

Printed in the U. S. A.

SAN FRANCISCO
PUBLIC LIBRARY

PREFACE

The twenty-sixth Annual of the Book Review Digest cumulates the monthly issues from March, 1930, to February, 1931, inclusive. No single number for February is issued, the new material for that month being combined with the entries from all previous monthly issues of the year covered by the Annual. No 1931 books are included, but periodicals of January, 1931, in which reviews of 1930 books appear, are represented.

In this volume will be found additional reviews for some books entered in the 1929 Annual. The next August cumulation and 1931 Annual will in their turn gather up reviews which were too late to be entered in the present volume. The work of gathering these additional reviews goes on continuously.

References to reviews, without excerpts, mean that these reviews are descriptive rather than critical, or that they contain nothing compactly quotable. References to library bulletins, indicating that the book has been purchased by these libraries, are given as an additional endorsement of the book.

The attention of new users of the Book Review Digest is called to the classification of Fiction by subject included in the full subject and title index at the back of the volume. For convenience of reference all biographies are brought together in the index under the heading Biography, as well as under the names of the subjects. Books of poems and children's books are entered under the headings Poetry (individual authors) and Children's literature, respectively.

Once more grateful acknowledgment is made to the other members of the staff, Lillian Bender, Jean Sacchitiello, Evelyn Smith, and Dorothy Nixon, for their efficient work and fine spirit; also to Mary E. Furbeck, editor of Public Affairs Information Service, for her monthly List of Documents for Use in the Smaller Libraries.

M. A. K.

Publications from which Digests of Reviews are made

Am Anthropol—American Anthropologist. $6 George Banta Publishing Company, 450-454 Ahnaip St., Menasha, Wis.

Am Chem Soc J—Journal of the American Chemical Society. $7.50. Charles L. Parsons, Sec., Mills Building, 1709 G St., N.W., Washington, D.C.

Am Econ R—American Economic Review. $5 American Econ. Assn., Evanston, Ill.

Am Hist R—American Historical Review. $5. Macmillan Company, 60 Fifth Av., New York.

Am J Psychol—American Journal of Psychology. $6.50 Morrill Hall, Cornell University, Ithaca, N.Y.

Am J Pub Health—American Journal of Public Health and Nation's Health. $5. American Public Health Association, 370 Seventh Av., New York.

Am J Soc—American Journal of Sociology. $4. University of Chicago Press, Chicago.

Am Pol Sci R—American Political Science Review. $5 American Political Science Association, 450-458 Ahnaip St., Menasha, Wis.

Ann Am Acad—Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science. $5. 3622-24 Locust St., Philadelphia.

Atlantic Bookshelf—Atlantic Bookshelf. $1 Atlantic Monthly Co., 8 Arlington St, Boston.

Booklist—Booklist. $2 American Library Association, 520 N. Michigan Av., Chicago.

Bookm—Bookman. $5 Bookman Publishing Co., Inc. 386 Fourth Av., New York.

Books—New York Herald Tribune Books. $2. 225 W. 40th St., New York.

Boston Transcript—Boston Evening Transcript. $5.50 (Wednesday and Saturday) Boston Transcript Co., 324 Washington St., Boston.

Canadian Hist R—Canadian Historical Review. $2. University of Toronto Library, Toronto 5, Ont.

Cath World—Catholic World. $4. Missionary Soc. of St. Paul the Apostle, 411 W. 59th St., New York.

Chem & Met Eng—Chemical and Metallurgical Engineering. $3. McGraw-Hill Pub. Co., Inc., 10th Av., at 36th St., New York.

Chicago Daily Tribune—Tribune. $15 Tribune Co., Pub., 435 N. Michigan Av, Chicago.

Christian Century—Christian Century. $4. Christian Century Press, Inc., 440 S. Dearborn St., Chicago.

Christian Science Monitor—Christian Science Monitor. $9 The Christian Science Pub. soc., 107 Falmouth St, Boston, Mass.

Class Philol—Classical Philology. $4. University of Chicago Press, Chicago.

Columbia Law R—Columbia Law Review. $4.50 Columbia Law Review, Kent Hall, Columbia University, New York.

Crozer Q—Crozer Quarterly. $1.50 Crozer Theological Seminary, Chester, Pa.

Current Hist—Current History Magazine of the New York Times. $3. New York Times Co., Times Square, New York.

El School J—Elementary School Journal. $2.50. Dept. of Education. Univ. of Chicago, Chicago.

Eng Hist R—English Historical Review. 32s. Longmans, Green & Co., 55 Fifth Av., New York (39 Paternoster Row, London, E.C. 4).

Eng N—Engineering News-Record. $5. McGraw-Hill Pub. Co., Inc., 10th Av., at 36th St., New York.

Foreign Affairs—Foreign Affairs. $5 10 Ferry St., Concord, N.H.

Geog R—Geographical Review. $5. American Geog. Soc., Broadway and 156th St., New York.

Harvard Business R—Harvard Business Review. $5. A. W. Shaw Co., Cass, Huron & Erie Sts., Chicago.

Harvard Law R—Harvard Law Review. $4.50. Harvard Law Review Assn., Gannett House, Cambridge, Mass.

Hist Outlook—Historical Outlook. $2. McKinley Publishing Co., 1021 Filbert St., Philadelphia.

Ind & Eng Chem—Industrial and Engineering Chemistry. $7.50. American Chemical Society, Charles L. Parsons. Sec., Mills Building, 1709 G St., N.W., Washington, D.C.

Int J Ethics—International Journal of Ethics. $4. University of Chicago press, Chicago.

J Home Econ—Journal of Home Economics. $3 American Home Economics Assn., 101 East 20th St., Baltimore.

J Philos—Journal of Philosophy. $4. 515 W. 116th St., New York.

J Phys Chem—The Journal of Physical Chemistry. $10. Journal of Physical Chemistry, 654 Madison Av., New York.

J Pol Econ—Journal of Political Economy. $4. University of Chicago Press, Chicago.

J Religion—Journal of Religion. $3. University of Chicago Press, Chicago.

Manufacturing Ind—Manufacturing Industries. $5. Ahrens Publishing Co., Inc., 222 W. Adams St., Chicago.

Mod Philol—Modern Philology. $4. University of Chicago Press, Chicago.

Nation—Nation. $5. Nation, Inc., 20 Vesey St., New York.

Nation and Ath—Nation and Athenæum. £1 10s. Nation, Ltd. 38 Great James St., Holborn, London, W.C. 1.

Nature—Nature. $14. Macmillan Company, 60 5th Av., New York (£2 17s Macmillan & Co., Ltd., St. Martin's St., London, W.C. 2).

New Repub—New Republic. $5. New Republic, Inc., 421 West 21st St., New York.

New Statesman—New Statesman. 30s. New Statesman, 10 Great Queen St., Kingsway, London, W.C. 2.

N Y Evening Post—New York Evening Post. $3. 75 West St., New York.

N Y Times—New York Times Book Review. $2. N.Y. Times Co., Times Square, New York.

N Y World—The World. $4. Pulitzer Building, Park Row, New York.

Outlook—Outlook and Independent. $5 Outlook Company, 120 E. 16th St., New York.

Poetry—Poetry. $3 232 E. Erie St., Chicago.

Pol Sci Q—Political Science Quarterly $5. (including Supplements). Academy of Political Science, Columbia University. New York.

R of Rs—American Review of Reviews. $4. Review of Reviews Corp., 55 Fifth Av., New York.

Sat R—Saturday Review. 30s. 9 King St., Covent Garden, London. W.C. 2.

Sat R of Lit—Saturday Review of Literature. $3.50. Saturday Review, Inc., 25 W. 45th St.. New York.

School Arts M—School Arts Magazine. $3 Davis Press, Inc., 44 Portland St., Worcester, Mass.

School R—School Review. $2.50 Dept. of Education, Univ. of Chicago, Chicago.

Science n s—Science. $6. Science Press, Grand Central Terminal, N.Y.

Spec—Spectator. 30s. 99 Gower St., London, W.C. 1.

Springf'd Republican—Springfield Republican. $10. The Republican Pub. Co., Springfield, Mass.

Survey—Survey (also Survey Graphic). $5. Survey Associates, 112 East 19th St., New York.

Times [London] Lit Sup—The Times Literary Supplement. 17s 4d. $4.15. The Times (London), North American Office, 280 Broadway, New York.

World Tomorrow—World Tomorrow. $2. World Tomorrow, Inc., 52 Vanderbilt Av., New York.

Yale Law J—Yale Law Journal. $4.50 Yale Law Journal Co., Inc. Yale Station, New Haven, Conn.

Yale R n s—Yale Review. $4. Yale University Press, 143 Elm St., New Haven, Conn.

In addition to the above list the Book Review Digest sometimes quotes from the Cleveland Open Shelf; Pratt Institute Quarterly Booklist; New York Public Library New Technical Books; St Louis Library Bulletin; Wisconsin Library Bulletin; and other bulletins and papers

Explanations

The descriptive note is separated from critical notices of a book by a dash.

The plus and minus signs preceding the name of the magazine indicate the degree of favor or disfavor of the entire review.

In the reference to a magazine, the first number refers to the volume, the next to the page, the letters to the date and the last figures to the number of words in the review.

[a] This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue.

Publisher's directory will be found at end of this number.

Book Review Digest

Devoted to the Valuation of Current Literature

Cumulation of monthly numbers, March, 1930—February, 1931

---

[2] ABBOT, ANTHONY. About the murder of Geraldine Foster. 292p $2 Covici

30-32331

The first of a series of mystery stories featuring Thatcher Colt, police commissioner of New York City.

Bookm 72:xxiv D '30 150w

"Introducing a new and welcome sleuth to riddling circles, none other than Thatcher Colt, billed as a former Police Commissioner of the City of New York, who releases his secret chronicles through his faithful secretary, a literate narrator with a talent for rousing suspicion in the wrong quarters." Will Cuppy

+ Books p20 D 14 '30 250w

"A good, exciting yarn." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 156:550 D 3 '30 120w

ABBOTT, JANE LUDLOW (DRAKE) (MRS FRANK ABBOTT). Beggarman. 314p $2 (7s 6d) Lippincott

30-14662

The story of an inexperienced girl, who at twenty-four was left entirely alone to battle with a heritage of wealth and hatred. After much blundering she managed, with the help of an understanding man, to live down both of her inheritances.

Books p19 Ag 24 '30 150w

"Miss Abbott permits a story which begins well to run off into a rambling pollyannish romance which steadily loses pace and the illusion of reality. . . Unfortunately, after an attractive introduction to an apparently intelligent heroine, one becomes convinced as the story unfolds that such feminine stupidity and blind trust should be confined to State institutions."

— N Y Times p24 My 4 '30 250w

ABBOTT, WILBUR CORTEZ. Bibliography of Oliver Cromwell; a list of printed materials relating to Oliver Cromwell, together with a list of portraits and caricatures. 540p $12.50 Harvard univ. press [52s 6d Oxford]

012 Cromwell, Oliver—Bibliography 29-21262

"It contains three lists: one of three thousand, five hundred, and twenty items of printed material, described critically and arranged alphabetically by years (there are only five breaks, 1672, 1688, 1709, 1729, 1778-9, from 1640 to the present day); a catalogue of seven hundred and two portraits of Cromwell; and a group of lists including sixty-two satirical prints, eight busts, six masks, twenty medals, three statues, three plaques, and fourteen miscellaneous drawings. These are accompanied by a preface of explanation which disclaims completeness and absolute accuracy, but makes some convincing arguments for the worth of such an effort; a short essay on 'The Historic Cromwell'; and a system of cross references and indexes."—Hist Outlook

"It is more than a reference book about Cromwell; it is a bibliography of England during the two most interesting decades of an interesting century. All the notices of Cromwell in the publications of the Historical Manuscripts Commission, in the Gentlemen's Magazine, in Notes and Queries, and in scores of local historical publications have been searched out and put in their proper places. An enormous amount of Continental literature about Cromwell—he has always interested the Germans—has been ransacked and catalogued. The result among other things is a lot of excellent notes." Wallace Notestein

+ Am Hist R 36:120 O '30 1050w

"Another great labor-saving device has been manufactured for students. Bibliographies are as necessary almost, and as useful, as dictionaries. They are unfortunately much rarer, and, still more unfortunately, are not always made by scholars of the studies which they are meant to serve. In this case the breadth of imagination and scholarship of the author are shown in the preface and the introductory essay."

+ Hist Outlook 21:35 Ja '30 650w

"Every such list is, or ought to be, of help to the librarian. As bibliographies accumulate, the necessity of searching grows less. The student of Cromwell will henceforth have less practice in making a bibliography but he will have an example of what a bibliography should be when he starts work on another field." A. H. Shearer

Library Q 1:105 Ja '31 700w

"Here is a bibliography that is actually interesting; a list of titles, to be sure, but presented in such attractive dress of type and form that it is readable. It is, moreover, introduced by an essay on 'The Historic Cromwell' in the best vein of an author who has often demonstrated that scholarly history can be so written as to be enjoyed in the reading. . . The real contribution is the Introduction. As a piece of descriptive bibliography it gives a basis for the study of seventeenth century England, and what is more, it inspires one to that exercise. As a sketch of the historiography of Cromwell and his background it turns a dull subject into an absorbing story, reflecting the intellectual eras from 1659 to the present." E. S. Upton

+ Sat R of Lit 7:112 S 6 '30 1000w

"The historian, the research worker and the antiquary will find their labours shortened by consulting Professor Abbott's monumental work. And an additional reason why this bibliography will receive a cordial welcome on this side of the Atlantic can be added: it takes careful note of the writings of American scholars, and, as most of these are difficult to trace over here, a great deal of fruitless labour will be saved to British research workers."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p921 N 14 '29 1250w

ABBOTT, WILBUR CORTEZ. New York in the American revolution; sel. by Victor H. Paltsits. 302p il $3.50 (15s) Scribner

974.71 New York (city)—History. United States—History—Revolution 29-29220

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Subject, title and pseudonym index at end of alphabet

ABBOTT, W. C.—Continued

"Aside from the errors in the text and the unsatisfactory bibliography, Professor Abbott presents a fresh and scholarly summary of the history of New York City during the Revolution. He brings to his interpretation an understanding of the feelings of the people in other American states and in Europe as well." A. C. Flick

+ — Am Hist R 35:630 Ap '30 750w

Bookm 70:xii F '30 170w

Boston Transcript p2 Ja 29 '30 280w

Reviewed by G. M. Wrong
Canadian Hist R 11:252 S '30 680w

"That the author has made use of the sources no one who reads the book can doubt. That he has made the most of his opportunity, however, is another matter, for the volume impresses the reviewer as being composed of a series of semi-popular informal talks, in which may be found plenty of platitudes and here and there a 'wisecrack.' An adequate description of New York City life is wanting."

— + Hist Outlook 21:90 F '30 350w

N Y Evening Post p7m Ja 18 '30 130w

Pratt p34 summer '30

St Louis 28:19 Ja '30

"A popular narrative that sacrifices nothing to accuracy and yet is tremendously interesting and stimulating. It goes without saying that this is the work of a serious and able historian, thoroughly acquainted with original sources and able to handle a mass of unwieldy material. That he has written this clear, balanced account in such interesting fashion is the gain of all who are not scholars and who yet want facts without smart cracks."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 F 20 '30 500w

"By choosing New York as a microcosm of the revolution Professor Abbott has secured an admirable means of showing the forces that overthrew British rule at work. He has been laudably free from national bias, though a little hard on the agitators who roused the mob. His book will receive and deserve a wide welcome."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p327 Ap 17 '30 950w

"The book is a brilliant study of an important section of the Revolutionary movement. In writing it Professor Abbott has succeeded better than most authors in maintaining a nice balance between the opposing forces in the struggle; not once does he seem to lose his delightful equanimity. In fact, this book makes one wish he might write a comprehensive history of the whole Revolution, a work for which there is a crying need." R. V. Harlow

+ Yale R n s 19:632 spring '30 460w

ABEND, HALLETT. Tortured China. 305p il $3 Washburn

915.1 China—Economic conditions. China—Social conditions

"This is a sensational book. . . Definitely a book with a thesis. It says, in sum, that conditions are so hopeless in China, and give no promise of being anything else, that there must be some sort of benevolent, international intervention to help China, because she cannot help herself. To prove this point, Mr. Abend simply describes the situation in China today."—N Y Times

Reviewed by C. H. Peake
Current Hist 33:xx Ja '31 280w

"The language is at times unrestrained and often bitter. Mr. Abend is obviously burning with indignation. He makes grave charges and draws a picture that is positively revolting at times. It is not meant to be complete and it is certainly not unbiased, but within its scope it presents as devastating, as truthful and as unanswerable an argument as one can hope to read on the subject. . . Mr. Abend has written in haste, and disjointedly; the style, which is vivid, lively and compact, has some of the drawbacks, as well as the virtues, of journalism at its best. And the book, naturally, is not quite up to the minute—a defect one must put up with considering the kaleidoscope nature of events in China—but it is still very timely and sufficiently up-to-date to be accepted pretty unreservedly as a picture of present times." H. L. Matthews

+ — N Y Times p1 N 2 '30 1350w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:14 N '30 80w

Reviewed by H. K. Norton
Sat R of Lit 7:390 N 29 '30 400w

ABJORNSON, EBERHARD. Ornamental dwarf fruit trees; how to grow and train them in the home garden. 65p il $1.50 De La Mare

634 Fruit culture 29-28835

A practical explanation of the science of growing dwarf fruit trees which discusses the selection and planting of trees, pruning principles, training the dwarf trees, and budding and grafting them. Illustrated with clear line drawings showing how the work should be done.

Booklist 26:224 Mr '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p104 Jl '30

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:48 Je '30

St Louis 28:100 Ap '30

ABRAHAM, HERBERT. Asphalts and allied substances, their occurrence, modes of production, uses in the arts and methods of testing. 3d ed 891p $10 Van Nostrand

665.4 Asphalt 30-790

The 1920 edition of this extensive reference work has been entirely re-written. References to book, patent and periodical literature follow each chapter.

"The third edition of an extremely useful reference book which no one interested in any type of asphaltic material can afford to be without. Expansion of the material in each chapter has resulted in an increase over the second edition of approximately 300 pages. Much of this increase has been due to the work of bituminous dispersions, in which there has been much interest in recent years. Other improvements in the book include the use of larger size type and a flexible cover."

+ Chem & Met Eng 37:175 Mr '30 120w

"A feature of particular value is the large number of technical and patent references which follow each chapter, and which are remarkably up to date. . . It is the reviewer's opinion that this third edition of Abraham's book is distinctly the most valuable book on the subject that he has ever seen." P. H. Walker

+ Ind & Eng Chem 22:302 Mr '30 300w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:15 Ap '30

St Louis 28:98 Ap '30

ACHESON, FRANK OSWALD VICTOR. Plume of the Arawas. 338p $2.50 Neale [7s 6d Dent] 30-6538

A tale of New Zealand. Tuwharétoa, the leader of his people, is in love with the daughter of a rival chieftain. By chance he discovers that the two tribes have a common ancestor; a truce is declared, and the lovers are happily married.

"The plot is the least important part of the book. What is important is that Mr. Acheson treats of the character, customs, religion and traditional history of these far-off natives of New Zealand."

N Y Times p18 S 7 '30 130w

"There are occasions when, for a novelist, a deal of learning may be a dangerous thing, as this book shows. Mr. Acheson is deeply versed in Maori lore and history; he speaks Maori; he is a Maori by tribal adoption. He is eminently qualified to write a standard work on this remarkable race; as it is, he has chosen to write a historical novel on the subject, and his very knowledge betrays him, since he appears to presuppose a corresponding knowledge in his readers. Those to whom the Maori language is familiar will doubtless read the book with pleasure; others, less instructed, are likely to find their brains reeling before the array of Maori words and names. . . The continual use of the vernacular, so far from giving atmosphere, clogs the story, which is written with great sincerity and with an intense admiration for the Ngati-Tuwharetoa tribe."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p276 Mr 27 '30 200w

ACKERMAN, CARL WILLIAM. George Eastman; with an introd. by Edwin R. A. Seligman. 522p il $5 Houghton
B or 92 Eastman, George 30-9003

The life story to date of George Eastman, who originated the world system of film photography and who has enriched American life by his wise philanthropies.

Booklist 26:354 Je '30

"It is objective in the sense that it holds strictly to the drama of events in justification of its hero. This makes it eminently readable, even exciting at times, purely as an epic of success achieved amid extraordinary obstacles—a sort of Pilgrim's Progress of business. . . But about his purely personal life this biography tells us very little indeed." W. M. Houghton
Books p5 Ap 13 '30 900w

Boston Transcript p2 My 10 '30 950w

"At first glance a rather formidable volume, it is well worth reading, both for acquaintance with the man and knowledge of the times."
+ Christian Science Monitor p7 Ag 30 '30 500w

Cleveland Open Shelf p99 Jl '30

New Statesman 35:280 Je 7 '30 1000w

Reviewed by G. W. Harris
N Y Times p5 Ap 27 '30 1750w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:47 Je '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:8 My '30 280w

Spec 145:257 Ag 23 '30 450w

Springf'd Republican p10 My 16 '30 850w

"Mr. Ackerman has been fortunate in his access to abundant material, including an unbroken chain of more than 100,000 letters from 1878 to the present day. His journalistic experience has helped him to deal skilfully with this mass of documents, which he has utilized in the production of a well-arranged continuous narrative."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p491 Je 12 '30 1100w

ACKLEY, MRS EDITH FLACK. Marionettes; easy to make! fun to use! 115p il $2.50 Stokes
791.5 Puppet-plays 29-18474

"'Marionettes' is distinctive in that the puppets she describes are made of cloth. Mrs. Ackley has tucked paper patterns of the dolls in a pocket inside the book's back cover and gives many drawings and diagrams, also suggestions for marionette programs and five simple plays with good directions for giving performances. The author has used marionettes considerably in camp work, and the cloth variety has proved easy for girls to make and fun for both boys and girls to use."—Books

Booklist 26:124 D '29

"Every one who looks at this book feels encouraged to attempt the manipulation of puppets." H. S. Wright
+ Books p8 D 8 '29 120w

Cleveland Open Shelf p89 Je '30

Pratt p29 spring '30

St Louis 27:344 D '29

"This book can best be reviewed by reprinting the following letter from a fifteen-year-old girl to whom it was sent for the practical reviewing of actual use. . . 'This book solved very clearly all our problems of construction and manipulation, and with its help we were able to give a successful show. We were also fired with a wish to make more marionettes and to give more entertainments in just the fascinating way that Mrs. Ackley describes.'"
+ Sat R of Lit 6:431 N 16 '29 120w

ACLAND, BALDWYN DYKE. Filibuster. 313p $2 McBride [7s 6d Hodder]
30-7568

"Adventures, political intrigue, romances, duels and pitched battles, centered in the turbulent South American republic of Unaboa. Through it all Johnny Carstone, as El Filibustero, and Timothy Doon, as Don Timoteo, wreak vengeance on the political cutthroats, win the recognition of the lovely Senorita Dona Ana De Perada, and otherwise accomplish what ought to be accomplished by such adventurers in such a clime."—Springf'd Republican

"Downright amusing." Will Cuppy
+ Books p13 Mr 23 '30 130w

N Y Evening Post p4s Je 7 '30 150w

"Although the first part of the book drags, the last few chapters contain some fairly exciting descriptions of pitched battles."
— + N Y Times p27 Mr 30 '30 120w

"It is an old, familiar story with a new twist to the plot."
Springf'd Republican p5e Ag 10 '30 150w

ADAIR, EDWARD ROBERT. Exterritoriality of ambassadors in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. 282p $8 (21s) Longmans
341.7 Exterritoriality. Ambassadors
[29-15028]

An analysis of the position and privileges of the ambassador during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, and an examination of the development of the idea of exterritoriality, together with the changes which that idea has undergone during the last three hundred years. The privileges of the ambassador are discussed in detail, and in the case of each of them the views of contemporary jurists are described.

"While not all would agree with Professor Adair's estimate of the value of works of different writers, all will agree that it is of real value that an estimate of writings rarely consulted in these days should be available. Specialized studies of the type of Professor Adair's will be particularly helpful in building up a correct appreciation of the development of institutions which have greatly modified international relationships." G. G. Wilson
+ Am Hist R 35:592 Ap '30 600w

"The essay, dealing as it does with a legal subject, suffers somewhat in balance and coherence from the lack of a philosophical framework. Sovereignity, with its implications, is, for example, ignored. On the other hand, the author has devoted an over-abundance of space to the significance of practices and precedents in the evolution of exterritoriality, a rather obvious point upon which there is little disagreement. There is ample evidence of the author's acquaintance with the historical background of that period, and if the legal implications of exterritoriality have been somewhat neglected, the book nevertheless gives an interesting account of the position of ambassadors in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries."
+ — Am Pol Sci R 24:518 My '30 300w

"The method involves a certain amount of repetition, but no important branch of the subject is omitted, and many incidental points of interest are touched upon, for instance the changes in the types of men employed as diplomatists and the arrangements for the entertainment of ambassadors. The result is a very useful contribution to the history both of international law and of diplomacy. In looking up the real facts of the cases mentioned by the old writers Mr. Adair has brought together a considerable mass of material. He is naturally fullest on the English cases, and after them on the Dutch, to many of which Wicquefort and Bynkershoek provide guide-posts; but he has seldom been content to accept the statements of the jurists unchecked." G. N. Clark

ADAIR, E. R.—Continued
+ — Eng Hist R 45:485 Jl '30 1100w

"His work is undoubtedly a valuable contribution to the history of international law. . . Professor Adair examines the text-writers and cases with commendable logic, and mindful of historical perspective. . . He is more particularly interested in British practice. Here his historical training serves him well. The printed sources of English history for the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries he has investigated carefully. A new light is thrown on well-known cases." J. S. Reeves
+ Harvard Law R 43:677 F '30 900w

"This is an able piece of work on one section of a very interesting subject. Professor Adair's main object is to criticise in the light of history the assertions made by lawyers about the rules governing at various times the position of ambassadors. He is a brisk controversialist and deals a number of shrewd blows at the legal authorities who have handled his subject during the last four centuries."
+ New Statesman 34:604 F 15 '30 700w

"For this most excellent historical picture of extraterritoriality as it was during two important centuries and for an outline of what precedent has decreed extraterritoriality shall be in our day, Professor Adair has deserved the thanks of modern students. Although the book is primarily for the historian and the lawyer its style does not shut out the general reader from enjoying a clear and authoritative statement of a vexed and often obscure question."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p774 O 10 '29 750w

"In reading this scholarly and delightful treatise one realizes with some amazement how very little research has been made in this most interesting field of international law. Professor Adair has performed a most valuable service by his historical investigations concerning early precedents, and particularly by his analysis of his writings of international law publicists before Grotius. His book amounts virtually to a study of diplomatic immunities as built up through actual cases rather than by the opinions of publicists. His method of separating theory and practice seems a bit artificial and is sometimes difficult to follow, but his conclusions are clear-cut and of the highest value." P. M. Brown
+ Yale Law J 39:766 Mr '30 850w

ADAM, GEORGE JEFFERYS. The Tiger: Georges Clemenceau, 1841-1929. 282p il $3.50 Harcourt [10s 6d Cape, J.]

B or 92 Clemenceau, Georges Eugène Benjamin 30-12627

Written by an English newspaper correspondent long resident in France, this biography of Clemenceau lights up his conduct at the high points of his political career: his part in the establishment and strengthening of the Third Republic, in the Boulanger episode, the Panama scandal and the Dreyfus affair, and above all, in the Great war and the Peace conference.

Booklist 27:24 S '30
Bookm 71:v Jl '30 70w

"As a huge obituary article Mr Adam's book is slightly behind the times. All newspapers had a Clemenceau in their morgue and came out with biographical notices almost as full as this one in certain cases and usually more reliable. As a contribution to history it counts on the debit side. As a piece of swift narrative and vivid style it has definite points in its favor. The great American biography of Clemenceau remains to be written, and we can hardly think of a more enticing subject. We need books composed not like this one simply because Clemenceau is dead, but because Clemenceau was and remains very much alive." Albert Guerard
— + Books p10 Je 1 '30 700w

"A well-balanced account of Clemenceau's political career, limned against the background of his early life and the struggles that were his, prison terms included, before he came definitely into the world's newspaper headlines." E. N.
+ Boston Transcript p2 My 24 '30 650w

"Mr. Adam's narrative though in the ultimate sense inadequate, is a good, sound popular account of the statesman. . . The best parts are those which concern the Boulanger, the Panama, and the Dreyfus scandals, and the accusations that drove Clemenceau out of Parliament. The story is told with a keen sense of the dramatic." Sisley Huddleston
+ — Christian Science Monitor p10 Mr 29 '30 430w

Cleveland Open Shelf p100 Jl '30
Foreign Affairs 8:673 Jl '30 20w

"Mr. Adam has an admirable narrative style; his words are well chosen, his phrases are always carefully and accurately constructed. He is, in fact, one of the few modern publicists who have no liking for those explosive sentences which are hurled on to a page as bullets are shot on to a target. A writer whose standard of taste is so much above the ordinary ought certainly to be commended for it." A. C. Bell
+ Nation and Ath 46:735 Mr 1 '30 750w

Reviewed by Régis Michaud
New Repub 63:130 Je 18 '30 600w

"This swift and vivid story of Clemenceau has precisely the qualities which a popular biography of a man so recently in the public eye should possess. It has the additional merit of making the politics of a foreign country not only intelligible, but exciting."
+ New Statesman 34:614 F 15 '30 180w

Reviewed by L. V. Updegraff
N Y Times p4 Je 22 '30 1100w

" 'The Tiger' belongs to that category of books which are neither very good nor wholly bad. . . Mr. Adam's book has two faults. It is written in an irritating style which detracts from the interest of an excellent subject-matter. In his desire to do justice to his hero the author does not take into sufficient consideration the unpleasantness and the limitations of the Tiger's character."
— + Sat R 149:201 F 15 '30 650w

"It supplies the background essential to an understanding of Clemenceau's political philosophy, a background which his more vicious critics have generally ignored. . . The author's sympathy with his great subject is manifest, and we are spared unpleasant psychological analyses; but he believes in explanation rather than eulogy and his tone in controversial questions is objective."
+ Sat R of Lit 7:109 S 6 '30 320w

"Mr. Adam has the wisdom to set himself limitations; within his chosen boundaries he has made a valuable sketch of a dynamic man and time. Those who come after must fill in the details."
+ Spec 144:283 F 22 '30 130w

"Mr. Adam tells the whole story very well, giving unity to its diverse episodes. He does not probe the complexities of Clemenceau's character, and is perhaps too ready to represent him as a revolutionary Republican of the school of 1789. But he knows France well, appreciates the great ideas which underlie the personal ferocities of French politicians, and has brought out the extreme significance of Clemenceau's personal contribution to the character of the Third Republic."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p131 F 20 '30 1050w

ADAM, NEIL KENSINGTON. Physics and chemistry of surfaces. 332p il $6 (17s 6d) Oxford

539.6 Capillarity. Molecular theory [30-28836]

"Molecular theory applied to capillarity of liquid surfaces, surface films of soluble and insoluble substances, spreading and lubrication, general properities of solid substances, etc."—St Louis

---

Reviewed by W. D. Bancroft
J Phys Chem 34:1609 Jl '30 3700w

Reviewed by I. Langmuir
Nature 126:719 N 8 '30 500w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:32 Jl '30

St Louis 28:234 O '30

"This authoritative and lucid survey of present knowledge of surface phenomena, by one who has himself made notable contributions to it, should be welcomed by a large number of research workers and students. It is well supplied with references to original papers and is illustrated by numerous clear diagrams."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p739 S 18 '30 280w

ADAMS, EUSTACE L. Gambler's throw. 304p $2 Dial press
30-24348

"Adventure by land, water and air, resulting from the kidnapping in and about New York and Long Island of Miss Nancy Wentworth, musical comedy star; Theodore P. Hamilton, of the United States Textile Corporation; and Frederick Mallory, millionaire sportsman, all held for ransom on a tropic island by Limpy Ashwood and his gang. To the rescue go Jerry Calhoun and a couple of pals in an airplane."—Books

"A well-seasoned up-to-the-minute mystery."
+ Bookm 72:xxv O '30 100w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p23 N 16 '30 100w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 156:231 O 8 '30 80w

ADAMS, EVANGELINE SMITH (MRS G. E. JORDAN, jr.). Astrology; your place among the stars; with one hundred horoscopes of famous people. 520p $5 Dodd
133.5 Astrology 30-12620

"The aim of this book is to give to the public the benefit of the practical findings gleaned by the author through a lifetime of astrological study and human experience in the course of her consultations with hundreds of thousands of clients. . . The effects of the Sun, Moon and Planets in their passage through the twelve signs of the zodiac have been stressed at great length, and numerous examples of well-known persons in different periods and walks of life have been given to illustrate their operation. The positions of the Planets, Uranus, Saturn and Jupiter, from about 1850 and through the 20th century, have been tabulated."—Foreword

N Y Times p27 My 25 '30 180w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p15 My 2 '30 900w

Reviewed by Elmer Davis
Sat R of Lit 7:86 Ag 30 '30 500w

Springf'd Republican p7e S 7 '30 100w

ADAMS, HENRY. Letters of Henry Adams (1858-1891); ed. by Worthington Chauncey Ford. 552p $5 Houghton [21s Constable]
B or 92 30-25080

These letters, beginning with Henry Adams's student days in Germany, fall into several groups, those written to his brother, Charles Francis, jr., from Europe and Washington, during his twenties; those to his lifelong friend in England, Charles Milnes Gaskell; those to John Hay and Henry Cabot Lodge; and the long series written to Elizabeth Cameron, during travels in the South Seas, with John La Farge. If the letters still only partially reveal the complex personality which baffled the reader of the "Education of Henry Adams," they are wonderfully rich in comment on men and events in society and politics, expressed with the grim frankness characteristic of the Adamses.

Booklist 27:154 D '30

"The writer mellows with the years, becomes less self-conscious and more humorous. Certainly his observations are always remarkably keen, but they improve with time, probably because he was more content simply to observe. There is little evidence of the overweening conceit which has been charged against him; on the contrary there is much evidence of a notable power to gain and sustain the friendship of distinguished men and women." A. R. Thompson
+ Bookm 72:329 N '30 750w

"Mr Worthington C. Ford has rendered an inestimable service in editing a selection of the 'Letters of Henry Adams' from 1858 to 1891, letters which reveal Adams more intimately than the Education could possibly do, which fill in the hiatus left by the Education and which go far to explain the tragedy and frustration that paralyzed Adams in his later years and turned him from productive scholarship to philosophy. The letters furnish at the same time witty and penetrating comment on politics and society in America and Europe—comments inimitably clever but largely supplementary to the pages of the Education. Students interested primarily in American history will find in these contemporary impressions sheer caviar." H. S. Commager
+ Books p1 S 28 '30 2150w

Reviewed by S. L. Cook
Boston Transcript p3 N 22 '30 1850w

"The letters in this book are a revelation of character, they grow less hypercritical, less peevish as their writer advances in years. They take on in time the tone of the 'Education,' which was written after middle life. Lending themselves to quotation, tempting the reviewer to exceed reasonable limits in his comments, these letters are admirably edited by Worthington C. Ford and make up a volume which can be opened at any page and found readable. But few readers will envy Henry Adams his outlook upon life." W. J. Abbot
+ Christian Science Monitor p7 O 4 '30 800w

Cleveland Open Shelf p156 D '30

Reviewed by John Chamberlain
Current Hist 33:viii N '30 700w

"A reading of these letters and of the 'Education' raises in my mind the old question of what is the best presentation of any man—his letters, his autobiography, or a biography? In Adams's case I am inclined to think that the genuine portrait awaits the biographer, but the subject will test a man's qualities to the utmost as gentleman and scholar. Meanwhile Mr. Ford, who is so eminently both, has given those of us who are interested in one of the most significant personalities in American life and letters a volume comparable in importance only to the 'Education' itself." J. T. Adams
+ Nation 131:408 O 15 '30 1250w

"Those who come to the present collection of letters with anticipations excited by 'The Education of Henry Adams' will emerge with a certain feeling of disappointment." R. M. Lovett
New Repub 64:268 O 22 '30 1250w

Reviewed by Matthew Josephson
N Y Evening Post p4d O 18 '30 1100w

"Letters like these are manna dropped from heaven; they are everything which letters should be and no longer are. They have, of course, an interest quite apart from their value as superb examples of the epistolary art, in their further revelation of a keen mind and a puzzling personality. They form an admirable supplement to 'The Education of Henry Adams,' which, as Mr. Ford points out in his introductory note, 'is as remarkable for its reticences as for its frank admissions.' " J. D. A.
+ N Y Times p1 S 28 '30 1750w

"We have here a sensitive mind, courageous enough to put its exact thoughts on paper. The Letters of Henry Adams are well-flavored, rich reading for the student of character and history who will take his time to traverse its pages. There is no need to think of this as a seasonal book which has to be read in a hurry so that one may join the talk of the town." Harry Hansen

ADAMS, HENRY—Continued
+ N Y World p12 O 1 '30 750w

"The general reader may wish that the letters threw more light on this enigmatic American. He may be disappointed because few, if any, contain indiscretions. But they are in the Adams spirit; restrained, well-bred, more than a little self-conscious." H. F. Pringle
Outlook 156:266 O 15 '30 420w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:86 D '30
St Louis 28:300 D '30

"Those who feel with James Truslow Adams that the 'Education' is 'the most thought-provoking autobiography, though it was not so intended, that America has produced,' and place it, with him, 'among the very few American classics,' can hardly fail to find in the 'Letters' many and impressive confirmations in this way of thinking. The two books should certainly be regarded as companion volumes. His dexterity in his chosen medium of verbal expression, noticeable from first to last in his 'Letters,' enabled him to toss off felicities of thought and phrase which would have been the making of an ironic novelist, and to bring his English style, in his more carefully wrought writings, to a high point of distinction." M. A. De W. Howe
+ Sat R of Lit 7:237 O 18 '30 2650w

"What is chiefly apparent from these letters is that he was a man of alert and sparkling mind, with an avidity for ideas and discussion, a fastidious taste, a fondness for good society and enough ambition and energy to keep his mind applied to particular tasks, in short, a true patrician and an intellectual, almost, if not quite, a dilettante."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e S 28 '30 1850w

"A volume of extraordinary interest. The chief value [of the letters], to a student of the Adams family history, lies in their correction of some of the misleading impressions left by 'The Education of Henry Adams.'" Bliss Perry
+ Yale R n s 20:382 winter '31 620w

ADAMS, HERBERT. Crime in the Dutch garden. 320p $2 Lippincott
30-27750

A stone satyr fell from the garden wall upon an old woman, Miss Querdling, who sat beneath. Jimmie Haswell is convinced that the stone was pushed from its place by a murderer; and a second death that follows soon after proves his point. Jimmie pursues his investigations, and by an ingenious trick reveals the murderer.

Bookm 72:xxvi O '30 100w

"The author's mind seems to have been largely upon love affairs, of which there are at least five. Four lovesick couples would have been enough." Will Cuppy
— Books p20 O 26 '30 100w
N Y Times p18 N 2 '30 180w

ADAMS, HERBERT. Golden ape. 316p $2 Lippincott [7s 6d Methuen]
30-9490

On the same night two men, friends and partners, were murdered. The clues were so many that the police hardly knew which to investigate first. Jimmie Haswell and Inspector Sprules worked together and after much delay caught the murderer just as he was about to commit murder number three.

Bookm 72:xxvii O '30 40w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 Mr 30 '30 100w

"The mystery is well sustained, and the explanation, although it has one or two weak spots, is satisfactory. Jimmie Haswell is a better detective than such a thoroughly likable chap has any right to be."
+ N Y Times p28 Mr 23 '30 170w

"Ingenious tale. An unusual touch is added by the discovery of the second dead man in the automobile of the amateur criminologist who is helping Scotland Yard detectives on the first case."
+ N Y World p11m Ap 13 '30 120w
Times [London] Lit Sup p718 S 11 '30 200w

ADAMS, JAMES TRUSLOW. Adams family. 364p il $4 Little

920 Adams family. Adams, John. Adams, John Quincy. Adams, Charles Francis. United States—Politics and government
30-15559

The story of four generations of the "most distinguished family in the United States" and of the events which they shared and frequently shaped is here told by a historian of the same name tho not the same blood. Established in America in 1636 the family during one hundred and twenty-five years developed no marked quality. Beginning with John Adams, historian, publicist, diplomat, and president of the United States and continuing thru John Quincy Adams, Charles Francis Adams, and, in the fourth generation, John Quincy II, Charles Francis II, Henry, and Brooks Adams, the family has steadily maintained its distinguished position and its aristocracy of intellect.

"Mr. Adams, equipped with a scholarship both detailed and comprehensive, has a talent for generalization, and his frequent flashes of wit throw light on noteworthy facts or anecdotes. His occasional iconoclastic disregard of conventional opinion is refreshing, as is also his unconcealed impatience with certain phases of modern civilization. He is at his best, perhaps, in summarizing the tendencies of a period or in using a scalpel on a human soul. His style, incisive yet urbane, loses nothing by its hints of irony, but the general tone throughout is sympathetic, not antagonistic. . . It is a lucid and entertaining book, worthy of its theme and of its author—a book which is, beyond a doubt, a permanent contribution to historical literature." C. M. Fuess
Atlantic Bookshelf p14 Je '30 950w
Booklist 27:24 S '30
Bookm 71:561 Ag '30 500

"It is a unique and inspiring tale of an aristocracy of ability. James Truslow Adams has told the story of John Adams and his descendants with skill and understanding. . . He has found a great theme. He has written a good book. If it is disappointing it is because the Adams family deserves a great book. . . The author preaches through them a bit too much; they afford such opportunities! He has written a volume in a short period of time that should have taken years of effort. It is not final. The Adams family deserves only the best." Avery Craven
+ — Books p1 Je 8 '30 1650w

"This book is perhaps Mr. J. T. Adams's finest contribution to history. He is broad and tolerant. Virginian though he is, he takes clearly enough the Union view in its relation to the subjects about whom he writes. Whatever his background and belief may or may not have been, he looks at the days in which the Adamses flourished quite as they did. . . Few books of the day are more provocative, more fair or more enlivening."
+ Boston Transcript p1 Je 7 '30 3750w

"The biographical study of this family through four generations is written by another Adams, not related, who is by historical training and his unusually detached life specially fitted to interpret them. He is keenly interested in hereditary traits which influence their careers, such as their strong sense of public duty, their courage, firm decision, and readiness to assume responsibility, their remarkable balance of mind and clarity of thought, their tendency to depreciate the efforts and abilities of others and to exaggerate opposition, their 'persecution complex,' their foreboding apprehension of evils, their dislike of the mob, and their lack of humor." L. E. Miles
+ Christian Century 47:1216 O 8 '30 350w

Christian Science Monitor p4 Jl 5 '30 600w

Cleveland Open Shelf p156 D '30

"If the author's physiology is casual, his sense of telling a story is swift and sure, in spite of occasional slips which his good friends will be quick to call to his attention. . . On the whole Mr. Adams is eminently fair; his book is a lively description and not a hymn of hate or praise. His wit and sarcasm do not spare the faults and foibles of the seven men he sketches." Stewart Mitchell

+ — Current Hist 32:834 Ag '30 1450w

Reviewed by H. L. Mencken
— Nation 131:70 Jl 16 '30 1100w

"Within the limits he has set himself, he has performed his task with great adeptness and penetration." Huntington Cairns

+ New Repub 63:349 Ag 6 '30 1400w

"The author sets himself to his task with the clearly marked detachment of personal attitude, combined with an unusual faculty for keen penetration of historical situations, which is in evidence in 'The Founding of New England' and other works that have come from him. . . His disposition toward the family is, as it ought to be in a volume of this kind, somewhat sympathetic, but he hides nothing, he evades no question and he gives no evidence of seeking to glorify any cause. . . He has given the story as it is, but he has performed the distinctly valuable service of clarifying and unifying it and he has turned out, besides, a volume of absorbing interest, which is inspirational in the best sense." A. S. Will

+ N Y Times p1 Je 8 '30 1500w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 Je 6 '30 980w

Reviewed by Harry Salpeter
N Y World p7m Je 15 '30 970w

Reviewed by F. L. Robbins
Outlook 155:267 Je 18 '30 900w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:66 O '30

Pratt p34 autumn '30

R of Rs 82:12 Jl '30 300w

St Louis 28:217 S '30

"Not a New Englander himself, Mr. Adams brings to the treatment of a peculiarly New England subject a point of view, detached, critical, yet essentially sympathetic, that qualifies him rarely for his task. The result is a brilliant book." M. A. DeW. Howe

Sat R of Lit 6:1126 Je 14 '30 770w

"James Truslow Adams would not pretend that he had made in this volume any original contribution either to history or biography. But he has supplied an intelligent, readable and historically workmanlike running picture of a considerable section of our nation's development and of one highly important and always individual family which figured in that development, political or intellectual, through four generations."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Je 8 '30 1500w

Reviewed by Bliss Perry
Yale R n s 20:380 winter '31 680w

ADAMS, MRS JULIA (DAVIS). Mountains are free; il. by Theodore Nadejen. 250p $2.50 Dutton

Tell, William—Fiction 30-22749

A story, for older boys and girls, of the fight for independence in Switzerland in the days of William Tell. Young Bruno, an orphan protégé of the Tell family, went to serve an Austrian duke because he did not want to be a burden to his friends. There he met the little Lady Zelina and her faithful guardian Kyo. In a time of great stress all three escaped from the castle of the duke and went to Switzerland, where Bruno took his part in the revolt from Austrian rule.

Booklist 27:166 D '30

"'Mountains Are Free' was evidently written to show the contrast between the democratic spirit of Switzerland and the autocratic, medieval regime of Austria. The too evident purpose of the author has spoiled it somewhat as a story. By far the best part of the book is the story of Switzerland's fight against Austria after Bruno's return. It does not seem possible that the story of William Tell's shooting the apple could be simply told without sounding like the version in the third grade readers, but Mrs. Adams has managed to give the hackneyed incident freshness and meaning. She has woven the incident so cleverly into the fabric of her tale that it has become effective and interesting." H. H. Owen

+ — Books p8 N 16 '30 400w

Cleveland Open Shelf p132 N '30

"There is plenty of action, the book reads easily and will be enjoyed by boys and girls of 10 or 12. The illustrations by Theodore Nadejen are dramatic as well as decorative and heighten the atmosphere of the story." A. T. Eaton

+ N Y Times p20 S 14 '30 220w

"It is a grand tale and moving. The illustrations, by Theodore Nadejen, which are plentiful, are not only fitting—which is high praise for any artist—but they are done with an imaginative realism and a decorative touch that makes the reader glad they are there. . . Mrs. Adams has done a fine piece of work that takes the reader with her all the way. There is authentic stuff here and a conscientious handling of historical facts, but there is more than that; there is life." E. C. Miller

+ Sat R of Lit 7:207 O 11 '30 600w

ADAMS, MRS JULIA (DAVIS). Vaino, a boy of new Finland. 271p il $2.50 Dutton

29-20673

Tales and legends from Finland form the background to this story of a modern Finnish boy who is a student at Helsingfors at the beginning of the Russian and Finnish revolutions.

Booklist 26:206 F '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p159 D '29

"The author has tainted her book with inept attempts at anti-Bolshevik propaganda, but she has interspersed as well many charming Finnish legends, and Vaino himself is an unspoiled little hero." Ruth Seinfel

+ — N Y Evening Post p14m N 16 '29 50w

"A thread of narrative concerning little Vaino and his mother follows so closely the story of Finland in parts of the World War that it will be of real informative value to young readers who are apt to know little of the relationships of that remote country. At the same time the imaginative legends of Finland are introduced as Fru Lundberg, knitting before the great stove, tells stories to Vaino. These make a quite different contribution, with their atmosphere of ancient lore and adventure." M. C. Dodd

+ Sat R of Lit 6:404 N 16 '29 200w

Reviewed by S. L. Goldsmith
Survey 64:38 Ap 1 '30 30w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1017 N 27 '30 180w

ADAMS, PETER. Card castles and how to build them. 85p il $2.50 Brentano's

790 29-21789

Directions for constructing cardboard models of Troy, the Tower of London, Carcassonne, the Bastille, Schloss Lichtenstein, and a modern fortress. The directions are clear and include drawings and diagrams. The text, which precedes each model, sets the castle or fortress in its proper historical background.

Booklist 26:236 Mr '30

"Mr. Adams has made an appeal to the love of romance regardless of whether one actually builds castles with cards or is merely reminded of what he knows or has felt about Troy, the Tower of London, Carcassonne, the Bastille, Schloss Lichtenstein." A. C. Moore

Books p8 Ja 12 '30 450w

ADAMS, PETER—Continued

Cleveland Open Shelf p128 S '30

St Louis 28:233 O '30

"'Card Castles' aims at something more exciting than the arts and crafts type of activity. It is a real play experience with simple raw materials that the author has in mind; an experience for older children comparable with the absorbing interest of play with blocks for younger ones. The author himself has found a truly creative outlet for his own joy in the classic tales of history, through the ingenious construction of walled cities with 'cardboard that comes from the laundry in your father's shirts.' His imagination goes on to people his fortresses with their former inhabitants and to re-enact in play, the stories that made them famous."

Sat R of Lit 6:430 N 16 '29 220w

ADAMS, PETER. Racing yachts done in cork models. 120p il $1.25 Dutton

623.8225 Yachts and yachting. Ship models 30-18137

A complete history of sailing yachts which have figured in the defense of the America's cup, from 1851 to 1920, with instructions for making little models of the yachts from corks, thread, matches, pins, paper and crayons.

Booklist 27:166 D '30

Bookm 72:xxviii O '30 40w

"Written primarily to stimulate the interest of children in the great sport of yachting, this careful, informative chronicle of the thirteen series of America's Cup races is well worth the attention of any one not already familiar with the history of these beautiful and thrilling contests which began in 1851. . . Young boys will enjoy this book as they have enjoyed Mr. Adams's earlier books in the same series." Wadsworth Owen

+ Books p8 Ag 3 '30 250w

Boston Transcript p2 N 15 '30 150w

Reviewed by A. L. Shea

Chicago Daily Tribune p12 Ag 23 '30 50w

"Although these books are designed to assist boys and girls in making cork models of ships—each chapter being concluded with a set of directions for construction—they will prove fascinating to any lover of ships regardless of his age." Bernice Whittemore

+ Outlook 155:395 Jl 9 '30 100w

"The brief history of the classic America's Cup which connects the amusing illustrations and the sober instructions of this little volume is clearly told. At a time when the air still echoes to the latest defence of the trophy the book will be liked by readers of nautical bent."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:374 N 22 '30 230w

ADAMS, SAMUEL HOPKINS. Godlike Daniel. ^{2} 426p il $5 Sears

B or 92 Webster, Daniel 30-29421

Written in the modern style, and not so fully documented and authoritative as the life by Claude Fuess, this biography of Daniel Webster is a lively interpretation which emphasizes the inconsistencies of Webster's nature, the strength and weakness that existed side by side.

"This is biography in the most approved modern style. The truth 'outs'; the 'godlike' becomes human. It is characterized by good writing and delicious humor. Yet out of it all comes Daniel Webster, none the worse for such handling, a bit easier to understand, a bit more to be loved, if less to be worshiped. The dramatic sense sometimes, it is true, crowds aside the historian, but the final picture is probably nearer a true one than any yet offered of this giant of the 'middle period.'" Avery Craven

+ — Books p2 N 2 '30 1150w

"Mr. Adams's volume is full of exaggerations to make the picture he wishes to draw. It has some charm of description, especially when he describes a typical senatorial day of the Massachusetts statesman. The chief trouble with the book is that it lacks balance and above all that the author has apparently no desire to be balanced or judicial." S. L. C.

— Boston Transcript p4 N 26 '30 450w

"Mr. Adams desires above everything else to be interesting and to make his subject live. If in the published correspondence or records he cannot discover material exactly in point he imagines what the characters may have said to one another and puts down the conjured-up dialogue. The result is certainly interesting. Some of the portraits—notably that of John Randolph—are extremely vivid, but as to whether the result is fiction or biography opinions will differ. The Webster that emerges from Mr. Adams's pages, however, is not unconvincing and is a really great figure, despite the disproportionate amount of space given to his faults and failings." L. R.

+ — Christian Science Monitor p13 N 22 '30 220w

"Both biographers [Fuess and Adams] give us honest unlegendary portraits, but their standpoints, styles, methods and approaches are basically different. One might say, perhaps, that Samuel Adams's biography will appeal more to those Americans who happen to have been born little liberals, while those who saw the light as little conservatives will gravitate more naturally to Mr. Fuess's. The ideal thing for either would be to read both." F. H. Martens

+ N Y Evening Post p4d N 1 '30 420w

"In general Mr. Adams shows a great deal of penetration and imagination, but in the successive climaxes of Webster's astounding career, he fails. A reader approaching Webster for the first time by way of Mr. Adams would get the idea that the Steamboat Case was an incident, that the Reply to Hayne was merely an oratorical triumph, and that the Seventh-of-March Speech was a lamentable close to the career of an ex-Secretary of State." C. W. Thompson

+ — N Y Times p3 O 26 '30 620w

"'Modern' biography, as practiced by Samuel Hopkins Adams, has at last got around to Daniel Webster. At the same moment Claude M. Fuess, in the conservative vein, presents what is likely long to remain the authoritative factual account of a career which dominated American politics for forty years. . . For the maximum factual understanding of Webster's life one must turn to Fuess. But in the Adams book there is not only an aliveness which makes the other work seem pale and slow of pulse; there is a quite masterly fulfillment of that other function of the Plutarchian art, to explain the hero's actions and trace them to their sources in his character." Shaemas O'Sheel

+ N Y World p3e N 30 '30 550w

ADAMSON, MARGOT ROBERT, comp. Treasury of Middle English verse; sel. and rendered into modern English. 182p $2 Dutton [6s Dent]

821.08 English poetry (Middle English)—Collections. Religious poetry [30-16491]

The compiler of these lyrics dating from the twelfth to the sixteenth centuries has transliterated them into modern English rhyme and scansion. The greater number of the poems are taken from manuscripts and collections such as the Vernon MS., An Old English Miscellany, Hymns to the Virgin and Christ, and collections of songs and carols.

Nation 130:739 Je 25 '30 220w

"In 'A Treasury of Middle English Verse' we have the love-children of English Poetry, poems without paternity, but whose structure and beauty proclaim their lineage. Here we have the cup from which our forefathers drank, and here the simple piety that flowered because the soil was good, and here the love and living that we become aware of when we tread the seldom trodden paths. Their essence haunts our land, it steals into our hearts."

+ Nation and Ath 46:776 Mr 8 '30 80w

"'A Treasury of Middle English Verse' is a contribution to English poetry that is rare indeed. That none who have any interest at all in English poetry can neglect this little book is obvious."

+ N Y Times p11 Jl 13 '30 450w

"Rendered into a modern English which is gracefully fitted to the temper and style of the originals."

+ Outlook 155:24 My 7 '30 30w

Reviewed by Richard Church

Spec 144:sup625 Ap 12 '30 40w

"She has cut out of her collection those two fierce strains in medieval satire, against women and against the clergy, and she has softened the ugliness of worms and corruption. Her anthology is like a medieval church stripped of its gargoyles: only the pleasantly quaint decoration—that is, the ingenuous religious imagery—has been allowed to remain. The modernizing is done with the lightest possible hand, with evident delight in the original, and (except where this bias is apparent) with scrupulous faithfulness to it."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p368 My 1 '30 500w

ADDAMS, JANE. Second twenty years at Hull-house, September 1909 to September 1929; with a record of a growing world consciousness. 413p il $4 Macmillan

331.852 Hull House, Chicago. Social conditions 30-31867

The continuation of the author's Twenty years at Hull House is less occupied with the activities of the famous settlement house than with Miss Addams's reflections on the world affairs of these twenty years—the period covered by the World war, with the five years of peace leading up to it, and the decade following, filled with the war's effects and the world consciousness growing out of it. Contents: Social service and the Progressive party; The devil baby at Hull-House; Aspects of the woman's movement; Efforts for peace during five years of war; Post-war inhibitions; Contrasts in a post-war generation; A decade of prohibition; Immigrants under the quota; Efforts to humanize justice; Play instinct and the arts; Education by the current event.

"The men and women of her age who know her and value her ideas will be delighted to find that her latest book, which is autobiographical, reveals a Jane Addams who is more significant, rather than less significant, than the Jane Addams of the pre-war years. To the younger reader her language and assumptions may seem very remote. But the reader who is not too hurried and provincial will find his sense of what was happening in America during the last two decades considerably sharpened by Miss Addams's objectivity and perspective." Winifred Raushenbush

+ Books p4 D 21 '30 1000w

Reviewed by I. W. Lawrence

Boston Transcript p3 Ja 3 '31 1500w

"Only a great woman could have lived through the last twenty years at Hull house and write of it with such wise and gentle kindness and tolerance for all of mankind's foibles both small and great." Fanny Butcher

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p8 D 27 '30 400w

"Whether the individual or the world problem was before her to be understood, she has given a sane, sympathetic, human view of a world at home and abroad, struggling through a period of storm and stress. Miss Addams has an artistry in using the scientific method when dealing with life's experiences, never sentimental, always tender and fair, for she is essentially wise-hearted." M. E. McDowell

+ Christian Century 48:21 Ja 7 '31 900w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett

New Repub 65:223 Ja 7 '31 1300w

"Every experience has led her from the little neighborhood of Halstead Street to the big neighborhood of the planet. Miss Addams is a world citizen, but she is a Halstead Street neighbor, and it is hard to tell which is the primary fact. Each involves the other. 'The First Twenty Years at Hull House' had the charm which the accent on the immediate bestows. This second Twenty Years has the charm of a Chinese painting in which the artist is primarily a philosopher." M. K. Simkhovitch

+ N Y Evening Post p4d D 6 '30 1050w

"Militantly and constructively rebellious Miss Addams is under an exterior of philosophic calm that combines the careful study of the scientist with the emotional urge of the visionary. Few people have as great cause to be cynical as she; fewer have the vision beyond the immediate horizon to remain believing. Without intention the pages of this book give the portrait of a woman whose idealism not only has not been tarnished by the acids of the events of twenty difficult years but rather has been burnished into a greater clearness that casts disconcerting reflections upon the slow march of human progress." R. C. Feld

+ N Y Times p5 D 7 '30 1450w

"Her reflections on the women's movement, the peace efforts during the World War, prohibition, and immigration under the quota are valuable as acute observations, not from the sidelines but from the very center of the field. It is sound, constructive comment." W. B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 83:6 Ja '31 180w

Springf'd Republican p7e D 28 '30 150w

ADKINS, NELSON FREDERICK. Fitz-Greene
² Halleck; an early Knickerbocker wit and poet. (Oliver Baty Cunningham memorial publication fund) 461p il $5 Yale univ. press [23s Oxford]

B or 92 Halleck, Fitz-Greene '30-25273

A one-time famous American poet and wit, member of that "Knickerbocker school" which included Washington Irving, James K. Paulding, Joseph Rodman Drake, and, later, Bryant and Cooper, is the subject of this biographical study, based upon the author's Yale doctoral dissertation. Mr Adkins evaluates Fitz-Greene Halleck in terms of his background, his literary environment, and the social conditions of the age in which he lived. Appendices contain extensive bibliographies, a list of Halleck portraits and engravings, and the uncollected letters and poems of Halleck.

"A book distinguished for monumental industry, for scholarly honesty and precision, and for comprehensiveness and judicial insight. New and authentic evidence appears in the form of some fifty-odd letters printed for the first time. Mr. Adkins has exhaustively ransacked every contemporary newspaper and magazine for the authentic colors which have enabled him to paint a three-dimensional portrait of Halleck, his spirited contemporaries, their reading public, and their interrelations." H. H. Clark

+ Bookm 72:324 N '30 1000w

"For those who are interested Mr. Adkins with immense industry and so far as we can judge exhaustiveness, has assembled every scrap of information about him. It can safely be said that the work will not have to be done again."

Christian Science Monitor p6 D 13 '30 320w

"Fitz-Greene Halleck, considered solely as a poet, is so nearly negligible, that, solely as a study of a poet, the considerable biography by Nelson Frederick Adkins would be unjustifiable. . . Therefore, in writing so voluminously of Halleck, the biographer is merely taking him as a central figure about which to paint the picture of a locality and a period." Percy Hitchison

N Y Times p6 D 28 '30 1200w

"A volume on the present scale would be excessive if it dealt with the whole of the Knickerbocker School, and it is grossly extravagant when it concerns only a single member of it. Its author admits that Halleck can claim 'but a minor place' in the development of American literature, and tells us that he was confessedly no more than a 'literary amateur,' but he has lavished upon his task a painstaking research that would have been more than adequate for a biography of a front-rank writer. There is scarcely a page without foot-notes of considerable length, and even the 'List of Halleck Portraits and Engravings' occupies nearly four pages. Yet, on the whole, there is little in this volume to reward the reader."

ADKINS, N. F.—Continued
Times [London] Lit Sup p994 N 20 '30 220w

ADLER, ALFRED. Case of Miss R; the interpretation of a life story; tr. by Eleanore and Friedrich Jensen. 306p $3.50 Greenberg [12s 6d Allen, G.]

131 Psychoanalysis 29-8959

"In 'The Case of Miss R.' Dr. Adler makes a running commentary on a life story which was submitted to him, and shows how we can read in the story itself both the circumstances in which neurosis may be provoked and the erroneous interpretation of those circumstances which the neurotic makes."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"Dr. Adler's analytic technique is adequately set forth in interpolations between excerpts from the girl's own story. From them will be gained a clear impression of Dr. Adler's position with reference to the interpretation of dreams, his conception of the rôle of the libido and his attitude on many Freudian concepts."
+ Bookm 69:iv Je '29 150w

"A churchman more than a doctor, Adler's comments are frequently closer to those of a heresy-seeker, sure of his prey, than to those of an honest open-minded scientist. He deals with evil rather than illness. He is self-righteous. On the whole the book is not calculated to crowd the anteroom of the Individual Psychologists." Percy Winner
— N Y Evening Post p10m My 4 '29 1200w

Reviewed by Alan Porter
Spec 143:983 D 28 '29 1000w

"In a simple and vivid way, with shrewd observation and humour, Dr. Adler presses home the familiar lessons of individual psychology."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1079 D 19 '29 360w

ADLER, ALFRED. Education of children; tr. by Eleanore and Friedrich Jensen. 309p $3.50 Greenberg [12s 6d Allen, G.]

136.7 Child study. Psychoanalysis. Children—Management 30-12683

"Dr. Adler makes a plea for understanding the child's behavior as a whole, rather than in isolated manifestations of itself. He would correct the symptoms of tardiness, or laziness, or whatever it happens to be, by re-arranging the whole setting which brings it about. In carrying out this tremendous project we are exhorted by Dr. Adler to the exercise of great kindness, sympathy and understanding." Books

Booklist 27:9 S '30

Reviewed by Emanuel Blum
Books p15 Ag 3 '30 230w

"Running all through the volume is a grain of commonsense that can well be applied to the pedagogics of these times. Many a child will be better understood by those who acquaint themselves with Dr. Adler's wise counsel in striving to find out why." W. H. M.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Jl 2 '30 950w

Reviewed by E. F. Barnard
N Y Times p10 O 5 '30 380w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p13 My 20 '30 250w

Reviewed by F. G. Seabury
Outlook 155:508 Jl 30 '30 220w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:78 N '30

Pratt p8 autumn '30

"One finds much good common sense in this book, much that is suggestive and borne out by individual experience, but its form detracts from its value. The style is rambling, and the subject matter essentially unorganized."
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:11 Jl 26 '30 200w

"Adler seizes one single thread in the complex pattern of human mental life, and seeks to weave the whole carpet out of it. He is incapable of analysing even that thread itself any further. For him it is the irreducible and all-explanatory fact of the human mind. This is a psychology of one idea. . . Adler's 'psychology' is, in fact, a crude form of therapy or guidance, based upon this single concept of the striving for superiority." Susan Isaacs
— Spec 145:551 O 18 '30 1200w

Reviewed by E. J. Swift
Yale R n s 20:401 winter '31 220w

ADLER, ALFRED. Pattern of life; ed. by W. Béran Wolfe. 273p $3 Cosmopolitan bk.

136.7 Child study. Psychoanalysis. Children, Abnormal and backward. Psychology, Pathological 30-8844

Case studies of neurotic, subnormal or maladjusted children, with suggestions for their treatment. Among these problem-children studied by Dr Adler are Flora, subject to wilfully induced epileptic attacks; Robert, whose retarded mental development is found to be due to maternal domination; George, a boy of six who talks "baby-talk" and fears growing up; Betty, who refuses to eat; and Michael, the bad boy of twelve who has been caught in a number of thefts.

"While it has slowly been growing in the reviewer's mind that Adler's other books are becoming stereotyped, he is now becoming convinced that they are deteriorating . . . The reviewer has tried heretofore to be tolerant and considerate and to see the good that was in the works of this author, but it is becoming painfully evident that an adverse note must be struck, and he therefore with this last work cries 'Enough!'" W. A. White, M.D.
— Books p10 My 11 '30 250w

Reviewed by E. F. Barnard
N Y Times p10 O 5 '30 120w

ADLER, ALFRED. Problems of neurosis; with a prefatory essay by F. G. Crookshank; ed. by Philippe Mairet. 244p $3 Cosmopolitan bk. [8s 6d Routledge]

131 Psychology, Pathological. Neuroses. Psychoanalysis 30-7272

A case book in which Dr Adler describes individual patients who are victims of some form of maladjustment to the three great problems of life: work, sex and society.

"Another book by Adler, which on the whole presents his case as it stands today more interestingly than his other writings. Like many of them it is, and very properly, a series of running comments on case material briefly presented to illustrate special points. It is an interesting and readable book." W. A. White, M.D.
+ Books p10 Mr 23 '30 550w

"We are strongly inclined to think that anyone desiring a clear introduction to Adler's way of thinking will do better to begin with 'Problems of Neurosis' than with the more formal treatment to be found in other books. Like Freud, he gives a doctor's rather than a teacher's psychology, although no hard-and-fast distinction can be drawn between the two. This view is strengthened by the fact that Dr. Crookshank, a medical man, introduces the reader to Adler's text. In doing so he gives a clear and helpful account of the individual psychology."
+ Nature 125:162 F 1 '30 230w

"This volume is of particular interest to the lay reader because the cases of behavior which he cites have so much in common with that which each of us displays." Margaret Flenniken
+ N Y Times p12 Ag 24 '30 230w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p14 Mr 13 '30 900w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:468 Mr 19 '30 80w

Reviewed by F. G. Seabury
Outlook 154:710 Ap 30 '30 430w

"Adler, whose 'Problems of Neurosis' should be read and studied by every doctor and every student of psychology, is thoroughly sound. He reminds us again and again that psychologic realities are not of a physiological nature, and that they elude chemical or physical tests."
+ Sat R 148:504 N 2 '29 1250w

"The usefulness of the volume is increased by an excellent preface on the history of Individual Psychology and its scientific background." Alan Porter
+ Spec 143:983 D 28 '29 230w

"As Dr. Crookshank points out, the most valuable part of the book is the clear examination of the development of the neurotic character; and the examples which show how idiosyncrasies are the result of intensive and long-continued training."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1079 D 19 '29 400w

ADLER, ALFRED, and others, eds. Guiding the child on the principles of individual psychology; tr. from the German by Benjamin Ginzburg. 268p $3 Greenberg

136.7 Child study. Children—Management. Psychoanalysis. Educational psychology. Children, Abnormal and backward 30-7289

"It was the practice of Adler's principles of 'Individual Psychology' that supplied the material for this book. Twenty-eight child-guidance clinics in Vienna are operated by a group of physicians and educators under Dr. Adler's leadership, and the results of the work done are here set forth completely by twenty-two workers. . . The actual technique of guidance work is carefully explained by examples of cases and conversations. Then follow articles on different classes of cases dealt with in the clinics—the small child, sexual cases, rival children, deaf mutes, only children, hated children and several unusual individual cases."—Books

---

Booklist 26:339 Je '30

"The value of the book lies, not in its presentation of theories, but in its reporting of the most extensive practical application thus far attempted of theories which had too long remained hypothetical. . . The report is, as might be expected, biased. The writers, devout worshippers of Adlerian principles, are anxious to report nothing but success. In the articles dealing with organization, aims and methods of the guidance clinics a note of special pleading is too evident. The volume would compel more respect if it confined itself more strictly to factual reporting."
+ — Books p29 Ap 13 '30 350w

Reviewed by E. F. Barnard
N Y Times p10 O 5 '30 180w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:48 Je '30

Reviewed by Rosetta Hurwitz
Survey 64:439 Ag 15 '30 300w

ADLER, FELIX. Incompatibility in marriage. 105p $1.50 (5s) Appleton

170.4 Ethics. Marriage 30-6393

Seven addresses delivered at various times by the leader of the New York Society of ethical culture compose the book. Contents: Incompatibility in marriage; The spiritual attitude towards old age; Woman's spiritual influence in marriage; The revolt against conventional morality; The ethical attitude towards enemies; The strain between the older generation and the younger; The ethical attitude towards the departed.

Reviewed by A. J. Todd
Am J Soc 36:328 S '30 420w

Booklist 26:339 Je '30

"It is well worthy of reading by the young generation and is the sort of stuff that will help the mind of the radical and the reactionary to meet on common ground. To add that it is beautifully written is only to give the author his just dues from the critic." W. A. White, M.D.
+ Books p16 Je 22 '30 550w

Boston Transcript p2 Ap 2 '30 400w

J Home Econ 22:410 My '30 50w

"All bear the deep impress of Dr. Adler's personality. No one else pleads for the recognition of the ideal, for the luminous and austere but warmly human conception of life's duties and obligations, for the broadly visioned outlook upon human relations with quite the same combination of tolerant acceptance of human frailties and weaknesses and stern insistence on the endeavor of the individual to live up to the best that is in him."
+ N Y Times p31 Mr 23 '30 270w

"The seven essays merit reading because they have been written by a remarkable man who has been able to hold fast to the spiritual ideals in the midst of spiritual disorder." I. S. Wile, M.D.
+ Survey 64:441 Ag 15 '30 250w

ADVERTISING parade; an anthology of good advertisements published in 1928; ed. by Robert Hunter. 186p il $7.50 Harper

659 Advertising—Yearbooks (30-3366)

"This large volume is a record of 'exceptionally good advertisements published in standard types of American' magazines during 1928. A committee made up of Mr. Durstine, Mr. Streeter, Mr. Thompson, and Mr. Weaver, all men well known and experienced in the advertising field, examined many thousand advertisements, and from them selected the hundred and fifty which are included in this book. A system of scoring for points was adopted, and each advertisement was marked accordingly."—Sat R of Lit

---

Booklist 26:344 Je '30

"As examples of ingenuity and intended seductive appeal, the pages of this book are intended to be, and apparently are, representative of the best which America has to offer. All the old familiar friends of the advertising sections of our magazines are here. The neophyte in advertising can use it as a text book."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:932 Ap 12 '30 350w

AGARD, WALTER RAYMOND. Greek tradition in sculpture. (Johns Hopkins univ. studies in archaeology) 59p pl $3 Johns Hopkins [13s 6d Oxford]

730 Sculpture—History. Sculpture, Greek 30-6156

"A monograph [which] briefly and clearly characterizes the sculpture of ancient Greece, both in its artistic qualities and the social bearings of the art, and proceeds, with equal brevity and clearness, to trace the influence of Greek sculpture in subsequent times—in the period of Roman art, after the decline of Rome, in the Renaissance, in the neoclassic revival of the 18th and 19th centuries and in contemporary art."—Springf'd Republican

---

Booklist 27:97 N '30

"Professor Agard has written an admirably clear and useful study of an old and inexhaustible subject. His account is refreshing, not by reason of its style, for it is a book of plain statements without pretensions to fine writing and with emotional appreciation reduced to the minimum, but because of its dignity and good sense." Thomas Craven
+ Books p10 My 18 '30 650w

"Professor Agard looks forward to a time when architecture will go hand in hand in the blessed work of beautifying our cities and towns. We, here in America, have not as yet become sculpture-conscious as the Greeks were. We may in time. This extremely suggestive and interesting essay is illustrated with thirty-five full-page reproductions of photographs of the finest quality and has references to other illustrative material easily obtainable. It is furnished with an excellent bibliography and an index." N. H. D.

AGARD, W. R.—Continued

+ Boston Transcript Ap 10 '30 750w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:42 My '30

"Prof Agard's chapters are necessarily much condensed, but they are fluent, lucid and soundly informing."

+ Springf'd Republican p12 S 26 '30 900w

"The account of Greek sculpture itself is orthodox, but presents nothing new, except that the author believes it was produced only in free cities and by free men, thus forgetting its patronage by tyrants like Pisistratus. He can see nothing good in Roman sculpture that was not Greek, and thus unduly depreciates Roman portraiture, an attitude now generally abandoned."

Times [London] Lit Sup p480 Je 5 '30 300w

AHEARN, DANNY. How to commit a murder. 254p $2.50 Washburn

364 Crime and criminals

"If you wish to hold up people with payrolls, stick up folks with 'collat' (jewelry), steal booze, learn the tricks of swiping automobiles, put slow punctures in armored cars and drive off with the contents transferred to your own conveyance, Danny Ahearn will tell you how. In garrulous style he will give you instructions. He is introduced to you by the publishers as one of the most accomplished gentlemen of the underworld. Not only is he expert in the arts of crime, but he knows how to 'fix' his own cases—so they say—for out of twenty-two times that he has been on trial for major offenses he has proved his innocence twenty times." —Books

"The accounts, presented as they are in the criminal vernacular, give some interesting side lights on the criminal credo—but are lacking in the less spectacular texture necessary for any thorough understanding of this form of life."

+ — Am J Soc 36:343 S '30 180w

"A book that just runs on and on, with extraordinary repetition and ultimate tedium, about the ways in which Danny Ahearn would commit crimes—presumably about the ways in which he has committed many crimes. That might have been a useful book if Danny had possessed enough penetration to give us a picture of himself. What we want to know about Danny is how he got that way and just what keeps him so everlastingly at it. Nowhere do we get a hint. We do get this much out of it: that here is a perfectly honest, straightforward, sincere, confirmed criminal whom children like and who has his own code of ethics." W. D. Lane

— + Books p19 Je 8 '30 550w

"It is full of non-sequiturs, inconsistencies, flat contradictions; it is rambling, discursive, and intensely personal. Ahearn is talking from a hair-trigger mind, jumping to conclusions and decisions. There is no evidence of reflection or of attempt to rationalize, synthesize, or harmonize his mass of statement and opinion. . . It rings as true as those psychological and pathological studies of wily crooks carried out in the rabbit warrens of certain scientists ring false."

+ Nation 131:252 S 3 '30 250w

"Danny Ahearn is writing this for an audience of you and me, for those who have been getting crime sweetly sugared by J. S. Fletcher, Charles Coe, E. Phillips Oppenheim, Edgar Wallace and all the rest who make money by exploiting underworld tactics for our sensation-hungry audience. Ahearn's story is not sugar-coated. It is direct, frank and brutal. It makes no excuses, no apologies. That is the best that can be said for it." Harry Hansen

N Y World p11 Ap 21 '30 850w

AIKEN, CONRAD POTTER. John Deth, a metaphysical legend, and other poems. 140p $2.50 Scribner

811 30-27087

The title poem is a dramatic fantasy, the theme of which is the triumph of death over life. A group of lyrics, a sonnet sequence, and two shorter narrative poems complete the volume.

Booklist 27:196 Ja '31

"We can expect little that is fresh or unusual in poetry from Conrad Aiken, the Pulitzer Prize winner of last year. He has already said his say and has made us familiar with his theme and his method. What he has to offer is a refinement of his point of view and the obvious advantages of mature craftsmanship and artistry. . . Perhaps the most important contribution to the volume is a narrative, obscured and set aside from the rest of the collection by an awkward preamble and a banal title, 'Changing Mind.' Here is brilliant poetry and for a run of about two hundred lines we have Conrad Aiken giving us the latest development of his interesting and original personality." Horace Gregory

+ — N Y Evening Post p4d O 11 '30 550w

"The critics have been so insistent in telling Conrad Aiken that he is a metaphysical poet, it is not to be wondered at if he has placed his work as a metaphysician above his duty as a poet. Yet so gifted is he with poetic accomplishments and power that his work can never be less than distinguished, however unsatisfactory it may be in point of content. The present writer has argued even more strongly than most for thoughtful poetry. But that is not to argue for dialectics in verse. In the present volume Mr. Aiken permits himself to revel overmuch in dialectics. He has permitted his poetry to bcome 'bookish.' " Percy Hutchison

— + N Y Times p9 O 26 '30 700w

"Aiken's poetry has unsurpassed beauty of sound, image, and language, but its sweet caressing music is full of frustration and futility. . . The poem, in spite of its surpassing loveliness of poetry, is a dance of distorted shadows on a wall." L. T. Nicholl

— + Outlook 156:590 D 10 '30 200w

"The title poem is remarkably full of imagination, to our mind one of the best things Aiken has done. . . On the whole this volume is of the firmer fibre that Aiken's later work has assumed. There is nothing of the brief and occasional lyric brilliance of certain things in 'Priapus and the Pool,' but there is continuing evidence of Aiken's power as a poet." W. R. Benét

+ Sat R of Lit 7:212 O 11 '30 500w

"Mr Aiken's verse achieves a dry and knotted horror, symbolizing the mortality alike of human flesh and ideals, yet hardly rising to tragic reality or poetic completeness. . . Mr Aiken is entitled to his ideas, his images, and his phrases. But poetry is judged ultimately by its combination of sound and sense, and the poems in this collection show that Mr Aiken's music is most subtle and most spontaneous when he employs the strictest forms and the simplest diction. His sonnets have a clarity and coherence too often missing from his rambling psychologizing."

Springf'd Republican p7e O 19 '30 500w

AIKEN, MRS JANET RUTH (RANKIN). English, past and present; with an introd. by George Philip Krapp. 287p $3 Ronald

420 English language 30-18052

"Dr. Aiken's intention has been to write a textbook about the English language for the use of students of various ages. She is concerned with the characteristics of English as distinguished from other languages and with the rules that govern the changes in a word as it passes through generations of its users. She writes of words, their birth, change and obsolescence; of sounds and the relation between speech and spelling; of English inflections and syntax and the absurdity of some grammatical terms.''—Christian Science Monitor

"She makes a difficult study vivid, clear, and practical."

+ Bookm 72:xiv O '30 220w

Christian Science Monitor p13 S 20 '30 400w

"Her spirit throughout the book is independent and her viewpoint fresh. Moreover, her pages attest a rich and sound scholarship. But the particularly interesting qualities of her study of the English language are the vitality which she imparts by her emphasis upon its immediate past as explanatory of its present state and her insistence upon the necessity of understanding the forces which are constantly changing and developing it and keeping it a living, vigorous speech."

+ N Y Times p19 Ag 17 '30 320w

"Here is a book by a doctor of philosophy which the everyday reader may pick up and read with profit. There are no pictures in it, and no murders, but tracing the origins of words and determining the future of the language may have, for some readers, the flavor of high adventure." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p11 Jl 24 '30 700w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p9 Jl 26 '30 950w

St Louis 28:262 N '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p738 S 18 '30 500w

AIKEN, MRS JANET RUTH (RANKIN). Why English sounds change. 146p $2.50 Ronald

421.5 English language—Phonology 29-23761

"Dr. Aiken, who is a lecturer in English at Columbia, presents an interesting theory to account for many of the modifications in the language. She refers them in the main to a law which she names accord. Accord, by her definition, is the tendency that sounds show to accommodate themselves to neighboring sounds. . . 'As social progress takes place, the principle of accord, which may be called the unconscious urge toward ease in speech, operates. Continuously through the influence of new generations of speakers, and often radically through social amalgamation and general upheaval, changes occur.' "—Christian Science Monitor

Christian Science Monitor p7 F 8 '30 450w

"The little book, with its clear, incisive and cogent statement of the arguments in favor of Miss Aiken's rather upsetting theories will have much interest for students of English phonetics."

+ N Y Times p26 Ja 12 '30 180w

St Louis 28:68 Mr '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p105 F 6 '30 220w

AKELEY, MRS DELIA J. (DENNING). Jungle portraits. 251p il $3.50 (15s) Macmillan

916.7 Africa—Description and travel. Zoology—Africa. Hunting—Africa. Dwarfs. Kongo, Belgian 30-7309

Mrs Akeley tells how, with only black servants as her companions, she went on an expedition to the land of the pygmies in the heart of the Congo jungle, and she records her studies of savage life, the habits of the apes, etc. One of the most interesting features of the book is her description of her hazardous adventures while she was on the way to rescue and care for her husband, Carl Akeley, who had been wounded by a charging elephant and deserted by his native guides.

Booklist 26:308 My '30

Books p12 Je 22 '30 250w

Cleveland Open Shelf p104 Jl '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p155 D '30

"Mrs. Akeley's notes on the fighting, mating and family life of the apes, on elephants, crocodiles and African natives make fascinating reading. Profusely illustrated with photographs taken by the author, Mrs. Akeley's book provides excellent diversion and information." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 8 '30 150w

"Mrs. Akeley does not confine herself within the usual lion-rhino-elephant complex of the big game hunter, albeit she knows these creatures much better than he ever will. Her visit to Lake Hannington to hunt flamingoes with the camera is alone worth the price of the book. Her studies of the pigmies have a distinct scientific value which does not prevent her writing about them in a terse dramatic style that will hold any reader. Her story of how, unattended by any white companion, she joined the pigmies in a hunt for a wounded elephant is a masterpiece." Gregory Mason

+ N Y Times p14 Je 1 '30 300w

"Not the least important feature of the book is the picture it gives of the writer, of the courage, resourcefulness and endurance shown by her in penetrating the steaming and treacherous jungle in search of pigmies, in hunting elephants in the forest, and particularly in the rescue related in the last chapter." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:427 Mr 12 '30 150w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:54 Je '30

St Louis 28:145 My '30

"There were many thrilling encounters and narrow escapes with wild animals, from water pythons to elephants. It is an entertainingly adventurous story, with some fresh details, of the mysterious dark continent."

+ Springf'd Republican p12 Je 27 '30 330w

Times [London] Lit Sup p408 My 15 '30 1000w

ALAIN, pseud. See Chartier, E.

ALBERT, EDNA. Little pilgrim to Penn's woods. 300p il $2 Longmans

30-18561

Selinda, a little German girl, sets out with her family from their home in Wertheim to the new settlements in Pennsylvania. The story describes her adventures on the German river boats, the trip across the ocean, and the early days in America.

Booklist 27:67 O '30

"The journey to America and the beginning of a new life under pioneer conditions are not handled as well as the earlier part of the book. The journey from the Tauber to Rotterdam takes nearly 200 pages, while the journey across the Atlantic and life in America are crowded into 100 pages. Thus time which goes very slowly in the first part is so accelerated in America that births, deaths and Indian raids happen before the reader realizes it." H. H. O.

+ — Books p8 Je 8 '30 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p132 N '30

N Y Times p17 Je 22 '30 100w

St Louis 28:247 O '30

"For a quiet but interesting narrative which pictures with truth and vividness the life of the immigrant settler in rich and tranquil Pennsylvania, this book can be highly recommended. It is high time for the German forefathers to get such recognition in our children's literature."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:352 N 15 '30 250w

Reviewed by Beulah Amidon

Survey 65:341 D 15 '30 30w

ALDINGTON, RICHARD. Love and the Luxembourg. ltd ed 53p $10 Covici [3s 6d Chatto]

821 30-14839

" 'Love and the Luxembourg' is a simple and direct narrative of a casual love affair, opening with a day dream in the Luxembourg Gardens. The dream takes on the character of an actual

ALDINGTON, RICHARD—Continued
and vivid experience. The protagonist of the poem meets his lady and the love idyll progresses. Aldington speaks of Catullus and he recreates the very spirit of the Latin poet in the spontaneous and natural flow of his narrative." —Books

Reviewed by R. S. Josephy
Bookm 71:xvii Ag '30 100w

"Richard Aldington has given us a poem in the best romantic tradition. And in so doing he is liberating us from the strident, self-conscious attitudes so frequently discovered in contemporary poetry." Horace Gregory
+ Books p4 Je 15 '30 550w

"There is no call to shadow forth an allegory in Mr. Aldington's 'Dream.' The psychologist might do this, but not the critic. The 'Dream' is first of all a poem, and as anything else it would not be so successful. As a poem, the tempo of the story is excellently at Mr. Aldington's command. It is a good thing for every poet to write at least one love-story poem. Mr. Aldington is to be congratulated that he has done so and has it now behind him." James Thornton
+ Nation and Ath 47:325 Je 7 '30 180w

"However moved one is, it is impossible not to find a few things unpleasantly sentimental, even rather silly. Apart from these lapses, the verse is exceedingly charming and of frequent verbal beauty. Whence, then, the doubt of the universality of its appeal? Love poems can move a reader who is not in love: that is obvious. It is simply that it has not the universality of expression to make its way, create itself, in the mind of an unbiassed reader: it is a shaft which can pierce the lover's soft armour, but it does not seem strong enough to get through the steeled exterior of calm consideration. It will appear charming, delightful, not very vital."
— + New Statesman 35:190 My 17 '30 320w

"The poem is not for all; the cause, we surmise, of limiting the edition. But for those who desire a really beautiful and highly esoteric fragment this fantasy will make a strong appeal."
+ N Y Times p17 Je 22 '30 280w

Reviewed by Richard Church
Spec 144:746 My 3 '30 140w

"Mr. Aldington describes himself here as 'a sort of poet' and doubtless there is a sort of poetry in this candid and tender record of a transitory love. But it is lacking in the imaginative penetration which gives a new and universal meaning to personal sentiment and physical desire."
— Times [London] Lit Sup p428 My 22 '30 700w

ALDIS, DOROTHY (KEELEY) (MRS GRAHAM ALDIS). Squiggles; or, The little red cape. 140p il $2 Minton
30-25179

This story of a feud between a family of chipmunks and Patsy, the dog who lived nearby, tells how Patsy was finally routed when all the little chipmunks took to wearing red capes.

"It is a humanized animal story and little children who like this type of story will find much fun in it." A. L. Shea
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p12 O 4 '30 180w

"The interest of the story is well sustained, but the reiteration of phrases for the purpose of emphasis becomes very boring to any age, particularly when read aloud. The black and white illustrations by Margaret Freeman are in keeping and make a harmonious whole which any child will enjoy."
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:352 N 15 '30 250w

ALEXANDER, THOMAS, and PARKER, BERYL. New education in the German republic. 387p $4 Day [16s Williams & Norgate]
370.943 Education—Germany 30-1555

Beginning with a description of the youth movement in Germany, the authors present a picture of German school reform as a whole, as an important factor that is reshaping social life in Germany. The new spirit in education is thus far manifested chiefly in the elementary schools. Among other topics discussed are sports and education, community schools, secondary school progress, examination for the selection of pupils, and the new teacher.

Booklist 26:262 Ap '30
Bookm 70:viii F '30 100w

"The authors of this work are to be congratulated upon having achieved the difficult feat of writing a book on education which is neither arid nor pedantic. Professor Alexander and Miss Parker have traveled extensively in Germany and describe educational conditions there from first-hand observation. The result is freshness, concreteness and plenty of human interest." W. K. Stewart
+ Books p14 Mr 9 '30 750w
Christian Century 47:310 Mr 5 '30 170w

"An excellent account of the educational movements in Germany since the war. The book is well worth careful reading by all students of American education. It should be read particularly by those who think that German education is what it was before the war." G. T. Buswell
+ El School J 30:796 Je '30 600w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p7m Ja 18 '30 80w

"What Dr. Alexander and Miss Parker have to say about educational Germany is vividly presented and full of thoughtful suggestiveness." William MacDonald
+ N Y Times p10 Jl 6 '30 750w
R of Rs 81:12 Ja '30 80w
St Louis 28:97 Ap '30

Reviewed by J. P. Gavit
Survey 64:324 Jl 1 '30 280w
Times [London] Lit Sup p706 S 11 '30 1850w
World Tomorrow 13:315 Jl '30 50w

ALINGTON, ADRIAN. Slowbags and Arethusa. 425p $2.50 Harcourt [7s 6d Chatto & W.]
30-3540

Alexander Slow, an English clergyman's son, revolts against the Slow tradition. Book I takes him thru public school and the war to a schoolmaster's career and an expedition to the Balkans. In Book II the author likewise outlines in detail the life of his heroine, Arethusa Boysey, who is a member of a travelling theatrical company, and who also finds her way to the Balkans. Book III brings Alexander Slow and Arethusa together, and ends on a note of idyllic romance.

Booklist 27:27 S '30

" 'Slowbags and Arethusa' will linger in your memory long after you have ceased struggling to recall its ponderously poetic title. It has the richness and the flavor of reality, and it is set down in flexible, fine-woven prose."
+ Books p10 Mr 2 '30 140w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p11m F 15 '30 100w

"The story is written with an easy grace; there is humor and thought and good character drawing throughout. 'Slowbags and Arethusa' has something which most contemporary romances lack. Usually the characters are insignificant, their lives whether tragic or no, so unimportant that no one cares particularly what happens to them. With Alexander and Arethusa one feels from their infancy that there is a chance of their developing into real human beings and so one cares what becomes of them."
+ N Y Times p27 F 16 '30 200w

"Each piece is fairly well done according to its type and, with the exception of the first, a unit that could stand alone. Save that when they meet, on page 341, the hero is still shy, and the heroine still has green eyes, there is almost no connection among the three parts. The book presents to those curious about nationality in popular fiction an odd mixture, or rather juxtaposition, worth the trouble of reading. Probably the first three hundred and forty pages will limit the book's public to such literary perverts."

Sat R of Lit 6:762 F 22 '30 380w

"The story is a blending of genuine realism and of exuberant fancy. If it is diffuse, it is never dull. It passes from scene to widely contrasted scene with undiminishing gusto, and reveals a new writer with notable gifts of sympathy, charm and humour." Gilbert Thomas
+ Spec 144:134 Ja 25 '30 160w

ALLEE, MARJORIE (HILL) (MRS WARDER CLYDE ALLEE). Judith Lankester. 241p il $2 Houghton
30-26891

After her father's death Judith Lankester, gently reared daughter of Virginia, with her mother and sisters, went by the covered wagon route to Indiana. In the frontier home of her Quaker grandfather Judith was inclined to be critical and superior, and when she learned that she was to live in an even more remote district her indignation was unbounded. But time and adversity made Judith Lankester a loyal and capable daughter of the frontier.

Booklist 27:107 N '30

"Like 'The White Captain,' this book is for the older circle of young readers, who will assuredly find it a delightful story, unusually well told." Cornelia Meigs
+ Books p8 Ja 4 '31 180w
Cleveland Open Shelf p132 N '30
St Louis 28:275 N '30

Reviewed by M. D. Dodd
Sat R of Lit 7:403 N 29 '30 80w

ALLEN, A. H. BURLTON. Pleasure & instinct; a study in the psychology of human action. (Int. lib. of psychology, philosophy and scientific method) 336p $4 Harcourt [12s 6d Routledge]
157 Pleasure. Instinct [30-5530]

Following a summary of the principal theories of pleasure and unpleasure, the author analyzes sensory pleasure and unpleasure. He then discusses the chief conscious instincts, and the dependence of pleasure and unpleasure upon their functioning. A sketch of the psychology of value concludes the volume.

Books p10 Je 29 '30 400w
Boston Transcript p2 Ap 2 '30 400w

"The volume is a serviceable guide to emotional psychology; it is critical, free from the fallacy of easy solutions, shows appreciation for the problems and their intricate relations."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1150 Je 21 '30 450w

ALLEN, ARTHUR AUGUSTUS. Book of bird life; a study of birds in their native haunts. 426p il $3.50 Van Nostrand
598.2 Birds. Photography of birds 30-9510

The present volume on the study of birds "aims to outline the underlying principles that govern the actions of any bird and to suggest methods of study." Part one deals with occurrence of birds in a given locality, their relations to their environment, their habits, together with the relations of birds to man. Part two deals with methods of bird study, particularly in the fields and woods, with living specimens. "Most of the chapters and the majority of the illustrations have appeared in the School department of Bird-lore during the past ten years."

Booklist 26:344 Je '30

"This 'Book of Bird Life' is practical, comprehensive and informing, and it should give impetus to the observation and study of the flying world."
+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 7 '30 280w

"His first-hand knowledge is testified to, if further testimony were necessary, by the marvelous photographs, nearly three hundred in number, illustrating every detail of every phase of the life of birds and representing endless joyful yet exacting hours." Charles Johnston
+ N Y Times p10 My 18 '30 850w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:75 O '30
St Louis 28:210 S '30

ALLEN, AUSTEN. Menace to Mrs Kershaw. 317p $2 Harper [7s 6d Bles]

Sam Gilstrap, gardener, disappeared. The prompt remarriage of his widow, a distributor of publication tracts, to Charley Kershaw, butcher, leads Inspector Ord to suspect that Gilstrap was murdered. Aided by Sabina Gibson, a novelist, he solves the mystery.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p12 Mr 9 '30 150w
N Y Times p28 Mr 23 '30 150w

ALLEN, DEVERE, ed. Pacifism in the modern world. 278p $2 Doubleday, Doran
172.4 Peace 29-19444

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:221 Mr '30

"The book has the obvious disadvantages as well as advantages of the symposium method. The reader has the benefit of the point of view of a man on the particular phase of a problem on which he has thought most, but not even skillful editing can make these essays an argument that marches forward in orderly and imposing fashion. One of the most valuable features of the book is Mr. Allen's brief historical introduction, with his insistence on the new emphasis of pacifism as a positive force for dealing with great social evils." Norman Thomas
+ Books p16 F 23 '30 380w

Reviewed by Earl Marlatt
Christian Century 47:50 Ja 8 '30 700w

"It is notable for the vigor and range of its ideas and for two other qualities: (1) the pacifism the writers discuss is not passivism; it is or seeks to be positive, even aggressive, as a method of dealing with injustice; (2) this pacifism is not derivative; that is, it does not rest on some texts of Scripture, nor is it, as most of the writers see it, a mere deduction from some abstract philosophical principle. The method obviously has the disadvantages as well as the advantages of all symposiums. It gives us, however, a book well worth the reading, and offers food for thought even to those whom it does not completely convert." Norman Thomas
+ Nation 130:274 Mr 5 '30 150w

Reviewed by E. B. Chaffee
Outlook 154:110 Ja 15 '30 100w
St Louis 28:35 F '30

ALLEN, EDITH LOUISE. American housing; as affected by social and economic conditions. 216p il $2 Manual arts press
728 Architecture, Domestic—United States. Housing 30-16971

A history of American home building from earliest days to the present, which stresses the effects of economic and social conditions on the types of buildings. There is a chapter on European and other backgrounds of the American house, one on American furniture, and a table of dates of inventions and social and economic events useful to the student of home economics.

Booklist 27:55 O '30
J Home Econ 22:863 O '30 150w
N Y New Tech Bks 15:32 Jl '30
N Y Times p18 Ag 10 '30 250w

ALLEN, LUCY GRACE. Choice candy recipes. 138p il $1.75 Little
641.85 Confectionery 30-1899

A collection of 165 tested recipes that are best adapted to the uses of the home candy-

ALLEN, L. G.—Continued
maker. They include various kinds of fudges and fondants, and directions for making chocolates and glacés.

Booklist 26:224 Mr '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p123 S '30
J Home Econ 22:223 Mr '30 80w
St Louis 28:101 Ap '30
Wis Lib Bul 26:100 Mr '30

ALLEN, MARY CECIL. Painters of the modern mind. (New arts) 81p il $1.25 Norton
759 Painting. Art 29-30544

An interpretation of modern art and artists for the layman's understanding. The author shows that in order to appreciate the new painting, one must first train himself to recognize the symbols used by the artist, and to estimate their value as expressions of visible things.

Booklist 26:303 My '30

"'Painters of the Modern Mind,' aside from a rather silly and pretentious preface couched as a dialogue, is almost wholly admirable. Miss Allen knows clearly what she wishes to accomplish, she is in sympathy with most of the aims she elects to discuss, and she has the gift of complete lucidity. . . Nowhere is her skill revealed more strikingly than in her elucidation of the difference between design and rhythm." Edgar Johnson
+ — Books p25 F 16 '30 300w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:41 My '30
St Louis 28:73 Mr '30

ALLEVI, BAPTISTIN. Savarin cookbook; scientific cooking for profit. 262p il $6 Harper
641.572 Cookery for institutions, etc. Restaurants, lunchrooms, etc. 29-23388

The supervising chef of the Savarin restaurant at the Pennsylvania station, New York, has collected the recipes used by cooks in the Savarin restaurants. These recipes, which cover every course, are given in terms of ingredients necessary for quantity cooking, representing from 25 to 50 portions or servings.

Booklist 26:190 F '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p122 S '30
J Home Econ 21:936 D '29 100w
Pratt p20 spring '30

ALLIER, RAOUL SCIPION PHILIPPE. Mind of the savage; tr. by Fred Rothwell. 301p $3.75 Harcourt [15s Bell, G.]
572.7 Savages. Ethnopsychology. Magic 29-22416

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"While M. Allier's work is sound and illuminating in most respects, it is open to a number of criticisms. In the first place, he tends to regard the dominance of magic as complete. . . Then, M. Allier tends to regard many primitive groups as not only stagnant or 'arrested,' but in a state of actual degeneration from which they could not emerge. . . The volume closes with allusions to programs of colonization, the significance of which is not entirely clear to the reviewer. . . It seems a shame, in the opinion of the reviewer, that a work so rich in insight and sympathetic understanding as the present volume should end in an irrelevant and ignominious rationalization of the French colonial program. This defection should not, however, deter the student of primitive mentality from reading this wise and thoughtful book with much profit." L. A. White
+ — Am Anthropol 32:663 O '30 1150w

"The translation of the text is hardly of uniform excellence, sometimes, in fact, absolutely misleading. Yet with all its defects the work is an interesting document, an attempt to link up modern theories and the findings of the social sciences with the practical problems of colonization." Elsie Murray
Am J Psychol 42:665 O '30 550w
J Religion 10:307 Ap '30 80w
Nature 124:910 D 14 '29 220w

"If the doyen of the Faculty of Theology in Paris is unacquainted with the relevant literature outside France, at least he should know the work of his own country men, such as that of M. Olivier Leroy, whose La Raison Primitive completely re-established the oneness of human mentality."
— Spec 144:30 Ja 4 '30 150w

"The chapters on Magic and Arrest of Intelligence are the best. A good feature of the book is its extraordinarily detailed collection of anecdotes illustrating magic, taboo, fetishes, fears, etc., among both savages and civilized. To a psychiatrist the illustrations of savage life seem better selected than those of the psychopathology of everyday life. The finest thing in the book is the forceful way in which the author leads to the conclusion that 'civilization' has done savages more harm than good, though he supplements this with a defense of Christian missions as having at heart a motive of unity." K. A. Menninger
+ — Survey 64:360 Jl 15 '30 450w

ALLINGHAM, MARGERY. Mystery mile. 320p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Jarrolds]
30-12293

Apparently Albert Campion was a very stupid young Englishman, with nothing much on his mind but wisecracking. When Crowdy Lobbett, an American judge, came to England to avoid the machinations of the deadly Simister, he could not understand what earthly use Albert would be to him. But underneath his silliness Albert concealed a very clever mind; and Simister did not kill Judge Lobbett and thereby lost a bet.

Booklist 26:399 Jl '30

"Rich in thrills and cleverly executed."
+ Bookm 71:xx Je '30 80w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p20 Ap 20 '30 130w

"Here is a mystery-adventure story of real quality. The events narrated in it are highly improbable, not to say fantastic; but that does not dawn upon the reader until he has finished the book and has had time for sober reflection. So long as one is under the magic spell woven by the author everything seems quite plausible as well as highly exciting."
N Y Times p20 Ap 6 '30 120w

Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith
N Y World p7m Je 22 '30 120w

"A distinctly interesting detective story, thoroughly modern in mood, and yet suggestive in its construction of the early Conan Doyles. The author has an alert, inventive mind that transforms the incongruous, the artificial, and the somewhat hackneyed elements of mystery writing into quite vivid and startling effects." Eugene Reynal
+ Sat R of Lit 6:997 Ap 26 '30 250w
Times [London] Lit Sup p145 F 20 '30 150w

ALLINGHAM, WILLIAM. Robin Redbreast, and other verses. (Little lib.) 113p il $1 Macmillan
821 30-16887

A book of verse for children aged from four to ten. The book first appeared many years ago, and contains pictures by Helen Allingham, Kate Greenaway, Caroline Paterson, and Harry Furniss.

Booklist 27:67 O '30

"Miss Turpin has done childhood a delightful service in bringing this small book to the attention of the publishers."
+ Bookm 72:xxviii N '30 80w

"A sweet voice of delicate timbre may for a long time be apparently lost; but if its songs are more than echoes they will survive with renewed charm. So we re-welcome 'Robin Redbreast,' 'Wishing,' 'Amy Margaret,' and all the other fanciful children of William Allingham's exquisite mind—that mind which can at times be wonderfully concrete in its quality of story telling." Laura Benet
+ Books p8 Jl 20 '30 280w

"With this volume added to Christina Rossetti's 'Sing Song,' Stevenson's 'Child's Garden of Verses,' and 'Silver Pennies, Modern Verses for Boys and Girls,' the Little Library offers a selection of poetry in attractive, inexpensive volumes that makes an excellent beginning for children from 4 to 10."
+ N Y Times p12 Ag 31 '30 250w

ALMACK, JOHN CONRAD. Research and thesis writing; a textbook on the principles and techniques of thesis construction for the use of graduate students in universities and colleges. (Research and thesis writing) 310p $2.40 Houghton

378.242 Research. Dissertations, Academic 30-8251

A textbook for graduate students who are engaged in the preparation of theses. The introductory chapters take up the meaning of research and the thesis, and the nature, sources and criteria of problems. The chapters following are concerned with the underlying principles of the scientific method, the methods for various types of research, suggestions for using the library and writing the thesis report, and the evaluation of results.

"The volume can scarcely be regarded as very profound or original. The aims of its author have been to supply something useful to graduate students, and in the fulfilment of these aims, they have been quite successful."
+ Am J Soc 36:169 Jl '30 150w

"The emphasis of the book is entirely wholesome since it directs the student's thinking primarily toward the intellectual, as contrasted with the routine, aspects of research. . . Professor Almack's book will be of real value to the profession if it is used intelligently, but the danger of its being used—together with other books of its type—in attempts to make research workers of persons who have no intellectual equipment for such undertakings is likely to become altogether too real in the field of education." G. T. Buswell
+ El School J 31:68 S '30 850w

ALVERDES, PAUL. Whistlers' room; tr. from the German by Basil Creighton. 135p $1.50 Covici [5s Secker]

30-3651

The scene is a German hospital on the Rhine where three soldiers, similarly wounded in the throat and provided with silver pipes for breathing, are awaiting recovery. They are later joined by a fourth whistler, a young Englishman. Their common affliction is a strong bond and they become fast friends. Two of the whistlers die, but in the other two the skill and patience of the doctor effect a miraculous cure. The story is short and told with perfect simplicity.

Booklist 27:27 S '30

"Herr Alverdes has said what he has to say, quietly, without any fuss and feathers, without underlining the hospital horrors which form the background of this extremely touching, straightforward, simple little story. It has none of the scope of such a book as All Quiet on the Western Front, but it has the same ring of quiet, desperate, shocking truth."
+ Bookm 71:98 Mr '30 230w

"It is a very gentle, a very moving story; a quaint and plaintive offset to the deeper intonations of many war books. It is a story that has been told often enough before—how the half humorous and wholly humble acquiescence of men in their fate leads to a comradship beyond the irony of circumstance. One does not question its 'soundness' or its 'validity.' It is a piece of sentiment that rings true to the author's mood, and, since he believes in it, we are quite willing and likely to follow him." Eugene Lohrke
+ Books p2 F 2 '30 700w

Cleveland Open Shelf p78 My '30

Reviewed by Alter Brody
Nation 131:102 Jl 23 '30 480w

"There is nothing emotional or strained in this story; it is told in a style simple and direct, delightful often in its seeming naiveté, poignant in its clarity; throughout it is balanced, subtly restrained. Artistically, this is certainly the best war book which has yet appeared." K. G. D.
+ New Repub 62:107 Mr 12 '30 300w

"The reader who ventures through the first few pages of the story will divine that there is before him a spiritual experience which will demand all his firmness of mind but which will profit him if he can summon up sufficient resolution to undergo it. The comradeship of these four men, the three Germans and the one Englishman, in a German military hospital is exquisitely described, and the style, at once astringent and tender, while it cannot be other than that of the original, reflects the highest credit on the translator, Mr. Basil Creighton."
+ New Statesman 34:334 D 14 '29 400w

"This book merits comparison in achieved form and in the accident of background, with no less a small masterpiece than Thomas Mann's 'Tristan.' Its muted and limpid prose permits the transmission of emotion with not a word to spare. A scrupulous tact has been at work in the selection of high and low details, and a scrupulous talent has organized these details perfectly in a minor design." V. McH.
+ N Y Evening Post p10m F 15 '30 550w

" 'The Whistlers' Room' is a little book, but it packs considerable meaning into its pages—as much, in fact, as can be found in many of the bulking war masterpieces that are four or five times its length. Its intention is perfectly fulfilled. It is packed with all the horror that is appropriate to any war book, but, like 'All Quiet on the Western Front,' it is a book of horrible implications in which comradeship flowers from the ugly soil and makes the story at once supportable and doubly agonizing."
+ N Y Times p9 F 2 '30 600w

"What makes this little book unusual is not the fact that it describes the war injured but that these men discovered something worth knowing about each other when the ordinary demands of living had been removed. Just as their perceptive senses were sharpened, so, too, they mellowed in their human relationships and gave their emotions a chance to come to the surface." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p11 Ja 21 '30 700w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:50 Je '30

"Herr Alverdes acts as interpreter between the flesh and the spirit, harmonizing them, dwelling on their interdependence with gentle insistence; and one lays his book down feeling more content with the human lot—a result which few novelists aim at, and fewer still achieve. 'The Whistlers' Room' overflows with a lovely quality of tenderness which I do not remember finding in any other book." L. P. Hartley
+ Sat R 148:760 D 21 '29 380w

"It is scarcely possible to exaggerate the delicacy and originality of this exquisite piece of work. It is as clear as glass; glass which mirrors simply and faithfully and without over-emphasis every aspect of the situation; and which nevertheless has an edge in its horror that cuts to the bone. No detail of pain, symptom or process is spared, but it is a story which heals by its own beauty the wounds that it makes."
+ Spec 144:342 Mr 1 '30 220w

ALVERDES, PAUL—Continued

"It is a beautiful story, symbolic of the finer nature of man triumphing over a thing so fundamental as war." H. K.

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 20 '30 750w

Reviewed by Leon Whipple

Survey 64:35 Ap 1 '30 80w

"Sometimes it approaches and even hangs upon the brink of the abyss of sentimentality; but always sincerity, taste, and humour arrive in time to save it from dropping over. . . A book like this, quite apart from its high qualities as a work of art, may very well help to heal moral wounds as Dr. Quint healed the physical wounds of Benjamin, the Westphalian artilleryman, and Harry Flint of the Glocesters."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p993 N 28 '29 470w

AMANN, GUSTAV. Legacy of Sun Yatsen; a history of the Chinese revolution; with prefaces by Karl Haushofer, and Engelbert Krebs; tr. from the German by Frederick Philip Grove. 302p il $3.75 Carrier

951 Sun Yat Sen. China—History 30-26047

As a background to the history of the Young-China movement, or the revolutionary events from 1925 to 1927, to all of which the author has been an eye witness, this biography of the great Chinese leader is written. Sun Yatsen's political views, his nationalistic spirit, and his mistaken alliance with Russian propagandists are recorded by the author as preliminary to the description of modern China.

Booklist 26:196 F '30

"Gustav Amann knew Sun Yatsen, the 'Father of the Chinese Revolution,' and was close to his immediate successors in the days when the Nationalist tide was sweeping China. He writes here an interpretation of the rise of that movement—partly an interpretation of the minds of its leaders. It is good journalism, sometimes a little emotional, but convincing."

+ Books p19 F 16 '30 130w

"The author is admirably clear in dealing with the moves and motives of military gentry. . . The details given of the boycott against the English after the Shanghai shootings are highly instructive." Don Seitz

+ Churchman 141:16 Ja 11 '30 230w

Reviewed by Francis Snow

Current Hist 32:6 Ap '30 100w

"It is regrettable that so fine a book should suffer from so slipshod a translation. It reads as if Herr Amann himself were writing English with a German accent. And the spelling of names is inexcusable." H. L. Matthews

+ — N Y Times p28 F 16 '30 700w

"It is the only book we have seen which gives a comprehensible picture of contemporary China." F. L. Robbins

Outlook 153:510 N 27 '29 50w

St Louis 28:247 O '30

Reviewed by J. S. Burgess

Survey 64:482 S 1 '30 320w

World Tomorrow 13:316 Jl '30 30w

AMIEL, HENRI FREDERIC. Philine; from the unpublished journals of [the author]; tr. by Van Wyck Brooks; with an introd. by Edmond Jaloux. 401p $3.50 Houghton

B or 92 30-14915

From the whole text of Amiel's Journal, more than 16,000 pages, have been selected the passages relating to his long love affair with the young woman whom he called Philine. For years she occupied his thoughts and was the occasion of pages of philosophic reflection concerning the nature of love and of woman, and much analyzing of his own psychology.

Booklist 27:100 N '30

"Mr. Brooks has done a beautiful translation of what is likely to be one of the most important books of the year. Philine is moving, terrifying, wearisome, annoying, difficult, pitiful, mean and sublime. It is a novel, a textbook, an autobiography, a chart. But all its varied and opposing qualities combine to make that one quality of wholeness which alone justifies the epithet 'beautiful'." George Dangerfield

+ Bookm 71:457 Jl '30 500w

"It is a thoroughly French undertaking, this editing of a vast diary in order to transform it into a psychological novel centered about a love affair. The results, too, are French, in that the new book makes Amiel seem less significant in himself than did the earlier fragments. Philine is the only character in the volume who does not suffer from the passage of time. Amiel himself seems a rather shabby figure, humorless, selfish and provincial." Malcolm Cowley

— Books p3 Je 8 '30 1050w

"The story of Amiel's romantic attachment to the widow Philine, as culled from the entangled pages of his interminable journal, aside from its psychological importance, is worth the attention of the reader because of its beauty. There are passages in it that almost deny the belief that Amiel could not be lyrical; there are isolated passages of philosophy that is not hackneyed; there are generalizations of importance; and over it all there is a love story well told." Karl Schriftgiesser

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 14 '30 1650w

"It is not a new Amiel that 'Philine' gives us, but merely an Amiel whose sick will is turned from the cosmic and eternal to the mundane and diurnal. The cosmic priggishness of Amiel in vacuo was merely a little irritating, but this mundane priggishness of Amiel facing life cannot but be exasperating, even disgusting." Lionel Trilling

— Nation 130:682 Je 11 '30 1150w

"With the present publication of 'Philine' we are given perhaps the most vivid and unified interest of the Journal. Here are bared the most intimate details of Amiel's life, in a confession that, for honesty and insight, must take obvious preference over Rousseau's Confessions." Robert Cantwell

+ N Y Evening Post p4s Je 7 '30 850w

"Expertly chosen, neatly dove-tailed selections from Amiel's journals. The two French collaborators—ably seconded, as translator, by Mr. Brooks—make us see, as if they stood before our eyes, Philine, first of all a woman, and Amiel, last of all a man. How interesting it would be to hear her version of the affair, without omission or abbreviation! It would be like listening to a flame's voluble explanation of why it had not melted a bar of iron!" T. R. Ybarra

+ N Y Times p5 Je 1 '30 1600w

Reviewed by F. G. Seabury

Outlook 155:308 Je 25 '30 330w

Reviewed by James Orrick

Sat R of Lit 7:4 Jl 26 '30 1350w

Springf'd Republican p5e Je 29 '30 1200w

AMINOFF, CONSTANCE LEONIE CAROLINE (BORGSTROM), friherrinna. Storm. (Torchlight ser. of Napoleonic romances) 372p $3 Dutton

Napoleon I, emperor of the French—Fiction 30-7794

This is the ninth in the Torchlight series of Napoleonic romances. It begins with Napoleon's invasion of Spain, carries him thru his divorce and second marriage, and breaks off at the beginning of the retreat from Russia.

"Despite a flippant style, this portrait of the great man is intensely interesting."

+ — Bookm 71:viii Mr '30 70w

"All this is recounted with devastating liveliness. Léonie Aminoff is vivacious beyond endurance." William MacDonald

— Books p19 Mr 23 '30 300w

Boston Transcript p2 Ap 2 '30 200w

N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 19 '30 150w

AMMERS-KULLER, JO VAN. Jenny Heysten's career; tr. from the Dutch by H. van Wyhe. 260p $2.50 Dutton

30-22437

A continuation of the story of Jenny Heysten begun in The House of Joy (Book Review Digest, 1929). Nico returns to The Hague after the war and finds that Jenny has become a well-known actress and is still estranged from her family. The old love between Jenny and Nico revives, their engagement is announced, and Jenny leaves the stage and returns home to await her wedding. But the call of the stage is too strong and once more Jenny gives up her love for her career.

Booklist 27:159 D '30

"The solidity, the factuality, the nicety of this story suggest its Dutch origin—something of Ter Borch, something of Metsu. . . Mrs. van Ammers-Küller has a strong hold on life and for that reason a strong hold on her art." Esther Forbes

+ Bookm 72:306 N '30 420w

Books p12 N 30 '30 200w

"It is a story of character in which humor and pathos are almost equally balanced. Jo van Ammers-Kuller has a talent for rendering her characters with a clarity of perception and a subtlety of touch which marks her as a very competent novelist." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 1 '30 750w

"The story is agreeable for being straightforwardly told and unpretentious. Unfortunately, this is not enough to make it very consequential." W. S.

N Y Evening Post p4d D 13 '30 220w

"Notable picture of backstage life. . . There is more than story to this book. There is character portrayal of the finest sort. The wearing down of Jenny's moral forces and her slow acceptance of the manners and the ethics of the theatre, which she both despises and loves, is done with a rare sureness and subtlety of touch." R. C. Feld

+ N Y Times p7 Ag 24 '30 500w

"You feel impatient, throughout the book, with the young man's rigidity and with the young woman's melting fluctuations. Jenny Heysten's Career does not reach the sources of your emotion. It simply detains your mind with the accurate, cool phlegm which under-lies the heady longings it describes. It is not a plastic book; it is precise and chiseled." V. P. Ross

Outlook 156:67 S 10 '30 350w

Pittsburgh Bo Mul 35:79 N '30

"The story is told with a sympathetic understanding that compels the reader's interest. Beyond that, one is gripped by the author's ability to portray her characters. It seems to matter not at all whether she is dealing with the honest, groping Jenny, the proud Nicholas or the slatternly Cora Hoffman. Each comes from her pen subtly and superbly true to life."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e O 12 '30 350w

AMMERS-KULLER, JO VAN. Tantalus; tr. from the Dutch by G. J. Renier and Irene Clephane. 305p $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d J. Cape]

30-4845

The Dutch author of The Rebel Generation in her latest novel pictures a rich, well-born Hollander of middle age, married but naturally polygamous, and incapable of subduing the restless urge of his sex life. Held in bonds by his marriage to a woman beautiful and fine, but lacking in warmth, he is attracted by one woman after another, yet forever unsatisfied; like Tantalus, unable to quench his thirst. The novel brings out the most advanced views of the marriage relationship and comparisons between the position of women in Holland and in America.

Booklist 26:279 Ap '30

"It is a good novel, though there is nothing original about it, save perhaps Mrs. Van Ammers-Küller's slightly cinematic impression of American youth. The development of the weak, sensitive, sensuous character of the protagonist, Evert Tideman, under the influences of the too-strict environment of his wife's family, and the catastrophic entrance into his life of the attractive but rather incredible American flapper, Margaret, is splendidly done."

+ Bookm 71:xxiv Mr '30 100w

"'Tantalus' is a novel of honesty and insight—qualities which commend it to the thoughtful."

Books p10 F 16 '30 250w

Reviewed by L. L. Irvine

Nation and Ath 46:644 F 8 '30 100w

"Mrs. van Ammers-Küller, in exposing the failure of marriage, does not suggest a remedy. She describes one definite case in detail and some other cases superficially. Moreover, in this book there is only the question of physical love, which the hero and his friend vainly try to touch with romanticism. Ideal love, which we take to be a combination of spiritual and physical attraction—ecstacy as explained by such genuine modern writers as Havelock Ellis, Marie Stopes or Margaret Sanger—is not touched upon and therefore the ground remains uncovered." Henriette Hendrix-Holst

— N Y Times p13 D 23 '28 800w

Reviewed by Margaret Wallace

N Y Times p7 F 2 '30 600w

"Although not as well constructed as 'The Rebel Generation,' this new book shows the author's ability to write a straightforward novel around the emotions after the fashion of the better known Americans who make marriage and divorce their theme. Although others have portrayed American life with better knowledge of details, this Dutch author has caught some of the essential situations." Harry Hansen

+ — N Y World p11 Ja 20 '30 300w

"Mrs. Van Ammers-Küller writes very beautifully and very bravely. She has a flair for apt and simple characterization. She depicts the adolescent moods of Evert with perfect comprehension. Her women, though, are a trifle more vivid than her men. The prose has an ease which never lapses into the vulgar or the precious. A novel that one does not forget as soon as the last page is turned."

+ Outlook 154:108 Ja 15 '30 280w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:31 Ap '30

"The whole novel is a very effective piece of work, constructed with the slick competence of a Ford car. The spare parts are standardized, but of excellent quality."

+ Sat R 149:657 My 24 '30 500w

"This is one of those novels that fail to persuade because of their preoccupation with sociology rather than with art. We resent sitting so obviously in the class room. . . Two items in the novel are really commendable: the excellent portrait of Evert Tideman; and the suggestions of solidity and strength seen in the Vogels. Both Tideman and his 'in-laws' are carefully developed; they carry conviction and are of definite significance." R. B. Macdougall

— + Sat R of Lit 6:924 Ap 12 '30 600w

"She writes with a serious—sometimes almost a philosophic—dignity worthy of a subtler theme; her descriptions, whether of Holland, Paris, or New York, are excellent; and the glimpses of Dutch home life are particularly interesting." Gilbert Thomas

+ Spec 144:133 Ja 25 '30 230w

Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 16 '30 350w

AMOS, SIR MAURICE SHELDON. English constitution; [with an introd. by Lord Hewart of Bury]. (English heritage ser.) 194p $1.40 (3s 6d) Longmans

342.42 Great Britain. Constitution [30-15506]

This little book gives a clear and concise account of the various political institutions which form the English constitution and an explanation of the leading rules and principles governing those institutions and their relations to one another.

AMOS, M. S.—Continued
Reviewed by J. B. S. Bennett
Nation and Ath 47:707 S 6 '30 50w

"Sir Maurice Amos, in his introductory chapter, shows the peculiarity of the English constitution most succinctly and conveniently, especially in his comparison of it with the American. His book does much to clear up the obscurity; and if any one could make it clear it would be Sir Maurice Amos. I am afraid, however, that 'the lesser breeds without the law' may still find in the ancient English constitution things past understanding." R. E. Roberts
+ — New Statesman 35:277 Je 7 '30 600w

"Sir Maurice Amos has made out of a subject that might easily have become, under less skillful treatment, a dismal sort of treatise, a thoroughly interesting book, vital with human quality."
+ N Y Times p16 Ag 3 '30 500w

"The book is not overloaded with learning. The style is simple and the author's experience, added to his knowledge, keeps it practical."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p502 Je 19 '30 140w

AMULREE OF STRATHBRAAN, WILLIAM WARRENDER MACKENZIE, 1st baron. Industrial arbitration in Great Britain. 234p $4.50 (12s 6d) Oxford
331.155 Arbitration, Industrial [30-9114]

"Lord Amulree has undertaken a history of the efforts of the State to intervene in the differences between employers and employed. He writes as a lawyer and confines himself to Great Britain. He therefore deals mainly with facts and does not draw on any experience outside this country, even to illustrate a point. He restricts himself very narrowly to his theme; too narrowly perhaps for some readers. At any rate he has chosen to confine himself strictly to the legal aspect of the subject. This enables him to relate the facts with complete detachment, which is one of the objects of his special study."—Times [London] Lit Sup

Am Pol Sci R 24:783 Ag '30 250w
Reviewed by D. H. Robertson
Nation and Ath 47:293 My 31 '30 80w

"It is one of the few books available on the subject. This, coupled with the fact that the subject matter is treated with authority and competence, makes the volume a very useful aid to the student." Louis Rich
+ N Y Times p14 Je 22 '30 350w

"His narrative of British efforts to find methods of settling differences 'otherwise than by means of a trial of strength' is a delight, not only for the facts of history, which he says he has 'endeavored to record with all due detachment,' but even more for the manner of his presentation, and the temper and spirit with which it is informed." E. T. Devine
+ Outlook 156:232 O 8 '30 120w
Times [London] Lit Sup p88 F 6 '30 2150w

"Industrial Arbitration in Great Britain is a product of [the author's] wide experience in arbitration and industrial enquiry, his sound common sense, and careful historical research. Needless to say, the volume is an important addition to the literature of its field." H. A. Mills
+ Yale Law J 40:328 D '30 550w

ANDERSON, EUGENE NEWTON. First Moroccan crisis, 1904-1906. 420p $4.50 Univ. of Chicago press [21s Cambridge univ. press]
327.64 Europe—Politics. Morocco—Foreign relations 30-18948

"Relying chiefly upon Die Grosse Politik, the British Documents on the Origins of the War, and the Livres jaunes dealing with Moroccan affairs from 1901-1906, Mr. Anderson has woven an interesting narrative of the shaping up of the European alignments from 1898 to 1904, of the increasing rivalry between France and Germany, of which the Moroccan dispute was only one expressive phase, of the shifting tactics and policies of Russia and England, and of the soreness of the wound left by the Algeciras Conference of 1906. For a decade and a half the 'Moroccan problem was the political barometer of Europe,' and it rose and fell with terrifying suddenness and rapidity."—Hist Outlook

Reviewed by William MacDonald
Current Hist 33:xviii N '30 900w

"In an unusually well-documented volume, Mr. Eugene N. Anderson has given a life-like portrayal of the type of diplomacy that 'laid open the road to Armageddon.' . . Although the story of the Moroccan pawn has been told many times before, in such works, for example, as Stuart's French Foreign Policy and Tardieu's Algeciras Conference, the appearance of numerous hitherto undisclosed documents has made a fresh study essential. Mr. Anderson has summed up the story in highly estimable fashion."
+ Hist Outlook 21:399 D '30 150w

"Mr. Anderson's book certainly is carefully and conscientiously written. He has pieced together all the material available and his book, though it demands close reading, gives a clear picture of the progress of events. What it lacks is any human interest, any dramatic representation of the clash of personalities and national character."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p767 O 2 '30 950w

ANDERSON, FREDERICK IRVING. Book of murder. 282p $2 Dutton
30-21639

Ten murder mysteries, featuring the work of Detective Parr, of New York City, and his friend Orlo Sage, village constable.

Bookm 72:xxiv S '30 50w

"Clever, well written short stories." Will Cuppy
+ Books p12 Ag 24 '30 150w

"Ten unusual detective stories. They are well written, the characterization is excellent, the plots well contrived—but their real claim to distinction lies in the authenticity of the New England atmosphere in which the action of most of them takes place." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 155:550 Ag 6 '30 80w

"Worth the attention of the most captious mystery readers. Here are ten long stories distinguished by excellent writing, puzzling crimes, and two plausible and interesting detectives." W. C. Weber
+ Sat R of Lit 7:94 Ag 30 '30 100w

ANDERSON, ISABEL WELD (PERKINS) (MRS LARZ ANDERSON). Circling Africa. 270p il $4 Marshall Jones
916 Africa—Description and travel 29-20819

"Mrs. Anderson tells how, in the same ship that had carried her on a former journey, she cruised round the Dark Continent, starting from New York, stopping at Madeira and the Canaries, striking the west coast of Africa at Dakar, visiting St. Helena, rounding the Cape and sailing up the east coast, going ashore at all the interesting places, making long overland excursions from several points which carried her through jungles and deserts and game country, and finally ending the Winter cruise at Alexandria."—N Y Times

Booklist 26:113 D '29

"An entertaining travel book in the informal manner which Mrs. Anderson has made familiar to her readers in half a dozen volumes. The text is plentifully interspersed with photographic reproductions of places and persons."
+ Books p18 O 13 '29 200w
Cleveland Open Shelf p29 F '30
N Y Times p20 O 13 '29 130w

"Mrs. Anderson describes well the places she saw. She is a good observer and has read widely, and gives a charming outline of her delightful passage." Frederick O'Brien
+ N Y World p11m Ja 19 '30 150w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 34:43 My '29

"One lays down Mrs. Anderson's book with the feeling that Africa is a very enticing and romantic country and that life on board the Laconia was most exciting and diverting. A great number of illustrations made from photographs add to the interest of this unusual volume." C. T. Lowell

+ Portland Evening News p5 D 31 '29 500w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 80:30 N '29 80w
St Louis 28:110 Ap '30
Wis Lib Bul 26:40 Ja '30

ANDERSON, ISABEL WELD (PERKINS) (MRS LARZ ANDERSON). A yacht in Mediterranean seas. 428p il $4 Marshall Jones

910.4 Mediterranean Sea—Description and travel. Greece, Modern—Description and travel 30-29127

An account of a two months' trip by steam yacht "exploring the eleven classic seas which make up the eastern Mediterranean, with their storied islands, their wild monastic fastnesses, their piratical retreats and their modern battlefields." (Boston Transcript)

"Chummy, chatty, well-informed, a mixture of personal narrative and concise description, historical and geographical."

+ Books p14 N 30 '30 150w

Reviewed by Katharine Crosby
Boston Transcript p4 O 18 '30 1700w

"The author has overloaded her narrative with historical data of an elementary kind, often to the reader's discomfort, and has left out much of the incidental material that a more adroit writer could have utilized. In the leisurely pages are many interesting passages, and the numerous illustrations have the merit of being unfamiliar." R. C. B. B.

+ — N Y Evening Post p4d Ja 3 '31 100w

ANDERSON, JOHN. Box office. 121p $2.50 Cape

792 Theater—United States 29-25764

"'Box Office' provides discussions and information with regard to such worldly and practical aspects of the theater as the manager's office, the road companies, the ticket agents, the actors' agencies, the competition of Hollywood, the chance of the dramatist in the vast melée, long runs, hits, and the great game of the theatrical business, as an enterprise and as a gamble."—New Repub

Booklist 26:192 F '30

"It is a clean-cut, brief, sensible book, and ought to be read by every person who feels welling up within him the impulse to complain, 'Why don't they give us better plays, and sell seats at the box office for a reasonable price?'" W. P. Eaton

+ Books p22 Ja 26 '30 100w

"Mr. Anderson's little treatise on the commercial aspects of the American theater is valuable and refreshing for the simple reason that it is written from the standpoint of one in close contact with realities. He has undertaken to trace in outline the effects of the theatrical business upon theatrical art, and he recognizes the fact that under no possible conditions could the two be entirely divorced." J. W. Krutch

— Nation 130:49 Ja 8 '30 450w

"Small volume, admirably written, full of right data and special observation, common sense and fairness of mind. . . This is a book full of wise and friendly suggestions, never too abstract and visionary, never extreme; and one that succeeds in doing exactly what it sets out to do." Stark Young

+ New Repub 61:196 Ja 8 '30 1750w

"Mr. Anderson writes out of close contact with the theatre and keen and constant interest in its welfare, and his book is a contribution to the current discussion commendable for its shrewd common sense, its intimate knowledge and its well-balanced, judicial presentation of all the factors concerned."

+ N Y Times p20 D 15 '29 270w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:15 F '30
St Louis 28:75 Mr '30

ANDERSON, JOHN, and MORSE, STEARNS. Book of the White mountains. 300p il $5 Minton

974.22 White mountains 30-19267

An informal guide book to the entire region of the White mountains, including much historical material and an account of eventful ascents of Mount Washington. The appendices give hotels of the White mountains with their charges, summer camps in New Hampshire, golf courses and a bibliography.

Booklist 27:59 O '30

"John Anderson is a dramatic critic and Stearns Morse is a professor, yet their joint book is neither theatrical nor academic. They have simply fused their enthusiasm for the New Hampshire mountains and pooled their knowledge, the result being an engaging and informed piece of writing, valuable for the historian, attractive to the general reader and practical for the intending traveler."

+ Books p10 S 7 '30 120w

"The lover of the White Mountains will enjoy this book even though he may deplore the attempts at humor which are, at times, rather strained and occasionally out of place. Those who know not the mountains will also derive much pleasure from it." L. E. S.

+ — Boston Transcript p2 Jl 23 '30 900w

"Mr. Anderson and Mr. Morse know their White Mountains and have selected with discrimination those features of the region most likely to appeal to the vacationist in search of the stimulation of the open. Theirs is no guidebook to fashionable hotels or golf courses, but rather a chronicle by means of which the motorist and climber can discover the beauties of a mountain playland which despite its large hostelries and much travelled roads still offers to those who know how to search it out the exhilaration of untamed nature."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1163 Je 28 '30 350w

ANDERSON, MARGARET C. My thirty years' war; an autobiography. 274p il $4 Covici [15s Knopf]

B or 92 Little review (periodical). Authors 30-14692

Margaret Anderson says she began her "war" against convention and reality when she was five or six years old. She founded the Little Review, destined to be the most important experimental magazine of its troubled era, in Chicago in 1914, when she was twenty-one. The Little Review was an adventure in the seven arts. To its editor it meant good conversation, strange friendships, adversity, publicity, excitement, and a criminal record in the United States courts for publishing James Joyce's Ulysses. Miss Anderson's intimate autobiography is illustrated with photographs of Ezra Pound, H.D., James Joyce, George Antheil, Ernest Hemingway, Gertrude Stein, and several other contemporary artists, of whom she tells amusing anecdotes with a disarming naïveté and, sometimes, a pretty malice.

Booklist 27:24 S '30
Bookm 71:566 Ag '30 450w

"This autobiography is an almost continuously interesting record of one woman's struggle against reality, and up to date it appears to have been successful. The major interest of Margaret Anderson's book, for all her reiterations of her impersonality and her devotion to ideas for their own sake, is in the pages given to her lively, arrogant, often exacerbated accounts of her personal reactions to people, places and events. Her autobiography is extremely diverting and sometimes stimulating. It is, in fine, much what one would expect a

ANDERSON, M. C.—Continued
self-portrait of this extraordinary woman to be." Babette Deutsch
Books p2 My 25 '30 1350w

"Entertaining in spite of its many irritating phases as is this piquantly told life-story, spiced with epigram and paradox and all the glittering sophistries of 'Modernist' theories, its highest high-lights are the personal reminiscences it holds of famous modern writers, artists, musicians and sculptors. The criticisms of the 'old' by the 'new' and of the 'new' by the 'new' —the latter especially—are often delicious." F. B.
+ — Boston Transcript p2 Je 4 '30 1650w

"To me the most amusing book of the spring thus far is Margaret Anderson's autobiography. For the person interested in books and the people who write them it has snapshots taken through the lens of a mind that is the most egocentric that literature or its labors has produced during this generation. And that mind itself is alluring beyond words—amusingly alluring—for its very ego-eccentricity." Fanny Butcher
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p12 Je 7 '30 630w

Reviewed by Matthew Josephson
Nation 130:707 Je 18 '30 880w

"Margaret, you have not written a book. This is not a book. It is a flash-back of yourself. It is charming, Margaret, as you are charming, will always be charming. We thank you, Margaret, for this little visit to us. I personally thank you for a night of faces and of footsteps on my stairs. You have brought back other days and they were good days. You made them good days while you stayed with us." Sherwood Anderson
+ New Repub 63:103 Je 11 '30 1300w

Reviewed by Richard Sunne
New Statesman 36:114 N 1 '30 1700w

" 'My Thirty Years' War' is a fascinating book, beyond all question. It is fascinating in the same way that Isadora Duncan's autobiography was: because it is incredible. Read it and laugh. There are more amusing portraits in it than one can cite in a review. And there are errors of perspective and taste that will horrify the stodgy. There is a good deal of excellent malice. And not a little unconscious burlesque. It is an indispensable document on the generation whose hair is now graying." C. H. Grattan
+ N Y Evening Post p18m My 24 '30 850w

"Her sense of humor, together with her unfailing gusto, make her richly anecdotal, unpompous, highly personal book into delightful reading. It is not merely that some of her stories are so funny, that some of her comments are so pungent, or that some experiences were so exciting; it is that as writer she is (one guesses) the same as she is a person, and so can make us live her story in the special and unique way that she lived it herself. We close the book, not on a great or a tragic woman, but on a real and interesting one whose work was all to the good." Louis Kronenberger
+ N Y Times p2 My 25 '30 900w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p13 My 21 '30 1000w

"Miss Anderson appears from the book to be one of those clever exhibitionists who claims to be fighting for the freedom of the artist and who is actually only exploiting her own ego. It was not nearly so much ideas as personalities that interested her. To say this, however, is by no means to question the value of the work which The Little Review did. Its career of yeoman service is entertainingly recorded in My Thirty Years' War. Furthermore, many of Miss Anderson's literary criticisms are acute and independent." F. L. Robbins
Outlook 155:146 My 28 '30 180w

"Margaret Anderson has written a very lively book, a picturesque and vital autobiography. To be sure, it is egocentric to the nth degree, but that is usually the trouble with autobiographies, to be overlooked if the ego is sufficiently daring to carry one along over hurdles that bridge mere grovelling details of fact. . . If the reader of the autobiography is willing to grant all that The Little Review did for advance of the arts and a good deal more, if he is able to accept the author and her magazine at her own valuation, and to leap over dates and facts as blithely as she does, he will find her narrative as exciting as a horse-race, and he will get vivid glimpses of faces in the crowd as the heroine canters along. . . Margaret Anderson's adventures thus far have been exciting to herself and stimulating to our sleepy old world. She has managed to 'be herself' in spite of time and tide, and if one misses in her career a certain warmth of human feeling and depth of human thinking, still she keeps going on the race-track of adventure even after her coltish run with The Little Review has passed into history." H. M.
+ — Poetry 37:95 N '30 1250w
St Louis 28:217 S '30

"In these grimmer days, the extravagant idealism, the high-pressure enthusiasm, the general air of come-on-boys, all-together-now-for-Art-for-Chicago-and-for-the-Little Review seem incredibly far off; a sort of childhood land where Miltons hung on every tree and millennium was a page and a half away. 'My Thirty Years' War' is both an admirable guide to this remote country and the inspired self portrait of a romanticist in perpetual flight from reality." R. N. Linscott
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1123 Je 14 '30 800w

ANDERSON, MAXWELL. Elizabeth the queen; a play in three acts. (Longmans' play ser.) 168p $2 Longmans
812 Elizabeth, queen of England—Drama
30-32414

" 'Elizabeth the Queen' cuts out of history various sections: the quarrels and loves of Elizabeth and Essex, the scheming at court by Cecil, Raleigh and Burleigh to send him to Ireland on that fatal expedition against Tyrone, the interception of his letters and the Queen's to him, his return with his army to overthrow the government, Elizabeth's realization that, despite their love, he is a danger to the State, her treacherous strategy, his imprisonment in the Tower, and, finally, the moments before his death, Elizabeth's despair and grief and expectation that he will send the ring to her." —New Repub

---

"Mr. Anderson has furnished a text which it is a pleasure to listen to. He has written with splendor yet with tact, with just enough of the archaic in his style to make us think of Shakespeare yet without that excess of it which would prevent us from appreciating his play as the work of a contemporary. He is one of the few playwrights today who are gifted with rich tongues, and therefore one of the few who should be permitted to deal with a theme such as this one. And he is intelligent. The lines did not seem to me, however, perfectly successful, and the reason is perhaps easy to state. Mr. Anderson has compromised between two styles, two attitudes. . . He has tried to be both heroic and intelligent. It cannot be done. The audience remains a little confused, I think, as to how it ought to feel, a little bewildered by this attempt to make historical personages real." Mark Van Doren
+ — Nation 131:562 N 19 '30 850w

"There are sequences in the dramatic motivations that are highly effective, exciting and well emphasized. The actual writing itself, the diction and the lines, seem tame enough, save for two or three very beautiful speeches that the Queen has, speeches reminiscent of Mr. Anderson's old poetic talent, and diverse other speeches and lines of hers that are admirable enough, some of them imaginative, some witty, some droll, blunt, rascally or hot." Stark Young
New Repub 65:17 N 19 '30 1850w

"What we don't understand is the way the play is printed in book form. Surely Mr. Anderson never believed he was writing blank verse? Why then are the lines printed as though they bore some relationship to blank verse? For, in fact, they bear no such relationship whatever. . . His words have the proper huddle and stumble, spurt, crackle, and staccato of actual conversation; they have no trace of the fluent, flexible rhythms of blank verse. All we are objecting to is the mistake of printing the play as though it has not been written entirely in conversational prose."

Sat R of Lit 7:446 D 6 '30 320w

ANDRADE, EDWARD NEVILLE DA COSTA. Hour of physics. (One hour ser.) 160p $1 Lippincott

530 Physics 30-10391

In half a dozen chapters the author, who is professor of physics in the University of London, takes up, successively, heat and energy, sound and vibrations, light and radiation, electricity and magnetism, the quantum theory and the atom. He deals thruout with the latest developments of science in these several fields and with currently accepted theories.

Bookm 71:vi Ag '30 100w

"This book surveys the entire subject of physics in a popular manner, without going into technicalities, but in sufficient detail to make such technical terms fully intelligible."

+ Books p12 Jl 27 '30 280w

"The author is one of those comparatively few scientists who can write with high authority and also with simplicity, clarity and unfailing interest."

+ N Y Times p31 Mr 23 '30 400w

ANDREWS, CHARLES FREER. India and the Simon report. 191p $1.75 Macmillan [5s Allen, G.]

954 India—Politics and government. Great Britain.Simon commission. Gandhi, Mohandas Karamchand

It is the author's contention that the Simon report shows little understanding of the Young India that has risen on the tide of the nationalist movement. Mr Andrews is less concerned with the details of the report than with the causes of resentment in India today against Great Britain, and with Gandhi's leadership of Indian opinion.

Nation and Ath 48:167 N 1 '30 230w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett

New Repub 65:106 D 10 '30 280w

New Statesman 36:26 O 11 '30 150w

"The writings of Mr. Andrews are almost indispensable to any ordinary Englishman who seeks to understand the Indian Nationalist movement. This book is a further contribution to his great work of interpreting one country to another. At the same time it must be said at once that its title is deceptive. Anyone who comes to it hoping for detailed and constructive criticism of the Report itself will be disappointed. Mr. Andrews is only concerned to show why, in his view, the Report, masterly and comprehensive as it is, has failed to convince even moderate Indian opinion."

+ Spec 145:357 S 13 '30 750w

— Times [London] Lit Sup p768 O 2 '30 800w

ANDREWS, CHARLES FREER. Mahatma Gandhi's ideas; incl. sel. from his writings. 382p $3 Macmillan [12s 6d Allen, G.]

B or 92 Gandhi, Mohandas Karamchand 30-5603

An exposition, based upon documentary sources, of Gandhi's religious genius, his social and political aims, and his influence on contemporary life in India. The first part of the book deals with his religious environment, the second part with his work during recent years. The author, a friend and admirer of Gandhi, is familiar with both occidental and western cultures; and in his interpretation of the soul of Gandhi he has shown the struggle between the ideals of this eastern religious leader and modern western civilization.

"The device adopted by the author, of presenting selections from Gandhi's writings interspersed with other documents and with his own interpretations, is particularly appropriate for his task. No other book by or about the great Indian leader gives an insight into his teaching at once so direct and so free from verbal difficulty for the Western reader." Bruno Lasker

+ Ann Am Acad 151:303 S '30 300w

Booklist 26:309 My '30

Bookm 71:xxii Je '30 200w

"Mr. Andrews, whose aim is to reveal Gandhi's mind rather than write his biography, knows Gandhi, India and the West, all three. He is the Westerner that India, and Gandhi, loves best, for he has worked unceasingly in India's behalf; and it is possibly not chance, but the inevitable answer to one of life's equations, that he should present to us the Indian that India loves best. Fearless, he tells us all about Gandhi, confident that the sincerity of his hero's character will unify the elements that otherwise seem contradictory." W. N. Brown

+ Books p1 Mr 9 '30 1800w

Boston Transcript p1 Mr 22 '30 420w

Cath World 131:502 Jl '30 450w

Christian Century 47:438 Ap 2 '30 60w

"There is much to admire in a most lovable character, but Western readers of the volume will find the word 'nonsense' coming again and again to their lips, and those most interested in the advancement of the great India of many communities will regret that Mr. Gandhi, who counts as the leading Hindu of the present day, is not more helpful for practical purposes."

+ — Christian Science Monitor p10 Mr 29 '30 400w

Cleveland Open Shelf p123 S '30

"This volume by his intimate personal friend of many years is a real contribution. It gives us a portrait of one whose features were but dimly seen before. The portrait is made lifelike by selecting passages from Gandhi's speeches and writings. The picture of the great Hindu reformer and patriot is framed in its religious, political, and economic environment, so that in a very real sense it becomes a 'moving' picture. There is nothing static in the author's narrative. He writes with full knowledge of particular incidents in his hero's career, with warm love for his character, with realization of the forces against which he is struggling. If the reader desires a vivid portrayal of the revolution that is going on in India, Mahatma Gandhi's Ideas is recommended." M. G. Evans

+ Crozer Q 7:246 Ap '30 500w

Int J Ethics 40:453 Ap '30 230w

"This book appears at a most opportune moment. To understand his words and his deeds and his aims without some background of knowledge concerning the man, his past efforts and achievements, and his guiding ideas, is impossible. To provide the reader with this background is exactly the aim of Mr. Andrews' book. And nowhere else—unless the reviewer is greatly mistaken—can so adequate a background within so small a compass be found. This is not a life of Gandhi: it is Gandhi himself speaking to us." J. B. Pratt

+ J Religion 10:407 Jl '30 580w

Reviewed by S. K. Ratcliffe

Nation 130:628 My 28 '30 800w

"His long and intimate friendship with Mahatma Gandhi has enabled Mr. Andrews to produce an admirably balanced work in which it is possible to trace the mental struggles of a subtle and extremely religious Oriental brought up against modern Western civilization."

+ Nation and Ath 46:436 D 21 '29 500w

"Mr. Andrews' book is a monument not to one of the world's greatest men only, but to its author, as brave and unselfish a man as there is on this planet. It contains a wealth of information, and is suffused with the writer's sunny idealism. It ranks with Mr. Gandhi's 'Autobiography' as the indispensable source of

ANDREWS, C. F.—Continued

all study of the saint-politician." Edward Thompson

+ New Repub 62:159 Mr 26 '30 700w

"The present book throws valuable light on the Mahatma's life and teachings. It might, however, suitably be read in conjunction with less uncritical records of the career of a remarkable personality who has exercised wonderful fascination over people who have been brought into contact with him."

+ New Statesman 34:sup xvi D 7 '29 400w

"Gandhi has, in C. F. Andrews, a devoted biographer who shared his earlier struggles in South America and has lived in his circle of admirers for years; who deeply sympathizes with much of Gandhi's teaching, and yet has more than once warned him of the danger of some of his doctrines. He is, therefore, ideally equipped to tell the story of Gandhi's life and thought from Gandhi's side, yet not as a blind worshiper of an infallible saint." Charles Johnston

+ N Y Times p3 Mr 30 '30 1600w

"Any one eager to know just what is being done in the East to create better living conditions for a depressed and often hopeless people will find eloquent passages in these pages." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p12 F 14 '30 550w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 81:18 Mr '30 80w

St Louis 28:217 S '30

"There is little question that Mahatma Gandhi is the most arresting figure of our times; and this book ought to be read by everyone who is interested in the greatest problem of our day, that of race; and in the application of moral idealism to human affairs." Kenneth Saunders

+ Sat R of Lit 6:915 Ap 12 '30 1500w

Spec 143:818 N 30 '29 230w

Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 23 '30 1200w

Reviewed by J. P. Gavit

Survey 64:39 Ap 1 '30 600w

Times [London] Lit Sup p132 F 20 '30 2750w

"The chief merit of the book is its sympathetic understanding of Gandhi's beliefs and aims. Ability to enter into the life and culture of another race is a rare gift; but Mr. Andrews has it in large measure. He is in all respects the broadest possible Christian. Gandhi, on the other hand, is still in many ways rather a narrow Hindu. But even the Mahatma's most conservative positions are set forth by Andrews in the fairest way possible." C. W. Reese

+ World Tomorrow 13:229 My '30 750w

"Mr. C. F. Andrews is peculiarly fitted to interpret Gandhi to the West, for various reasons. He has been his intimate friend for many years. He has spent most of his life in India, in unselfish service of its people. He knows them, their life and thoughts, their physical and mental background, not from the outside, but from daily close association; he has made himself one of them as far as any outsider could. And he has given us a frank and sympathetic picture of the man Gandhi. He hides nothing. At times he frankly confesses that he cannot agree with his admired friend. Always he lets Gandhi speak for himself as far as possible; about half the book consists of quotations." Franklin Edgerton

+ Yale R n s 20:179 autumn '30 950w

ANDREWS, LORING. Horizon chasers; a tale of two romantic vagabonds who played their way around the world on a tune. 311p $2.50 Sears

910 Voyages and travels 29-22823

"One of them played the accordion and the other played a flute of such curious structure that it suggested a bicycle pump. Thus armed, two young Californians set forth to see the world, and if this report written by one of them is accurate and unembellished, they saw a great deal of it. One suspects, however, that the spirit of romance colored their various adventures in retrospect."—Books

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice

Bookm 70:xvii F '30 200w

"Quotations spiced with profanity are too numerous to be amusing, and the air of sophistication which the author assumes is not attained without considerable labor."

— Books p21 F 23 '30 150w

Boston Transcript p2 F 1 '30 400w

"Whatever appeal it will have will be that of a vivaciously pitched, consciously glamorous and maudlin narrative of personal adventure aboard ship and in far-flung taverns, rather than as a guide to the ports of call reached by the writer and his colleague."

N Y Times p32 N 24 '29 140w

St Louis 28:78 Mr '30

ANDREWS, MARIETTA (MINNIGERODE) (MRS ELIPHALET FRASER ANDREWS). George Washington's country; introd. by George W. Ochs Oakes. 318p il $3.75 Dutton

917.55 Virginia—Description and travel. Virginia—Historic houses, etc. Washington, George 30-24866

A personally conducted tour thru the parts of America where George Washington lived, fought and died. Starting in northern Virginia where Washington and his forefathers were born, the journey takes the reader to the homes of the Fairfaxes, the Lees, the Byrds, Madison, Jefferson, and Marshall, follows the military career of Washington thru colonial America, and ends at Mt Vernon.

Booklist 27:201 Ja '31

"Mrs. Andrews, more than a writer, is a brilliant conversationalist. Her art, when she gets it on paper, has all the charm of the great conversationalists in the South, before and during her generation: a biting irony mingled with a heroic romanticism; an anecdotal quality as revealing as it is entertaining; a peculiar penetration into human frailities and a resultant philosophy of futility; humor of the sort that is of the essence of tragedy, though it seeks to ameliorate it; a descriptive power, often cutting to the bone, yet swathed in words as soft as silk. . . Her book is not the collection of scattered impressions she flippantly calls it, but a moving and valuable chronicle." Sara Haardt

+ Books p12 N 30 '30 800w

"Like all of Mrs. Andrews's books, this new one has almost as much of its author in it as of its theme. And it badly needs an index. But its zestful, vivacious pages carry a great deal of information."

N Y Times p26 O 19 '30 380w

ANDREWS, MARIETTA (MINNIGERODE) (MRS ELIPHALET FRASER ANDREWS). Seventh wave. 261p $2.50 Boni

30-9241

"Traces through four generations the history of a pioneer family, from the original Henderson Higgins, a huge and lusty Mississippi riverman, who founded a town in Ohio, to Gerald Ebenezer Atkins Higgins, his illegitimate great-grandson. The Higgins family completes a typical cycle in the life of a new nation. The freedom and enterprise of pioneering days are gradually lost, life becomes physically easier, but encrusted with convention, and people begin to think in terms of possession, rather than in terms of conquest. The cycle is completed, in the fourth generation, by a new revolt and a fresh conquest."—N Y Times

"To attempt a novel of this scope requires courage. To succeed in it requires knowledge and power and an unusual order of ability. . . Such a novel is not to be compressed within the limits of a book of 262 sparsely printed pages. Nor do Mrs. Andrews's angular style and her short declarative method of dealing with dramatic events make up in charm or emotional effect what her story lacks in substance."

— Books p10 Ap 20 '30 350w

Cleveland Open Shelf p96 Je '30

"A swift, bright but rather sketchy narrative of the younger generation of Americans in the days before the Civil War." Edwin Seaver

+ — N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 19 '30 40w

"An ingenious narrative, told with a good deal of spirit, and enlivened by apt and telling characterizations. Its plot, however, is neither new, nor especially subtle. . . Structurally 'The Seventh Wave' is less spineless than most genealogical novels."

+ — N Y Times p8 Ap 13 '30 500w

Springf'd Republican p7e My 18 '30 220w

ANDREWS, MRS MARY RAYMOND (SHIPMAN). White satin dress. 56p 75c Scribner 30-6535

A short story, the motivation of which is the appearance of the ghost of Abraham Lincoln to a state governor, worried over the signing of an important bill. His courage screwed to the sticking point the governor signed the bill. Weeks later he learned that in a walled-up closet in the room where he had slept on that memorable night there had been found a white satin dress, worn by a former owner of the house on the night of Lincoln's assassination and stained with his blood.

Bookm 71:xxvii Ap '30 50w

"Mrs. Andrews handles this delicate and difficult material with such skill that she has made a new Lincoln legend we are likely always to remember."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 29 '30 220w

Pratt p39 summer '30

Wis Lib Bul 26:105 Mr '30

ANET, CLAUDE, pseud. See Schopfer, J.

ANGELL, HILDEGARDE. Simón Bolívar, South American liberator. 296p $3 Norton

B or 92 Bolívar, Simón 30-9233

To acquaint herself with the primary sources for her biography of the South American liberator, Miss Angell went to Venezuela, met some of Bolivar's descendants and studied the records in libraries and museums. Her book marks the centenary of Bolivar's death.

Booklist 26:392 Jl '30

Reviewed by Margaret Wallace

Bookm 71:334 Je '30 250w

"Hildegarde Angell has written an authoritative biography of Bolivar. Filled with newly collected material it sheds much new light on his adventurous career. It is not an editorial but a factual biography, and while this may make it less interesting as reading, it adds materially to its value from the viewpoint of students." W. H. M.

+ Boston Transcript p3 My 10 '30 380w

"It is Bolívar's character which chiefly interests us, but Miss Angell has emphasized inordinately the colonial background against which, incidentally, he moved. Thanks to the ease with which she has mastered her material, Miss Angell has succeeded merely in presenting a circumspect and uneventfully proper, though at the same time sympathetic and straightforward picture of a highly turbulent man and of his period." E. Munguía, Jr.

— + New Repub 63:324 Jl 30 '30 450w

"Miss Angell's biography is the third which has appeared in this country within the past few months. The first, translated from the French of Michel Vaucaire, was a highly dramatic work, well seasoned with the spice of a lively Gallic imagination. The second, by T. R. Ybarra, had the advantage of being written by the descendant of a Venezuelan General who fought under Bolivar. Miss Angell's book is more in the traditional historical vein than either of the other biographies, more careful and detailed in its treatment of political situations, a little less penetrating in its analyses than Mr. Ybarra's, a little less cinematographic than either Mr. Ybarra's or M. Vaucaire's, but in its treatment of the facts of record the most comprehensive of the three." R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p21 My 18 '30 1200w

"Miss Angell's book contains plenty of excellent writing. She proceeds with a subtle, perhaps feminine, sense of the dramatic, and by reason of her restraint makes the note of great tragedy more intense. Her work represents a fresh reading of Bolívar's correspondence, and of the many chronicles and memoirs of his companions-in-arms; and by liberal quotation from these eye-witnesses she has given a faithful and lifelike picture of the Liberator and his environment. Bolívar remains the indomitable warrior, tamer of men and forger of nations, but through all the biographer's enthusiasm peer the human frailties of her subject as well." C. H. Haring

+ Sat R of Lit 7:119 S 13 '30 850w

Springf'd Republican p10 My 14 '30 260w

World Tomorrow 14:28 Ja '31 20w

ANGELL, JAMES WATERHOUSE. Recovery of Germany; pub. for the Council on foreign relations. 425p $4 Yale univ. press [18s Milford]

330.943 Germany—Economic conditions 29-21386

The Columbia university Council for research sent Professor Angell to Germany to study that country's economic revival. This book is a result of his investigations. He describes the treaty of Versailles, the history of reparations, and the new German government. The latter part of the book is devoted to the recovery of Germany from 1924 onwards: the effect of the Dawes plan, and the process of rationalization.

Reviewed by Mildred Hartshough

Am Econ R 20:90 Mr '30 550w

Booklist 26:153 Ja '30

Boston Transcript p7 N 27 '29 600w

Cleveland Open Shelf p106 Jl '30

Reviewed by W. C. Langsam

Hist Outlook 21:182 Ap '30 500w

Reviewed by H. E. Barnes

New Repub 61:305 F 5 '30 800w

"In general, the story of German rationalisation is well known; but Professor Angell has made a far more scientific study of it than has yet appeared in English and his book is full of valuable facts and figures describing its growth."

+ New Statesman 35:58 Ap 19 '30 1050w

"Professor Angell's analysis of German economy is extremely interesting and useful. He reviews the progress since the war in terms of such basic industries as coal, steel, power, textiles, chemicals, &c., and draws comparisons with the pre-war status. The picture drawn is one of substantial recovery, affording a sound foundation for steady future progress." J. F. Dulles

+ N Y Times p4 D 29 '29 700w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:22 Mr '30

Pratt p9 summer '30

St Louis 28:65 Mr '30

Reviewed by H. K. Norton

Sat R of Lit 6:736 F 15 '30 750w

"On the whole a stimulating and optimistic book, which can be recommended with confidence to all who are interested in contemporary economic developments." Robert Boothby

+ Spec 144:170 F 1 '30 800w

Reviewed by J. P. Gavit

Survey 64:324 Jl 1 '30 180w

"It is cautiously written and includes forty-six pages of statistical appendices. The list of persons and institutions mentioned in his preface bears witness to his desire for full and accurate information. The impartiality of his narrative is evident and it makes the work all the more valuable to English readers."

ANGELL, J. W.—Continued
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p19 Ja 9 '30 1050w
World Tomorrow 13:281 Je '30 100w
Reviewed by Johannes Mattern
Yale R n s 20:207 autumn '30 280w

ANGELL, NORMAN. Story of money. 411p il $5 Stokes [21s Cassell]
332.4 Money—History 29-25471
For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"This volume has two outstanding defects. First, it lacks continuity. . . The second shortcoming is that much of the material treated lies outside the scope of a book of this title. The discussion of reparations is excellent, the description of the early financiers absorbing; yet it is difficult to see how they fit into the picture. If Mr. Angell's intent has been to clear up the lack of understanding which surrounds the subject of money in the mind of the layman, he has, it seems to me, failed to accomplish his purpose. His wide ramifications into irrelevant fields, coupled with an almost complete lack of orderly arrangement of his material, can scarcely fail to leave the lay reader more confused at the end of the narrative than he was at the beginning." F. A. Bradford
— + Am Econ R 20:144 Mr '30 400w

"In spite of the attractive form of the book, with numerous illustrations and the flair for the picturesque, it is doubtful whether the appeal to the general public will be effective. The book abounds in quotations which mar it for the general reader, but which will increase its value for purposes of reference." J. D. Magee
Ann Am Acad 148:289 Mr '30 230w
Booklist 26:188 F '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p6 Ja '30

"There is in the book much that is interesting, and much description that is well done—especially an admirable summary, contributed by Mr. Rasminsky, of American monetary history. But, taken as a whole, it confirms the doubts started by the Money Game whether Mr. Angell has really penetrated far below the surface of the subject. He will no doubt reply, as he does reply in the book itself, that his object was not to write a treatise on money, but only a descriptive story of its past behavior, and of men's handling of it. But can such a story be really helpful in the mastering of present-day monetary problems unless it is accompanied by a reasonably clear understanding of the theory of the subject?"
— + New Statesman 35:572 Ag 9 '30 1100w
St Louis 28:66 Mr '30

"Not only does it state its propositions clearly enough to enable the lay reader to grasp them without undue hardships, but its propositions are worth stating and worth reading. Occasionally it may offer some slight difficulty to the 'general reader' of average intelligence, but not often, and his gains will hugely outweigh his pains. Of Mr. Angell's own work and that of his collaborators, it would be hard to speak too highly. The material they deal with is of authentic social importance, and it is presented with competence and clarity. Surely those virtues are rare enough, but it is a pleasure to testify further that 'The Story of Money' is a very workmanlike piece of writing, free from the cacophonous English dear to technical writers and, on the positive side, done with no inconsiderable distinction. Still more, it is one of the most entertaining books I have encountered in the winter output." M. M. Strain
+ Sat R of Lit 6:735 F 15 '30 850w

"Mr. Norman Angell could have rendered the community no greater service than he has done by the writing of this book. He is a prince of expositors, with a cast of mind clear, precise, and detailed; impatient of mystery and inconclusion, a type of mind rare in England, a type reminiscent at its best of the great 'encyclopaedists' of the French eighteenth century."
+ Spec 144:1015 Je 21 '30 950w
Times [London] Lit Sup p600 Jl 24 '30 1350w
Wis Lib Bul 26:99 Mr '30

ANGELL, ROBERT COOLEY. Study in undergraduate adjustment. See Michigan. University. Dept. of Sociology

ANGUS, SAMUEL. Religious quests of the Graeco-Roman world; a study in the historical background of early Christianity. 444p $4 Scribner [15s Murray]
270.1 Church history—Primitive and early church. Christianity and other religions [29-29233]

"From ancient records, Dr. Angus reconstructs a vivid picture of that magnificent civilization contemporaneous with the founding of the Christian church, with the result that a more significant conception of the faith we know to-day emerges from his study of the rich intellectual and spiritual currents of the pagan world as they aided or opposed or modified the struggling young religion from the East."—Publisher's note

"The author is acquainted with the literature of his subject in several languages; he has a first-rate gift of exposition; he has very positive convictions of his own and he is not afraid of lowering the dignity of his learning by a brisk modernism of phrase now and then." W. L. Sullivan
+ Books p13 Jl 20 '30 400w

"Dr. Angus has gathered much from many sources to make his picture complete and usually his deductions and interpretations seem sound. Scholarly and profound as the author is, he does not cover up his meanings in mere technical language." T. C. R.
+ Boston Transcript p2 D 24 '29 750w
Reviewed by W. E. Garrison
Christian Century 47:991 Ag 13 '30 800w

"By quoting liberally from Christian and non-Christian writers, he shows to what an extent the same language and often the same thought was employed by both. For this exposition Professor Angus deserves the gratitude of readers who may not always agree with his distinction between the true and the false or with his interpretation of the career and teachings of Jesus. To some he will appear too prone to explain away statements which puzzle him or to limit a general expression of a specific reference. To make a final criticism, his familiarity with German literature seems responsible for an occasionally clumsy phraseology. But the work is a mine of information on a little-known subject." J. R. M. Butler
+ — Christian Science Monitor p5 O 18 '30 550w

"Dr. Angus's erudition is simply immense. He has full command, as well, of all the primary sources in the original tongues, as of all the recent critical interpretations. No intelligent minister or layman, who wishes to understand the origins of our religious system, can afford to neglect this book." J. A. Leighton
+ Churchman p17 Ag 2 '30 500w

"It is a book that will repay more than a single reading. A man who is master of his field gives here in what one feels at times is almost too brief and condensed a form the rich results of patient investigation. The work is well documented and the use of the sources considerable and admirable. It is, however, scarcely the book for a beginner in the field. Not infrequently so much is said in such brief compass that further elucidation of the matter either by broader orientation or by a teacher's explanation seems to be necessary to a full understanding." E. W. Parsons
+ — J Religion 10:604 O '30 1550w

Reviewed by Lawrence Rose
Living Church 83:411 Jl 19 '30 650w

"The trouble with this fine study of the historical background of early Christianity is that its better appreciation of the complex environment in which the New Testament is written and the scholarly breadth of view make too great a demand on the intellectual means and backgrounds of those who would most benefit by reading it." F. H. M.
+ — N Y Evening Post p7m Ja 18 '30 70w

"In the composition of his book Dr. Angus has not made the slightest concession to popular taste. The general reader will find it hard going. But any one interested in the beginnings of Christianity will find a wealth of material within its covers." H. N. Denny
+ — N Y Times p10 Ap 20 '30 950w

"His book has certain outstanding merits. . . Yet one can hardly say of Professor Angus's book 'Here is just the book we wanted.' His style is one which does not make easy reading, and he is apt in describing various types of religious thought and practice to get launched upon oratorical generalizations which lose all fine adjustment to the real thing."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p1089 D 26 '29 4250w

ANISE, pseud. See Strong, A. L.

ANSON, PETER. Fishing boats and fisher folk on the east coast of Scotland. 294p il $3.75 Dutton [12s 6d Dent]

639.2 Fisheries—Scotland. Scotland—Description and travel. Scotland—Social life and customs [30-31696]

The book deals with the history and methods of fishing employed on the east coast of Scotland, the types of fishing boats used, the local customs and superstitions of the fisher folk, and the fishing centers between Berwick-on-Tweed and the Pentland Firth. The author is an artist who has spent many years among the people and scenes of the book.

"Anyone who loves the sea or fishermen or Scotland will find Mr. Anson's book irresistibly interesting. Loving all three, I can hardly be temperate in its praises. The least satisfactory part (to me) is the illustrations. Mr. Anson's line serves admirably for boats and houses, less well for hills and rocks and water. In his text Mr. Anson sets down everything, from methods of fishing, customs, superstitions, and beliefs, to the surnames commonest in every port. His book is a monument of industry and loving care: it could hardly have been done better." L. A. G. Strong
+ Nation and Ath 47:sup193 My 10 '30 270w

"A very valuable record of a time of great changes in our fishing industry. Very soon now much that Mr. Anson describes and pictures will be gone for ever. Mr. Anson writes with knowledge of the boats and the methods of fishing, and is at his best when describing the folk, their hospitality, their kindness, their shrewdness, their independence, their courage and their strange superstitions, which, despite the kirk, have survived into our own time."
+ New Statesman 35:194 My 17 '30 100w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 155:550 Ag 6 '30 50w

Sat R 149:801 Je 21 '30 50w

"An admirably faithful and comprehensive bit of work. The book furnishes a complete account of the life of the East-Scottish fisherfolk. . . The book is a marvel of thoroughness, beauty and withal cheapness."
+ Spec 144:833 My 17 '30 200w

"This is a remarkably satisfying book. Without hyperbole and without sentimentality, Mr. Anson sets before us, as in a living picture, the 120 odd fishing villages on the East Coast of Scotland and their fisher folk. . . Not the least among the many attractions of this book is the way in which accurate detail is supplied—we are given no irritating loose ends or guesswork, either in the writing or in the diagrams illustrating the gear and the methods of fishing."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p347 Ap 24 '30 1520w

ANSTEY, VERA (MRS PERCY LOUIS ANSTEY). Economic development of India. 581p il $8.50 (25s) Longmans

330.954 India—Economic conditions 30-5554

A survey of recent problems in Indian economic life. The economic aspect of the public health movement is particularly stressed, as are the developments of India's industrial life, the trend of foreign trade, protection of industrial labor, the financial system, and banking and currency.

"A systematic and comprehensive treatise. It is an attempt to present 'a synthetic impartial view of the present development, present position and main problems of Indian economic life.' This purpose has been accomplished remarkably well." Clark Warburton
+ Am Econ R 20:489 S '30 550w

"It is refreshing to find a book dealing with Indian economic questions which is not directed towards a political end. Mrs. Anstey was well equipped for her task; her volume bears the stamp of knowledge, impartiality and resolute industry. She has brought together a great quantity of valuable information regarding the social organisation of the people of India, the bearing of public health questions on economic progress, the problems of agriculture, and of the large-scale industries."
New Statesman 34:340 D 14 '29 450w

"The book is so complete, so full of well-ordered and authenticated facts, so free from one-sided views and hysterical emotions, that it should be studied in the fullest detail after a thorough grounding in the history and geography of India." Charles Johnston
+ N Y Times p1 Ag 3 '30 150w

St Louis 28:130 My '30

Spec 144:202 F 8 '30 200w

"In her careful description and analysis of the economic position in India to-day Mrs. Anstey aims constantly at impartiality; and those who may disagree with her opinions must admit that her attitude is always reasonable, never provocative. Where conclusions, or suggestions towards a conclusion, are offered, they are stimulating and lucid."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1013 D 5 '29 1200w

ANTHONY, IRVIN WHITTINGTON. Voyagers ^{2} unafraid. 272p il $3 Macrae Smith co.

910.4 Voyages and travels. Atlantic ocean 30-28995

True stories of adventurers who have sailed their boats single-handed across the Atlantic ocean. Among these lone eagle seafarers are Captains William A. Andrews, Thomas Crapo, Joshua Slocum, Howard Blackburn, Harry Pidgeon, and Franz Romer.

Booklist 27:201 Ja '31

"An unusually attractive book, both as to format and contents." Al Chase
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p16 N 29 '30 50w

Cleveland Open Shelf p159 D '30

"Mr. Anthony tells all these tales very interestingly, with a feeling for the inherent romance of it all and an eye for the picturesque."
+ N Y Times p24 N 2 '30 230w

ANTHONY, JOSEPH. Casanova Jones; il. by Willy Pogány. 206p $2 Century

817 30-17444

An hilarious satire in verse on prohibition. Casanova Jones, prohibition agent, falls in love at a speakeasy with Annabel Cloy, blue-eyed poetess, and is thereupon denounced by his wife. Congressman Stubb of Indiansas, a dry who took a drink at Annabel's party, is denounced by Bill O'Doole, soap-box orator. There follows a big battle between the wets, led by the president of Columbia university, and the drys, sponsored by the water-girls of Indiansas.

ANTHONY, JOSEPH—Continued

Reviewed by Genevieve Taggard
Books p7 Jl 20 '30 1050w

"There is something healthy about ridicule. A little more of it applied to this and other burning questions of the day can do no harm, and may do some good. Mr. Anthony and Mr. Pogany have each done good work in this collaboration. Each page is embellished with a drawing which may not be of Mr. Pogany's best, but is enough better than anyone else's best to warrant enthusiasm." B. B.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 9 '30 280w

"It's nonsense, but funny nonsense. There are countless amusing pictures by Willy Pogany." Fanny Butcher
Chicago Daily Tribune p8 Jl 26 '30 330w

"None of this is very funny excepting an occasional rhyme. Mere tricky rhyming and clever illustrations are not enough, however, to make the book an outstanding success." M. M. Waterman
— N Y Times p14 Jl 27 '30 150w

"Another new novel in verse. Alas, not a serious one. Nor as funny as it is meant to be." F. L. Robbins
— Outlook 155:386 Jl 9 '30 180w
St Louis 28:299 D '30

"Fiction in verse and prohibition in spoof, with alcoholicly acrobatic drawing by Willy Pogany. 'Casanova Jones' is a book that will be considered a riot by those who like it. There is no doubting its exuberance and spontaneity."
Sat R of Lit 7:27 Ag 2 '30 400w
Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 20 '30 380w

APPEL, JOSEPH HERBERT. Business biography of John Wanamaker, founder and builder, America's merchant pioneer from 1861 to 1922; with glimpses of Rodman Wanamaker and Thomas B. Wanamaker. 471p il $5 (21s) Macmillan
B or 92 Wanamaker, John 30-4504

John Wanamaker, of devout Presbyterian stock, the first secretary of the Y.M.C.A., and a life long believer in sobriety, industry and thrift, started his career as an errand boy, and became the greatest merchant in America. Mr Appel's biography surveys chiefly the business aspects of Wanamaker's life, and is appreciative rather than analytical.

'An excellent piece of work, compiled rather than composed. One admires the tireless accuracy with which speeches and adages and planks are laid end to end. A figure of considerable solidity is the result. One is inclined to think that something of perspective would be gained if the biographer could stand back and look at his subject from a distance. Truer proportions might come out." Charles Johnston
+ — Atlantic Bookshelf p34 Ap '30 300w
Booklist 26:309 My '30

"This official account of the business achievements of a man who was always a leader in his field should be as valuable to an economist as it is interesting to the general reader. Though one must take the book with a pinch of salt, the reader gets an excellent idea of the growth of modern commercial methods."
+ — Bookm 71:xxiv Ap '30 80w

"The book is a eulogy that admits of no flaws in its hero, but nevertheless it is a remarkably interesting and convincing history of a great personal influence leavening and revolutionizing the whole relationship of merchant and customer." W. M. Houghton
+ Books p7 Mr 2 '30 550w
Boston Transcript p3 Ap 30 '30 650w

"This latest biography of Mr. Wanamaker, while it may not be the last to be written, will serve to establish him somewhat more firmly in American annals. We find that Mr. Appel has supplied a wealth of intimate detail which could have been available to few others." F. L. P.
+ Christian Science Monitor p15 My 10 '30 300w

"Really less a biography than an autobiography pieced together with some skill from the sayings of the Master—a sort of synoptic gospel, but wholly uninspired, as if St. Luke had been rewritten by Horatio Alger. The book is rhetorical and naïve; it lacks entirely that sense of humor which, in the last analysis, is a sense of proportion. No more than an occasional hint appears of the vast energy expended all about this young Titan in an age of Titans. We are left to believe that Wanamaker worked in a social vacuum. And yet the figure that emerges, once the reader has adjusted himself to the mist, is indubitably the figure of a business giant and, in emotional matters, an artist unfulfilled." J. K. A.
— + New Repub 64:135 S 17 '30 220w

Reviewed by G. W. Harris
N Y Times p18 Je 1 '30 1400w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p14 F 6 '30 650w

Reviewed by F. A. Fall
Outlook 154:659 Ap 23 '30 230w
St Louis 28:146 My '30

"A memorial to its subject, it is, of course, laudatory rather than critical, and in its second half less interesting than in its first since there are embodied rather the tributes to success than the struggle for achievement. But there is much in it that will hold the attention of the general reader."
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:775 Mr 1 '30 600w

"In recommending this remarkable, indeed important, biography to our readers, we would warn them that there is a certain amount of what we can only call 'blather' in the recorded speeches and writings of the great and good founder of the modern Department Store. We are not convinced that it is possible to separate such an intensely individual character as was John Wanamaker's, into 'business,' 'private,' 'philanthropic,' 'political' and other aspects. We would have preferred a biography more complete, more detached, more critical. Mr. Appel writes as one whose long friendship with his subject has blinded him to all faults. But in spite of these shortcomings, we have here an absorbingly interesting story."
+ — Spec 145:227 Ag 16 '30 800w
Special Lib 21:264 S '30 100w

"Mr Appel, who has prepared this biography, can hardly be expected to present an objective valuation of the life of John Wanamaker. For 30 years he has been with the Wanamaker organization. While this has undoubtedly made it possible for him to present much material which an outside biographer could not obtain, it does suggest that the final valuation of Mr Wanamaker's business contributions still remains to be made."
Springf'd Republican p10 My 23 '30 500w

APPLEYARD, ROLLO. Pioneers of electrical communication. 347p il $6.50 (21s) Macmillan
925.37 Electricians 30-11090

Illustrated biographies of Maxwell, Ampère, Volta, Wheatstone, Hertz, Oersted, Ohm, Heaviside, Chappe, and Ronalds.

"The book is full of attractive pictures, including portraits of the pioneers, and much of the interesting apparatus used in their researches. Visits were made in many cases to the towns where the pioneers dwelt, and photographs taken of the houses in which they lived and of the monuments erected to their memory." A. R.
+ Nature 125:300 Mr 1 '30 720w
N Y New Tech Bks 15:19 Ap '30
St Louis 28:217 S '30

"Very remarkable set of memoirs of great scientists. . . Mr. Appleyard's precise accounts of what these men did or tried to do are of high interest and value. The chapter on Oliver Heaviside, who died only five years ago at an advanced age after devoting the whole of his life to abstruse studies in mathematical physics, is specially notable."

+ Spec 144:446 Mr 15 '30 230w

"Mr. Appleyard's accounts of their lives, characters and achievements are of great interest, and not only bring out clearly the nature of the contributions to physical science which each man made, but also succeed in conveying to the reader a vivid idea of their respective personalities. It is difficult, however, to understand upon what principle the author selected the subjects of his ten short biographies. The work of each has an undoubted claim to recognition in such a book, but the reader is left wondering why the commanding figure of Faraday himself and—to come nearer our own time—that of Lord Kelvin are unrepresented in the gallery."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p719 S 11 '30 500w

APPLIN, ARTHUR (JULIAN SWIFT, pseud.). Actress. 283p $2 Duffield

The jealousy that Valerie Page, established London actress who has seen her best years, feels toward Nina Gretton, pushed suddenly into fame by an American manager, is a vital point in this story. Beginning with a murder that looks like suicide, the story develops into a mystery concerning the identity of Valerie's husband.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p36 D 7 '30 150w

"In this book Arthur Applin writes a crime story from a new angle, and he offers a surprise even to enthusiastic crime fans."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ag 30 '30 250w

Reviewed by Dashiell Hammett
N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 23 '30 30w

"There is more than a little stage atmosphere in this tale of two actresses. The story is thin but entertaining. Its author has been in turn an actor, a journalist, a lawyer, a producer, an ace in the Royal Flying Corps and a sports fan. He uses his diversified knowledge to good effect in 'The Actress.' " Bruce Rae

+ N Y Times p22 O 19 '30 180w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 155:589 Ag 13 '30 150w

APPLIN, ARTHUR (JULIAN SWIFT, pseud.). Death mask. 336p $2 Duffield [7s 6d Hurst]

On the night before his marriage to Nora, an American revue actress, Lord Vanderleigh is blackmailed by Daphne Wilde, a girl with the lovely features and enigmatic smile of the famous death-mask of the Unknown of the Seine. He finds out later that Daphne has a rôle in the show of which his wife is the star, and the disappearance of Nora's jewels are traced to her. The plot soon focuses about a gang of criminals, with whom, Vanderleigh discovers, both his wife and the girl he loves are mysteriously connected.

"Banks heavily upon the tender passion at the expense of clews. Written better than most." Will Cuppy

Books p15 F 2 '30 100w

N Y Times p21 F 16 '30 100w

"It is a good story,—a thriller in which no one is murdered, and no one is brought to justice. . . It's a good yarn with plenty of suspense." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:227 F 5 '30 100w

ARA, UGO. Romance of the Borromean islands; an Italian suite. 167p il $2.50 Stokes

914.51 Borromean islands 30-7867

A description of the beautiful Borromean islands, which are sprinkled across Lake Maggiore in northern Italy. Besides the description of the islands themselves, and the Lombard family, the Borromeo, from which the islands are named, the book contains accounts of famous visitors to the islands,—Stendhal, Wagner and Flaubert among others. The author is a former member of the Flonzaley quartet.

"Signor Ara has lived in the Borromean Islands quite long enough to catch the secret of their charm—a secret he manages to convey to the readers of this delightful little volume by his descriptions and by the numerous illustrations which together tell the story of this beauty spot of northern Italy. He has not written a guide book, nor yet a history, but in far fewer pages than either would contain he has told much more and told it more interestingly."

+ Boston Transcript p8 My 10 '30 400w

"If the author exhibits a trace of self-conscious music-mindedness in handling his topic, this will scarcely detract from the interest of the book for those who have visited, or hope to visit, the Alpine lake region. The emphasis of Mr. Ara's book is upon the musical and literary notables who have felt the spell of the Borromean Islands and have left the stamp of their personalities there." Halsey Raines

+ N Y Times p11 Ag 3 '30 250w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p9 Ag 22 '30 120w

ARESBYS, THE, pseud. See Bamberger, R. S. and H. R.

ARISTOPHANES. Lysistrata; a new version, by Gilbert Seldes. 146p $2 Farrar

882.4 Seldes, Gilbert Vivian 30-16885

A modern adaptation of the Lysistrata of Aristophanes, by Gilbert Seldes. This comedy-propaganda for pacifism and the rights of women, dealing as it does with war and sex, and treated with ironic humor, has a particularly modern appeal.

Booklist 27:98 N '30

Reviewed by Lynn Anderson
Bookm 72:94 S '30 150w

Reviewed by Francis Fergusson
Bookm 72:298 N '30 550w

"This text is in modern conversational prose, but probably keeps pretty close to the actual spirit of the original, nearer than a faithful rendering would do when acted in the modern playhouse. It has speed, roistering humor and the sharp edge of satire. Yet one fancies that for the reader there is a loss of dignity and beauty of phrase which would fill an ancient Athenian with puzzled dismay." W. P. Eaton

+ — Books p24 O 26 '30 150w

"The psychology of war and sex was not substantially different in the Athens of 411 B.C. from that in the New York of 1918 A.D. Then as now the populations of warring cities were taught to believe that the enemy was utterly without honor, that his soldiers were at once cowards and brutes; each city was sure that it was doing more than its allies to win the war, and as passions ran higher war aims became more and more unintelligible. All this Aristophanes attacked not with bitterness but with derision; and he pictured the war spirit not as something wicked but as something puerile. . . The result (in 1930) is still a rollicking and bawdy farce-comedy that it would be sinful to miss. And it succeeds in exact proportion as everyone concerned forgets that it is a sacred classic. Great credit must go to the adaptation and translation of Gilbert Seldes, which is thoroughly modern and non-literary without ever descending to cheap slang." Henry Hazlitt

+ Nation 130:740 Je 25 '30 800w

"Mr. Seldes's version of the play is to be applauded. As far as the translation is concerned, he has achieved admirably what he intended, 'a language suited to our own time,' free from scholarly words and, also from colloquialisms." Gertrude Diamant

+ N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 2 '30 650w

ARLITT, MRS ADA HART. Child from one to six; psychology for parents; with an introd. by Flora M. Thurston. 188p il $2 McGraw 136.7 Children—Management. Child study
30-16724

Practical suggestions on the care and management of children, from the ages of one to six, with especial attention to children's fears, temper, tantrums, eating and sleeping habits, and the use of money.

Booklist 27:48 O '30

"Distinctly of the 'practical' variety, replete with detailed instructions for handling this and that unexpected development in the child from one to six, the distinguishing feature of Miss Arlitt's treatment of child psychology is its final chapter on 'The Use of Money,' which, while unique and constructively suggestive, is based on the assumption that children at these ages should not only be receiving allowances, but should have an available collection of coins of different denominations as common toys."
Boston Transcript p3 Ag 6 '30 250w

N Y Times p10 O 5 '30 220w

St Louis 28:201 S '30

Reviewed by Joseph Jastrow
Sat R of Lit 7:366 N 22 '30 200w

ARMANDY, ANDRE. Renegade; tr. by Frederic Le Clercq. 279p $2 Brentano's 30-24047

"A French variant of the man who would be king. The hero is a certain Deucalion, a private in the Foreign Legion, and subsequently a chieftain over some thousand African tribesmen. There is a mystery in his early life, as there is in all stories about soldiers of the Legion; a dark episode which gradually comes to light throughout the book. After a series of complex adventures, he finally becomes an outlaw in fact as well as spirit—a Napoleon of the desert, who wears the brand of Cain."—Books

"The story never becomes melodramatic or impossible to believe and the verve of the French author comes through the translation."
+ Bookm 72:ix N '30 80w

"His story is told rapidly and rather incoherently, without much regard for plausibility. Through a lack of dramatic emphasis and a lack of freshness in the motivation, most of the episodes miss fire. The author has not succeeded in evoking the atmosphere of horror for which he strives, nor even in making us believe the tragic dilemma of his hero."
— Books p10 O 26 '30 200w

Boston Transcript p8 N 29 '30 100w

N Y Evening Post p6d N 15 '30 50w

"A stereotype Foreign Legion adventure story. It has traces of the old-fashioned tale of intrigue, and is reminiscent of the innumerable novels that have been written of Africa. It is a tale of the life and discipline in the Foreign Legion, of battles, escapes, revenge and death. The plot is involved and its disentanglement somewhat confusing. A cumbersome and superfluous introduction is a fair sample of what is to follow."
— N Y Times p22 O 5 '30 280w

ARMS, DOROTHY NOYES (MRS JOHN TAYLOR ARMS). Churches of France; with 51 reproductions of etchings and drawings by John Taylor Arms. 179p $20 Macmillan
726 Churches—France. France—Description and travel
29-25445

"Mr. and Mrs. Arms have explored France as connoisseurs. . . In this book they record their impressions, Mr. Arms with his pencil and etcher's needle, Mrs. Arms with comments on the historical and legendary background of the churches and the people who now live in their shadow."—Books

"This book is a treasure that would enrich any library."
+ Bookm 71:xix Jl '30 100w

"In each place Mr. Arms was not satisfied to record conventional aspects of the churches. He searched out quaint nooks and piquant details. His technique is rather taut and dry; little is left to the imagination, and the compositions are lacking in subtle diffusion of light and shade. But some of his work, notably that of the Abbey Church at Vézelay and the cathedral at Mende, is strongly conceived and executed, the detail in his pencil drawings is beautifully precise and the aquatint of sunrise at Mont St. Michel is delightful. . . The publishers have co-operated in producing a singularly attractive book; illustrations have been reproduced with great distinction." W. R. Agard
+ Books p10 F 16 '30 450w

"Mrs. Arms has supplemented the record of the carved stone with delightful accounts of the legends and traditions, as well as the stern and authentic facts which give to each shrine its peculiar individuality and beauty of atmosphere." G. R. B. R.
+ Boston Transcript p5 D 28 '29 1100w

Nation 129:726 D 11 '29 40w

"Although the writer happily recounts the divers small events of their journeyings about France, she does not confine herself to such recitals. She has a keen appreciation of Gothic architecture, and her descriptions of the cathedrals and churches her husband pictures are not only vividly evoking but often stimulate by the independence with which she estimates them." Uffington Valentine
+ N Y Times p9 Mr 16 '30 1400w

ARMSTRONG, MRS ANNE (WETZELL). This day and time. 269p $2.50 (7s 6d) Knopf 30-21771

In the Blue Ridge mountains of Tennessee Jim Ingoldsby leaves his young wife, Ivy, with her child Enoch, a ramshackle hut, and an acre or two of rough land. Ivy is valiant and equal to the struggle of gaining a living, and the neighbors are kind and helpful. Ivy's strength and purity of mind stand out against the background of wild mountaineer country; and in the narrow, illiterate community she lives a full and richly individual life.

Booklist 27:103 N '30

"It is a courageous author who presents us these days with a story of the Southern mountain folk. But forget your prejudices and your weariness. For 'This Day and Time' is neither imitative nor trite. . . Mrs Armstrong possesses emotional equilibrium and it is this that makes us feel we have seen a true and memorable picture of the people. As for Ivy, she would remain a heroic and haunting figure whatever her customs or her background." M. C. Dawson
+ Books p3 Ag 10 '30 450w

"She pins her faith generously to the large richness of human character; and the virtues of her book are resident in this. . . Mrs. Armstrong's work lacks neither drama nor poetry of a kind; its emotional burden is sound and true; but it comprises certain not quite minor faults of address and conception. . . If there is a chief fault to be found with Mrs. Armstrong's work it is that it has been pitched upon too naturalistic a level. Her descriptions of the mountain seasons, for example, rich in themselves, suffer a loss of significance in that they have not been clearly integrated in personality." Vincent McHugh
+ — N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 9 '30 600w

"The reader of 'This Day and Time' has the somewhat wasteful sense of traversing old ground. Nevertheless, Mrs Armstrong's novel has its own merits as a story of Southern mountain people. These merits are largely of a sociological order. . . It is not a pretty picture that Mrs Armstrong has painted, in spite of some descriptions of natural surroundings that are quietly beautiful."
+ — N Y Times p6 Ag 10 '30 500w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:79 N '30

"Through the generally somber texture of 'This Day and Time' runs a gleam of poetry. It is poetry derived in the main from the implications of Ivy's mother love and from brief snatches of nature description which strike like glints of sunshine through the book. It is not, however, that sustained lyrical quality, that poetry which in Miss Roberts's work seems always held in solution, again and again to be precipitated by a sense of the radiance of life despite its frequent sordidness. And by so much as it misses this quality, this quivering tenderness which brims over on occasion to elation, by so much it misses being as notable a book as 'The Time of Man.' Nevertheless it is a fine book, one which deserves to be read now and to find its place on the shelf beside Miss Roberts's kindred tale and beside such other novels as Edna Ferber's 'So Big' and Ellen Glasgow's 'Barren Ground.' " Amy Loveman
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:69 Ag 23 '30 650w

Times [London] Lit Sup p945 N 13 '30 150w

ARMSTRONG, ANTHONY, pseud. Trail of the Lotto. 319p $2 Macrae-Smith co. [7s 6d Methuen]

30-2369

Jimmie Rezaire, gentleman crook, in this instalment of his adventures has an amazingly interesting time when he establishes his own detective agency (quite independent of Scotland Yard) to recover a valuable Italian painting by the famous master, Lotto.

"Decidedly readable." Will Cuppy
+ Books p15 F 2 '30 80w

"Good in its initial idea, but worked out with too many repetitions of the same sort of scene and thrill, and commonplace in its style and its dramatic furnishings." L. L. Irvine
+ — Nation and Ath 46:143 O 26 '29 30w

"The extreme artlessness of its plot and absence from the story of unusual crime-detection features reduce this yarn to a puerile level of mystery fiction."
— N Y World p11m F 9 '30 120w

"There is no plot in the proper sense of the word. There is no pretense of characterization or of skill in writing. There is just plain action and a couple of diverting hours of reading for those who are not particular as to how they get their thrills." Eugene Reynal
— + Sat R of Lit 6:716 F 8 '30 80w

"Mr. Armstrong shows, once again, that he has a lively inventive faculty, but it cannot be said that he is as successful in this type of story as in those that offer him the opportunity for the humorous work which is his real forte."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p876 O 31 '29 180w

ARMSTRONG, HAMILTON FISH. Where the East begins. 139p il $3 (8s 6d) Harper

949.6 Balkan states 29-24184

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Bookm 71:viii Ap '30 100w

"A reader with a good knowledge of the Balkan background will find here many facts, but the book is too purely a political account, as everything in the Balkans is too political. Occasionally mention is made of economic improvements and programs, but there is little picture of life and thought in the Balkans today apart from that of the politicians. Mr. Armstrong's book, for all its value, is sketchy and confused."
— + Books p23 F 23 '30 250w

St Louis 28:80 Mr '30

"There are certain faults common to nearly all except the very few first-rate books on the Balkans. Superficiality is one of them; a patronizing tone is another. Both of these are present in a high degree in Mr. Armstrong's work. Although all of these short essays would have made, and, judging from their form, probably did originally make, excellent topical articles in a monthly review, it is hard to see why they were thought worthy of preservation in more permanent form."
— + Spec 143:914 D 14 '29 130w

Wis Lib Bul 26:40 Ja '30

ARMSTRONG, MARGARET NEILSON. Five generations; life and letters of an American family, 1750-1900. 425p il $5 Harper

917.3 Armstrong family. United States—Social life and customs 30-9712

These letters, bearing dates from 1780 to 1897, written and received by ancestors of the editor, form a "collection of unintended detail, of unguarded comment, of unposed American experience." From this rich family treasure can be gathered the autobiography of a distinguished American family, living mostly in New York and the South and including such names as the Fishes, Livingstons, Armstrongs, Ten Broecks, Neilsons, Marshalls and others.

Booklist 26:390 Jl '30

"The book is full of the most fascinating human relationships. The volume is magnificently illustrated by reproductions of fine portraits and old prints. The editor has a talent for saying just enough between letters to carry on the narrative and not so much as to intrude the twentieth century into this earlier world of folded letters, candle-light, gallants, hoop-skirts and wax flowers." Esther Forbes
Bookm 71:341 Je '30 230w

Boston Transcript p3 My 31 '30 800w

"The author, for she is more than editor, has done her work with tact and skill. The narrative flows easily and escapes the two besetting dangers of such books—pedantry and romanticism."
+ Nation 131:504 N 5 '30 180w

" 'Five Generations' is a perfect, unselfconscious record, in letters and diaries, of life in America from the days when Washington and his ragged army straggled through Philadelphia and New York to our own century. . . It is a very rich treasure." Ruth Seinfel
+ N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 12 '30 800w

Reviewed by C. W. Thompson
N Y Times p11 Ap 20 '30 1600w

"Intimate letters, for the most part, they reveal more than documents and state papers. Such family treasures are rare here where most people move every ten years, live without attics and keep rummage sales going."
+ Outlook 154:546 Ap 2 '30 150w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:74 O '30

St Louis 28:216 S '30

"Paris and London and New York in the 'seventies, are delightfully pictured in these documents, so unconsciously written, so full of intimate touches, humorous gossip, or human affection. Miss Armstrong has filled in the gaps with lucid and interesting explanation, 'placing' her personages so that one receives the impression of a coherent chronicle and follows the fortunes of her four great-grandfathers and their offspring, precisely as one would in a well-written biography. She deserves much credit for constructing a most readable book, in which the peruser will find a charming atmosphere of authenticity and be half persuaded that he himself has traveled, like Mrs. George Washington, 'in a chariot and four, with negro postillions in scarlet and white liveries.' " M. C. Canfield
+ Sat R of Lit 6:987 Ap 26 '30 900w

Springf'd Republican p6 Je 9 '30 550w

"Its four hundred pages are crammed with detailed material which should be long treasured by the best of our reading public; its careful index with a genealogical table bespeaks its scholarship; its unwitting but sure depiction of New York for one hundred and fifty years is invaluable to the social historian. This is a book to herald with rejoicing. Its events and incidents extend and expand far

ARMSTRONG, M. N.—Continued
beyond New York aristocracy. They contribute greatly to American social and economic history as well as to the enjoyment of every intelligent reader." M. E. Chase
+ Yale R n s 20:211 autumn '30 380w

ARMSTRONG, MARTIN DONISTHORPE. Fiery dive, and other stories. 259p $2.50 Harcourt [7s 6d Gollancz]
30-6150

Contents: The fiery dive; The widow of Ephesus; Portrait of the Misses Harlowe; Sombrero; In the wilds; Saint Hercules.

Booklist 27:27 S '30

"Most of the stories in this book have the almost fatal disadvantage of being faintly reminiscent. . . Mr. Armstrong is a good craftsman. There is a clear, unembellished directness about both his plots and their presentation which makes his characters, his scenes and his intentions readily recognizable at a glance. They are interesting to contemplate, too, and even pleasantly subtle, but he fails to make them significant either emotionally or intellectually. If the emotional reaction that one gets from a work of art in any medium is the real test of its value, then Mr. Armstrong is not an artist in the most exalted sense. But perhaps the mere fact that he provokes comparison with the best is the proof of his own worth." Norah Meade
+ — Bookm 71:217 Ap '30 320w

"The stories have no catch. They have not the kind of surprise where you stick in your thumb and pull out a plum. They move along with the subtle inevitability of the truth. And if they do not throttle you or pump the blood from your heart, at least they stow themselves away in your memory, clear and complete." V. P. Ross
Books p15 Ap 6 '30 600w
Boston Transcript p2 Jl 12 '30 480w
Cleveland Open Shelf p80 My '30

"Only one of these stories attains a higher level than that of merely agreeable or sympathetic writing. Sombrero is a remarkable account of a court martial. The tale, which appears to be drawn from actual maritime records, is stamped with a grave and bitter irony. The others, though they are all nicely written, are less notable, and seem to be the products of a patient mind studying life at second or third hand."
+ — Nation 130:686 Je 11 '30 200w

"Mr. Armstrong's collection strikes me as being of the nature of 'chips from a workshop.' He has written before a longish story about an early Christian hermit. Here we have a short one, and it is good. The Widow of Ephesus was evidently composed when he wondered whether it would be possible for him to write something in another vein explored by Anatole France. The answer was in the affirmative. But The Fiery Dive and Sombrero are good short stories in Mr. Armstrong's own right." E. S.
+ New Statesman 34:57 O 19 '29 100w

"Stories out of the common run of popular fiction, but lacking dimensionally and lacking in that magic which is the secret of art." Edwin Seaver
— + N Y Evening Post p8s F 22 '30 120w

"Martin Armstrong has retold here, in their simplest form, one or two of what must surely be the oldest stories in the world. They are undeniably powerful, however, because Mr. Armstrong's easy and graceful prose lends itself exceptionally well to the heightening of a single emotional effect. His style has a freshness and a quality of almost poetic suggestivity, which reveal to the reader depth beyond depth of meaning in a situation which might otherwise have been appallingly hackneyed."
+ N Y Times p8 Mr 2 '30 550w

"Each story has its own separate character, strikes its special note; Mr. Armstrong is equally at home with the heroic and the humdrum." L. P. Hartley
+ Sat R 148:520 N 2 '29 200w

"The style is singularly clear and restrained, almost, it seems, cold; but the lucid sentences cover an intensity of emotion that reminds one of Byron's simile of the fiery spirit at the heart of frozen champagne."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:929 Ap 12 '30 380w

"The title story is a very pleasing example of his power of slowly turning up the lamp, as it were, upon a passionate situation, letting it blaze up suddenly, and then quietly watching it diminish. . . Mr. Armstrong excels in illuminating the gradual accumulation of mood to the point of decision. He favours the decisions that are quietly made." V. S. Pritchett
+ Spec 143:553 O 19 '29 230w

"The tales are for the reader who is looking for substance and writing with a standard more than for plot and action. The plots are varied, but the quality is uniformly good."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 23 '30 120w

"We must confess a sense of disappointment with the collection as a whole. It does not, for instance, contain any piece that could be put in the same class as Mr. Armstrong's earlier and altogether delightful story 'Sea View.' "
— Times [London] Lit Sup p842 O 24 '29 500w

ARNO, PETER. Peter Arno's hullabaloo. unp il $3 Liveright
741 Caricatures and cartoons 30-33669

A collection of Peter Arno's humorous cartoons, with an introduction by Robert Benchley.

Reviewed by John Evans
Books p3 D 21 '30 400w

"Mr. Arno is excruciatingly funny, with, as Robert Benchley says in his preface, the 'dementia which amounts to genius.' But anybody who fails to see Mr. Arno as a moralist, though of a slightly different sort than some of his predecessors, fails to see him at all. . . While he is being moral, [he] is not only being funny but what the mode of his day calls risqué. If there is any closer parallel than this to the Police Gazette, it is surely not needed to prove that he is the legitimate successor to the artists of that worthy sheet."
+ Nation 131:640 D 10 '30 650w

"The second book of Arno's New Yorker drawings seems even better than the first one: certainly Arno draws better now than he did last year. One's only criticism would be that his types are a little monotonous."
+ — New Repub 65:145 D 17 '30 150w

"Mr. Arno repeats what he did last year by including two or three drawings which no magazine would publish. This will be offensive to some people of greater reticence who will question the taste of giving general circulation to what might be reserved for more discriminating display. In other words, this is no book to be left in the guest room when Aunt Sarah comes for a visit. And then, again, you never know."
N Y Times p4 D 14 '30 180w

"Pomposity cannot live near Peter Arno. He pricks it in a hurry. Sometimes his irony needs not a line of explanation. Sometimes one word suffices. The dowager, the clubman —Benchley calls them 'purple majors and ponderous dowagers'—the obviously smart and sophisticated, the self-consciously rich and exclusive, all are at his mercy. Sometimes we get the impression that there is too much of a sameness in his work. But even so they give us a grand laugh and we can stand many more of them." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p15 N 27 '30 220w

"In his introduction Robert Benchley points out that with the advent of this artist 'the entire technique of picturized jokes underwent a sudden and complete change. The old, feeble two-line joke practically disappeared, and in its place came a fresh and infinitely more civilized form—the illustrated single remark.' Nothing funny about these—until you see the picture. Then the incongruity, the implications, strike you and your guffaws shake the house." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 156:584 D 10 '30 150w

ARNOLD, JOHN. What happened at Andals? 312p $2 Dutton [7s 6d Jenkins]

30-4653

A young English solicitor receives an urgent cable from Lord Brasted, a client of the firm, who is holding a house party in Norway and entertaining, as one of his guests, a madcap young prince of the mythical kingdom of Atlantis. What actually has happened at the house party the message does not say; and the fact that several people very much want to know—and resort to desperate measures to find out—makes the mystery of the story, and starts an amazing chain of adventures for the young Englishman and his American newspaper friend.

"Delightfully amusing and mystifying to the reader."

+ Bookm 71:xxix Mr '30 40w

"This is pleasing diversion of the light and airy type." Will Cuppy

+ Books p18 Ja 26 '30 100w

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 1 '30 230w

"The story has a Graustarkian, musical comedy plot, with action galore. There is no murder, but there is plenty of violence."

N Y Times p28 F 23 '30 200w

"The denouement would be disappointing if you cared much what it was, but you don't because the action is swift and breezy." W. R. Brooks

+ — Outlook 154:189 Ja 29 '30 80w

Springf'd Republican p7e Je 15 '30 200w

"Mr. Arnold tells a story full of rumbustious and often ludicrous adventures, keeps the interest alive to the end, and then, after seriously wounding the excessively annoying heroine, settles the whole affair in a fashion completely different from anything which the episodes and general trend of the plot might have led the reader to expect."

Times [London] Lit Sup p670 Ag 29 '29 320w

ARTHUR, CHARLOTTE (MRS CHESTER ALAN ARTHUR, jr.). Poor faun. 344p $2 (7s 6d) Putnam

30-23187

A portrayal of a section of the life of Jocelyn Morley, a man of great personal charm but of no stability of character. Goaded to despair by his irresponsibility, his wife Barbara turned to a more dependable man, and left the charming faun to his own devices.

"The picture is attractive, but hard to credit. 'He needs a nurse, a coupla nurses,' is the comment of his chauffeur, and thereby hits off the reader's final impression. . . [The author] has not captured a faun on her canvas—not a minor deity with pointed ears but a selfish and rather tiresome male of all too human defects. He has none of the grotesquerie of the mythical being and all the incongruities of the self-centered male."

— Books p30 S 28 '30 200w

"'Poor Faun' is an amusing and likeable novel. It introduces a number of characters that will prove very appealing, and it places them in situations that will possess much interest for the reader. On the whole, it is only true to say that Mrs. Arthur has given us a book which measures up to almost every standard of the modern novel." E. H.

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 4 '30 1000w

ARTHUR, SIR GEORGE COMPTON ARCHIBALD, 3d bart. George V. 326p il $5 (10s) Cape

B or 92 George V, king of Great Britain

30-6822

"An authorized biography by Sir George Arthur, who has himself had no small share, during recent years, in the public and official life of his country. Some of the most interesting parts of this book are those relating to non-official matters. Nearly one-third of the volume is concerned with the life of the Prince before he ascended the throne."—R of Rs

"Refraining from superlatives, his quiet, well-rounded portrait does much to explain the affection and respect the king inspires at home and abroad. The book is also, in its way, a fairly comprehensive history of British politics and foreign affairs during the last fifty years." Paul Allen

+ Bookm 71:335 Je '30 100w

"Sir George Arthur sets down all the main incidents of King George's life in an eminently readable manner, and fills the gaps with brief historical excursions which make his book a summary 'life and times.'" William MacDonald

+ Books p18 F 23 '30 280w

Reviewed by Edmund Noble

Boston Transcript p8 Mr 1 '30 2650w

Reviewed by W. L. Grant

Canadian Hist R 11:172 Je '30 350w

"The biographer of George V does not achieve the impossible; does not even attempt it. This is just the sort of life of the king that might have been written under royal command, or at least for the royal eye—as it probably was. It has all the earmarks of an inside job, and the merits and defects of an official biography. Britannia rules the waves, saves the world from a deluge of German aggression, and pours upon India the blessings of peace and plenty." W. E. Garrison

Christian Century 47:433 Ap 2 '30 100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p101 Jl '30

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

Current Hist 32:602 Je '30 720w

"Whether we accept the sub-title or not, it must be admitted that Sir George Arthur does his very gentlemanly turn with a discretion that really amounts to virtuosity. In the course of 350 large pages he employs almost every cliché known to the English language, and writes with a patriotic lump in the throat and a consequent catch in the voice." William Plomer

Nation and Ath 46:114 O 19 '29 220w

"Whenever Sir George approaches the personality of King George—which is but rarely—he appears to suffer acute discomfort, and so careful is he to avoid offence that his discretion at times verges on discourtesy. Like a too fussy equerry at an unusual function, he is continually getting between the reader and the very modest and kindly gentleman whom it is his avowed object to praise and present to us."

— New Statesman 34:26 O 12 '29 300w

"Sir George Arthur writes with spirit about the army: he knows and loves it. But the George V of his book simply does not come to life. His mannered writing with its many Latin and French phrases has something to do with this. But the chief reason is that material simply is not available for use about the years of the King's reign that cannot be found in any modern history or newspaper." L. H. Titterton

— N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 8 '30 500w

"By keeping King George in the background while he is engaged in his historical digressions, he tends to make his hero altogether too shadowy. While the biographer is devoting the major part of entire chapters to uninspired and commonplace estimates of men and events of the past half century, poor King George becomes positively invisible for page after page." T. R. Ybarra

— N Y Times p10 F 23 '30 1000w

ARTHUR, G. C. A.—Continued

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 F 15 '30 400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:29 Ap '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:24 Mr '30 170w

St Louis 28:52 F '30

"Not even so ardent a biographer as Sir George Arthur can make his life significant other than by reason of the position in which fortune has placed him. Nor, except for those for whom every detail of the existence of royalty holds glamour, can such a chronicle as this hold much interest. What emerges from this chronicle is the figure of a man lovable and loved, but of the history of his time nothing at all that is not already known to the least of his subjects."

— Sat R of Lit 6:741 F 15 '30 220w

"On the whole, Sir George has succeeded splendidly in his difficult task."

+ — Spec 143:473 O 5 '29 80w

"Its literary intention is never clear. It is in part a biography of the King, in part a history of the reign, in part a commentary on the events of our own time in which Sir George makes not the least concealment of his vigorous likes and dislikes. The book as a whole tends to fall between these three stools. . . The reader who is rather enjoying Sir George Arthur when he lets himself go on the subject of Mr. Lloyd George feels the jolt when he pulls himself up with the feeling that it is really time to say a little more about the King."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p711 S 19 '29 1100w

ASBURY, HERBERT. Carry Nation. 314p $3 (10s 6d) Knopf

B or 92 Nation, Mrs Carry Amelia (Moore). Prohibition 29-21266

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Cleveland Open Shelf p8 Ja '30

"Carry Nation was an interfering old busybody, alarming to encounter but amusing to read about. Mr. Asbury tells her story well and entertainingly, with a sense of the atmosphere of his background and period. Only the more sensitive reader may perhaps wish at times that his laughter was being directed rather at those who took her seriously and gave her power than at 'a harmless paranoiac.' "

+ Nation and Ath 46:737 Mr 1 '30 720w

"Mr. Asbury has set down the facts of Carry Nation's life without bias. His book is inclusive, clearly written and, by virtue of subject and treatment, extremely interesting." G. T. Hellman

+ New Repub 61:307 F 5 '30 500w

"Mr. Asbury gallops through this astonishing career with flying tails, and makes the most of a long series of street battles which must in fact have been very much alike. He might perhaps have quoted more examples of Carry Nation's famous rhetoric. As it is, he has written a book which will appeal to anyone who has a taste for Americana."

+ New Statesman 34:540 F 1 '30 450w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 34:83 D '29

St Louis 28:16 Ja '30

"The story Mr. Asbury tells is that of a life at once grotesque and heroic, and never more grotesque than when it was most heroic. But it is told in a direct narrative, in style resembling that of the American newspaper at its best, which allows the facts to speak for themselves."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p262 Mr 27 '30 700w

ASBURY, HERBERT. Ye olde fire laddies. 188p il $3.50 (12s 6d) Knopf

614.84 New York (city)—Fires and fire protection 30-29885

"Herbert Asbury's book is filled with curious details about the old volunteer fire companies of New York City. He goes back to the earliest fire fighting on Manhattan, describes the uniforms, apparatus and big fires, and closes his chronicle in 1856, when the volunteer fire department passed out."—N Y World

Booklist 27:190 Ja '31

"Mr. Asbury has turned out a remarkably informative and interesting companion to the History of the City of New York."

+ Bookm 72:xiv N '30 230w

"Incidentally, Mr. Asbury has written something very like a history of the city and its ways, fragmentary but vivid and redolent."

+ Books p7 N 23 '30 380w

N Y Times p11 D 21 '30 800w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p14 O 24 '30 300w

"Written in a lively, diverting style and with plenty of picturesque incident." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 156:389 N 3 '30 40w

Sat R 150:876 D 27 '30 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1097 D 25 '30 850w

ASCH, NATHAN. Pay day. 265p $2.50 Brewer 30-5938

"Jim is a clerk in down town New York. His light loves and rather pitiful pleasures are focused into that brief interval when he spends his week's earnings. . . The author has etched Jim's night of tawdry pleasures against the ghastly background of the Sacco-Vanzetti execution. The newsboys call the extras, the patrons of speakeasies and dance-halls discuss the case, reeling with bad liquor and jazz. The horror and fear of that well-remembered night provide the undertow in the current of Jim's trivial preoccupations."—Outlook

"It requires a miracle to make a study like this rise above its own level from document to art; and Mr. Asch cannot bring the miracle off. The real merit of the book is incidental. It lies in Mr. Asch's sense of atmosphere and manners—in his downtown New York at night, which captures all five of our senses; in his speakeasy scenes, breathing and dynamic; in his drinkers and dancers made unmistakable by mere conversation. These things are more than documentary; there is drama in them, movement, color. They point a moral for the rest of the book by suggesting the infinite difference between reality and fact."

— + Bookm 71:218 Ap '30 280w

"Dissections of the mental and moral fibre of the younger generation have been rather thoroughly done in recent fiction, but it has remained for Mr. Asch to do the job with none of the messy details with-held or slighted. It is impossible to believe that the author had any joy in the task, and it is difficult to ascertain what artistic goal has been reached by doing it. At least it has the merit of rendering a repetition of the operation unnecessary."

— Books p26 Ap 13 '30 200w

"Mr. Asch has done an excellent study of the type."

+ Nation 130:304 Mr 12 '30 150w

New Repub 63:242 Jl 16 '30 220w

"It is a rather effective device, this interweaving of themes, though it is no more than a device and leads to a rather fortuitous conclusion. There is irony in the contrast of the vapid search for pleasure, the desperate boredom of the speakeasy, with the stark reality of the coincident drama. As in 'The Office' Asch is, apart from this irony, most successful in his treatment of externals. His subway rides are ingenious and exciting, his Times Square mob and his movie better, I think, than they have been done by any other American writer." Clinton Simpson

+ N Y Evening Post p9s F 22 '30 380w

N Y Times p9 My 11 '30 320w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p13 Ap 29 '30 700w

"Mr. Asch's story has a very definite pattern which has been followed consistently and clearly. The book has proportion, balance."
+ Outlook 154:349 F 26 '30 200w

"It is very detailed, very life-like, very sordid. The outstanding impression left by the book is that of sheer physical disgust. The style is rapid and slipshod; it is no doubt intentionally so, to give an idea of the current of the clerk's thoughts, but it nevertheless becomes painful in time."
— Sat R of Lit 6:879 Mr 29 '30 280w
Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 2 '30 100w

ASCH, SHALOM. Mother; tr. by Nathan Ausübel; pref. by Ludwig Lewisohn. 351p $2.50 Liveright
30-25746

A Jewish family, the Zlotniks, emigrates to America, following the success of their eldest son in the new country. Here, as in Poland, Surè, the mother, finds she must fight against poverty, and works herself to death. Dvoyrelè, the eldest daughter, gives her love and encouragement to a despondent young sculptor until he achieves success: then she returns to her own family to care for the younger brothers and sisters, left motherless.

Booklist 27:159 D '30

"It must be admitted that the theme of disillusionment in 'The Mother' runs perilously close to mere sentimentality. Time and again Sholom Asch's symbol of 'The Mother' as the central figure in Jewish life stands in danger of being destroyed by its intrinsic emotional appeal. However, nothing of the kind happens. Sholom Asch fully recognizes the limitations of his novel and brings his sense of artistic proportion to bear upon the critical points in the situation he has created." Horace Gregory
+ Books p21 O 26 '30 850w

"'The Mother' is life itself, sometimes humorous, sometimes tragic, always absorbing in interest even when dealing with the most elemental problems. . . The ending perhaps weakens a trifle. But Mr. Asch knows the phases of life as lived by his people on alien soil, probably better than his Gentile readers can possibly comprehend. And granting this, he has wrought a masterpiece." C. K. H.
+ — Boston Transcript p5 N 1 '30 600w

"In this first of his numerous novels to appear in English, Mr. Asch falls too willingly into a facile and benevolent sentimentalism. 'The Mother' is interesting only as it conveys the colorful atmosphere of a racial group and the tragedy of the older generation surrendering its children to the New World. The characters are only superficially explained."
— + New Repub 64:358 N 12 '30 200w

"The attention of both author and reader is concentrated throughout upon the characters. With an art that is remarkably telling, and perhaps almost wholly instinctive, every word that they speak is made to be at once individual and typical. They almost seem to exist, in fact, in order that the reader may be able to exclaim at the bottom of each page: 'How Jewish they are!' At the roots of such an intention, of course, there is a vast sentimentality. In the last analysis, just as his Mother forgives her children everything because they are her children, Mr. Asch forgives his characters everything because they are Jews. . . No one will object to Mr. Asch's sentimentality, however, because it is the most creative force in his book. It may limit the significance of his work, but it makes it come to life." Gerald Sykes
+ — N Y Evening Post p4d O 11 '30 650w

"The whole thing is a garish, undigested, unassimilated amount of incident and narrative, occasionally interesting, but more often sentimental to an unpleasant degree and dull to an irritating. Neither Mr. Lewisohn nor Mr. Asch are adding anything to the stature of Jewish literature when they present this book as an example of its beauty and poetry."
— N Y Times p34 N 16 '30 420w

"It is a novel that approaches greatness in stature by reason of the art with which it is written, its emotional simplicity and epic sweep. . . It is difficult to express the effect of this book during and after the reading. That it is the work of a first rate novelist is a matter of immediate conviction." Pierre Loving
+ N Y World p3e O 12 '30 550w

"A poised writer whose sense of humor walks hand in hand with his sense of pity, who knows not the word futility, and who writes with gusto and a fine lack of pose." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 156:188 O 1 '30 230w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:79 N '30

Reviewed by Leonard Ehrlich
Sat R of Lit 7:307 N 8 '30 350w

ASHBROOK, HARRIETTE. Murder of Cecily Thane. 293p $1.50 Coward-McCann [5s Eyre]
30-19634

The district attorney did not approve of his gay and debonair brother Spike. Neither did he approve of murders. But Spike had a grand time airily solving the murder of Cecily Thane, much to the discomfiture of big brother and the chagrin of Inspector Herschman, headquarters dick.

"Even though every established rule in the plotting of a detective story is broken, the book is cleverly written and is heartily recommended."
+ Bookm 71:xix Ag '30 80w

"A lively and expert story well worth the while of all good fans. Moreover, she displays a pleasing writing knack in addition to a thorough knowledge of deductive principles and a complete lack of New Humanism." Will Cuppy
+ Books p10 Jl 20 '30 280w

"A tight little mystery that has many thrills. . . 'The Murder of Cecily Thane' is more than a conventional mystery story. It has occasional little pieces of reflection on the part of the author; it has the suggestion that there is a certain significance about the whole affair." W. E. H.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Jl 30 '30 550w

"The frothiest of the summer's mysteries." Dashiell Hammett
N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 19 '30 300w

"This first detective story venture by Miss Ashbrook is ingeniously worked out. . . Spike's police methods are unusual and amusing."
+ N Y Times p12 Jl 27 '30 130w

"Miss Ashbrook works out a plot and mystery solution which, if not unique, have the merit of certain twists that are to be met with here for the first time. . . The story is Miss Ashbrook's first in the mystery field, and with it she has qualified as so skillful and interesting a newcomer that we should by all means hear from her again." E. C. Beckwith
+ N Y World p5m Ag 3 '30 250w

"Many involved situations are worked out in a most unusual manner, making this book outstanding among recent detective stories." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 155:508 Jl 30 '30 150w

"A breezy, sly, but never interfering humor, pervades the whole book, enlivening the necessary dull portions with just the right touch." R. I. Center
+ Sat R of Lit 7:63 Ag 16 '30 220w

"The story is filled with action, humor and surprises, and its characters appear more human than those of the ordinary detective story."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e S 21 '30 200w
Times [London] Lit Sup p868 O 23 '30 220w

ASHTON, HARRY. Molière. (Republic of letters) 263p $2 Dutton [6s Routledge]
B or 92 Molière, Jean Baptiste Poquelin
[30-12036]

A study of the life and works of the great French dramatist by a professor of French literature in the University of British Columbia. Professor Ashton interprets Molière's plays in relation to his life, the times, and the public for which he wrote.

ASHTON, HARRY—Continued

"In this day of fictionized biography Professor Ashton's Molière is so notable an exception that one is tempted to ask, 'Que diable fait-il dans cette galère?' The present study, one of the 'Republic of Letters' series, is avowedly written both to inform the ordinary reader and to purge him of whatever false notions he may have been led to cherish through the efforts of legendmongers and writers of theses."
+ Bookm 71:558 Ag '30 300w

"This little book will set the general reader right as to the excesses of the interpreters. Its chief merit is thus a negative one. It is not inspired, and is even a little halting in its progress. For all its air of paradoxical iconoclasm it deals a good deal in platitudes. But the book has been carefully made. It has an admirable bibliography, an interesting digression chapter on Molière's influence in Restoration England, some curious comment on how certain great actors have interpreted the role of Alceste and, in general, an unexpectedly large amount of valuable matter for so slight a book. The author is full of both zeal and knowledge and he has made a real addition to the enormous body of Molière literature." R. T. House
+ Books p3 Jl 6 '30 550w

"He yields to none in his appreciation of his hero; but he sees, and makes us see, that Molière had his years of insignificance, in which he carried no more weight than any number of other provincial actors, and that even when he enjoyed both royal and popular favour he had rivals whom it was not unnatural for the world to regard as his equals. . . Mr. Ashton always subjects theories to the searching test of facts; and this is what makes his book so valuable, in spite of its brevity, its over-allusiveness, and its occasional heaviness of style."
+ New Statesman 35:20 Ap 12 '30 1400w

"Professor Ashton has written a book that is sound in judgment, condensed in presentation of material and clear in expression. And though he divulges no new facts on the life of the great dramatist, he interprets those at his command with fidelity to original sources and with considerable critical acumen." Dino Ferrari
+ N Y Times p11 Je 29 '30 750w
St Louis 28:272 N '30

"This is not so much a critical biography of Molière as a critical examination of Molière material. It is obviously the work of a Molière specialist, and its value consists largely in the keenness and assiduity with which Molière's plays are studied in relation to their background."
+ Springf'd Republican p10 Je 20 '30 350w

ASHTON, HELEN, pseud. See Jordan, H. R.

ASHTON, WINIFRED. See Dane, C., pseud.

ASHTON-WOLFE, HARRY. Forgotten clue; tales and methods of the sûreté. 282p il $3 Houghton
364 Crime and criminals—France. Detectives 30-15116

Collection of articles and stories about the work of the famous Parisian department of criminal investigation. Mr. Ashton-Wolfe himself worked in it for some time as a pupil and assistant of Dr. Bertillon, and in these chapters he explains and describes the methods that were used and illustrates them with accounts of the application of principles in concrete cases. Throughout the book Mr. Ashton-Wolfe makes copious use of instances and anecdotes of investigations made by the Paris Sûreté."—N Y Times

"A thoroughly interesting and authoritative book on criminals and police deductions."
+ Bookm 72:xxv S '30 120w
Books p10 Je 15 '30 130w
Cleveland Open Shelf p108 Jl '30

"'The Forgotten Clue' is, for all its author's apparent knowledge of his subject, largely Sunday-supplement stuff." Dashiell Hammett
— N Y Evening Post p11m My 10 '30 150w
N Y Times p27 My 23 '30 200w

"Modern scientific methods of crime detection have been amazingly developed in France, and their working is carefully and interestingly explained." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 155:27 My 7 '30 100w

ASHTON-WOLFE, HARRY. Thrill of evil. 299p il $3 Houghton
364 Crime and criminals—France. Murder 30-18939

Gathered from case-experiences while their author assisted Dr Bertillon, famous French criminal investigator, these twelve stories are tales for the most part of the operations and capture of some famous murderers. Among them are accounts of the double life of Dr Bougrat, the murders in the séance room, and the Bessarabo mystery.

"With none of the trappings and convenient arrangements upon which detective fiction is based, these factual cases are extremely dramatic and graphically described."
+ Bookm 71:xxi Ag '30 80w

"There is a lot of good stuff in the book, but much of it is spoiled by the sort of overwriting considered suitable for the gaudier Sunday supplements." Dashiell Hammett
+ — N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 23 '30 40w

"The three great masters of the crime story are Poe, Stevenson and the late Conan Doyle. Mr. Ashton-Wolfe is not to be placed with Stevenson and Poe; his 'Dr Bertillon' may, however, not sit so far below the great Sherlock Holmes. . . The reviewer would add: He read the twelve pieces while on an enforced railway journey when the temperature in the car hovered close to the 100 mark. And he can testify to a sufficient number of chills down the spine."
+ N Y Times p7 Ag 3 '30 650w

"If the stories are true, they are among the most melodramatic and fantastic criminal records which could exist. . . Don't read these stories at night." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 155:506 Jl 30 '30 150w

"The methods of the French police are always interesting to follow, the criminals are delightfully diabolical, and the writing, though florid, makes the most of the gory incidents with which it deals." W. C. Weber
+ Sat R of Lit 7:94 Ag 30 '30 100w

ASTON, SIR GEORGE GREY (GEORGE SOUTHCOTE, pseud.). Biography of the late Marshal Foch. 483p il $5 Macmillan [24s Hutchinson]
B or 92 Foch, Ferdinand. European war, 1914-1918—Campaigns—France 29-27648
For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"All published material has been thoroughly canvassed and the book may fairly claim to present most of the facts now available. It may well be described as an obituary biography: fair and moderate in tone and with not a little thoughtful discrimination in the reasoned conclusions the writer offers,—but nevertheless a eulogy rather than a critical historical study. This is the more noticeable at times in that the author evidently knows so much more than he thinks fit to bring forward, and has smoothed over rough angles which he evidently could have handled very adequately." T. H. Thomas
+ — Am Hist R 35:613 Ap '30 1050w
Booklist 26:200 F '30
Bookm 71:viii Mr '30 30w

"The book is prolix and occasionally incoherent and gives the impression of having been written at one sitting without ever having been read over. On some occasions quotations are printed in French and when this is done spelling mistakes are all too frequent. It is a pity that the book was not revised and condensed, for the author shows great admiration for Foch and in parts an intelligent appreciation of what Foch was." H. C. Lodge

— + Books p21 Ja 26 '30 300w

"If anyone, fed up on modern realistic lives that make the great seem less great, thinks he would like one of the old romantic sort, that were a cross between campaign biographies and funeral eulogies, let him try this. Marshal Foch's position on a pedestal is never consciously endangered. His Catholic faith is stressed early and often, and the narrative of his boyhood is interrupted with incidents illustrative of his religious faith during the war."

Christian Century 47:370 Mr 19 '30 350w

"His biography is of a general, by a general, and if not exclusively for generals, still it is permeated with the viewpoint of the professional soldier. Although, on the whole, an agreeable book to read, it is somewhat marred by several unnecessary reiterations and repetitions which, it is to be hoped, may be eliminated in later editions." L. R. M.

+ — Christian Science Monitor p5 Mr 8 '30 600w

Cleveland Open Shelf p101 Jl '30

"In reading the volume one is constantly impressed with the idea that it was produced in haste and carelessness, rather to catch the crowd with some sort of biography as soon as possible after Foch's death than to bring out a really good life of the great Frenchman. General Aston knew his subject well and was splendidly qualified to write of him with imagination and understanding, coupled, to some extent, with hero worship. But the many needless repetitions of phrase and expression, and the great number of small errors of fact or misprints do much to destroy the reader's interest in Foch and confidence in his biographer." Milton Offutt

— Hist Outlook 21:240 My '30 400w

Reviewed by John Carter

Outlook 154:669 Ap 23 '30 30w

"General Aston's biography is one of those books which one wants to keep reading, once it has been started. It is a clear cut narrative worthy of its subject." C. S. Coulter

+ Portland Evening News p5 Ja 22 '30 1150w

"Both French and British official documents served as the sources, but still more essential to the vitality of the work were the memories of living officers who had served with the great Marshal. These give the book its chief distinction and will make it indispensable in the future, whatever may be done by later biographers." W. B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 81:26 F '30 350w

St Louis 28:52 F '30

"The author had the great advantage of assistance from many British officers who served close to Foch; he has sought out industriously all that has appeared in print; and the result is the first approach to a comprehensive biography. It is of interest for one thing in gathering together the scattered facts of Foch's earlier career and the few bits available in regard to his private life." T. H. Thomas

+ Sat R of Lit 6:940 Ap 19 '30 1700w

Springf'd Republican p10 Jl 17 '30 520w

ASTON, SIR GEORGE GREY (GEORGE SOUTHCOTE, pseud.). Secret service. 348p il $4 Cosmopolitan bk. [18s Faber]

940.485 European war, 1914-1918—Secret service. Secret service 30-28859

A complete and officially documented story of secret service during the war, by the organizer of Great Britain's Department of naval intelligence. There are chapters on certain well-kept secrets of the war, and others not so well-kept, including that of the Dardanelles expedition in 1915. The book also includes accounts of the work of individual spies, and of German spies in the United States.

Current Hist 33:xxv Ja '31 180w

Reviewed by Edmund Blunden

Nation and Ath 48:106 O 18 '30 1150w

"This is another of the 'now it can be told'—at least in part—books. But it is a very discreet example of its class. Its author has been connected importantly with the Secret Service of Great Britain for forty years and undoubtedly if he would tell all he knows he could write a much more interesting book than any of the now-it-can-be-told volumes that have thus far rather disappointed a public that is eager for such secrets. But the author of 'Secret Service' has reinforced his own caution with that of his department and mentions in his preface the deletion of certain items 'in the public interest.' "

N Y Times p28 N 9 '30 400w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1025 D 4 '30 500w

ATHAVALE, MRS PARVATIBAI. My story; the autobiography of a Hindu widow; written in the Marathi language; tr. by Justin E. Abbott. 149p il $2.50 (10s 6d) Putnam

B or 92 Women in India. Education of women—India 30-12505

Parvatibai Athavale was born in India, married at the age of eleven, and at twenty-five was left a widow with three children. She went to work in the Widows' home at Hingane, which has since grown into a woman's college, and struggled to get an education so that she might lecture on the wrongs of Hindu womanhood. Coming to America, she learned English and pleaded her cause in several countries before returning to India to take up her work.

"Hers is the voice of reform speaking to India itself, unconscious of listening foreign ears, and therefore all the more valuable as indicative of what Indians really think." W. N. Brown

+ Books p7 Je 29 '30 650w

"The simplicity, directness and sincerity of this little life story give it a charm of its own that much enhances the interest of the author's account of her devotion to a purpose that for many years has absorbed all her time, her strength and her thought. . . It is a naïve, self-revelatory narrative and by reading it one comes to a better understanding of racial characteristics that underlie the movement Mahatma Gandhi has inspired and developed."

+ N Y Times p12 My 18 '30 380w

St Louis 28:217 S '30

Spec 145:170 Ag 2 '30 250w

"It is a simple and artless narrative. She writes entirely without self-consciousness, and hardly seems to realize the unselfish heroism needed for a young, poorly educated Hindu widow, with very little means, to make such an effort as a campaign in Europe and the United States. She earned her living as a domestic servant in the latter, and, as one would expect from Americans, met with great kindness everywhere. Hers is a very pleasant and interesting story."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p631 Jl 31 '30 180w

ATHERTON, SARAH. Blow, whistles, blow! 329p $2.50 Brewer

30-7963

A story of life and love, faithfulness and unfaithfulness, with the Pennsylvania coal mines as background. Sophie Fashung, whose father was killed in the mines, determined to make herself worthy of her lover, Charlie Oleson, who had left the mines to go to college. She succeeded where Charlie failed, and besides helping her sister thru a very difficult time, found happiness for herself, tho not with Charlie.

ATHERTON, SARAH—Continued

"An earnest and uninteresting novel."
— Bookm 71:351 Je '30 20w

"It is not that this novel is without its moments or is not generally a creditable first performance in view of what the author set out to do, but it lacks sweep, wide organization and a profound understanding of the events portrayed. Miss Atherton has a decently facile gift of expression; she can create and exploit very well a dramatic situation; she seems unafraid of life—and, thank the Lord, she can become passionately indignant. But for what? One cannot be sure." H. H. Dinsmore
— + Books p15 Mr 23 '30 300w

"The plot is slight and not at all original, but there are some excellences of characterization which compensate for marked inconsistencies and the background is well done, showing an understanding and a sympathy which, combined with an excellent proportioning of details, give a picture both fresh and convincing. The author comes from the section of which she writes and after graduating from Bryn Mawr she devoted some time to the study of child labor and kindred problems of the section. As yet, she seems unable to handle a sustained theme or to do much in the way of development of plot or of character. She can explain her characters, but she cannot create them." G. R. B. R.
— + Boston Transcript p5 Ap 18 '30 500w

"Miss Atherton has written a book distinguished not only for its rendition of a phase of American life, but for the poetic, almost lyric, quality of the writing itself. The slight awkwardness of construction which is evident at times is a fault which will doubtless disappear with more experience, and it does not detract from decided enjoyment of the book."
+ N Y Times p9 Ap 6 '30 450w

Reviewed by Bellamy Partridge
N Y World p11m Mr 30 '30 240w

"The author has not only a good understanding of her characters but a striking ability to differentiate between them, to make their mental habits, thoughts and speech distinctive. She herself never obtrudes in the book, a rare quality for a beginning novelist."
+ Outlook 154:589 Ap 9 '30 140w

"The book contains a vigorous and humorous description of a strike, which evinces real power of observation. Some of the mine scenes are also done with accomplished skill. On the whole, however, 'Blow, Whistles, Blow!' is an ineffective piece of journeyman writing, surveying a messy side of American life with the candid eyes of the Junior League."
— + Sat R of Lit 6:904 Ap 5 '30 300w

ATKEY, BERTRAM. House of strange victims. 296p $2 (7s 6d) Appleton

30-18202

By what strange power could Sir Morgan Greare, famous surgeon, exact not only large sums of money from his patients, but their slavish adoration as well? It became the business of Prosper Fair, vagabond duke, to find out—and thus save the victims.

"An eerie tale where right triumphs over a fiendish secret of science. You will like the unassuming Prosper despite the horror of his adventures."
+ Bookm 71:xix Ag '30 100w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p12 Jl 27 '30 180w

Boston Transcript p5 S 13 '30 120w

"This is neither better nor worse than most of its ilk as far as plotting goes, but pretty heavily wrapped in kittenishness. Its hero, for instance, is a Duke of Devizes who goes around his native land calling himself 'Prosper Fair,' calling, as if that were not enough, his automobile 'Mr. Bentley,' and, still insatiable, calling his donkey and his three-legged dog 'the littles.' "
— N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 2 '30 100w

"The book is odd but interesting reading." Bruce Rae
+ N Y Times p17 Ag 10 '30 170w

"There is some pseudo-science involved in the solution that is a bit ridiculous, but the atmosphere of the book is pleasantly creepy and its pace swift and exciting." W. C. Weber
Sat R of Lit 7:94 Ag 30 '30 80w

ATKINS, HENRY GIBSON. Heine. (Republic of letters) 292p $2.50; educ ed $2 Dutton [6s Routledge]

B or 92 Heine, Heinrich [29-28663]

The author of this biography of the great German poet, a professor of German in the University of London, has employed for his sources a recent compilation of Heine's letters and records of his conversations. Mr Atkins has not written a psychological interpretation of Heine's stormy personality, but has described fairly and without bias the man and his work, his chief interest being in the critical interpretation of his poetry.

"This is the fourth biography of Heine that has appeared in English in the last half-dozen years, and it may be confidently affirmed to be the best." W. K. Stewart
+ Books p7 Mr 30 '30 1000w

"The battle over Heine has reached almost international dimensions, and it is greatly to Professor Atkins's credit that, knowing the battlefield so thoroughly, he keeps himself strenuously above it and so writes a book which is short, compact, illuminating, and reliable." Barrington Gates
+ Nation and Ath 46:sup228 N 6 '29 200w

"Mr. Atkins, equipped with a thorough knowledge of his subject, has dealt with it competently and impartially in this short book, which is a worthy addition to the Republic of Letters Series. Extenuating nothing, and setting down naught in malice, he presents as fair a view as we have ever seen of this divine image with the feet of clay, and contrives in excellent fashion to combine brevity with comprehensiveness in the accounts he gives of the poet's various works."
+ New Statesman 34:58 O 19 '29 700w

Reviewed by S. A. Coblentz
N Y Times p6 Ap 20 '30 950w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:38 My '30

Reviewed by Humbert Wolfe
Spec 143:sup675 N 9 '29 1000w

"An admirably compact and careful biography. . . It is difficult to see how more could be done in the space available."
+ Springf'd Republican p12 Mr 21 '30 700w

"By this book the late William Sharp's charming, but discreet and partial, life of Heine is likely to be superseded; and probably there is no higher compliment we could pay Mr. Atkins than simply to register the fact. He has taken all the pains which are required if a short biography is to be a good book—that is to say, more pains of a certain kind than are required for a long one. Within his necessary limits he is scrupulously honest, and the interweaving of the parallel threads of the life and work is cunningly, yet easily, done."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p918 N 14 '29 1100w

ATTENBOROUGH, GLADYS MARY (MRS PERCY LINAKER). Lady of daylight; a portrait in blue and gold. 322p $2.50 Stokes [7s 6d Constable]

30-24854

Dianeme Dainty was an English woman of charm and breeding. After a short, happy married life her husband was lured away by a very modern example of the genus Circe, was hurt in an accident, and died within a few days. Dianeme bravely embarked on the task of bringing up her only son. Twenty years later the Circe, grown a little older and even wiser, determined to marry the son. And then up stepped Jemima Jee, housekeeper extraordinary to the house of Dainty, and before long things were as they should be.

"Miss Attenborough has an essayist's touch. Whatever she chooses to describe is illuminated by her vivacity, humor and imagination. Her approach is romantic, but on the whole not sentimental."

+ Books p10 N 30 '30 200w

"While one is conscious of an undeniable perception of beauty, it bears the earmarks of an author who has not the sureness of touch of completed apprenticeship. An undue stressing of overtones has marred the charm and strength of the characterizations, and an exhibitionist display of knowledge has detracted from the intrinsic interest in otherwise convincing and dramatic episodes."

— + N Y Times p7 N 23 '30 400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:87 D '30

"All is not sweetness and light in this tragedy, but there are charming comic glimpses of pre-war, war, and post-war life in the villages of county England."

Sat R of Lit 7:222 O 11 '30 100w

"The characters in this book are too fantastic in their ideas, actions and words to achieve any contact with those who meet them. Many of the chapters convey a sense of straining after effect."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p760 S 25 '30 200w

AUBREY-FLETCHER, HENRY LANCELOT (HENRY WADE, pseud.). Dying alderman. 301p il $2 Brewer [7s 6d Constable]

30-32332

When Alderman Trant was murdered, the newly elected Chief Constable called in Scotland Yard—but the solution of the mystery rested upon the interpretation of an unfinished message left by the dying man.

Bookm 72:xxvi D '30 80w

"For one reader, at least, the author's method of hiding the crook proved effective." Will Cuppy

+ Books p23 N 16 '30 150w

"The plot of the book is intricate but never wearisomely complex, the writing is economical and adequate, and the characters are real enough to stir our interest in them as well as in the murder. But the problem is a little too easily solved."

+ — New Statesman 35:686 S 6 '30 120w

Reviewed by Bruce Rae

N Y Times p32 N 30 '30 180w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 156:469 N 19 '30 80w

"An ingenious and well-written detective story with a novel plot, which is a delightful change from the usual cut-and-dried type."

+ Sat R 150:239 Ag 29 '30 50w

Sat R of Lit 7:511 Ja 3 '31 180w

"Mr. Wade's work is worth reading for more than the mere puzzle of the plot."

+ Spec 145:605 O 25 '30 170w

Times [London] Lit Sup p702 S 4 '30 150w

AUDEN, HAROLD ALLDEN. Sulphuric acid and its manufacture. 231p il $6 Longmans

661.2 Sulphuric acid [30-445]

"The standard works on the manufacture of sulphuric acid are in general too detailed, and their bulk renders them too costly, for the ordinary student of applied chemistry. This book is designed to help him to grasp the fundamental problem associated with the subject, and by means of the accompanying references to enable him to consult the original articles when more detailed information is required."—Pref.

"Admirably adapted for a student in college or for the plant man who desires to become rather intimately acquainted with the present state of sulphuric acid production, this book is written, as is natural, with practice in England foremost. The references to American practice are not always accurate but this is not detrimental to a general picture of the American industry. With a very little co-operation with an American sulphuric-acid expert, the author could have presented a book that would have had as wide an appeal here as in England. However, it is the most readable of any bearing on this subject that has appeared for a number of years." J. H. Perry

+ — Chem & Met Eng 37:311 My '30 350w

Reviewed by F. G. Stantial

Ind & Eng Chem 22:302 Mr '30 220w

"The treatment is clear and the amount of detail well chosen. In some cases the information is not at all adequate, as in the few words devoted to the use of ammonia oxidation." J. R. Partington

+ — J Phys Chem 34:1120 My '30 120w

"In many places there is a scarcity of diagrams; in others, too little descriptive matter accompanies the diagrams submitted. These points are small, but, as the work is intended primarily for students of industrial chemistry, the first suggestion would seem an obvious advantage, while the second would prove a decided help to those whose experience of plant has yet to be obtained. It is remarkable how much information the author has succeeded in compressing into the relatively small space of sixteen chapters and two hundred and twenty-one pages. That he has carried out a very creditable piece of work there can be no doubt."

+ — Nature 126:sup522 O 4 '30 250w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:10 Ja '30

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:68 O '30

St Louis 28:138 My '30

AUERBACH, JOSEPH SMITH. Indictment of prohibition. 94p $1 Harper

351.761 Prohibition 30-23812

Writing from the lawyer's point of view, Mr Auerbach suggests as a remedy for present conditions, with regard to prohibition, an immediate modification of the Volstead act which would enable the states themselves to enforce prohibition or not, as they desired; and continuation of the effort ultimately to repeal the Eighteenth amendment.

Reviewed by Lisle Bell

Books p14 N 2 '30 280w

Reviewed by James Rorty

New Repub 65:226 Ja 7 '31 230w

"Every organization devoted to fighting prohibition should close its doors long enough for those in charge to read this book, perhaps two or three times. . . The book is small, less than a hundred pages. It is unanswerable and solid." Clarence Darrow

+ N Y Evening Post p4d O 25 '30 1000w

"Mr. Auerbach's contribution to the controversy is on the legalistic side and is not concerned with methods or results, a side on which, as a prominent lawyer who has argued prohibition cases before the Supreme and lower courts, he is expertly qualified to speak."

+ N Y Times p28 S 21 '30 400w

St Louis 28:288 D '30

AUGUR, HELEN. An American Jezebel; the life of Anne Hutchinson. 320p il $3.50 Brentano's

B or 92 Hutchinson, Mrs Anne (Marbury) 30-6384

A biography, in the modern manner, of Anne Hutchinson, a pioneer American feminist. Born in England about 1590, Mrs Hutchinson came to the Massachusetts Bay Colony in 1634, where her keen intelligence brought her into trouble. She was persecuted for preaching tolerance and freedom and banished from the colony.

Reviewed by John Chamberlain

Bookm 71:224 Ap '30 230w

AUGUR, HELEN—Continued

"It is an extremely good book. It does exhibit the faults of its kind. In the interests of drama Miss Augur makes John Winthrop too much the villain, Sir Harry Vane the handsome young hero and John Cotton the wavering, timid supporter. Probably she reconstructs too fancifully Anne's various states of mind under persecution. But in the main she has done a fine piece of work." H. F. Whicher
+ — Books p18 Ap 27 '30 200w

"Here is the work of the novelist, not the biographer. But 'An American Jezebel' marches at a swift pace and the central figure is limned with a fresh and enthusiastic touch." S. L. C.
+ — Boston Transcript p8 Mr 15 '30 400w

"It would be a great thing if every clergyman in the United States who is threatened with success could read this history of the rise and fall of the Rev. John Cotton, M.A. But it should be read trembling, and in full view of a mirror." Paul Hutchinson
+ Christian Century 47:1281 O 22 '30 500w
Cleveland Open Shelf p59 Ap '30

"Miss Augur has told Mrs. Hutchinson's story with great understanding and pity, as well as with appreciation of her gifts as a preacher and as a woman. She has written a stirring book without resorting unduly to fictionizing; she has made of her heroine a thoroughly sympathetic figure, difficult to live with, perhaps, but none the less admirable for that."
+ Nation 130:552 My 7 '30 320w

"Miss Rugg has made an exhaustive inquiry into Anne Hutchinson's life in England. Miss Augur has written a more comprehensive account of the American years of this stormy and spirited woman, who used the energies bred from a divided self to serve the cause of tolerance and justice. . . Miss Augur and Miss Rugg have not attempted a psychological interpretation. They have set her in her time and given her sympathy and admiration, but, happily, nothing more." Louise Bogan
New Repub 62:223 Ap 9 '30 500w
N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 2 '30 100w
Reviewed by Herbert Gorman
N Y Times p10 My 11 '30 750w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:67 O '30

"She writes skilfully, and 'An American Jezebel,' with its discriminating bibliography, somehow conveys the temper of Ann Hutchinson's mind plausibly enough to convince us that the original documents, which Miss Augur has certainly studied with care, would admit such interpretations. If this is not Ann Hutchinson, it is at least a reasonable imaginative portrait of her, and an excellent example of some of the virtues of novelized biography." S. T. Williams
+ Sat R of Lit 7:157 S 27 '30 120w

AULNOY, MARIE CATHERINE JUMELLE DE BERNEVILLE, comtesse d'. Travels into Spain; tr. in the year of its publication from Relation du voyage d'Espagne (1691) and now pub. with an introd. and notes by R. Foulché-Delbosc. (Argonaut ser.) 532p il $4 McBride [21s Routledge]

914.6 Spain—Description and travel
[30-29380]

"Of all literary fakes this is surely the most impudent, ingenious and successful. The comtesse D'Aulnoy, author of the famous fairy tales in the manner of Perrault, so far as can be discovered was never in Spain; and her accounts of the country and of the Court were gathered from many contemporary sources, whole passages being coolly lifted from published memoirs and letters of her time. Something, no doubt, she gathered from personal gossip; but her observation at the closest was at second hand. The descriptions of scenery and architecture have an air of reality, and are dropped in, whencesoever their source, as the right background for the narrative in hand. Madame D'Aulnoy meets many men and women of high rank, visits the Queen Mother, talks with the King, Charles II, and is in Madrid when he welcomes his French bride. The gossip of the Court and the costume, customs and social trappings of the time are given us in most engaging detail."—Sat R

"Madame d'Aulnoy's Travels must always remain a valuable contribution to Spanish history, and its first-hand impressionism makes it more readable than almost any modern book of travel. In addition to the copious notes there are several illustrations and an excellent index." G. H. S.
+ Boston Transcript p5 O 11 '30 420w

"The English version of 1691 is exactly what one has learned to expect of translations dating from the late seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries; it is clumsy, ungrammatical, exhausting to read. Her occasional longueurs seem longer than ever, the wit has evaporated, and the prose is utterly unrhythmical. But her stories, her scandals, her noble company and surprising adventures survive; and there is also M. Foulché-Delbosc's admirable essay, none too well translated either. He destroys Madame d'Aulnoy's imposing erection so gracefully, brick by brick, that one cannot but enjoy the process."
+ — New Statesman 35:supxx My 10 '30 800w

"Despite its factual falseness, it is intellectually and emotionally the real thing. Madame D'Aulnoy remained in France, but her mind assuredly travelled into Spain. She read and listened and memorized, no doubt; but she understood, and sympathized, and felt. The experiences of others she made her own. . . Fake it may be; yet who can wonder that those who come under its spell overlook its inventions, its blunders and its thefts? For here we have a country and a people and a civilization, described with something of the careful precision of a field anthropologist, yet in the gay manner of the memoirist and the writer of contes."
+ Sat R 149:426 Ap 5 '30 650w

AUSTIN, ANNE. Avenging parrot. 296p $2 Greenberg
30-4654

"The author of 'The Black Pigeon' offers here another story in which a bird plays a leading part. The parrot belongs to an eccentric old lady who lives in a boarding house. One night she is strangled, the parrot being the only witness to the crime. A young detective who has been assigned to the case tries to make the parrot talk, but the only significant words that the bird utters are 'bad penny.' With this slender clue he proceeds with his investigation and eventually apprehends the murderer."—N Y Times

"'The Avenging Parrot' deserves most of the adjectives applicable to mystery tales. A literate work, warranted to entertain the judicious for a full evening." Will Cuppy
+ Books p14 Mr 2 '30 180w
Boston Transcript p3 Ap 12 '30 280w

"It is an ingenious yarn—only a trifle less so than 'The Black Pigeon.'"
+ N Y Times p23 Mr 9 '30 160w

"A good yarn that sticks to the point and gives you a fair chance to pick your own candidate for the noose. A couple of supplementary stranglings add interest." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 154:547 Ap 2 '30 80w

"A thrilling and absorbing story."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e S 21 '30 180w

AUSTIN, ANNE. Murder backstairs. 302p $2 Macmillan [7s 6d Skeffington]
30-12377

Bonnie Dundee, detective, was not enjoying very much the Berkeley party to which he had been invited. He had premonitions—after hearing that Clorinda Berkeley's proposed fiancé was a certain Seymour Crosby—that things were not as they should be. And the next morning the murdered body of a pretty maid was found at the bottom of the Berkeley estate's swimming pool. Dundee's heaviest clue in connection with the case is the odor of fleur d'amour, a perfume with which the house-party guests had been lavishly sprinkled by Gigi, the mischievous but charming young Berkeley daughter.

Bookm 71:xvii Jl '30 100w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p12 Je 8 '30 180w

"Anne Austin understands the art of keeping her readers in suspense without resorting to any such unfair tricks as holding back vital evidence."
+ N Y Times p24 My 18 '30 200w

"We wouldn't have blamed any member of the cast for having killed any other member, for they're all, including Bonnie Dundee, the detective, cheap and incredible people. A fairly good plot, spoiled by complete lack of restraint and dignity in the telling." W. R. Brooks
— Outlook 155:69 My 14 '30 120w

"You will have to read a great many detective stories to find a plot as ingenious and skilfully worked out as this one. As the story unfolds itself, each incident is plausible and logical. There is not one unexplained event nor one loose thread hanging around at the end, and in this day of so much careless writing in detective stories this is certainly a distinct relief." R. I. Center
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1077 My 24 '30 350w
Springf'd Republican p7e S 21 '30 100w

AUSTIN, MRS MARY (HUNTER). American rhythm, studies and reëxpressions of Amerindian songs. new and enl ed 174p $2.50 Houghton

811 Rhythm. Indians of North America—Poetry 30-6268

The introduction to this collection of Amerindian songs, lyrics, magic formulas and tribal lays, translated and arranged by Mary Austin, contains a critical essay explanatory of the rhythmic effects in the American Indian tribal dances, and the development of verse forms from this primitive poetic beginning. This is a new and enlarged edition of a book first published in 1923.

Booklist 26:321 My '30

"The introductory essay, perhaps the most valuable portion of the work, has been added to, and the Indian songs, poems and recitations have been improved. The points that she makes are well taken and the examples of Indian poetry that she includes in the anthology division of her book are more than ordinarily interesting. This is a work that deserves a continual circulation, for it taps an aspect of expression that belongs only to the United States, an aspect, too, that is fast becoming no more than a part of our history."
+ N Y Times p18 Mr 30 '30 170w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks
N Y World p11m Mr 16 '30 160w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:17 My '30 50w

AUTOLYCUS, pseud. See Bacon, L.

AVERY, C. LOUISE. Early American silver. (Century lib. of Am. antiques) 378p il $4 Century

739 Silverware 30-30325

A survey of the whole field of American silverware during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, written for those more or less familiar with the subject. The subject is treated both as to its geographical and chronological development, and there are chapters on early silversmiths, their methods of work, and on the evolution of form and design. Author is (1930) assistant curator of the department of decorative arts, at the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

Booklist 27:194 Ja '31
N Y Times p38 N 16 '30 200w

"Ought to be a godsend to collectors. It is rich with information. The research must have been immense; it stretched all over the Eastern seaboard. This is the best of the books on antiques this year." Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 D 22 '30 120w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 156:509 N 26 '30 30w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:16 D '30 40w

AXTELL, MRS LUELLA E. Grow thin on good [2] food. 336p il $2 Funk

613.2 Diet. Corpulence. Food. Menus 30-24445

A plan for reducing without starvation is offered by Dr Axtell. Foods are analyzed according to their total-calory and protein-calory content. A large part of the book is given over to healthful reducing menus and original recipes, and suggestions as to exercise in cooperation with diet reform are added.

Booklist 27:190 Ja '31

Reviewed by Lettie Gay
Books p10 D 28 '30 120w

"A woman physician, who knows the difficulties of weight reduction from personal experience as well as from her practice, develops in lively style a 'slow but sure' system of reducing. The book includes ingenious 'low-calory' recipes."
+ J Home Econ 22:926 N '30 80w
St Louis 28:263 N '30

B

BABBITT, HAROLD EATON, and DOLAND, JAMES JOSEPH. Water supply engineering. 776p il $6 McGraw

628.1 Water-supply engineering 29-24326

"This college text-book dealing with fundamentals and practical procedure makes no pretense of treating each branch of the subject exhaustively. A discussion of finances is followed by chapters on hydraulics, rainfall and run-off, water consumption, ground water, wells, dams, intakes and aqueducts, power (including electricity), pumps, distribution systems, sanitation, and quality purification of water. Authors are Professors of Sanitary Engineering in the University of Illinois."—N Y New Tech Bks

"This up-to-date textbook has been prepared in such a way as to combine both fundamentals and practical procedure. The limitations of space and cost have, of course, prevented exhaustive treatment of each subject, but sufficient is given to fulfil the purpose of the volume. It is believed that the readers will be struck particularly with the logical arrangement of the subject matter." A. P. Miller
+ Am J Pub Health 20:104 Ja '30 200w
Booklist 26:224 Mr '30
N Y New Tech Bks 15:11 Ja '30
Pratt p18 spring '30
St Louis 28:41 F '30

BABCOCK, DONALD C. Man and social achievement; an introd. to social evolution. (Longmans' social science ser.) 546p $3 (12s 6d) Longmans

301 Sociology. Civilization. Progress 29-12201

A textbook on social and cultural evolution, by the head of the department of history at the University of New Hampshire. The author discusses the early development of man, the beginnings of language, the organization of man's domain and household, the development of the family and other social institutions, and finally the achievements of trade and the arts.

BABCOCK, D. C.—Continued
Am J Soc 35:346 S '29 100w

"For a book dealing with social evolution, the work lacks at least two main divisions: first, a treatment of the process by which men create social forms; and second, a discussion of the various types of social integration. . . On the other hand, no book of a similar type is known to the present reviewer which so ably describes the significance of the specialization of social types, particularly the sailor and the tradesman. In the main, the book is adequate to its purpose and written at the level of those who are to study it." R. E. Turner
+ — Ann Am Acad 147:221 Ja '30 250w

"Out of a mass of materials being published in the field of anthropology it is refreshing to find a book of 500 pages with such comprehensive prospective, clearness of style, and decisiveness of touch as this work. . . The one regrettable feature in this book, with its seriousness of purpose, fine taste in arrangement, incisiveness and penetration, is the attempt to popularize the chapter-headings. In many cases they give no clue to the chapter contents, are misleading, detract from the clearness of the author's presentation and simplify nothing. This defect, if it is such, should not however blind one to the value of the book. The conundrum-foolishness ceases so abruptly with the chapter headings that one wonders if they were put in by the author's friend in a playful mood. The collection and interpretation of the material itself is one of the most painstaking, most comprehensive and scientific in the field." C. W. Coulter
— Christian Century 47:870 Jl 9 '30 920w
St Louis 28:4 Ja '30

BABSON, ROGER WARD. Investment fundamentals. 338p $3 (12s 6d) Harper
332.6 Investments 30-19081

"This book by one of the most eminent and successful investment advisors in the country, sets forth in simple form for the general reader, the various methods by which money can be saved and invested; it discusses the sources of information about investment trends and offers a definite working plan for a permanent investment policy."—Publisher's note

Booklist 27:11 S '30

"The same difficulty has beset Mr. Babson that has been encountered by every one who has attempted to cover the entire scope of the financial problems of the individual within the covers of a normal sized volume. The thing, even with the greatest care and selectivity, can at best be done but sketchily. . . Mr. Babson has much to say that will help the uninitiated in finance. However, in his effort to attain compactness and comprehensiveness, he has fallen all too easily into dogmatism and sermonizing." E. H. Collins
+ — Books p13 Ag 3 '30 1050w

"A sane, well-balanced explanation of how to invest your money to obtain safety and a fair return. Roger W. Babson has been at this game a long time, and his advice, in recent months, has been more right than wrong. For that reason his book is valuable." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p11 Jl 2 '30 580w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:80 N '30
St Louis 28:206 S '30

BACHELLER, IRVING ADDISON. Candle in the wilderness; a tale of the beginning of New England. 318p $2 Bobbs
30-12987

A story of romance and adventure, the scene of which is laid in New England in or near the year 1634.

Booklist 26:396 Jl '30

"The author has come to his subject with a fresh and scholarly enthusiasm, a precision in detail that many books of the period have lacked; he has gathered a great store of picturesque material, and from it he has pieced a colorful mosaic and built a tale." R. B. Sanborn
+ Books p4 Ag 3 '30 520w

"Mr. Bacheller presents a vivid picture of early Colonial days. He has read widely and delved deeply into contemporary sources and he has found much that is new and picturesque for his background. To read this book is to live again through the hardships and adversities of the early Colonial days and to appreciate in part the struggle made by the first settlers for a livelihood." L. E. S.
+ Boston Transcript p3 My 14 '30 500w
Cleveland Open Shelf p110 Jl '30
N Y Times p8 My 18 '30 450w
Outlook 155:308 Je 25 '30 80w
Pratt p37 autumn '30

"An excellent historical novel. Not content with the slap-dash methods of so many of our chroniclers, this writer has fortified himself with an elaborate background of original sources—listed in a final author's note. His local color is authoritative. . . Mr. Bacheller displays an intimate knowledge of Indian ways and customs, frankly obtained from historical research. The love story is sustained and deftly handled."
+ R of Rs 81:14 Je '30 180w

"While the book lacks the spontaneity of Mr. Bacheller at his best, and smells a good deal of the lamp, it is full of genuinely accurate and informing historical material."
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:91 Ag 30 '30 350w
Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 13 '30 450w

BACON, BENJAMIN WISNER. Studies in Matthew. 533p $5 Holt [18s Constable]
226.2 Bible. New Testament. Matthew
30-18287

A scholarly exposition of the Gospel of Matthew by a biblical authority who has already published critical studies of Mark and Luke. A further study of the Gospel according to John is forthcoming.

"Serious students of the documents will find these 500 pages of solid erudition deserving of their careful attention. The new translations are especially important."
+ Christian Century 47:1355 N 5 '30 130w

"A monumental work of learning, which for many years to come will probably remain a standard for scholars. The author's main conclusions [are] expounded by a wealth of historical learning and critical acumen, the whole accompanied by an original translation of the entire Gospel and a detailed examination of the five books into which the document is divided." S. L. Tyson
+ Churchman p15 S 20 '30 1100w

"It is intended for the student rather than for the average reader but it makes available the ripe scholarship of this well known authority in this field." E. B. Chaffee
+ Outlook 156:350 O 29 '30 100w

BACON, LEONARD (AUTOLYCUS, pseud.). Lost buffalo, and other poems. 129p $2 Harper
811 30-6079

The title poem, a narrative written in rhymed stanzas, is a satire on the passing of the old Southwest under the corruptive onslaught of modern civilization. A number of sonnets on a variety of matters, written for the most part in a humorously ironic vein, complete the volume.

Booklist 27:98 N '30

"Except for the verse structure, the story might pass as prose, since the author has somehow failed to capture the abundant poetry of the situation. The lack may be due to his insistent and not always happy pleasantries, but I think it is more probably the fault of an essentially shallow conception. . . One of the main flaws in Mr. Bacon's work is that practically all the emotion that his verse contains is centered in his personal history." Babette Deutsch

— + Books p12 Je 22 '30 500w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 21 '30 550w

"Leonard Bacon can tell a rattling good story in expertly written verse, and he has told another one in 'Lost Buffalo.'" E. L. Walton

+ Nation 130:491 Ap 23 '30 250w

"If you are willing to ignore Mr. Bacon's by no means casual opinions, you will find his long narrative poem, 'Lost Buffalo,' a rattling good yarn. It is written in the form that Byron used so effectively in 'Don Juan,' the famous ottava rima, the best vehicle in English for vigorous, pungent satire. It is impossible for Mr. Bacon to be dull." Horace Gregory

+ — N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 15 '30 350w.

N Y Times p18 Ap 27 '30 350w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks

N Y World p11m Mr 16 '30 500w

"Bacon is facile and expert, well satisfied with his satire and his mind thoroughly made up on all subjects. There is not a trace of poetry in his book, although the narrative is good story telling." L. T. Nicholl

Outlook 154:549 Ap 2 '30 80w

Reviewed by B. Ten E. James

Poetry 37:163 D '30 280w

"This is a good book, not a patent-medicine. It is honestly and skilfully written by a craftsman—and a craftsman who has little to learn in the field of satiric, narrative verse. There is a good deal of narrative verse being written these days, and a good deal of satire—but few practitioners can combine the two with the deftness and sting of Mr. Bacon at his best." S. V. Benét

+ Sat R of Lit 7:36 Ag 9 '30 1000w

BAEDEKER, KARL, firm, publishers, Leipzig. Northern Italy, incl. Ravenna, Florence, and Pisa; handbook for travellers. 15th rev ed 786p $6 Scribner [16s Allen, G.]

914.5 Italy—Description and travel 30-26394

"The North Italian volume, owing to the length of time which has elapsed since the appearance of the last edition, and the territorial changes which have resulted from the Great War, has had to be completely rewritten. The new Italian names, which are given in the text after the older German ones, have in the last year or so completely superseded them in official use, and not merely at the railway stations (p 25). Adequate accounts of the battlefields are given, and the positions of the various British war cemeteries are indicated." —Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 26:321 My '30

"It is up to the high standard of Baedeker's."

+ Nation and Ath 46:744 Mr 1 '30 100w

Times [London] Lit Sup p734 S 18 '30 200w

BAERLEIN, HENRY PHILIP BERNARD. [2] Dreamy rivers. 256p $2.50 Simon & Schuster

914.37 Czechoslovak Republic

Adventures of a traveller in Czechoslovakia, told in a charmingly informal narrative style. Mr Baerlein writes about all the interesting little things that happened during his rambles in and out of villages, towns and countryside, the people he meets, and the talks he has with them about their country and their customs.

Boston Transcript p1 D 27 '30 800w

"By his own peculiar methods, Mr. Baerlein has accumulated a body of experience which it would be difficult to duplicate."

+ N Y Times p13 D 28 '30 550w

"It's not the real Czecho-Slovakia he pictures, and yet it is the true one. You will understand it better for having read his book, just as you understand Germany better if you read its fairy tales. . . Read Baerlein if you care for distinctive and beautifully written prose." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 156:668 D 24 '30 220w

BAERNREITHER, JOSEPH MARIA. Fragments of a political diary; ed. and introd. by Joseph Redlich. 322p $5 (16s) Macmillan

943.6 Austria—Politics and government. Austria—Foreign relations [30-21291]

"Baernreither, who was for years actively engaged in the political life of the [Hapsburg] monarchy, was more than a professional politician. He was, in fact, one of the keenest, best informed and most thoughtful men of the old régime. . . Recognized in Vienna as an authority on Yugoslav problems, Baernreither counted among his friends and acquaintances many of the highest officials of the government, including men like the Archduke Francis Ferdinand, Aehrenthal and Berchtold. He was decidedly in the know in regard to what was going on, and has much to say about the annexation crisis of 1908-'09, the famous Friedjung case, through which Masaryk rose to international prominence, and, above all, about the critical years which led to the Balkan wars and the world conflagration."—Books

"The present volume is only part of the extensive diary which Baernreither kept over a long period of years, but it is probably the most important part, for it deals almost exclusively with the Southern Slav problem, which the writer correctly estimated to be one of life and death for the monarchy, and to which he devoted his untiring attention. There is nothing startlingly new about his notes on this period, but the diary contains very interesting and illuminating sidelights on the leading characters and their policies. Even more important are the chapters that deal with Baernreither's efforts to effect a settlement of the economic difficulties between Austria and Serbia and his attempt to bring Aehrenthal and Milovanovič to accept a compromise." W. L. Langer

+ Am Hist R 36:155 O '30 850w

Am Pol Sci R 24:784 Ag '30 400w

"There is far too much political detail to make this book of great interest to the general reader and its value is largely restricted to the student of European diplomacy."

Bookm 71:563 Ag '30 230w

"Those who have devoted some time and attention to the much debated matter of war origins, especially as it affected the Hapsburg monarchy, will find much that is instructive and important in these fragments of the extensive diary kept by Joseph Baernreither over a period of some twenty years preceding the breaking of the storm." W. L. Langer

+ Books p2 Je 15 '30 1300w

Reviewed by Jonathan Scott

Current Hist 32:822 Jl '30 650w

Reviewed by K. M. Moir

Nation and Ath 48:21 O 4 '30 250w

St Louis 28:219 S '30

Sat R 149:459 Ap 12 '30 700w

Spec 144:709 Ap 26 '30 300w

"These fragments contain a great deal of interest. They have been carefully edited and arranged by the author's friend, Dr. Redlich, the well-known Austrian politician and historian, so that they form a running commentary on Austria's Balkan policy from 1908 to 1914. Dr. Redlich also contributes a biographical sketch of Dr. Baernreither."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p307 Ap 10 '30 1000w

BAGNANI, GILBERT. Roman Campagna and its treasures. 320p pl $3.50 Scribner [10s 6d Methuen]

914.56 Campagna di Roma 30-2521

A guide to the large plain surrounding Rome, in antiquity highly cultivated and covered with villas and palaces, then for centuries desolate and malarious and now once more cultivated and reviving. Signor Bagnani has covered this territory in a manner most practical for the tourist, arranging his book according to the great roads that lead out of Rome and describing the historical sites, buildings and ruins.

BAGNANI, GILBERT—Continued

"While not set forth as a treatise on the history or topography of the Campagna, it is thorough enough for any one save a chronic archeologist. Many of these stories can be accomplished in half a day; they afford the traveler an invaluable perspective on Roman life which he cannot obtain by sticking to the Forum, the cathedrals and museums."
+ Books p16 My 25 '30 150w

"No matter which of the white roads leading from the Eternal City the visitor desires to traverse, the author directs his way. Each historical site is clearly described. Each ruin is given its requisite data. From Virgil's country onward, every plot of ground is treated for its proper worth to the sightseer. As a comprehensive guide book to the section, it is probably without an equal."
+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 4 '30 180w
St Louis 28:216 S '30

"As far as we have tested his statements, they are in accordance with the latest authorities, and in his notes he refers to books which treat more fully of the history of each place. His book will be useful to all visitors to Rome who have a few days to spare."
+ Sat R 148:79 Jl 20 '29 180w
Spec 143:259 Ag 24 '29 130w

"Mr. Bagnani has provided (compressed marvellously into his three hundred odd pages) the historical background which alone will enable the traveller to appreciate the Campagna at its real worth."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p885 N 7 '29 380w

BAGNANI, GILBERT. Rome and the papacy. 259p il $3 Crowell [8s 6d Methuen]
282 Roman Catholic Church—History. Papacy. Church and state in Italy [30-11055]

An essay in which the author traces the development of the papacy, candidly outlines its relations to the Roman empire and the states that succeeded to the Carolingian empire, and discusses the contemporary position of the Catholic church since the recent Lateran treaty.

"In general the account here given of the tortuous earthly process is not likely to rouse much dissent. The exposition is enlivened by pungent and confident opinions as to the wisdom or unwisdom of statesmen and ecclesiastics involved in the historical situations, with some tart comments on present affairs, as when he illustrated the failure of the lay state by the strife and intolerance existing in 'the agnostic United States'." F. A. Christie
+ Am Hist R 36:188 O '30 350w

Reviewed by W. L. Sullivan
Books p15 Jl 6 '30 400w

Reviewed by W. E. Garrison
Christian Century 47:722 Je 4 '30 900w

Reviewed by Walter Littlefield
Current Hist 33:xvii N '30 600w

Reviewed by I. W. Raymond
Hist Outlook 21:397 D '30 280w

"The author has something of the scintillating wit of Chesterton, whom he far surpasses in information. His distinction of style is achieved, not as in Chesterton's case by exploitation of the method of paradox, but by sheer condensation and force of thought. The book will probably prove more popular than influential; nor is it at all certain that its influence will prove favorable to the papacy, of which Signor Bagnani claims to be a loyal and believing subject." J. T. McNeill
+ J Religion 10:447 Jl '30 850w
New Statesman 34:422 Ja 4 '30 550w

Reviewed by Walter Littlefield
N Y Times p3 Ag 17 '30 750w
St Louis 28:203 S '30

"The book is rightly called an 'essay,' and sometimes it has all the superficiality which that convenient word may excuse; at other times, especially when he is near the heart of his subject, there are passages of profound observation. His judgments are a curious mixture of shrewdness and simplicity, with a tendency to be just in both forms."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p10 Ja 2 '30 1200w

BAILEY, ALBERT EDWARD. Call of the Rio Bravo. 283p il $2 Little 30-25160

A story of the adventures of two young men, an American and a Swiss, in the jungles of Brazil. For older boys.

"Mr. Bailey's book has to do with that coast country Brazil which is in process of commercialization, the Sao Paulo Province. . . Mr. Bailey has worked well, keeping a sharp eye on things as they were, keeping close, too, to common, everyday life." C. J. Finger
+ Books p9 N 16 '30 380w

"A book full of thrills and excitement which are tempered by the clear-headed courage and bantering good humor of two young men in central Brazil. Older boys and young men will enjoy this book." M. W.
+ Library J 55:924 N 15 '30 80w

"This is not only a good story which older boys will read with enthusiasm; it is a clear, true flash on a most interesting background, one comparatively new in fiction. Mr. Bailey knows his Brazilian river, the timber, grass, and jungle along its banks; and he knows the several types of Latin-Americans who help to push his story forward. Either he has lived for a time the life of his young hero, Edward Morrell, whose natural and dramatic adventures make the story; or he is imaginative and sensitive enough to convert research into breathing reality." C. L. Skinner
+ Sat R of Lit 7:341 N 15 '30 480w

BAILEY, GEORGE RYLAND. Red Mesabi. 316p $2 Houghton
30-8902

A story of love and adventure in the Mesaba iron country in Minnesota, involving two rival iron mines, forest fires, several strong men, a beautiful heroine and a successful hero.

Booklist 26:396 Jl '30
N Y Times p31 Mr 23 '30 220w

BAILEY, HENRY CHRISTOPHER. Garston murder case (Eng title: Garstons). 293p $1 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Methuen]
30-25379

Tony Wisberry suspects that the formula discovered by his father several years previous had been stolen by the Garston steel firm, and that his father's disappearance had been due to foul play on the part of Lord Garston. The family solicitor, Joshua Clunk, hums his favorite hymns as he investigates the matter. The mystery of the whole affair centers at Bradstock Abbey, an ancient monastery owned by the Garstons.

"Mr. Bailey has created a new and fairly satisfactory criminologist to take the place of his Mr. Fortune. . . The several murders, disguises, etc., are the sort a reader may believe with little or no effort, and Clunk's summing up is a masterpiece of elucidation." Will Cuppy
+ Books p18 O 5 '30 100w

"In spite of his new detective Mr. Bailey has not written a first-class story. The murder comes after explanations and actions so slow-moving that only an enthusiastic reader can wade through them in a happy frame of mind. Even after the murder the action is not rapid; the appearance of Mr. Clunk saves it from vanishing into complete nothingness. But Mr. Clunk would make any detective story worth reading."
— + Boston Transcript p2 O 15 '30 200w

"The story is well told, and is noteworthy for the appearance in it of a solicitor, practising mainly as the legal adviser of rogues, who to the annoyance of the detectives engaged takes an active and mysterious part in the disentangling of the plot. This delightful person with his hymns and his sweets, his gentle manners and his fierce tenacity, is an entertaining invention."
+ New Statesman 35:552 Ag 2 '30 180w

Reviewed by Dashiell Hammett
N Y Evening Post p4d O 11 '30 180w

"This is the kind of thriller that defies the reader to lay aside the book unfinished." E. C. Beckwith
+ N Y World p3e O 19 '30 150w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 156:669 D 24 '30 180w

"His enigmatic and whimsical personality is well sustained, and his relations with Superintendent Bell keep the reader's curiosity agog till the end."
+ Spec 145:859 N 29 '30 120w

Times [London] Lit Sup p993 N 20 '30 220w

BAILEY, HENRY TURNER. Yankee notions. 243p $2.50 Washburn & Thomas

814 30-289

"By 'Notions,' Mr. Bailey means convictions, opinions, ideas, and in this little book he brings out twenty of these ideas of whose truth he is firmly convinced and in a chapter devoted to each he becomes its ardent protagonist. His table of contents, with each notion set concisely down, makes an odd, hit-and-miss, patchwork sort of jumble, so varied are the themes. . . Argument and illustration for most of these 'notions' Mr. Bailey takes from the experiences and observations of his own life, so that his book becomes an exposition of factors in a practical philosophy of life with the argument for these twenty points based on reality."—N Y Times

"New Englanders who have made Mr Bailey's acquaintance or who have come to know him through his work in the fields of art and education will find the same genial attitude, the same breadth of view and the ready humor that was the heritage of his New England stock. There are many opinions on many things in these pages—on children, on parents, on schools, on nature, on painting—some amusing, some thought-provoking, some reassuring."
+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 25 '30 160w

Cleveland Open Shelf p76 My '30

N Y Times p20 D 15 '29 250w

St Louis 28:108 Ap '30

"As far as it goes, this book is Dr Bailey's spiritual autobiography, with a good deal of material description for its embodiment. If one prefers, these chapters may be called essays on vital principles of human welfare, illustrated by vivid scenes from the author's own experience as child and parent, student and teacher, artist and citizen. But the author cannily and pithily labels them notions, and good notions they are."
+ Springf'd Republican p12 D 25 '29 270w

BAILEY, TEMPLE. Wild wind. 316p $2 Penn
30-23437

"This is the story of the love of Jacqueline and Christopher and the long years of waiting before these lovers found their peace in each other's possession."—Books

Booklist 27:106 N '30

"A story told with warmth and sympathy and tender understanding of the pains and idealism of youth."
+ Books p14 S 28 '30 270w

"Whatever may be the secret of the popularity of these innocuous, virginal novels, the fact of their popularity is unquestioned. In 'Wild Wind' a decade of celibacy wins its hard-earned reward."
N Y Times p24 S 14 '30 200w

BAILLIE, JOHN. Place of Jesus Christ in modern Christianity. 219p $2 Scribner [7s Clark, T.]

232 Jesus Christ. Christianity 29-16512

"Dr. Baillie brings a trained and reverent mind to the necessary task of putting some of the classic church doctrines concerning the person and power of Christ in a way that will be acceptable to educated, thoughtful, and Christian people to-day."—Churchman

"Professor Baillie's mind is highly stored, he has philosophical grasp and insight, and his critical faculties are not paralyzed the moment he looks upon the Christ. Thus he has the sense to know, and the honesty to confess, that the content of the Christian creeds is 'something very like mythology.' But he believes that this traditional theology has sprung out of deep-set human needs, and reflects profound and permanent convictions of the soul. And he devotes this book to presenting afresh the inner spiritual meaning of the great historic doctrines of the church, and to fashioning from them a modern Christianity. The task is a difficult one, but is exceedingly well done." J. H. Holmes
+ Books p10 D 29 '30 380w

Cleveland Open Shelf p19 F '30

"The temper and the method of Professor Baillie's whole discussion is a hopeful sign that non-Christians will accept Christ as the Way, the Truth, and the Life, when 'Historical Christianity' shall as in the first century be a fellowship of love—a fellowship as between man and man—a fellowship as between God and man. To become acquainted with Professor Baillie through this volume is to meet one who has undeniably reflected purposefully, and writes with refreshing clearness and power." M. G. Evans
+ Crozer Q 6:501 O '29 1500w

J Religion 10:459 Jl '30 150w

Pratt p7 summer '30

St Louis 28:258 N '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p194 Mr 6 '30 140w

BAITSELL, GEORGE ALFRED, ed. Evolution of earth and man, by Lorande Loss Woodruff, George Howard Parker, and others; with a pref. combined and enl ed 476p il $5 Yale univ. press [22s 6d Milford]

575 Evolution. Earth. Man 29-23863

Contains the material, with additions and revisions, originally published in The Evolution of the Earth and its Inhabitants, 1918, and The Evolution of Man, 1922. Contents: The origin of the earth, by J. Barrell; The earth's changing surface and climate, by C. Schuchert; The origin of life, by L. L. Woodruff; The pulse of life, by R. S. Lull; The antiquity of man, by R. S. Lull; The natural history of man, by H. B. Ferris; The evolution of the nervous system of man, by G. H. Parker; The evolution of intelligence, by J. R. Angell; Cultural evolution, by G. G. MacCurdy; Societal evolution, by A. G. Keller; Climate and the evolution of civilization, by E. Huntington; The trend of evolution, by E. G. Conklin; The mechanism of evolution, by W. R. Coe.

Booklist 26:239 Mr '30

"His book is lacking in continuity and completeness and there is no uniformity of style or treatment." H. M. Parshley
— Books p10 Je 15 '30 200w

"As a sweeping view of the present state of national science, this is a splendid volume, but as a statement of the philosophy of nature, it simply substitutes for Mesopotamia the blessed word 'Evolution.'" E. P.
+ — Cath World 130:763 Mr '30 450w

"They constitute as complete and satisfactory statement (within this compass) as can be found of the present state of knowledge respecting the development of animals and man, together with a good brief summary of currently accepted theories as to the formation of the earth." W. E. Garrison

BAITSELL, G. A., ed.—Continued
+ Christian Century 46:1609 D 25 '29 320w

"The book is beautifully and effectively illustrated throughout, and an index of thirty-one pages makes it convenient to look up the discussion of any problem in the theory of evolution that may arise in the reader's mind. 'The Evolution of Earth and Man' is indispensable to any one who desires to obtain a readable survey of the status of evolution, in all its ramifications, at the present time." Maynard Shipley
+ N Y Times p11 Mr 2 '30 600w

Reviewed by E. T. Devine
Outlook 153:671 D 25 '29 120w
St Louis 28:68 Mr '30

"A cooperative work such as this, where so many branches of knowledge are dealt with by specialists, may make hard reading, but it is really the only way in which so wide a field can be at all surveyed. There is in this work no blind, uncritical use of the evolutionary conception, such as, in particular, is often found in 'sociological' discussion. There is throughout, as might be expected when we have specialists writing on their own subjects, a marked caution and restraint."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p34 Ja 16 '30 700w

BAKER, GEORGE PHILIP. Hannibal. 332p il $3.50 Dodd [18s Nash]
B or 92 Hannibal 29-25946
For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:232 Mr '30

"Whatever one may say for Mr. Baker's premises, he argues his conclusions with an adroitness that raises his book to a plane by itself, far above the casual dry-as-dust historical and biographical summaries. Dealing with the scanty and often bloodless materials of Livy and Polybius he makes a first rate case for the human element in this very exciting Old World conflict. He cannot build detailed pictures, but he can and does draw shrewd and accurate inferences in terms interesting and important to men and women today." Eugene Lohrke
+ Books p20 F 16 '30 850w
Cleveland Open Shelf p27 F '30

"Mr. Baker everywhere writes epigrammatic sentences and dips into modern slang; he insists on being picturesque, and his history is rather like dining on anchovy sauce, as Macaulay said of Seneca. He is, however, well equipped; he has studied the various authorities and decides judiciously when they differ."
+ — New Statesman 34:812 Mr 29 '30 650w
St Louis 28:52 F '30

"The present biography is readable from beginning to end, it paints in a background convincingly and without being pedantic, it leaves a gratifying sense of sources investigated and weighed and on the whole of sound judgment rendered. Mr. Baker persists in the irritating practice of using three periods as a regular form of punctuation. It is hard, however, to find fault with a book that gives us in more than readable style and in attractive form the sound biography of a great man."
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:721 F 8 '30 230w

"The book reads easily and well, and is as entertaining as any historical romance."
+ Spec 144:335 Mr 1 '30 200w

"Mr. Baker's style is highly coloured and his language sometimes shows a disconcerting departure from English idiom. But in spite of these blemishes the book has the merit of vigorous and arresting narrative; and its remarks on character and politics, ancient and modern, are often shrewd and suggestive."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p155 F 27 '30 500w

BAKER, GEORGE PIERCE, ed. Yale one-act plays. 204p $2 French
812 30-11596

Six one-act plays selected from those written in playwriting courses at Yale university during the past four years, and produced there on a small experimental stage under the supervision of George P. Baker of the Department of drama. Contents: The mistress; Hans Bulow's last puppet; Immersion; Yella; Minnie Field; "L."

Booklist 27:20 S '30

"'Yale One-Act Plays' is the first collection of work by Professor Baker's students at Yale, carrying on, of course, the series issued from his Workshop at Harvard. There was a certain sentiment and freshness in those earlier plays lacking in the current group." W. P. Eaton
Books p11 Jl 6 '30 130w

"The one really excellent play of the sextet is 'Hans Bulow's Last Puppet.' In this little drama poetry, pathos and whimsy combine to produce a charming comedy fragment."
+ N Y Times p10 Ag 10 '30 550w
St Louis 28:215 S '30

BAKER, MARGARET. Noddy goes a-plowing. unp il $2 Duffield [3s 6d Blackwell]
30-25312

Noddy was a poor but industrious boy who turned the straightest furrow in the Duke's plowing match, and so became official plowman to the Duke of Duckpuddle.

Booklist 27:211 Ja '31

"Perhaps more than any one else writing today Margaret Baker manages to put into her stories a suggestion of the old folktale. There are no descriptions of scene or countryside, yet her tales have the tang of out of doors and the feeling of the seasons." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p11 N 9 '30 120w

"A very winning book; pleasant words and beguiling shadows, they, as old Issaac Walton would say, 'fall in most becomingly.'" A. Van L. Carrick
+ Sat R of Lit 7:330 N 15 '30 230w
Times [London] Lit Sup p982 N 20 '30 100w

BAKER, ROBERT HORACE. Astronomy; an
^{2} introduction. 521p il $3.75 Van Nostrand [16s Macmillan]
520 Astronomy 30-16561

Designed for use as a text in introductory college courses in astronomy. Brought well up to date, with chapters on the galaxies and the constitution of the stars.

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:66 O '30

"Dr. Baker, who is Professor of Astronomy in the University of Illinois, wrote this book primarily with a view to the requirements of his own classes, but, in spite of the arrangement of the material in text-book form, its up-to-date character and the excellence of the illustrations—there are some beautiful photographs of Jupiter among them—make the book a useful addition to the shelves of the general reader who already has some acquaintance with astronomy."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p995 N 20 '30 150w

BAKER, SUZANNE ST BARBE. Wayfarer in Bavaria. (Wayfarer ser.) 218p il $3 Houghton [7s 6d Methuen]
914.33 Bavaria—Description and travel
30-21189

A combination of guide-book and descriptive handbook which conducts the reader thru Munich, Augsburg, Rothenburg, Nürnberg, the royal castles, the episcopal castles, and the Bavarian mountains. A chapter on Oberammergau and the Passion play is included.

Booklist 27:152 D '30

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice
Bookm 71:xiii Ag '30 120w

Books p12 Jl 6 '30 150w

"This descriptive guide-book is almost triumphantly sentimental. Every corner has its old mill, 'the scent of lilac whispers over the old town wall,' and the pages are luxuriously sugared with 'I,' 'you,' 'me,' 'us.' It contains a certain amount of information and some useful titbits of history; there is one inadequate map and a number of illustrations."
— New Statesman 35:162 My 10 '30 50w

Reviewed by Halsey Raines
N Y Times p11 Ag 3 '30 220w

St Louis 28:216 S '30

"With Mrs. Baker's volume in head or hand, there is not much worth seeing in Bavaria that the visitor can miss, and once again we can pay cordial tribute to the usefulness of the Wayfarer Series."
+ Spec 144:718 Ap 26 '30 100w

"After all, Baedeker's method is the best. A mind without historical training and without historical framework can retain few new facts and strange names; and the briefer the summary, as in Baedeker, the more will stick in the memory at the end. A high degree of unselfishness is demanded from the author. He must above all things be self-effacing and study his readers first. It is here that Baedeker excels."
Times [London] Lit Sup p329 Ap 17 '30 200w

BALDERSTON, JOHN LLOYD. Berkeley square. 124p $2 Macmillan [6s 6d Longmans]

812 29-24041

A three-act fantasy based upon the theory of the relativity of time. Peter Standish, living in the America of the present, wishes he could live in eighteenth century England. He is, thereupon, transported back to the rôle of his grandfather in 1784, when as a young man he came to London to court Kate Pettigrew. Peter's strange twentieth century remarks and his even more strange ability to read the future, make everyone fear him, with the exception of Helen, Kate's younger sister, with whom he falls in love. Upon Peter's return to modern life he brings the eternal memory of Helen's love with him. The plot is suggested by Henry James's posthumous fragment "The sense of the past." The author also acknowledges the invaluable assistance of J. C. Squire.

Booklist 26:194 F '30

"An ingenious play, so well constructed that not a little of its romantic charm and curious thrill comes to the reader, even without the theater's dimmed lights and other spells, human and mechanical. . . This play could be a good deal richer than it is if the mounting disgust of the transported twentieth century hero at the crudities and cruelties of the eighteenth century had been more developed and perhaps more satirically set forth. One could spare a bit of the romance to this end. But even as it stands, 'Berkeley Square' is an intelligent, skillful play, excellent to read as well as to witness." W. P. Eaton
Books p20 Ja 12 '30 180w

Cleveland Open Shelf p72 My '30

"An excellently written tour de force about a young gentleman of quality who gets mixed up in his centuries." Edwin Seaver
+ N Y Evening Post p10m D 28 '29 320w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:11 F '30

Pratt p31 spring '30

St Louis 28:215 S '30

"One of those refreshing excursions into the unexpected with which the theatre, even on the printed page, can provide us. The strange mixture of romance and reality which Mr. Balderston conjures up in his Berkeley Square drawing room is almost as delightful in print as on the stage, though certain lapses are perhaps more evident in the written text." Rosamond Gilder
+ Sat R of Lit 6:846 Mr 22 '30 460w

"The stage action is ingenious and effective, adequately illustrating, though hardly exhausting a conception fraught with poetic suggestion and philosophic significance. That an American correspondent in London, even with the aid of Henry James and J. C. Squire, should have conceived and achieved so rare a kind of dramatic expression is an accomplishment on which American journalism may be congratulated."
+ Springf'd Republican p10 Ja 17 '30 330w

"The idea has been used with the utmost ingenuity; it is made to yield an abundance of humour, a tragic romance, and a wealth of satirical comment. In the theatre the visible presence of the actors conceals the flaws in the argument and does much to mitigate the unreality of the passionate motives. But, being read, the play falls loose, the intellect having opportunity to be curious; and, though a great part of the charm and elegance of the piece remains, its tragedy fails to bridge the division between fantastic and sympathetic emotion."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p379 My 9 '29 150w

BALDWIN, FAITH. See Cuthrell, F.

BALFOUR, ARTHUR JAMES BALFOUR, 1st earl of. Retrospect; an unfinished autobiography, 1848-1886 (Eng title: Chapters of autobiography). 245p il $3.50 Houghton [10s 6d Cassell]

B or 92 30-28693

This autobiography of Lord Balfour begun in 1928, two years before his death, when he was nearly eighty, records the story of his youth, his apprenticeship in politics, and his relations with Lord Salisbury, Gladstone, Disraeli, Lord Randolph Churchill, and other great figures of the time down to 1886. The final unfinished chapter is a brief account of his visit to America in 1917.

Booklist 27:203 Ja '31

"'Retrospect,' because of its unfinished character, can hardly be described as an important book. It adds little to one's knowledge of the times in which Mr. Balfour lived and in which he played so important a part. It is, however, a valuable feuilleton on the personality of a very interesting man. In politics we have seen the soldier, the scholar and, of course, the omnipresent lawyer. Of late we have seen the engineer. The philosopher in politics, however, is a rarity who seems like the most formidable of them all." H. C. Lodge
+ Books p18 N 9 '30 850w

"Lord Balfour's Retrospect is, for all its insufficiency, a welcome addition to our knowledge of this most interesting of the later Victorian statesmen. It is unfortunate that as an autobiography it is so far from complete, for it leaves us with an appetite whetted rather than appeased. The result is a book in which there is no proportion but which most fortunately is full of the humor, the clean irony and the sense of gayety which for so long delighted those who were privileged to know him." Angus Fletcher
+ — Current Hist 33:xii Ja '31 1050w

Reviewed by J. L. Hammond
Nation and Ath 48:138 O 25 '30 1600w

"Lord Balfour was a man of so many talents and experiences, and in old age became so mellow and sage, that much was hoped when he was heard to be writing an autobiography. The hope has not been realized, for he began his book too late. What is left is a mere torso—fourteen chapters (some very brief), which he had partially revised, and two more quite in the rough. Moreover, he had obviously kept down the scale of treatment accorded to these first thirty-eight years of his life, in order to allow proper space for the ensuing forty-two.

BALFOUR, A. J. B., 1st earl of.—Continued
Its architecture is that of an ante-chamber to a main room which was never built." R. C. K. Ensor

New Statesman 36:56 O 18 '30 1700w

"The opening pages of this fragmentary retrospect indicate that, even in old age, Lord Balfour had it in him to write one of the greatest of all autobiographies. This opinion, alas, has to be confined strictly to the sinuous yet delicately balanced sentences in which the statesman has sprinkled an ironical egotism on the memories of his boyhood. In the subsequent chapters the style itself loses its magic, while the matter is ordinary." P. W. Wilson

+ — N Y Times p3 D 7 '30 600w

Reviewed by C. G. Bowers
N Y World p3e D 7 '30 650w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 83:18 Ja '31 30w

Reviewed by H. A. L. Fisher
Sat R of Lit 7:411 D 6 '30 1850w

"Those who read this book will most deplore the loss of what he might have given them, for the way in which great political events are recalled and diagnosed is fascinating. The reader seems to be listening to the best of conversation, light and easy, but never undignified or unpolished, acutely critical but never petty."

+ Spec 145:550 O 18 '30 1150w

"That 'Retrospect' is a disappointing book is due in great measure to its incompleteness. Nor does it convey that sense of character in the making that often gives significance to the obscure incidents of a great man's early life. The book is, however, written with considerable charm of style, and it contains many revealing glimpses of outstanding men of the period, chiefly prominent Conservatives like Lord Salisbury or Lord Randolph Churchill. One suspects that this book will be chiefly used by historians, and it is to be hoped that one of them will make it material for the earlier chapters of an interpretative biography of Lord Balfour." H. K.

+ — Springf'd Republican p7e D 28 '30 900w

Times [London] Lit Sup p791 O 9 '30 2500w

BALLARD, COLIN ROBERT. Kitchener. 341p $3.50 Dodd [18s Faber]

B or 92 Kitchener, Horatio Herbert Kitchener, earl
30-29128

A straightforward biography of Lord Kitchener by an experienced soldier, who is able to evaluate the military achievements of his subject. The author studies Kitchener with regard to his services in Egypt and the Sudan, the reëstablishment of British supremacy in Khartoum, the Boer war, India, and the British army during the first two years of the World war.

Booklist 27:154 D '30

Reviewed by Edmund Noble
Boston Transcript p3 O 25 '30 2250w

"The author of this book, though evidently a sincere admirer of Lord Kitchener, has not allowed his enthusiasm to blind his eyes to the faults and limitations of his subject, and the result is what strikes one as a true and unbiased appreciation of a very remarkable personality."

+ Nation and Ath 47:178 My 10 '30 720w

"General Ballard does not profess to reveal 'the real Kitchener.' Indeed, he does not attempt the task. But he has, in most competent and soldierly fashion, written a biography wherein is included the raw materials from which each reader may construct his own Kitchener; and in the process he has provided some of the best published accounts of the Egyptian campaign and the Boer War."

+ New Statesman 35:220 My 24 '30 650w

"The best part of the book is that which deals with Kitchener's earlier years. Throughout it all one can see the despot, the silent, unswerving character being formed; the man easily offended yet never hesitating to offend." F. L. Minnigerode

+ N Y Times p10 D 28 '30 1050w

St Louis 28:272 N '30

Reviewed by R. G. Burton
Sat R 149:486 Ap 19 '30 1000w

"General Ballard is no 'official' biographer and does not refrain from criticism, but in painting the shades as well as the lights of his subject, the character of Kitchener stands out with an austere grandeur that was perhaps somewhat lacking in Sir George Arthur's full Life."

+ Spec 144:746 My 3 '30 360w

"General Ballard has gone 'to the Officers' Mess and Club Smoke-room' for 'facts and conjectures.' He does not seem to have elicited very much that is not already available in print, and has sometimes been misled. The book provides a fair summary of the times in which Lord Kitchener lived and his activities—except that the period 1909-14 is passed over in a few lines—but is a very incomplete picture of the man himself."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p415 My 15 '30 230w

BAMBERGER, MRS HELEN R. (HELEN BERGER, pseud.). Golden key. 304p $2 Dial press
30-6435

The scene is laid in Washington, D.C. and San Francisco. It is the story of a girl's search for the golden key of life, which she thought might be money or success, but which in the end proved to be love.

"Pleasant though unexciting fiction."
Books p11 Jl 6 '30 150w

Boston Transcript p2 Ap 30 '30 280w

"A clean, sentimental love story in which love proves to be the only 'golden key,' this book will undoubtedly appeal to the followers of Temple Bailey and similar writers. The action is rapid and the story interestingly told, though in an annoyingly adolescent manner."

+ — N Y Times p24 Mr 30 '30 200w

BAMBERGER, MRS HELEN R. (HELEN BERGER, pseud.). Mystery of World's end. 226p il $2 Longmans
30-19723

A mystery story for boys and girls, with a Hawaiian background.

"Few readers will fail to get the peculiar appeal and power of this story of young adventure. It is a story capable of giving readers many sensations and reactions. There are few dull pages."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 6 '30 180w

"The mystery is a bit too obvious and the incidents which go to build it up are somewhat artificial. Both boys and girls will enjoy reading the book, but there is little of lasting value about it." L. H.

+ — Library J 55:925 N 15 '30 50w

"We do not get enough of the Hawaiian background, which serves, as the author handles it, only to pique our interest, so lightly is it sketched in. A little more emphasis on this side and this book would be a real achievement, but just as it stands it is very delightful. An interesting opportunity for more extensive illustration, however, was not seized." M. C. Dodd

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:207 O 11 '30 150w

Spec 145:sup897 D 6 '30 40w

BAMBERGER, RAYMOND S., and BAMBERGER, MRS HELEN R. (THE ARESBYS, pseud.). Murder at Red Pass. 300p $2 Washburn

"Hawaii with its alluring tropical background lends itself perfectly to mystery. A motion-picture group there on location is thrown into a panic at the disappearance of the director. James Dorsey and Peter Carey take a hand and learn that what was intended as a publicity stunt has turned out to be a murder. As the story unfolds, suspicion travels from one member of the Hollywood group to another. Peter digs out the unpleasant truth, after a second murder, and is horrified."—Bookm

"The climax is totally unexpected and shows exceptional ingenuity."

+ Bookm 72:xxv O '30 100w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p36 D 7 '30 150w

"Well written, exciting, and logical in all respects but the psychological. The climax is especially ingenious, and should puzzle the most expert detective story enthusiasts. Where the Aresbys have succeeded especially well is in their meticulous care to make each succeeding piece of evidence seem natural, however fortuitous its discovery may have been. They have written an excellent detective story."

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 18 '30 150w

Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith

N Y World p3e O 19 '30 80w

Reviewed by W. C. Weber

Sat R of Lit 7:230 O 11 '30 80w

BANGS, JOHN ROBERT, jr. Industrial accounting for executives. (McGraw-Hill industrial management ser.) 449p il $5 McGraw

657 Factories—Accounting. Manufactures—Costs 30-13432

A treatise on industrial accounting for executives, based on a course given at Cornell University and making use of a diagrammatic ledger plan. Written primarily for students of industrial engineering and for men in actual industrial positions.

"This volume should have been named Industrial Accounting for Engineers. In style it reminds one of Church's Manufacturing Costs and Accounts. I should recommend it as a text only in schools giving a thorough course in accounting to engineers. The book would also be useful to instructors for its numerous diagrammatic illustrations which are excellent, even though it would seem that a few are too intricate for the beginner. The reader interested in an accounting work more suitable to a typical executive should examine The Successful Control of Profits by Rautenstrauch." David Himmelblau

Am Econ R 20:507 S '30 120w

Booklist 27:142 D '30

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:68 O '30

BANKS, POLAN. Gentleman from America. 439p $2.50 Cape

30-22761

A romance based upon the story of the Franklins in France—grandfather Benjamin, and Temple Franklin, illegitimate son of Franklin's natural son. Young Temple, in Paris, falls in love with Blanchette Caillot, a charming young matron. He becomes her lover, and a son—the third illegitimate Franklin—is born. The story unfolds against the romantic background of France just before the Revolution.

"Mr. Banks's romantic story, while written in a somewhat stilted and stylized fashion which constantly reminds you that he is stringing together a series of facts from his prolonged researches, nevertheless holds your attention firmly by its charm of a vanished pomp and vanished figures, its curious details of living and attitudes of thought, and a certain undertone of gracious sympathy."

+ — Books p22 S 28 '30 450w

"The book has two good things in it: 'Advice to a Young Man' and 'The Speech of Polly Baker'—both by Benjamin Franklin." T. S. Matthews

New Repub 64:213 O 8 '30 120w

"Historically, 'The Gentleman from America' is an unusually interesting tale. The material was made to hand, and Mr. Banks has built up, for the background of the romance, a lively and vivid picture of French society in the eighteenth century. Viewing the book simply as a novel, it is difficult to accord him the same measure of success."

+ — N Y Times p7 Ag 31 '30 550w

BANNING, MRS MARGARET (CULKIN). Prelude to love. 278p $2 Harper [7s 6d Mills & Boon]

30-5539

A young girl from the Middle West is plunged for a week into the swiftly moving life of wealthy Long Island society. The crashing of her ideals leaves her defenseless for a time, but the tragic end of her brother's marriage has a steadying effect on her, and in time she is prepared to love and marry a man she had once refused.

Books p10 My 4 '30 170w

Cleveland Open Shelf p77 My '30

N Y Evening Post p8m Je 14 '30 230w

"As an evening's entertainment it is perhaps worth the trouble of turning its pages. As the serious study which its author evidently intended it to be, it falls very flat. The pace of the narrative is good and the dialogue has a certain surface shimmer. The places and the people in them—except for the two most important male characters—are at least moderately well visualized. But even these attributes do not raise the novel often above its level."

+ — N Y Times p9 Mr 9 '30 300w

"The sophisticated mannerisms of Mrs. Banning's style are really quite forced and self-conscious. It is one of those pleasing, readable and entirely transient novels that blossom in the springtime." Marie Luhrs

+ — N Y World p11m Ap 6 '30 170w

BANNING, WILLIAM, and BANNING, GEORGE HUGH. Six horses; with a foreword by Frederick Russell Burnham. 410p il $4 Century

656 Overland journeys to the Pacific. Frontier and pioneer life 30-9516

A record of stage-coach days in the western United States from the gold rush to the opening of the transcontinental railroad, with interesting sidelights on the various stage-coach lines of Birch, Butterfield, Holladay, etc. The book devotes a section to the short but dramatic life of the famous Pony express.

Booklist 26:388 Jl '30

"It is a spirited and absorbing story that Captain and George Banning tell, and they have embellished it with an abundance of personalia, anecdotes and fascinating digressions, and with a generous assortment of illustrations taken from contemporary lithographs. 'Six Horses' is a genuine contribution to the history of the American West." H. S. Commager

+ Books p4 My 11 '30 1150w

Boston Transcript p3 Je 14 '30 680w

Cleveland Open Shelf p102 Jl '30

Reviewed by Francis Snow

Current Hist 32:212 My '30 230w

Reviewed by J. F. Dobie

Nation 131:182 Ag 13 '30 230w

"Their book, without robbing the coaches of any glamor, corrects many popular errors. The usual conception, so to speak, puts the coach before all six horses."

+ New Repub 64:187 O 1 '30 150w

" 'Six Horses' bears indication of painstaking research, proffers an excellent collection of period sketches and poster-reproductions, and becomes an authoritative and engaging study of stage-coach days. The note of partisan zeal that one detects in the writing is probably explained by the special interest of the authors in their topic." Halsey Raines

+ — N Y Times p4 My 4 '30 650w

BANNING, W., and BANNING, G. H.—Cont.

"'Six Horses' tells all any one needs to know about stagecoaching, and there are enough references to other works to send the reader farther afield if he desires. I wish the Bannings had been less verbose, less given to using the English language for embellishment. Otherwise the record is useful and illuminating." Harry Hansen

+ — N Y World p11 Mr 28 '30 400w

Outlook 154:590 Ap 9 '30 50w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 81:16 My '30 150w

"His work has been done exceedingly well, and the narrative brings to the reader a glow of satisfaction induced by the perusal of a glorious chapter in the annals of American enterprise and daring." M. M. Quaife

+ Yale R n s 20:399 winter '31 120w

BARING, MAURICE. Robert Peckham. 270p $2.50 Knopf [7s 6d Heinemann]

30-22760

A novel portraying the life of Robert Peckham, a Catholic gentleman and scholar, who lived in England during the reigns of Henry VIII, Queen Mary and Queen Elizabeth. When the Protestant religion began to lay a strong hold on England, he went into voluntary exile, lived on the continent, and died in Rome.

"For all intelligent Catholics, conversant with the origin of the Episcopalian Book of Common Prayer, and of those days when the Archbishop partook of flesh, despite the fact that it was during the days of Lent, the life of Robert Peckham will be of intense interest. . . The entire book is pervaded with a deep and tender melancholy." D. F. Gilman

+ Books p3 Ag 31 '30 750w

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 20 '30 750w

"Quiet and charmingly written sixteenth-century novel. . . The story has moments of great poignancy; and throughout it is pervaded by a delicately rendered sadness."

+ Nation 131:353 O 1 '30 180w

"The 'sad history of Robert Peckham sometime Member of Parliament, Knight and Privy Councillor of Queen Mary,' has an air of quiet authenticity. The illusion is perfect. The record of the conflict between a man's allegiance to his sovereign and his devotion to his religion would alone make Mr. Baring's book worth reading." K. C. Tomlinson

+ Nation and Ath 47:540 Jl 26 '30 80w

"Mr. Baring has given us a clear and reasonable portrait of Robert Peckham, of Denham Place, Buckinghamshire, in relation to his time, and has, with excellent moderation, preserved an almost exact balance between the two."

+ New Statesman 35:550 Ag 2 '30 200w

"For those to whom style and language are important this book will make a pleasant evening's reading before an open fireplace or near a sizzling radiator; others may find it a trifle dull. Not that the book lacks plot or color, for there is enough of both, but that very austerity of the life of the sad knight and its consequences of unhappiness are reflected throughout the entire text. This is no small compliment to the art of the author; this doubtless the effect he chose to create."

+ — N Y Times p16 Ag 31 '30 550w

"This distinguished author, whose books we always look forward to, tends always to become somewhat arid and emotionless, and in this book that tendency, if we may say so, is in the ascendancy." W. R. Brooks

Outlook 156:69 S 10 '30 80w

"Mr. Baring's unfailing good taste is both a virtue and a chilling limitation. His art has the pallor and melancholy diffidence of those people who are too well-bred and too passive to experience any drama but the dramas of conscience, any tragedy but that which arises out of the conflict of good manners and timid rightness with crude, unmannerly life. The veins of Mr. Baring's marble creatures have no blood. The cold stone of conscience holds them irrevocably apart." V. S. Pritchett

Spec 144:1067 Je 28 '30 200w

"Those who know Mr. Baring's delicate touch will need no assurance that they will find here grace and elegance. . . To pronounce this little but cunningly wrought work of art a theological tract would be beside the mark, although its interpretation of historical events is unreservedly Roman Catholic."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p523 Je 26 '30 670w

BARKER, MRS ELSA. Redman cave murder. 284p il $2 Sears

30-19278

"The twenty-year-old secret of the Novercross family is revealed by the murder of a strange man in Redman Cave—the playground of their youth. Dexter Drake, international detective, and his assistant, Paul Howard, are again successful in ferreting out the truth and discover a long-lost treasure."—Bookm

Bookm 71:xx Ag '30 50w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p13 Ag 17 '30 150w

"A drearily naive setting forth of the Novercross family trouble, a battered corpse in a cave and the unconvincing genius of Dexter Drake." Dashiell Hammett

— N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 23 '30 20w

"The yarn moves fast but the solution is disappointing." Bruce Rae

+ — N Y Times p20 S 7 '30 200w

"Drake's swift penetration to the heart of the enigma is as flawlessly logical a performance in deduction as that master has thus far given—and in the past are several that have proven him an eminent man hunter." E. C. B.

+ N Y World p5m Ag 17 '30 150w

BARKLEY, JOHN LEWIS. No hard feelings! 327p il $2 Cosmopolitan bk.

940.48 European war—Personal narratives

Being a scout and sniper in the Intelligence service of the A.E.F. just suited the narrator of this personal war story. Mr Barkley, during his six months active service in France, found himself and his equally daring pals in more than one dangerous and thrilling situation, but he usually came off the victor—as his various honors and medals testify. This is the record of a man who really enjoyed the war.

"A straightforward and unassuming narrative, which more than compensates for its undeniable lack of literary value by the quality and abundance of its material."

+ Bookm 72:200 O '30 450w

"One reads this book with breathless haste to get on to the next thrill, but at the end there is no conviction that Mr. Barkley's version of the war is a representative one or even a real one. Certainly Mr. Barkley's enjoyment of it will appear to most people as somewhat abnormal. Even when we allow him the natural fighting temperament of a descendant of pioneers there is a certain unreality in the extraordinary gusto with which he fought. . . Mr. Barkley's facts may be correct, but the emphasis which he continually puts upon them taxes the readers' sense of reality past the breaking point. The general air of bravado with which he tells his story gives it more the atmosphere of a Dumas melodrama than a narrative of the World War. And somehow we are still too close to the reality to enjoy it as a blood and thunder tale." Lambert Davis

— + Books p29 S 28 '30 450w

"Here at last is a war novel that makes no great pretensions, that does not claim to be the epic of the whole war in its revelation of the blasting of human lives and the rending of the traditions of nations. . . Mr. Barkley in 'No Hard Feelings' gives us an unadorned and unbiased story. He does not dwell upon unpleasantness, but accepts it when it comes, and relieves the unbroken strain of fighting with quiet bursts of humor. In general the martial tone of the book is never too oppressive or too weighty. 'No Hard Feelings' is a book that you will like." E. H.

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 11 '30 650w

Reviewed by J. B. Wharton
Nation 131:530 N 12 '30 80w
New Repub 65:120 D 10 '30 120w

Reviewed by E. G. Taylor
Sat R of Lit 7:200 O 11 '30 100w

Reviewed by Leon Whipple
Survey 65:282 D 1 '30 380w

BARNES, CARMAN DEE. Beau lover. 258p $2 Liveright
30-20072

The love story of a girl who, tho much tempted, remained faithful to her early ideal and waited for her "beau lover."

"In Miss Barnes's work there lurks a tragedy which may or may not be common to the present young. She knows the gestures of mature emotion. She knows the way to react, physically, to life. But she can only imagine its meaning. She has no scale of values by which to settle things in their accustomed places."
— Books p17 Ag 24 '30 550w

"'Beau Lover' is superior to Miss Barnes's first novel in the level of its technical performance, but it lacks the genuineness of the impulse which informed 'Schoolgirl.' Its problem is less real, less original, and infinitely less clear, and the workmanship of the novel is marred by stylistic mannerisms and affectations."
— N Y Times p7 Ag 10 '30 500w
Springf'd Republican p7e O 19 '30 200w

BARNES, DONALD GROVE. History of the English corn laws from 1660-1846. (Univ. of London. London school of economics and political science. Studies in economic and social hist.) 336p $5 Crofts [15s Routledge]
337.5 Corn laws [30-16866]

A chronological record of English corn laws from the Restoration in 1660 to the repeal of the Corn laws in 1846. "An attempt is made in the case of each law passed and of each measure agitated to determine what social forces and classes favoured or opposed the proposal. The operation of the different laws, or groups of laws which made up a system, is also studied both from the point of view of contemporary opinion and from such statistics as are available for each period."—Author's pref.

Reviewed by Godfrey Davies
Am Hist R 36:195 O '30 450w

"This is a most excellent monograph, scholarly, comprehensive, well-documented, and interestingly written, and is an important contribution of the sort badly needed if it is to become possible for anyone to write the as yet nonexistent history of English commercial policy. It falls somewhat short, however, of what its title proclaims it to be." Jacob Viner
+ — J Pol Econ 38:710 D '30 900w
Spec 144:338 Mr 1 '30 140w

"Within its defined limits the work is an exhaustive monograph on the subject, and the stress that is laid on the views which popular opinion has from time to time expressed on regulations of the supply of corn gives it a distinctive feature. A bibliography of Corn Law literature, occupying twenty-three closely printed pages of an appendix, is the fullest and most complete that we know."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p309 Ap 10 '30 1550w

BARNES, HARRY ELMER. Story of punishment; a record of man's inhumanity to man. 292p il $3 Stratford
365 Punishment. Prisons. Crime and criminals 30-16726

A record of the efforts to repress criminal behavior, from earliest times to the present. Mr Barnes shows the inhuman methods society has used to protect itself from the criminal, how this savagery has persisted even in the social order of today and how ineffective it has been. In conclusion he outlines a scientific plan which aims at making the treatment fit the criminal, in place of the old method of making the punishment fit the crime.

"This volume is a study of the various devices used by modern man in punishing the criminal. With Professor Barnes's treatment it becomes a recital of horror, injustice, inhumanity and terror. The toughest mind shrinks before such an account of the frightful suffering to which human beings have been subjected because of their anti-social acts. The center of the book lies in what we believe is a monstrous fallacy, peculiar to sociologists and humanitarians, contained in the concept that free will is a delusion, and that 'there is not the slightest iota of choice allowed to any individual from birth to the grave'. . . Like many humanitarians, Professor Barnes is suffering from a kind of mental color-blindness—an inability to see values which his five senses do not discern." A. B. Clarke
— Bookm 72:91 S '30 600w

Reviewed by W. D. Lane
Books p30 S 28 '30 600w

"The book is a telling indictment of our present system. It deserves a wide reading. It will help the slowly growing sentiment that some day will usher in the age of humanity." Ellsworth Faris
+ Int J Ethics 41:261 Ja '31 850w

"The book contains little new material, but its very brevity and conciseness recommend it for general reading. The author, in particular, has called heavily upon George Ives's 'History of Penal Methods,' but he has turned out a workmanlike manual that presents an excellent outline of the movement from tribal days to the present." Milton MacKaye
+ N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 23 '30 750w

"The title of the volume is unfortunate, since it gives no inkling of what is really its most important feature, its comprehensive and well thought out scheme of a new system of criminology and penology that embraces all the recent arguments and conclusions of psychiatrists, sociologists and penologists." F. F. Kelly
+ — N Y Times p11 Ag 31 '30 1300w

"Dr. Barnes sets forth clearly and without emotional ballyhoo of any variety his own scheme for the betterment, be it noted, of criminal law. He admits that progress must be piecemeal. And in his contention that prisons should be clean, decent places he will be upheld by every respectable person. It is a good book, one to take to heart." A. V. P.
+ Outlook 155:668 Ag 27 '30 350w
St Louis 28:290 D '30

"There is, on the whole, little in the book with which one can quarrel. It is a stimulating book and will help in the struggle against ignorance and stupidity." L. N. Robinson
+ Survey 65:284 D 1 '30 900w

Reviewed by W. H. Holly
World Tomorrow 14:25 Ja '31 480w

BARNES, HARRY ELMER. Twilight of Christianity. 470p $3 Vanguard press
270 Christianity 29-21377

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Reviewed by A. W. Taylor
Am J Soc 36:488 N '30 550w
Booklist 26:260 Ap '30
Cath World 130:629 F '30 550w

"Every liberal Christian should read at least the last two chapters of this book. The first chapters, written in a rather diffuse, journalistic style, will seem to him to be 'old stuff,' noisy bombardments of fortifications already long since abandoned; but the last two, on 'The Jesus Stereotype' and 'Religion in a Secular Age' probably outline the next great battleground of religion—the conflict with secularism or Humanism." W. L.
— + Churchman p5 N 23 '29 170w

BARNES, H. E.—Continued

"The book is remarkably free from animus or cantankerousness." D. S. Muzzey

+ — Current Hist 31:1054 Mr '30 1800w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:6 Ja '30

St Louis 28:4 Ja '30

"Barnes whales orthodoxy in great detail and with equal gusto. He does it with wearisome prolixity and with a strenuosity that, after killing an idea, belabors its carcass. The pages sweat superlatives. Yet the book deserves a patient reading by those whom it antagonizes, the Christians of our day, both orthodox and liberal. For it uncovers real problems and real faults." G. A. Coe

World Tomorrow 13:86 F '30 1100w

BARNES, HARRY ELMER. World politics in modern civilization; the contributions of nationalism, capitalism, imperialism and militarism to human culture and international anarchy. (Borzoi hist. ser.) 651p $6.50 (25s) Knopf

909.82 World politics. International law and relations. Civilization. European war, 1914-1918—Influences and results 30-9749

"The Professor of Historical Sociology in Smith College describes in the first historical section of the book how the world drifted into chaos and anarchy and then considers the present prospects for escape from a condition of armed watchfulness, suspicion and hatred." —Publishers' Weekly

"The work abounds in gross generalizations, and in errors where the author has ventured into fields apparently not covered by readily available source material (as for instance in Chapter VIII). The author generally assumes a broad and liberal attitude toward questions and issues, as in his chapters on capitalism, imperialism, the peace movement, and World War guilt; but substantial text is invariably lacking in support of these generalizations, except perhaps for the chapters on war guilt, which are drawn largely from a previous book of the author's and the work of Professor Fay." M. W. Royse

— Am Pol Sci R 24:1034 N '30 420w

Booklist 26:389 Jl '30

"Mr. Barnes seems to be given to a kind of intellectual statistics, which leads him to cite the name of nearly every professor of social science in this country and abroad. This is gratifying to intellectuals, whose work is usually passed over in silence; yet at times this method seems to be a little undiscriminating. These criticisms should not obscure the fact that the work as a whole contains much valuable material and many keen observations. The first part of the book is especially well done. Mr. Barnes has such capacity for thought and for scholarship that if he would confine himself to a small portion of the field, take time to ponder his material and boil down and edit his own copy, he could make a really creative contribution to knowledge." R. L. Buell

+ — Books p10 Je 8 '30 720w

Reviewed by William MacDonald

Current Hist 33:xv O '30 600w

"The work deserves so much respect for its excellent historical understanding and so much admiration for the courage with which thorny issues are tackled that it calls forth a frank and open discussion of its shortcomings in the hope of future improvements. On the whole it would appear to suffer from a lack of distance from the facts." Salvador de Madariaga

+ — Nation 131:130 Jl 30 '30 1550w

Reviewed by Lucy Mair

Nation and Ath 48:439 D 27 '30 600w

"In this book Professor Barnes is at his best and at his worst. Many of the theories he expounds are basically sound and presented in an arresting, challenging fashion which will win for them a wider audience than the impartial historian can ever hope to command, but at the same time his consuming ambition to prove his liberalism, to demonstrate his freedom from any ideas of professional expediency and from every restraint of tradition or even good taste, often forces him into such an extreme position that we soon have to accept his writing not as history but simply as Barnes. . . Among his more thoughtful readers his style is not such as to inspire great confidence. Admirable as it is for purposes of propaganda it does not carry conviction for the reader who is seeking history." F. R. Dulles

— + N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 26 '30 850w

"In the work of evaluation Professor Barnes occupies a distinguished place, and while many readers will doubtless feel that 'World Politics' is history with a purpose rather than, in the accustomed way, merely good history, its learning and insight are not open to dispute. It is certainly one of the most stimulating, as it is also one of the most provocative, surveys of recent times that American historical scholarship has produced." William MacDonald

+ N Y Times p12 My 11 '30 2650w

"The book is an exceedingly interesting exposition of the views of a liberal 'unalterably opposed to imperialism and militarism." G. E. G. Catlin

+ N Y World p8m My 18 '30 450w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:71 O '30

St Louis 28:205 S '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p687 Ag 28 '30 150w

"I know of no better way for an intelligent reader to understand the moving forces in modern international life, and their fundamental bearing upon the significant problems of human destiny, than by becoming acquainted with this book." John Dewey

+ World Tomorrow 13:522 D '30 580w

BARNES, HOMER FRANCIS. Charles Fenno Hoffman. (Columbia univ. studies in English and comparative lit.) 361p $4.25 Columbia univ. press [21s Oxford]

B or 92 Hoffman, Charles Fenno 30-14916

A study of the literary work and personality of Charles F. Hoffman, one of the minor members of the Knickerbocker group of authors flourishing in the nineteenth century. A contemporary of Irving, Cooper and Bryant, Hoffman founded and edited several literary magazines, to which he contributed verses, essays and stories. His novels, A Winter in the West, and Greyslaer, brought him considerable literary attention, and his career was brought to an untimely close by his mental collapse and confinement in the Harrisburg state hospital for thirty years prior to his death. The appendix contains excerpts from Hoffman's correspondence and uncollected poems.

"The position of Charles Fenno Hoffman among those early nineteenth century authors known as the Knickerbocker group warrants the biographical tribute Mr. Barnes pays him. . . Mr. Barnes interestingly describes his New York coterie and rounds out the biography by giving a considerable amount of Hoffman correspondence and a number of his hitherto uncollected verses." Uffington Valentine

+ N Y Times p14 Je 8 '30 700w

"Professor Barnes's book is frankly undigested in many portions, is reminiscent of the seminar, and is, in fact, essentially a dissertation as it comes to weary committees at the end of the university year. The question whether or not Professor Barnes would not have done better to wait, select, analyze, and publish in a sharper, more readable form can hardly be debated. Yet, as it is, the book has great value to the specialist in American literature."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1163 Je 28 '30 300w

"As a biography this volume is very well done. It is based on industrious research, as its apparatus of footnotes shows, and its detailed chronicle of Hoffman's life and its analysis of his principal writings are supplemented by an elaborate bibliography, a collection of Hoffman's correspondence, and a reprint of such of his poems as have hitherto appeared in fugitive publications only."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p685 Ag 28 '30 280w

BARNES, IRSTON ROBERT. Public utility control in Massachusetts; a study in the commission regulation of security issues and rates. (Yale publications in economics, social science and government) 239p $3 Yale univ. press [13s 6d Oxford]

380.16 Public utilities. Public service commissions 30-11068

A detailed study of regulation of security issues and rates in one state which sheds light on the more general aspects of public utility regulation.

"Dr. Barnes deserves much credit for his careful and comprehensive analysis and criticism of the Massachusetts system of utility regulation. The major shortcoming of this work, if it be a shortcoming, is a lack of appreciation of the value of this unique experiment in utility control which is based, as Dr. Barnes himself points out, on the conviction that the utilities are the agents of the state and under an implied contract to accept the form of regulation adopted in the state. This study is a competent and workman-like investigation and brings together information that will throw light on one of the most critical economic and political problems of the present time." W. E. Mosher

+ — Am Econ R 20:518 S '30 1500w

"This book is a real contribution to the literature on public utility valuation." H. L. E.

+ Am Pol Sci R 24:793 Ag '30 250w

"The work which, naturally, is of technical nature, is exhaustive and well documented, and shows a grasp of principles as well as of data."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 Jl 23 '30 200w

BARNES, MRS MARGARET (AYER). Years of grace. 581p $2.50 Houghton [7s 6d Constable] 30-17093

A chronicle of the life of a charming and well-balanced woman, Jane Ward, who was born in Chicago in the later years of the last century. Thru all the great experiences of her life, from her girlhood engagement to the lovable André, the years of her marriage to Stephen Carver of Boston, and her love for the husband of a friend, Jane maintained the even tenor of her way and emerged gracefully into middle age.

Booklist 27:64 O '30

"It is odd, at first glance, that so placid, so unexciting a book, should enjoy a wide circulation. Why the success of a story so unadventurous, so lacking in movement? Have we come to a time, I wonder, when the urge toward vicarious experience has worn itself out, when people are turning from the paths of escape—from sentiment, or sophistication, or red-blooded romance—to the reassuring haven of the familiar and average? It will take more than one book to supply the answer, but Years of Grace may be sounding the keynote of the more popular fiction of the next decade." Guy Holt

Bookm 72:xvi S '30 650w

"Mrs. Barnes, whose stories show her to be constantly preoccupied with the chasms and the none too effective bridges between the present young and the young of forty years back, gives you the feeling in this long piece of work that she has written to the marrow of her subject. With profuse, yet never over-weighted, detail and with a sort of native sharpness, she has voiced the problems of an age and a class. These people who no longer bear the brunt of life are now watching its tumult, questioning it, and expecting from it, in some way, their fulfillment. This is the attitude behind 'Years of Grace.' It is an attitude, and a book, vested with dignity." V. P. Ross

+ Books p3 Je 29 '30 750w

"Mrs. Barnes is a keen and clever student of human nature. She understands the workings of the human mind—especially the feminine mind—under all sorts of social situations. While there is some of the vivid, the dramatic, the touching, and the absorbing in her novel, it is somewhat verbose and excessively given to psychological analyses." R. K. M.

+ — Boston Transcript p2 Ag 16 '30 380w

"'Years of Grace' has the charm of the early Edith Wharton. . . Mrs. Barnes has done a real piece of work in 'Years of Grace,' a satisfying, fine, impressive novel, with the grace of the old school of writing now so seldom found. It is a rich chronicle, rich in character and background and in the texture of its writing." Fanny Butcher

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p12 Je 28 '30 630w

Cleveland Open Shelf p142 N '30

"There is no doubt that in many ways Miss Barnes's is a fine novel—thoughtful, impartial, wise. It wants cutting, perhaps, cutting out of some of the black-walnut furniture and the cotillions. Then her characters would stand out as they should have stood out—men and women beset by a harsh world. A novelist must play upon the heart; when she is sure of her skill at that she may turn her attention very expertly and discriminatingly to the eye." Dorothy Van Doren

+ — Nation 131:158 Ag 6 '30 600w

"One's only quarrel with Mrs. Barnes is that she should have written at such length about such utterly worthless and tiresome people. Their cultural tendencies are limited by their inability to experience higher æsthetic pleasures than the matching of colours for a coat and skirt, and their worldly activities go no further than the attending of a great many funerals and a great many marriages." Richard Strachey

Nation and Ath 48:169 N 1 '30 150w

"Mrs. Barnes has written a substantial and satisfying piece of fiction, substantial in the large and immediate sense of life which it conveys, and satisfying in the sureness of its procedure, the rightness of its effect." R. M. L.

+ New Repub 63:298 Jl 23 '30 270w

"Mrs. Barnes has given us a solacing and an admirable piece of work. It is unusually well constructed and closely knit, excellently written, echoing in its quiet narrative the tones of life itself, and enlivening them at every turn with some gesture or inflection expressing witty criticism or shrewd courageous comment."

+ New Statesman 35:596 Ag 16 '30 500w

"If it is not striking in its originality, this story of the death of an old order and the birth of a new one; of the perpetually renewed conflict between succeeding generations, is perhaps more than usually satisfying. It holds the reader's attention to the end and carries with it an inescapable sense of authenticity."

+ — N Y Times p6 Jl 6 '30 530w

"A detached and clear picture of the great changes of the past fifty years and a faithful, mature rendition of an ordinary life and its setting of people and things, give this novel solidity. Vivid descriptions and excellent dialogue give it sparkle." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 155:348 Jl 2 '30 400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:70 O '30

"Mrs. Barnes refuses to avail herself of the novelist's power to supply a factitious demonstration of any desired thesis. Throughout she writes of the difference between Jane and her daughter Cicily with a scrupulous, almost a self-conscious fairness. This suspension of judgment is the strength and weakness of the novel's close. One admires the freedom from prejudice, but one feels a little disappointed of a conclusion. The inconclusiveness is increased by the fact that Mrs. Barnes has not made her heroine a person of great depth or warmth, and a book which is essentially the story of emotions sacrificed to propriety demands these qualities in its protagonist." Basil Davenport

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1203 Jl 19 '30 500w

"Mrs Barnes turns back the pages of time most understandingly and pictures those 'years of grace' which preceded the age of jazz, pep

BARNES, MARGARET—Continued
and personality. 'Years of Grace' is obviously sentimental but a likable book, a human document concerning years that are around the corner."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e O 12 '30 350w
Times [London] Lit Sup p812 O 9 '30 220w

BARNES, WILLIAM MORRIS. When ships were ships, and not tin pots; ed. by Hilda Renbold Wortman. 466p il $3 Boni

910.4 Seafaring life 30-30103

William (Wild Bill) Barnes, eighty-year-old sea captain, had so many salty reminiscences of his seafaring days, dating from 1862, that he was urged to put them in a book. Not being much of a writer, Captain Barnes spoke his tales into a dictaphone, records of which have been transcribed and edited by Hilda Renbold Wortman.

"An unpretentious, exciting and dramatic journal of life at sea." W. J. Fadiman
+ Bookm 72:444 D '30 160w

"From his apprentice days in the square rigger Miranda to the loss of the tramp Saxonian during the war Barnes has, with the help of his 'discoverer' Hilda Renbold Wortman, who edited the book, steered through strange literary seas successfully. His course is at times a bit deviating, but that is fitting for the rambling teller of tales, and his style is pungent with expletives, rich in idiom and marked by a wry sprightliness. The author has made the most of a rare gift of story telling." H. W. Baldwin
+ Books p7 D 7 '30 500w

Reviewed by Al Chase
Chicago Daily Tribune p23 D 6 '30 100w

"In addition to being a good sea yarn, full of adventure, salty and vigorous, although perhaps not always told with a capacity for making the most out of his material, 'When Ships Were Ships' is also invaluable as a document on a subject on which will be few documents more." Percy Hutchison
N Y Times p7 D 21 '30 1350w

"The book is packed with adventures told in the captain's racy bellow—the breezy style is on every page and in every paragraph, as well as the handy oaths which serve to make the captain's case emphatic. The captain's prose fits the tale he tells. And there are some snappy descriptive passages." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p11 O 31 '30 650w

"It's a grand story. Nearly 500 pages of it, and our interest never flagged once." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 156:430 N 12 '30 80w

BARON, PETER, pseud. See Clyde, L. W.

BARRETT, EDWARD JOHN BOYD. Magnificent illusion. 321p $3 Washburn

B or 92 30-29544

"Dr. Barrett tells here the poignant story of his own life; how in his native Ireland he entered the Society of the Jesuits and took priest's orders, a zealous, pious man; and how years later he left his society and laid by his orders in New York, disillusioned, hurt by uncharitableness and injustice, but with the Celt's resiliency hopeful of rebuilding the ruins of his years."—Books

"The book is delightfully written. There is not a spiteful page or paragraph in it. Its author has attained serenity; and that he should have done so after his tragic experience is a high tribute to both his head and his heart." W. L. Sullivan
+ Books p2 O 19 '30 600w

"While many readers may entirely differ as to what should be held sacred and foremost, or thoroughly condemn decisions made, few will fail to see in this the sincere, stirring narrative of a life which faced life, a life that confronted great decisions in its quest for truth and light. This is the actual, unadorned true story of a man who went through a tremendous experience—one calculated to challenge all his moral qualities."
+ Boston Transcript p2 O 29 '30 300w

"It is as literature that this work should be rated—and rated highly. The style is crystal clear, and the reader is never in doubt that an honest man is speaking, partly because no one but an honest man could have such a story to tell." D. D. Zuver
+ Churchman p15 O 4 '30 1050w
Nation 131:712 D 24 '30 100w

"Dr. Barrett's third book since his defection from the Jesuit order belongs to a class of autobiographical literature that has become increasingly rare in recent years—the spiritual autobiography. Less passionate than the confessions of St. Augustine, less suavely psychological than the apologia of Newman, Dr. Barrett's record is more than likely to surpass either of these in direct and immediate interest for contemporary readers." William Troy
+ N Y Times p10 D 7 '30 800w

"This story has all the interest of a 'best seller' and deserves to be read by men and women of all shades of religious opinion." E. B. Chaffee
+ Outlook 156:350 O 29 '30 100w
St Louis 28:300 D '30

BARRIE, SIR JAMES MATTHEW, bart. Peter Pan in Kensington gardens; retold by May Byron for little people with the permission of the author. 123p il $1 Scribner [2s 6d Hodder]

30-6210

A retelling for very small children of the story of Peter Pan and his adventures with the birds and fairies in Kensington gardens.

"Not all children, any more than adults, will care for Barrie, and if they do not there are other things for them to read. For those who will take him to their hearts when they are old enough to appreciate his quality, it is a pity to spoil him in a sort of preview by such treatment as he receives in this book." A. T. Eaton
N Y Times p19 Mr 30 '30 250w

"Here is Peter Pan simplified for the very young. It is quite nicely written down to the intelligences of those under five."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:973 Ap 19 '30 50w

BARRINGTON, E., pseud. See Beck, L.

BARRON, CLARENCE WALKER. They told [2] Barron; conversations and revelations of an American Pepys in Wall street; ed. and arr. by Arthur Pound and Samuel Taylor Moore. 372p $5 Harper

332.6 Capitalists and financiers. Wall street 30-30048

Clarence Barron, publisher of the Wall Street Journal, set down daily the informal talk of the men among whom he moved. The talk, which is all of dollars—millions of dollars—throws a light on American financial history from 1918 to 1928.

"Most of the outstanding political and business leaders of the last two decades cross these pages, and Barron has caught many a 'human interest' snapshot. . . Particularly interesting for the light they shed on big business operations are the chapters covering chain stores development, the international race for oil, and the history of the battle for control of General Motors." Lisle Bell
+ Books p4 D 21 '30 850w

"He was an eager listener to the talk of millions of dollars, and the pages of Barron's notes will give many the impression that they have had glimpses of the inside of big things in Wall street. . . This indefatigable jotter down of conversations reveals almost nowhere any interest in matters outside of Wall Street and company finance." C. McD. Puckette

N Y Times p12 D 21 '30 600w

"A book that in all likelihood will be remembered fifty and 100 years from now as the most tragic piece of reporting of our age. 'They Told Barron' is a frank, free and open diary of the gossip of men who have heaped up enormous fortunes under modern capitalism. It is an honest diary and by that token a most startling accounting. . . You can dip into this volume at any page and sink knee-deep into millions of dollars. There are figures dear to the American imagination. You can let them roll off your tongue and smack your lips over them." Harry Hansen

N Y World p12 O 29 '30 850w

"If you like your meat rare you will like these raw notes giving you the views of important men on matters big and small, free from the usual publicity seasoning. It is a book that should go into every financial library. . . We regret the book is so filled with what 'they told Barron' that we must still depend on memory and gossip for what 'Barron told them.' His own life, passed over here in a brief biographical chapter, was more picturesque than that of the men talking to him in this book." P. W. Garret

+ Sat R of Lit 7:204 O 11 '30 850w

BARRY, CHARLES, pseud. Avenging ikon. 231p $2 Dutton [7s 6d Methuen]

30-8175

A man was found murdered in a beautiful London apartment, after an attempt to remove an ikon from the wall. While the police were working on the mystery two other men were killed, one in France and one in Czechoslovakia, and in each case the dead man was found before an ikon. Superintendent Gilmartin of Scotland Yard decided to try his luck at solving the continental murders, with good results.

Bookm 72:xxvi N '30 80w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 Ap 6 '30 150w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 2 '30 380w

Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith
N Y World p11m Ap 6 '30 130w

"The author is almost pedantically careful in his details of police work and the topography of Haute Savoie; but the story is somewhat lacking in the main virtues of a detective story. It does not keep the reader absorbed in the problem, nor does it lead him to suspect the wrong people. The villains are mere shadows, the victims still more so."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p670 Ag 21 '30 180w

BARRY, MARY ELIZABETH, and HANNA, PAUL ROBERT, eds. Wonder flights of long ago. 205p il trade ed $2; educ ed $1 Appleton

398 Legends. Flights 30-8842

An anthology of famous tales of flying, from mythology and folklore. Flying horses, stools, carpets, trunks, along with the stories of Sinbad, Daedalus, Icarus and Phaeton are rechronicled for children of all ages.

Booklist 26:400 Jl '30

"Lynd Ward illustrates the book with some excellent air-minded drawings of the fantastic mediums of flight. An appended glossary is instructive as well as helpful, and the maps of earth and heaven included chart the ways of these early aviators. Children of all ages will revel in these flights of fancy."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Je 7 '30 100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p134 N '30

"The editing has been done discreetly. In most instances only an occasional sentence has been pruned or eliminated altogether and one is not conscious in reading of any painful cutting of old favorites. The illustrations by Lynd Ward are dramatic and effective; though very modern, they have a romantic and imaginative quality which suits the stories."

+ N Y Times p20 Ap 27 '30 300w

St Louis 28:219 S '30

Sat R of Lit 7:27 Ag 2 '30 180w

Times [London] Lit Sup p498 Je 12 '30 150w

BARRY, PHILIP. Hotel Universe. 166p $2 French

812 30-18049

At a villa in southern France is gathered a group of sophisticated Americans, talking together before leaving for Paris. The father of their hostess, who has a psychoanalytical gift, uses his ability—coupled with the superstition of a power that the villa itself is said to hold over its guests—to free these young people of their individual psychoses, and give them a new purpose in life.

Booklist 27:57 O '30

Reviewed by Stark Young
New Repub 62:326 My 7 '30 1500w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:78 N '30

"The characters are not imaginatively conceived in sufficient degree to justify, or even dramatically to realize, the author's method, and the dialog, in spite of some delicate overtones, lacks depth, verve and emotional suggestion."

— Springf'd Republican p12 Je 27 '30 130w

BARRY, PHILLIPS; ECKSTORM, MRS FANNIE (HARDY); and SMYTH, MARY WINSLOW, eds. British ballads from Maine; the development of popular songs with texts and airs; versions of ballads incl. in F. J. Child's collection. 535p $6 Yale univ. press [27s Oxford]

821.08 Ballads, English. Folk songs—Maine 29-20553

This volume has been compiled to preserve a large and interesting body of folk-song, traditional in Maine and along the borders of the British maritime provinces. It is a study of the changes and developments in the ballads of English, Irish or Scottish origin, with text and airs, which resulted from a four and one-half years' study of the counties of eastern and southern Maine. The compilers have used as a foundation Professor Francis J. Child's "English and Scottish popular ballads." The present work contains fifty-six of these ballads recognized by Professor Child, besides eight so-called "secondary ballads," with traces of about twenty-five more heard of, but not yet textually recovered.

"There is little to criticize of interest to the laity. Like most women ballad-collectors, these editors appear squeamish in the presence of Rabelaisian broadness. They do not realize that asterisks are more insidious than vulgarity. Aside from this, the ballads themselves are so attractive and the work is so well done that it is a great pity the book could not have been published at a price within the reach of more readers." Wilbert Snow

+ — Books p22 Mr 16 '30 430w

"Splendidly indexed, with all material adroitly arranged for accessibility, this volume deserves attention. Its scope and usefulness are, of course, limited, but that limitation was the intention of the editors." R. B. M.

+ Boston Transcript p2 D 14 '29 550w

"This sizeable volume, in beautiful format, has more than ordinary interest and value for the ballad lover. The initial fine discussion of ballad music, the comparisons of the Maine texts with those of the Child collection, the comments on the relative age of the texts and on their groupings, and the notation of features that belong to some texts and not to others combine to make the book the model of scholarship to be expected of a volume bearing the imprint of the Yale University Press." Louise Pound

BARRY, P.; ECKSTORM, F.; and SMYTH, M. W., eds.—Continued

+ Sat R of Lit 6:950 Ap 19 '30 1100w

"The musical shortcomings of what is in spite of everything a valuable book to the student of folk-song must not be allowed to obscure the great interest of the texts and of the research work which has been done upon them."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p95 F 6 '30 1300w

BARRY, WILLIAM FRANCIS. Coming age and the Catholic church: a forecast. 224p $2.50 Putnam [7s 6d Cassell]

282 Roman Catholic church 30-6068

Following his survey of conditions in the Catholic church from 1870-1929, Canon Barry discusses conditions and problems obtaining today, and from these prophesies the future policies of the church.

"This book is declamatory in style and in historical judgments is summary and rhetorical. The problems of our time are expatiated upon rather than analyzed, and the coming age is interpreted in the manner of an apocalypse rather than of a philosophy. It is unfortunate that the rich mind which undoubtedly Canon Barry has should have produced for studious readers so slender a harvest."

— Books p19 My 25 '30 150w

"Canon Barry's style is set. One must not expect from him an argumentative exposition, but rather a factual and often prejudiced recital. It is not a liberal but a forceful presentation." W. H. M.

Boston Transcript p3 Jl 23 '30 630w

"For many years now Catholics in all sections of the English-speaking world have looked upon Canon Barry as one of the best-informed and most active-minded of Catholic scholars. The present book, therefore, concerned as it is with various aspects of the contact—or the collision—between the Catholic religion and the great world forces around us, will be read eagerly by many who justly regard the Canon as a wise and competent interpreter to those within the Church of things happening outside." G. D. M.

+ Cath World 131:631 Ag '30 350w

"Learning and insight are not wanting, but one is frankly disappointed with the whole. It seems a mistake to publish in 1930 a discourse on ecclesiastical history which is replete with violent prejudice against the Germans and in which the British march into Jerusalem is termed a 'supreme satisfaction' for all Christian folk. An attempt to compare Catholic authority with American government is not likely to persuade even the indulgent reader; and the account of recent pontificates is not sufficiently detailed to be of great value." G. N. Shuster

— + N Y Times p9 Ag 31 '30 280w

"It is a stimulating book and a thoroughly readable one. Protestants especially should read this Catholic reaction to the age in which we live." E. B. Chaffee

+ Outlook 155:549 Ag 6 '30 200w

St Louis 28:203 S '30

"Dr. William Barry is in his eighty-first year and the fact is apparent only too frequently in this book. The first twenty-three pages of 'The Coming Age and the Catholic Church' were written in 1911. A decline in vigor is painfully apparent throughout the remaining two hundred pages. They possess, indeed, mellow wisdom, and a learning that has penetrated to the marrow of the writer's bones. Moreover, Monsignor Barry's style cannot be anything but graceful and charming. But he is very old and very tired. For this reason, many of the later chapters, slight as they are, come to an abruptly huddled close." Theodore Maynard

— + Sat R of Lit 7:6 Jl 26 '30 650w

BARTLETT, VERNON. Unknown soldier (Eng title: No man's land). 329p $2 Stokes [7s 6d Allen, G.]

30-18194

A gypsy fortune teller had predicted that Stevenson, the young Englishman of the story, would become so famous that kings would bow down to him. As he lies with death wounds in a shell-hole in No Man's Land, the young man thinks about his boyhood, his ambitions, his life and the war, and the possible fulfillment of the fortune teller's prophecy.

Booklist 27:159 D '30

Reviewed by Louis Rich

Bookm 71:547 Ag '30 450w

Boston Transcript p5 S 13 '30 650w

Christian Science Monitor p10 My 17 '30 230w

"There is a strange, needless confusion in the telling of the story, which might, no doubt, be excused as a representation of the confusion of war, had not the confusion seemed to infect the author himself. There are, of course, admirable passages and some touching descriptions of persons, but the book is uncertain in grasp and hesitating in execution, nor is his hero quite a man enough to hold the book together."

— + New Statesman 34:640 F 22 '30 150w

"It cannot be said that the book tells anything new about the war, or that it makes exciting reading. It is memorable for its hero only: a young, unsophisticated lad from the British Isles, and its appeal must be sought in the portrait painted of him."

N Y Times p7 Ag 3 '30 400w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p11 Jl 14 '30 400w

Reviewed by F. L. Robbins

Outlook 155:427 Jl 16 '30 250w

" 'No Man's Land' is what few war novels are —a tragedy. Mr. Bartlett, while giving a magnificent general impression of the war, has managed to reduce it to the stature of the individual. It does not overwhelm or even distort the personality of the protagonist—it enhances it. His death affects us with a sense of loss and frustration. Mr. Bartlett is to be congratulated on having disentangled from the war's confusion this one clear human motive, and demonstrated that there is a providence in the fall of a sparrow." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 149:173 F 8 '30 350w

"Obsessed with the desire to depict war as dreadful in the sufferings which it entails on the soldier, and as futile as a means of settling disputes between nations, the author drags the reader through 329 pages of 'mud, monotony, and misery,' only pausing to insist on such macabre and painfully sentimental incidents as are intended to make the reader shudder or shed tears. A great book, if you like that sort of thing. But the spirit which animates it is not that which built the British Empire." Emerson Taylor

Sat R of Lit 7:177 O 4 '30 200w

"Mr. Vernon Bartlett has written a War book that is peculiarly poignant and which might have been considered remarkable if there were not now so many of the kind. . . If the artists are not careful there may be a reaction against this preaching of peace. Homer gave us the glories of Achilles as well as the mourning for Hector. Another difficulty in accepting Mr. Bartlett's narrative is that, attractively as it is written, one does not feel he has come down close enough to the current of the boy's consciousness. Do people think with such literary skill? Has Mr. Bartlett chosen the best convention?"

— + Spec 144:206 F 8 '30 250w

Times [London] Lit Sup p76 Ja 30 '30 500w

BARTLEY, NALBRO ISADORAH (MRS HORACE LERCH). Godfather. 386p $2 Farrar
29-22691

Kirk Brinton, bachelor and godfather to Nancy Thatcher, is a self-centered and pretty despicable cad. He makes love airily to one girl after another—avoiding complications—but he finally marries Nancy. That Kirk makes by no means a satisfactory husband is a foregone conclusion. The novel is an exposé of pleasure-seeking bachelors, and a psychological study of an Oedipus complex.

Books p18 F 23 '30 150w
Boston Transcript p2 F 15 '30 800w

"Miss Bartley has written something more than a scathing characterization of a useless man; into her story she has woven the psychological reasons for Kirk Brinton's life, and these reasons bring pity into her denunciation."
+ N Y Times p34 D 1 '29 180w

BARTLEY, NALBRO ISADORAH (MRS HORACE LERCH). Immediate family. 316p $1 Farrar
30-16607

When Reuben Digby married Pete (Penelope) Prentice, he knew that Voss Prentice, family patriarch, was willing to overlook the shortcomings of his sons and daughters, to protect them with his money, to spoil them completely for the sake of blood loyalty. But Reuben, a serious young man with ideals, thought that Pete—vivacious, brilliant, experimental—was made of sterner stuff than her butterfly life indicated. He was mistaken. Rather than sacrifice himself and his ideals, he turned to Mirza, the despised and misunderstood member of the Prentice family clan, to make a new beginning.

"Nalbro Bartley has taken the tribe and shuffled its components into an amusing novel —a novel in which the reader's sympathy is but lightly engaged, yet in which his interest is effortlessly held. 'The Immediate Family' is portrayed with charity toward none, and a bit of malice toward all."
+ Books p12 O 5 '30 150w

Reviewed by G. T. Hellman
New Repub 64:81 S 3 '30 60w

"In spite of a certain heavy handedness in making her point, Mrs. Bartley has written a book that holds the interest to the inevitable end."
+ N Y Times p7 Jl 6 '30 460w

BARTON, BRUCE. On the up and up. 190p $2 Bobbs
814 29-25958

"In some sixty chapters of two or three pages each the author of 'The Man Nobody Knows' and other popular books writes in his snappy style little inspirational lectures for people who need to be encouraged and enlivened. Each one starts off with an anecdote which the author tells dramatically and he then goes on to draw from the story, in crisp, vigorous sentences, argument and illustration for the theme of the chapter and to show the anecdote's application to life."—N Y Times

---

"To present even a simple idea forcefully in three hundred words, as Mr. Barton does, and to twist its tale effectively, as Mr. Barton generally manages to do, is not so easy as it appears. Once in a while, of course, the intricate thought is fairly obvious or time-worn, but not infrequently the tabloid essay carries an arresting mental traffic signal."
+ Books p10 F 9 '30 120w

"Many half truths, and some whole ones, snappily stated."
Christian Century 46:1579 D 18 '29 20w
Cleveland Open Shelf p71 My '30
N Y Times p43 D 1 '29 100w
St Louis 28:35 F '30
Wis Lib Bul 26:65 F '30

BARTON, SIR DUNBAR PLUNKET, bart. Amazing career of Bernadotte, 1763-1844. 396p il $5 Houghton [21s Murray, J.]
B or 92 Charles XIV, king of Sweden and Norway. Europe—History—1789-1815
[29-23104]

Jean Baptiste Bernadotte, a Gascon, was promoted to the rank of general during the French Revolution. It was the first step in his amazing career. Napoleon did not like him, but none the less he emerged from the wars with a great reputation for military ability. Sweden, looking about for a crown prince, approved of him; so Bernadotte became a Swede and thereafter fought against Napoleon. Surviving the downfall of the latter, Bernadotte lived to be king of Norway and Sweden—tho he never learned a word of Swedish—and his descendants still sit on the Swedish throne.

Reviewed by Edmund Noble
Boston Transcript p8 Ja 11 '30 1050w

Reviewed by Francis Snow
Current Hist 31:1046 Mr '30 100w

"Sir Dunbar Barton's is a sober style which—excellent for the general purposes of historical writing—is a little too dry for recounting a life like that of Jean Baptiste Bernadotte of Pau who became King Charles John of Sweden. The reader cannot help regretting that there was not more fire mixed with Sir Dunbar's ink, that Bernadotte's life did not warm his biographer's calm English blood and inspire him to livelier bursts of writing. He has written a good summary of Bernadotte's career; but he has well-nigh missed convincing the reader that it was one of the most incredible romances in the whole length and breadth of history." T. R. Ybarra
+ — N Y Times p9 D 29 '29 1650w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 N 23 '29 950w
St Louis 28:111 Ap '30

"While those who have had the advantage of studying the volumes which the author has previously given to the subject will find here little that is new, either in the way of treatment or of material, fresh readers will find in the present abridgment a sufficiently full and, for the most part, trustworthy study of his subject."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p1011 D 5 '29 850w

BARTON, GEORGE AARON. Royal inscriptions of Sumer and Akkad. (Lib. of ancient Semitic inscriptions) 406p $6.50 Yale univ. press [28s Oxford]
492.19 Cuneiform inscriptions. Babylonia—History 30-2784

"Dr. Barton has collected the available inscriptions of the kings of Sumer and Akkad and an English translation enables one to have personal acquaintance. A transliteration permits the linguist to study the original text; on the opposite page will be found the English translation for the historian or general reader."—Christian Century

---

"This is a monumental piece of work of painstaking scholarship." T. C. R.
+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 25 '30 450w
Christian Century 47:598 My 7 '30 130w

"A new and complete collection of the extant inscriptions of early Babylonian rulers down to about 2000 B.C., with full transcription and translation, is, or should be, a book for which every student of the period has long hoped. Thureau-Dangin's memorable work appeared in its final form more than twenty years ago, since when a good deal has been learned and much new material accumulated. Such a book Professor Barton has here designed to provide; and for it he would be assured of the gratitude of many readers, were it not that the hopes with which they might open him must soon be changed to keen disappointment. . .

BARTON, G. A.—Continued
In various points of detail the book is not up to date; it shows little acquaintance with recent scholarship."
— Times [London] Lit Sup p524 Je 26 '30 550w

BARTON, MARGARET, and SITWELL, OSBERT, eds. Sober truth; a coll. of nineteenth-century episodes, fantastic, grotesque and mysterious; with a pref. by Osbert Sitwell. 280p il $3.50 Stokes [12s 6d Duckworth]

904 History—Curiosa and miscellany. Nineteenth century [31-147]

A collection of happenings, mysteries and horrors of the nineteenth century, compiled from many sources. The compilation includes among others short accounts of Joanna Southcott; King Christophe of Haiti; Caraboo, princess of Jevasu; General Tom Thumb; Lola Montez; the tragedy of Charlotte of Mexico; the mystery of the Mary Celeste; the home of Brigham Young; the Siamese twins; the man with the triangular teeth.

Reviewed by Garreta Busey
Books p41 D 7 '30 500w

Christian Science Monitor p10 My 17 '30 500w

"Our guides through the more than Gothic corridors of eccentricity are brilliant. They give their curiosities a skilful propriety of costume and setting. . . Mr. Sitwell is in his element in the long and animated preface."
+ Nation and Ath 47:150 My 3 '30 350w

"We are afraid none but Miss Barton and Mr. Sitwell will be able to find unity in this scrap-book. It is a collection of strange events, or horrors, and has only the unity given by time; for all occurred in the nineteenth century."
New Statesman 35:62 Ap 19 '30 120w

"Mr. Sitwell's brilliant expose of the nineteenth century by way of preface is excellent Sitwellery, but not much else." Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p4d D 13 '30 160w

"This is an age of anthologies; and here is the most curious anthology of all. It is designed to show that the solid, stodgy, respectable Victorian nineteenth century was not really so stodgy as it seemed, in that it could produce all the curious, sometimes almost incredible, happenings listed in this book."
Sat R 149:665 My 24 '30 300w

Spec 144:673 Ap 19 '30 850w

"Although considerably enlivened by Mr. Osbert Sitwell's provocative preface on the nineteenth century and its sins, this compilation is not a very successful essay in book-making. . . It is not very easy to see how Mr. Sitwell makes these fantastic affairs the basis for deductions about the peculiar character of the nineteenth century."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p310 Ap 10 '30 700w

BARTON, ROY FRANKLIN. Half-way sun;
2 life among the headhunters of the Philippines. 315p il $5 Brewer

919.14 Ifugaos. Luzon—Description and travel 30-32129

Mr Barton has lived, as a teacher, for eight years among the head-hunters of northern Luzon, the largest island of the Philippine group. This book represents his study, during these years, of the culture of the Ifugaos, their methods of gaining a livelihood, their native beliefs and superstitions, and their social customs. The book has many illustrations, including several photographs of the magnificently terraced lakes which the people have built for the growing of rice, their staple crop.

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice
Bookm 72:xvii D '30 220w

" 'The Half Way Sun' is a permanent contribution to our literature about the Philippines; far more interesting than any of the ephemeral political accounts. The book is beautifully illustrated, well printed and indexed, and not the least readable part of the book is its footnotes. Even they have savour." Ernestine Evans
+ Books p2 D 14 '30 950w
Outlook 156:506 N 26 '30 150w

BARTON, WILLIAM ELEAZAR. Lincoln at Gettysburg. 263p il $4 Bobbs

B or 92 Lincoln, Abraham. Gettysburg, Battle of, 1863 30-6278

The subtitle reads: "What he intended to say; what he said; what he was reported to have said; what he wished he had said." The complete story of the address is set down, including an account of Lincoln's preparation of the speech, his journey to Gettysburg, an analysis of the address, and the conflicting testimony of twenty-nine people who actually heard the speech, given in their own words. The two-hour oration of Edward Everett, who preceded Lincoln at the service of dedication, is given in full.

Booklist 26:348 Je '30

"It is an admirable piece of research, accurate and interesting."
+ Bookm 71:232 Ap '30 280w

"Mr. Barton has probably spoken the last word on the Gettysburg Address. It is a task which has been done dozens of times, in less thorough fashion, by college students in classes in historical methods and if it were not that every fragment or conjecture regarding Lincoln finds an eager public the effort might smack of academic erudition. That, however, cannot be until the Lincoln story has all been told as well as this event is here portrayed." Avery Craven
+ Books p4 Mr 23 '30 1300w
Boston Transcript p1 Ap 5 '30 550w

"Books have already been written about the Gettysburg address. No other will ever need to be written so long as this one is in print. This is absolutely the whole story." W. E. Garrison
+ Christian Century 47:433 Ap 2 '30 160w

Reviewed by Francis Snow
Current Hist 32:2 Ap '30 270w
N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 8 '30 80w

"Dr. Barton believes that the historical evidence concerning the Gettysburg address is now complete and that the time has come to consider it with finality. One may be ready to agree with him after reading his thoroughly entertaining book even if it be conceded that there will be a more realistic examination in the future of Lincoln and his work." A. S. Will
N Y Times p2 Mr 2 '30 1650w

"All who love American history are deeply indebted to Dr. Barton for his careful, painstaking research. He has long been noted for his unwillingness to accept legends and his readiness to tramp many miles to view a document or a letter. His new book is the result of his preoccupation with subjects auxiliary to the main subject of Lincoln ever since his retirement from the active ministry, and this has already given us several important books besides the two-volume biography of a few years ago." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p12 F 10 '30 900w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:38 My '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:12 S '30 280w

"The book not only justifies itself, it becomes a valuable bit not only of Lincolniana but of Americana. More than that, it sheds illumination upon the possibility of credible eye-witnesses offering diametrically contradictory evidence upon a case in hand."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 16 '30 1000w

Reviewed by J. G. Randall
Yale R n s 19:834 summer '30 230w

BATES, ERNEST SUTHERLAND. This land of liberty. 383p $3 Harper

323.44 United States—Politics and government. Liberty 30-21728

Tracing the various and increasing suppressions of individual and political liberty in this country, and deviations from constitutional rights, Mr Bates thruout his book cites specific examples. In addition to an indictment of Comstockianism in general, "intoxicated temperance", class hatred, pressure politics and other evils, he takes up special cases, such as those of Mooney and Billings, Sacco and Vanzetti, labor agitations of 1929 in North Carolina, suppressions of certain plays and books, including the case of Mary Ware Dennett and the recent attempt of the Christian Science church to suppress the Dakin biography of Mrs Eddy.

Booklist 27:92 N '30

Reviewed by Gilbert Seldes
Books p7 Ag 17 '30 1200w

Boston Transcript p2 S 17 '30 600w

Reviewed by Matthew Josephson
New Repub 64:105 S 10 '30 380w

"Professor Bates has written an exciting tale. . . All through 'This Land of Liberty' are the dramatic, desperate and painful stories of outrages on human liberty in these United States. Here are set forth a rather too rapid-fire series of tales of censorship, deportations, smashing of houses, breaking up of meetings, unlawful assaults, frame-ups and third-degree atrocities. Every old-fashioned American should read this volume. Only through such expositions of the truth can we hope to restore the liberties for which the Founding Fathers fought." Morris Ernst

+ N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 23 '30 650w

"Mr. Bates would have done better if, instead of harking back to a freedom which America never had but which it is assumed has been lost, he had pointed to the present mania for repression and regulation as a contemporary illustration of the age-long struggle between convention and progress." William MacDonald

N Y Times p3 Ag 31 '30 1950w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:83 N '30

St Louis 28:289 D '30

Reviewed by Norman Thomas
Sat R of Lit 7:135 S 20 '30 750w

"It is to be regretted that, while Mr Bates writes spiritedly, he often employs a tone more likely to be found persuasive by those who agree with him than by those whom he should be seeking to convince. Nearly all the questions require a larger background of theoretical discussion and sociological analysis than he gives them. . . Mr Bates allows his criticisms of injustice and intolerance, in which he should have the support of all fair-minded Americans, to lapse into a general indictment of American society."

— + Springf'd Republican p8 Ag 21 '30 550w

Reviewed by R. N. Baldwin
World Tomorrow 13:472 N '30 220w

BATES, HERBERT ERNEST. Seven tales and Alexander. 201p $2 Viking press [ltd ed 7s 6d Scholartis]

31-26025

"Four of the eight stories of this book are about children; a fifth is for children, and the remaining three are concerned with inarticulate people who are scarcely more than children in the secrecy and muteness of their hopes and disappointments . . . Alexander, a long story, is perhaps the most characteristic piece in the book. It describes merely how a little boy goes out for the day with his uncle to gather apples in the orchard of an eccentric old lady, how on the way they call at a cottage to see a sick man, and finally the return. All the curiosities, fears, calculations, the elusive joys, inarticulate regrets and wonderings of childhood are in this beautiful piece of work."—New Statesman

---

Booklist 27:207 Ja '31

"'Alexander' is a long story of unusual beauty, distinguished for its delicate perceptions and the half-remembered view it affords of the world as seen through the eyes of a twelve-year-old boy. The shorter pieces are less good. The style is polished and smooth, so much so that it is often ineffective; and the ideas and themes are delicate, verging on the fanciful, as in 'The Peach Tree,' and the briefer fairy story, 'The King Who Lived on Air,' but as presented they too seem trivial for a book of literary pretensions. But 'Alexander' is another matter."

+ — Books p14 S 28 '30 450w

Boston Transcript p2 D 20 '30 230w

"One picks up a new volume of short stories by the author of 'Day's End' with eagerness, wondering if at last that grave sensibility has found its wings. 'Seven Tales and Alexander' marks an undoubted development in his talent, but his imagination is still timid. Only in poetry can one find anything to compare with the peculiar atmosphere of his stories, in the work of those poets of rustic delights, Blunden or Gray." V. S. P.

+ — Christian Science Monitor p7 Ja 18 '30 550w

Reviewed by L. L. Irvine
Nation and Ath 46:320 N 30 '29 150w

"He is a writer whose sensibility deepens and intensifies more surely than his imagination widens. In tragic atmosphere and skilfulness of treatment there is probably nothing in this volume that excels the title story of Day's End, his earlier book; but this is not to say that Seven Tales and Alexander shows no development in his talent. He is more sparing with his wilder metaphors; he has discovered a sense of humour; above all, he is ripening without vitiating an exquisite childlike sensitiveness."

+ — New Statesman 34:398 D 28 '29 800w

"H. E. Bates may be considered a good candidate for the chair left open by the death of Katherine Mansfield. . . Mr. Bates has a weakness for fantasy and Beauty with a capital B, but in this story [Lanko's White Mare] he shows that he can wring the most poignant beauty from the homeliest elements, and can dwell more imaginatively in reality than it would be possible to do in fantasy." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p12 S 27 '30 100w

"Mr. Bates has a leaning toward fantasy which seems to rise naturally from the necessities of his style, which is sometimes delicate and tenuous to the point of obscurity. While it is not fair to say that he is more successful in fantasy than in any other medium, at least one can say that his success in it is more consistent. 'Alexander,' the longest tale in the present volume, and by all odds the finest, excellently illustrates Mr. Bates's peculiar talent."

+ N Y Times p7 O 12 '30 550w

"Mr. Bates has a weakness for fantasy and beautiful beauty. He can do without both, and in his best work he does without them." Edwin Seaver

+ — N Y World p3e O 19 '30 120w

"Mr. H. E. Bates has a charming talent—personal, sensitive, imaginative and sincere. His creative gift is interpretative and sympathetic rather than formative, so sensitive to the contours of life that it flows round instead of boring through them. He has no ready-made mould into which to pour his ideas; they clothe themselves in language in haphazard fashion; so that even now his writing shows traces of immaturity and amateurishness. But this is a defect of his quality; he never forces his note, never tries to eke out his own inspiration by borrowing from other peoples. . . His mind is fresh and fragrant, and embraces in its gentle, clumsy hold a wide variety of experience." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 148:618 N 23 '29 450w

"This collection is uneven, and it is to be feared that it may not be popular; but the best of the stories have a quality that will greatly commend them to the thoughtful reader: they

BATES, H. E.—Continued
never indulge themselves in analysis, but they set him at once to analyzing their effect." Basil Davenport

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:305 N 8 '30 500w

Reviewed by B. E. Todd

Spec 143:728 N 16 '29 180w

"A child's power of wonder, his intense absorption, the ethereality of his sudden, unconfessed affections are things which Mr. Bates realizes and reproduces in his somewhat slow and measured prose."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p920 N 14 '29 450w

BATES, KATHARINE LEE. America the dream. 210p $2.50 Crowell

811 30-6739

A collection of patriotic poems commemorating events or persons in our national history, all touched with the author's high idealism and deep love of country. The greater number of these poems are taken from two volumes now out of print: America the Beautiful, and The Retinue; others have appeared in various magazines.

"In poetic merit the work is uneven. Vivid, even profound, lines are followed by weak or dilute verses, but Miss Bates could handle many verse forms and has achieved with them a spirited and varied whole. Some passages are strikingly expressive." Garreta Busey

+ — Books p10 My 4 '30 700w

"In these poems Miss Bates catches the impetuousness, the enthusiasm, the dauntlessness, the vigor, and the power of this land. At times her fervor is almost religious, her devotion almost worship." R. K. M.

Boston Transcript p2 My 24 '30 400w

Reviewed by Percy Hutchison

N Y Times p16 Ag 17 '30 280w

Springf'd Republican p10 Je 24 '30 230w

BATES, KATHARINE LEE. Selected poems; ed. by Marion Pelton Guild. 230p $2.50 Houghton

811 30-18454

Poems selected from several of Miss Bates's published books, and later ones from periodicals, make up this collection, which supplements her patriotic poems collected in America the Dream. With an introductory biographical sketch of the poet by Marion Pelton Guild.

Booklist 27:58 O '30

"Miss Bates was not as much of the twentieth century as Emily Dickinson who passed away in western Massachusetts when Katharine Lee Bates was still young. The love of the past, so vivid to a scholar, is no fault in a poet. Even Miss Bates's archaisms seem to us no flaw. What weakness there is in Miss Bates's work, we believe, lies at the two ends of her customary train of thought. It runs from the specific to the general, from a rose to an angel, but looks neither very closely at the flower nor very deeply into heaven."

+ — Christian Science Monitor p5 Jl 19 '30 680w

"It is not possible to say how time will deal with the work of this woman. Miss Bates was not an imperial poetic voice. But as was said of another American, her native air was the sweeter for the song." Percy Hutchison

N Y Times p16 Ag 17 '30 130w

BATES, WILLIAM NICKERSON. Euripides; a student of human nature. 315p il $5 Press of the Univ. of Pa. [21s Oxford]

882.3 Euripides 30-4887

The object of this book, as stated in the Introduction, is to try to give the modern reader within reasonable compass a more accurate account and a truer appreciation of the dramatic genius of Euripides than is to be found elsewhere. Prof Bates presents, from the sources, a critical life of Euripides, a characterization and analysis of the extant plays, a survey of what is known about the lost plays, and an appendix on Euripides in the papyri.

Booklist 26:349 Je '30

"Taken all in all it is the most important study of Euripides that has been produced either in this country or abroad and will greatly redound to the credit of American learning and to Dr. Bates's leadership in Greek letters." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 1 '30 1100w

"If we ask at the end whether the promise of the Introduction has been fulfilled, we must confess that Professor Bates's book does not do much to deepen and broaden our knowledge of Euripides. One would still send an inquiring student to Nestle, Haigh, Decharme, and Lucas. Too many important aspects of the subject are neglected, and those aspects which are presented are not treated with any depth of understanding or with any recognition of the significant problems. The author is an admirer of Euripides and a special pleader in his defense; but when he is writing about a piece of doubtful merit, he has little to say except that he himself finds it excellent or that it is 'interesting and would probably act well.'" I. M. Linforth

— Class Philol 25:287 Jl '30 1350w

"The book is the best available compendium of facts for teachers and students of the Greek drama in the colleges, and it may be commended to the multitudinous adorers of Professor Murray's belles infideles as a safe and sanitary sedative, corrective, and alterative with just the quantum suf. of bromide that their temperature indicates." Paul Shorey

+ Sat R of Lit 6:691 F 1 '30 850w

"It is a book which it is no pleasure to criticize, because the indefatigable industry and accuracy which make it a storehouse of facts and references—merits which in themselves are eminently laudable—are so fatally dogged by a naivety and banality almost incredible in a classical scholar who has done 'many years' work upon Euripides.'"

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p271 Mr 27 '30 1200w

BATSON, HAROLD EDWARD, comp. Select bibliography of modern economic theory, 1870-1929; with an introd. by Lionel Robbins. (London school of economics and political science. Studies in economics and political science) 224p $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d Routledge]

016.33 Economics—Bibliography 30-15770

"References to the more important literature of modern theoretical economics listed in two ways: first, in a classified subject bibliography, with a brief annotation to each item; and second, by authors, the latter list including more items than the former, but without annotation. Prepared in the hope of aiding the student to decide what of the mass of material available he should examine in the original."—J Home Econ

Boston Transcript p5 N 8 '30 100w

J Home Econ 22:1018 D '30 80w

"This is a strictly academic book list. Economic theory is interpreted in a narrow sense, so as to exclude most of the writings that deal primarily with the application of theory rather than with theory itself. This, of course, greatly narrows its range, and makes it a work essentially for the use of experts rather than of 'lay' students of the subject. Within these limits it is useful, though its judgments, in the brief descriptions given of the listed volumes and articles, are apt to be somewhat partisan. Marxian literature is largely ignored, and unorthodox views in general are somewhat scantily treated: while the reference to Marx's own writings contains a serious blunder. The chief use of the volume consists in its listing of articles of theoretical interest from the leading academic periodicals."

+ — New Statesman 35:286 Je 7 '30 150w

BAYNES, DOROTHY JULIA (DORMER CRESTON, pseud.). Andromeda in Wimpole street; the romance of Elizabeth Barrett Browning. 287p $3 Dutton [10s 6d Butterworth, T.]

B or 92 Browning, Mrs Elizabeth (Barrett). Browning, Robert 30-24973

The romance of Elizabeth Barrett and Robert Browning is unfolded by Miss Creston—following an introductory sketch of Elizabeth's life prior to her first meeting with Browning—chiefly thru their chronologically arranged letters to each other. These letters trace the story of their love, the illness of Elizabeth, the opposition of her domineering father, the friends who were interested in the secret, but inevitable progress of the romance—up to Elizabeth's marriage and flight with Browning to Italy. A brief concluding chapter tells of their idyllic married life in Italy, the birth of their son, and Elizabeth's death in 1860.

Booklist 27:203 Ja '31

"Any reader interested in obtaining a fresh, vivid, and unusually complete account of the familiar and justly famous Browning romance will find these two volumes excellently calculated to provide it." Margaret Wallace

+ Bookm 72:83 S '30 250w

"Miss Creston has seamed up the tale of their courtship, through these letters, stopping here and there to tie a knot or rethread the needle, here and there adding a stitch or two of her own interpretation. The book, so carefully worked upon the fabric of truth, gives you a feeling that you have penetrated the inner beings of them both. Reading it, you know for a surety how at least two people lived and loved." V. P. Ross

Books p10 Jl 20 '30 500w

Boston Transcript p3 Ag 6 '30 200w

Christian Science Monitor p15 Ja 4 '30 300w

"The author is preoccupied with the romantic aspects of her subject, and seems to be exploiting a 'story' rather than making any definite contribution to literature. However much we may deplore what Mr. Nicolson calls the 'hagiographic celebration' of the Victorians, this new species of biographical novel has better promise of being ephemeral."

— Nation and Ath 46:56 O 12 '29 140w

"Miss Creston, with great tact and rare good judgment, has traced the course of that long, intelligent, rapturous and infinitely delicate debate by which the Brownings settled upon their elopement. Nowhere, perhaps not in the original correspondence, can one follow it more clearly or with greater enjoyment." Margaret Wallace

+ N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 19 '30 670w

"'Andromeda in Wimpole Street' is excellently proportioned. The writer has selected and arranged her material with care for her main intention, namely, to put before the reader one of the great love stories of the world with every solicitude for its poetry and its beauty."

+ N Y Times p4 Jl 27 '30 750w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p9 Jl 10 '30 1000w

"The chapters which set the stage for Browning's coming are quick, sensitive biography, with quotations from letters; so is the last chapter on the idyllic married life of the Brownings in Italy and France. Such a story has elements of humor, but is too human to be silly." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 155:387 Jl 9 '30 300w

St Louis 28:272 N '30

"The public which takes the Barrett-Browning love letters in clippings or parcels is a public which it is impossible to respect; but its dimensions are probably not small, and its wants, if not its capacities, are respectable. Miss Creston has ministered deftly to that public; she has an eye for the telling anecdote, an ear for the evocative and vibrant word. She is not herself a writer, but she is articulate like the rest of us, and we get on comfortably with her except in the fortunately rare moments when she makes a definite attempt to write."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:251 O 18 '30 480w

Spec 143:sup453 O 5 '29 1050w

"A fine and true presentation of Mrs Browning, written with notable refinement and sincerity. There is no fantastic straining after bizarre effects; no tawdry and theatrical smartness and exaggerations. It is a book worthy of Mrs Browning and one could hardly say more." Lilian Whiting

+ Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 13 '30 2100w

"The story which those letters tell is one of the most famous of love stories; and it is best told in the words of the lovers themselves. [The author] has told it so, in long extracts from the letters, with just enough running commentary to explain the references and a short final chapter on the married life. Those who do not know the story and the two long volumes of letters will find [this] book a good introduction to the subject."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p893 N 7 '29 170w

BEACH, JOSEPH WARREN. Glass mountain. 330p $2.50 Macrae Smith

30-28179

A portrayal of the charming Norma Wardroper, which shows the development of her emotional life during the years of her two marriages and the interval between them.

"Glass Mountain is the product of a critic turned creator, and as such automatically exposes itself to a more serious and less evasive analysis. Embarrassed by a threadbare theme and a disappointing leaning toward longwindedness, but flecked with passages of exquisite tenderness, this remains a work of shifting, uncertain values." W. J. Fadiman

+ — Bookm 72:419 D '30 680w

"In many respects this is the most concrete and clarifying chart to the rudderless drift of the American expatriate in France which has yet found its way into fiction. This distinction it attains strictly within the borders of a logical and solidly presented story." Lisle Bell

+ Books p17 O 12 '30 600w

"The subtler interest of the story has all to do with Norma's relations with Major Wardroper. If Max had thought too little, Major Wardroper is a man who questions too much, so that for both of them the mountain is fully as slippery as in Max's carefree days. As a study of the relationships between men and women this book has much to say. Mr. Beach posesses a very happy clarity of thought and expression, and an intuitive imagination which gives his story unusual force." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p3 O 29 '30 550w

"While the novel shows penetrating psychological observation, the characters just fail to attain convincing vitality."

Nation 131:532 N 12 '30 120w

"Dr. Beach's first venture into fiction leaves one with the impression that he is a far better critic than he is a novelist." R. C. B. B.

— N Y Evening Post p4d Ja 3 '31 220w

"With the sureness of touch of a writer who has already served his literary apprenticeship, Professor Beach, hitherto known for his critical writing, has pieced together entertainingly his matured observations and reflections in a story that has nothing more academic in its psychological studies than insatiable desire to examine the springs of character and conduct. . . The author has not bothered to contrive a strikingly original plot design. He has more sensibly devoted himself to constructing the overtones which give authenticity to the commonplaces of life."

+ N Y Times p6 O 12 '30 550w

"Professor Beach has created neither live characters nor real situations: everything in his book is vague, soft, mushy, and there is little to remember. The prose is stale, the dialogue unreal. There are a few excellent descriptions of the Italian countryside, a well-written scene in a Paris pension, and two or three incidental sketches that are not unskilful."

BEACH, J. W.—Continued
— + Sat R of Lit 7:313 N 8 '30 80w

BEADLE, CHARLES. Expatriates at large. 255p $2 Macaulay

The Americanized Latin quarter of Paris, with its cafés commercialized by fake artists and would-be bohemians, is the background for a series of connected stories in which the characters, mostly drunk, move in parade before the eyes of the philosophizing "Eskimo." Murder, suicide, cocaine, liquor, love, marriage, and modernistic art are jumbled here in Montparnasse, where all the world's children come to "do the things they've been brought up to believe they mustn't do."

"'Expatriates at Large' is practically all made up of fragmentary conversations. The scene varies mostly as to the difference between one café and another. Everything said is accompanied by the endless clinking of glasses and the bibbing of sweet, poisonous liqueurs. Probably Mr. Beadle has created an accurate picture of post-war bohemian life in Paris, where the grape is more worshipped than the muse, where the effort to escape reality is more grotesquely unsuccessful than in other places."
— Books p14 My 18 '30 350w

"The illusions of reality raised by this book are few. Some of the characters are fairly convincing. But Mr. Beadle needs more than a superficial technique, and a rather ingenious point of view to re-create successfully the café loungers, models and all the artistic riff-raff so familiar to tourist expeditions accompanied by confidential guides."
— N Y Times p9 Je 22 '30 350w

"Viewed as a novel, the work is formless, lacking in all trace of dramatic development, in coherency of situations, and sanity of characterization. The half-distracted young sophisticates of both sexes who reel through its pages in a perpetual state of strident drunkenness may be accepted as side-splitting burlesques of familiar transplanted types, and thus regarded there is a vast deal of merriment to be found in the spectacle of their debauched existence."
Sat R of Lit 6:996 Ap 26 '30 180w

BEALE, HOWARD KENNEDY. Critical year; a study of Andrew Johnson and reconstruction. 454p il $3.75 Harcourt

973.8 Reconstruction. Johnson, Andrew. United States—Politics and government
30-14060

The critical year here studied is the political period between Lincoln's death in April, 1865 and November, 1866. It is Mr Beale's thesis that this year and a half of reconstruction determined the future of the United States. This book is an intensive study of the conflict between Johnson and the radical leaders, Ben Wade, Thaddeus Stevens, Charles Sumner and their followers. Like the recent biographies by Judge Winston and Lloyd Stryker the book does belated justice to the personal character and ability of Andrew Johnson.

"The book is a welcome addition to recent studies in the field of Reconstruction. It is well documented, giving evidence of careful study of the manuscript resources of the period, as well as newspapers, government publications, biographical studies, and the large mass of special and monographic material. The scholarship is sound, the temper scientific, and the style, in the main, attractive." C. R. Lingley
+ Am Hist R 36:171 O '30 900w
Booklist 27:98 N '30

Reviewed by D. C. Seitz
Bookm 71:470 Jl '30 400w

Reviewed by T. R. Hay
Books p13 Je 29 '30 1250w

Reviewed by W. E. Garrison
Christian Century 47:918 Jl 23 '30 500w

"Professor Beale's voluminous citations and extensive bibliography give his work solidity and authoritativeness. Yet it is not solidity with dullness, for the author's fortunate style enlivens his scholarly pages. He has clarified many of the minor points of the period and his interpretation throws new light on the roots of radical policy. The work is a credit to American historical scholarship and a real contribution to the vast literature on Reconstruction." E. F. Brown
+ Current Hist 32:820 Jl '30 800w

"Professor Beale has found much new material, but most of it has been known for years by students of American history. The great importance of his book lies in the fact that here for the first time it is all assembled in one place, and all the issues of the campaign set forth clearly, unhindered by the allegiance of the older historians to economic and social aims fostered, however remotely, by the victory of the Radical Congress." Allen Tate
+ New Repub 63:376 Ag 13 '30 950w

"Based on material hitherto inaccessible, this new interpretation of a dramatic page in American history is a fine constructive piece of work." F. H. Martens
+ N Y Evening Post p4s Je 7 '30 230w

"The thesis of Professor Beale is maintained with great strength in a crisp and lucid style, and fortified by as astonishing an army of authorities as ever was gathered together. His research is prodigious. He has been at the primal sources, and he is able to disregard utterly the myth-like and semi-traditional history that has been the American credo from 1866 to 1929. He is dispassionately juridical in disposing of the whole group of fashionable historians, most particularly James Ford Rhodes." C. W. Thompson
+ N Y Times p3 Je 1 '30 1850w
Outlook 155:188 Je 4 '30 550w
St Louis 28:219 S '30

"Mr. Beale has given us the best treatment of the first crisis of Reconstruction that has yet appeared. His well-written book is not so modest in scope as the title would indicate. The weakness of Mr. Beale's book lies in a certain over-emphasis upon economic motives. . . The great strength of the volume lies in its calm, well-reasoned vindication of Johnson's principal acts, and in its graphic exposure of the dishonest nature of the Radical campaign of 1866." Allan Nevins
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:175 O 4 '30 1300w

"The details of the 1866 campaign have been admirably assembled—with vivid effect despite their minuteness. In interpretative paragraphs, particularly in connection with economic issues, the work is less successful, and the reader will wish that the author had not so insistently challenged the conclusions or workmanship of other historians. The technic of the study is deserving of praise, there is a full bibliography, and the style is fluent and readable."
+ — Springf'd Republican p7e Je 15 '30 1050w

Reviewed by E. P. Oberholtzer
Yale R n s 20:417 winter '31 300w

BEAMAN, S. G. HULME. Ernest the policeman. 158p il $2 Oxford
30-7787

"Ernest is not a flesh-and-blood policeman but the wooden guardian of Toytown and its inhabitants. He is the confidant and adviser of the Mayor, whom he accompanies on the midnight visit to the Magician at the crossroads and with whom he shares other adventures. Not all the stories centre about Ernest. The first one concerns itself with Mr. Punch and the donkey he insists on introducing into the play given by the Toytown Marionettes."
—N Y Times

Cleveland Open Shelf p134 N '30

"There is much pleasant nonsense in the book that will make children chuckle. Occasionally, however, the author falls into the special pitfall for this type of story and, looking over the heads of the children, cracks a joke or two for the benefit of the adults in his audience. Writers of nonsense stories of the first rank are always single of purpose. . . The illustrations are clever and humorous, suggesting admirably toys come to life." A. T. Eaton
+ — N Y Times p25 Mr 2 '30 180w

Outlook 155:346 Jl 2 '30 80w

"One of the very best features of these six stories, which center about Ernest, the important policeman, is their dialogue. This reminds one of the Milne dialogue in its conciseness, its rapidity, and now and then in its whimsical cadence and sudden turn of phrase, all of which characteristics make for pleasure. Mr. Beaman has added immeasurably to his stories by his own illustrations." M. E. Chase
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1078 My 24 '30 380w

BEAMES, JOHN. Army without banners. 301p $2.50 Little

30-7195

Billy Clovelly and his young wife Maggie came to the pioneer country of Saskatchewan, picked out their home site, built their cabin, and welcomed the next settler to come, an Englishman and his family, the Kents. The story follows the gradual conquest of the wilderness and the establishment of the various comforts of civilization.

Booklist 27:27 S '30

Reviewed by Guy Holt
Bookm 71:351 Je '30 50w

Books p10 My 18 '30 100w

Boston Transcript p3 Ap 12 '30 220w

"Neither wildly exhilarating nor yet uninteresting. It deals with natural human beings in a natural way, and shows shrewd, realistic observation and a gift for clean-cut characterization." F. H. M.
+ N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 22 '30 80w

"A novel distinguished rather for its material than for its craftsmanship. Mr. Beames has exercised painstaking care and an intimate knowledge of his subject matter in charting the progression from scattered log cabins to towns and wealthy estates. The fascination of the book lies more in these steps of civilization however than in their recounting or in the individual lives that thread the main sweep of the work."
+ N Y Times p7 Mr 23 '30 380w

Springf'd Republican p7e Je 8 '30 120w

BEARD, CHARLES AUSTIN, ed. Toward civilization. 307p il $3 (12s 6d) Longmans

901 Civilization. Machinery. Progress

30-11751

Answering the challenge of a former symposium, Whither Mankind, this volume presents the opinions of sixteen scientists and engineers, constituting a survey of the technical tendencies of our modern age and a defense of our machine civilization. The introduction and summary are by the editor. Contents: The new age and the new man, by R. E. Flanders; Science lights the torch, by R. A. Millikan; The spirit of invention in an industrial civilization, by E. A. Sperry; Power, by C. F. Hirshfeld; Transportation, by R. V. Wright; Communication, by L. de Forest; Modern industry and management, by D. S. Kimball; Agriculture, by T. D. Campbell; Engineering in government, by L. W. Wallace; Art in the market place, by R. F. Bach; The machine and architecture, by S. F. Voorhees and R. T. Walker; Work and leisure, by L. M. Gilbreth; Education and the new age, by E. Wickenden; Machine industry and idealism, by Michael Pupin; Spirit and culture under the machine, by H. N. Davis; Summary—The planning of civilization, by C. A. Beard.

Reviewed by T. V. Smith
Am J Soc 36:487 N '30 450w

"Here and there is a chapter quite worth reading, but the general effect is to leave the intelligent reader with little fresh inspiration and very few new ideas." F. H. Hankins
Ann Am Acad 150:307 Jl '30 170w

Booklist 26:350 Je '30

"As a group these essays are dull, unimaginative and rambling. Taken at their face value, they do not exhibit the kind of thinking, the kind of courage or the kind of social responsibility needed in members of the staff of world engineering control. . . Certain of the essays are clearly and competently written, but the majority are indifferently written chiefly because the author is out of his medium." Stuart Chase
— Books p1 Ap 27 '30 1200w

Boston Transcript p2 My 21 '30 650w

Reviewed by H. B. Rhodes
Christian Century 47:991 Ag 13 '30 550w

"This volume is distinctly more pleasant reading than the first. Moreover, its literary quality speaks well for the culture of a group of men supposed to be given over wholly to other than literary pursuits. Perhaps the 'ghost writer' may have lent his adventitious aid, or Professor Beard's editorial endeavors may have been applied to the attainment of felicity of expression. If not, there must be ascribed to engineering an influence upon literary style no less potent than in the last two years it has exercised upon American politics." W. J. Abbot
+ Christian Science Monitor p8 My 3 '30 750w

"Very few of the contributors have anything new to offer. Their essays are noticeably lacking in fire, imagination and literary originality. The writers have apparently no real insight into the social and economic complexities which industrialism and mechanization have created. They do not delve into realities but skim along surfaces." M. K. Munroe
— Current Hist 32:639 Jl '30 750w

J Home Econ 22:690 Ag '30 80w

Reviewed by G. E. G. Catlin
Nation 130:681 Je 11 '30 1100w

"What we have in 'Toward Civilization,' instead of a critical facing of facts, is the usual large and noble pæan to the benefits of power and mass production and rapid transportation and instantaneous communication, varied by a catalogue of the number of governmental departments affected by engineering, and interspersed with innumerable references to the wisdom, integrity, fairness and general aptitude of the engineer, a class of illumined minds who, according to the authors—and who would know better?—combine the chivalry of a Bayard with the intellectual resourcefulness of a Faraday. . . One quarrels with these representative engineers because their combination of arrogance and fatalism prevents just such an accurate appraisal of the forces of modern industry as is necessary to direct it toward civilization." Lewis Mumford
— New Repub 63:49 My 28 '30 1350w

"One puts down this volume with the conviction that just as many of the evils attributed to the 'machine' can be blamed on the survival of fragments of an obsolete culture as can be laid at the doors of scientists and technologists. And because the question is an increasingly important one, this is, even aside from the intrinsic interest of most of its chapters, an important book." R. L. Duffus
+ N Y Times p3 Ap 27 '30 1300w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p13 Ap 24 '30 950w

Outlook 154:708 Ap 30 '30 180w

Reviewed by F. L. Robbins
Outlook 155:66 My 14 '30 220w

Pratt p32 summer '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:13 Ag '30 250w

BEARD, C. A., ed.—Continued

"Possibly the engineering mind does not here appear to advantage because the medium of words is not its usual medium. Certainly, so far as going toward civilization is concerned, the essays seem to me mostly aimless. The two by R. E. Flanders and R. A. Millikan simply recite the familiar tale of scientific advance. Mr. Pupin is merely pleasant, and Mr. Wickenden on education is vague. These authors do not seem to envisage the social problem. There is of course better stuff in the book. More notable chapters are those on industry and management (D. S. Kimball), work and leisure (Lillian Gilbreth), and spirit and culture under the machine (H. N. Davis). The two chapters on the arts are hopeful, if not helpful." H. M. Jones

— + Sat R of Lit 6:1022 My 10 '30 650w

Spec 145:361 S 13 '30 300w

"As a whole, these surveys of modern invention, power, transportation, agriculture, engineering and industrial art seldom get beyond generalizations of a fairly obvious or else obviously conjectural kind. Though the language in this book is fluent and organic, thought is far too general to be more than mildly suggestive or mildly instructive."

— Springf'd Republican p7e My 4 '30 1400w

Times [London] Lit Sup p923 N 6 '30 150w

"The value lies between the lines rather than upon the open page; it is a revelation rather than an exposition. It makes clear, as no elaborate argument could, the wonderful work of the engineer in his own shop and his helplessness outside of it." W. H. Hamilton

Yale R n s 20:177 autumn '30 750w

BEARD, CHARLES AUSTIN, and BEARD, WILLIAM. American leviathan; the republic in the machine age. 824p il $5 Macmillan

342.73 Science and state. United States—Scientific bureaus. United States—Politics and government 30-31580

The authors of this survey of the activities of the American federal government contrast the democracy of the country as conceived by its founders with the facts concerning its actual functioning today, revolutionized by machinery and modern science. With bibliography and index.

"Constitutes a new type of civics, without understanding of which we can know no more about how we are governed than did the illiterate Russian peasant under the Czar." George Soule

+ Books p5 N 30 '30 1100w

Boston Transcript p2 Ja 3 '31 1100w

"The Beards are chary of philosophical reflection, cut down the history in most cases to the merest outline, and devote themselves mainly to cataloguing the long list of government operations with summary descriptions of the various parts. The result in their case is a book which, while of high value and unique practical usefulness as an up-to-date explanation of what the federal government does, seems in comparison with Bryce's sweeping and philosophical survey pervadingly formal and unexpectedly dry. . . The treatment of the matter by the Beards is certainly both masterly and illuminating, but it is not conspicuously so save in the wealth of information that is displayed and the thoroughness with which the technological activities of the government are traced. In comparison with Bryce the book appears as an elaborate and able piece of special pleading, replete with supporting arguments in the form of illustrations but curiously slight in its critical evaluation of the contemporary trend." William MacDonald

+ — Nation 131:622 D 3 '30 1150w

Reviewed by Lindsay Rogers

New Repub 65:142 D 17 '30 1600w

"It is a richly informative book that Dr. Beard and his son have given us. Nowhere else can so compendious, accurate and recent a store of facts upon all the Federal departments, bureaus and commissions, upon the courts, the national legislature and the executive, upon the problems of diplomacy, of finance and of war, be found. The publishers are sadly beside the mark in comparing it with Bryce or De Tocqueville. It has very little in common with the works of these two masters of broad social observation and philosophic disquisition. But in its own much narrower field it stands very nearly alone." Allan Nevins

+ — N Y Times p11 N 30 '30 1250w

"Its function is information, and this it gives in full measure. It is also information presented by a man who cannot be fooled by mere motions. Beard presents quite clearly just how propaganda methods are used to affect public opinion, as for instance, in public utility and power cases. On the other hand, he is the dispassionate commentator." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p12 N 19 '30 950w

Reviewed by W. R. Shaw

R of Rs 83:6 Ja '31 220w

" 'The American Leviathan,' which certainly gives one enough to think about, is perhaps the best book Mr. Beard has yet written. Its subject is the American Federal Government. Its substance is a thoroughly realistic description of the way that government actually functions." Carl Becker

+ Sat R of Lit 7:381 N 29 '30 2500w

BEARD, MIRIAM (MRS VAGTS). Realism in romantic Japan. 521p il $5 Macmillan

915.2 Japan—Civilization. Japan—Social life and customs 30-25633

A sympathetic and penetrating study of contemporary Japanese life and the effects upon it of occidental influences. The author has observed keenly, and carefully analyzed the problems in the political, social and cultural world of modern Japan—in that peculiar state of transition between feudal romanticism and modern industrialism.

"An intelligent and serious work, this book clears up a great many questions for those interested in the awakening Orient." Louis Rich

+ Bookm 72:443 D '30 250w

" 'Realism in Romantic Japan' is a travel book of the new order, a chronicle of that greater adventure requiring not brawn, physical prowess and a fevered imagination, but intellectual courage, tact and a thirst for knowledge; the exploration of an alive and therefore shifting contemporary civilization, which Miss Beard describes as 'a great light that requires a thousand facets for its reflection.' And to this almost insurmountable task of examining the thousand facets she has brought both humility and ardent sympathy." Caroline Singer

+ Books p16 N 2 '30 850w

N Y Evening Post p4d N 8 '30 80w

"Miss Beard took with her a sensitive understanding, a knowledge of much of the rest of the world, and the penetrating eye of an experienced writer who is able to pierce beneath surface indications, to pick the permanent from the ephemeral, the important from the trivial. To her own wide culture she added a wealth of day-by-day information on what has happened in Japan in the last decade, supplemented with her own observations, which seem to have spread over a period of several years." H. L. Matthews

+ N Y Times p12 D 7 '30 1400w

"Miriam Beard somehow contrived to see a great deal that seems to have escaped most writers of Japanese travel books. Her comments on the university life of today and social conditions in general are penetrating and in the main new to western readers." W. B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 82:14 N '30 80w

Sat R of Lit 7:510 Ja 3 '31 60w

BEARD, PATTEN. Adventures in dish gardening. 204p il $2.50 De La Mare

716.4 Gardens, Miniature 30-16575

The adaptation of an old Janapese art to western uses. There are chapters on materials to be used in dish gardening; the dishes themselves and the plants and figures to be used; various types of dish gardens; and care and renewal of the garden. Illustrations of more than fifty sample dish gardens with instructions for making them are included.

Booklist 27:55 O '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p150 D '30

"The author's directions and advice are ample, even to the point of being somewhat repetitious and over-worded, to enable any one not wholly wanting in artistic perception and capacity to practice this form of gardening, and she offers many suggestions as to uses that can be found for its products."

+ N Y Times p15 Ag 24 '30 200w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:88 D '30

St Louis 28:213 S '30

BEASLEY, NORMAN. Freighters of fortune; the story of the Great Lakes. 311p il $3.50 (12s 6d) Harper

386 Great Lakes—History. Great Lakes—Commerce. Shipping—United States 30-18028

An account of the romance and extraordinary commercial development of water transport on the Great Lakes.

Booklist 27:49 O '30

"Mr. Beasley has got together a great amount of material, and its mere presentation in a single book cannot be other than interesting and suggestive. But it is confused by a too-conscious 'liveliness' of style which is often merely irritating; the great figures—the Whites, the Bradleys, the Mathers, Hannas, Pickands, Rockefellers and Carnegies—pass across the scene with a cardboard stiffness, and the author has not solved the problem of drawing an infinitely diverse subject together into the thread of an easily-followed narrative." Walter Millis

— + Books p7 Ag 10 '30 600w

"Mr. Beasley has told this story very competently." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p8m Je 28 '30 150w

"Mr. Beasley's story, in its latter portions, is quite frankly a glorification of lake traffic and those responsible for it. . . The atmosphere of propaganda which this feature of the book produces detracts somewhat from its pure narrative value. Before one is through one is a little dizzy with figures and a little tired of the feats, remarkable though they may be, of captains of industry. Moreover, it is Mr. Beasley's habit to overdramatize. The facts of his story might speak for themselves without quite so much assistance. But the book remains a valuable and on the whole an interesting one." R. L. Duffus

+ — N Y Times p8 Jl 20 '30 1050w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p9 Je 23 '30 350w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:74 O '30

St Louis 28:233 O '30

BEAUX, CECILIA. Background with figures. [2] 356p il $5 Houghton

B or 92 Artists—Correspondence, reminiscences, etc. 30-32610

In an autobiography as sensitive and restrained as her portraits, America's most distinguished woman painter tells the story of a full and interesting life—her girlhood in Philadelphia, study there with William Sartain and Thomas Eakins, later student days in Paris, friendships with Saint Gaudens, Sargent, and the Gilders and the commission which brought her the privilege of painting war portraits of Clemenceau, Cardinal Mercier and Admiral Beatty.

"The career of a distinguished American portrait painter is set forth in this book with exactly the touch to be expected of her. Miss Beaux's art is soundly constructed, it is marked by taste and dignity, it has character. She writes as she paints, with precision and with a certain restraint. Nominally the last mentioned habit might seem to be qualified in the present instance, for in the narration of her experiences in girlhood and young womanhood she is more detailed than is, perhaps, quite necessary. But at bottom she remains a discreet and even reticent chronicler." Royal Cortissoz

+ Books p7 D 14 '30 1000w

Reviewed by D. L. Mann

Boston Transcript p2 Ja 3 '31 2050w

"Miss Beaux's book is good reading all the way. In a dozen pages one doesn't notice a trite phrase or a hackneyed sentiment. Her writing has that quality which derives only from direct expression of intuitions." E. C. S.

+ Christian Science Monitor p5 D 27 '30 550w

"I have read Miss Cecilia Beaux's autobiography with much delight. I cannot go the whole way with Miss Beaux in a number of her enthusiasms, not by a good deal; St. Gaudens sculpture, the literary circles of Richard Watson Gilder's day, Sargent—these are some of them. But I am sure Miss Beaux would allow me this freedom, knowing well enough that for me, also, sooner or later, the wheel will turn and many that I have thought of with wonder will be taken by some critic of my pages with a mere mildish flutter and cooler estimation." Stark Young

New Repub 65:219 Ja 7 '31 1450w

"Some of our modern reminiscences are acrid and spiteful and much too clever, and therefore not a little tiresome, but there is nothing of this in Miss Beaux's memories. They were pleasant memories of pleasing people and experiences with just enough of sentiment to give them charm. The author has not humiliated the artist in this delightfully written and attractively published book." C. G. Bowers

+ N Y World p3e D 28 '30 480w

"This delightful book of reminiscences bears out the belief that painters are apt to write well. Background with Figures contains much critical comment on painters and on methods and ideals. But Miss Beaux's book is chiefly rich as the personal narrative of a woman both sensitive and alert who lived in a world which has disappeared." F. L. R.

+ Outlook 156:547 D 3 '30 350w

BECHDOLT, FREDERICK RITCHIE. Giants of the old West. 245p il $2 Century

920 West—Biography. Pioneers. Frontier and pioneer life 30-25077

A study of the personalities and careers of the men who took leading parts in the making of the old West: John Colter, William Ashley, Stephen Austin, Brigham Young, William Becknell, James Pattie, Alexander Majors, Charles Goodnight, John Augustus Sutter, and the heroes of the Alamo.

N Y Times p19 O 26 '30 320w

St Louis 28:300 D '30

"Mr. Bechdolt writes with his customary enthusiasm, and commendably emphasizes the commercial and industrial bearing of the various activities. The volume should prove to be a handy compilation, as far as it goes, of Western expansion high-lights reflected from standard sources. Now and again the author's zest for the picturesque encourages fiction to outrun fact." E. L. Sabin

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:350 N 15 '30 600w

BECHER, AUGUSTA EMILY (PRINSEP) (MRS SEPTIMUS HARDING BECHER). Personal reminiscences in India and Europe, 1830-1888; ed. by H. G. Rawlinson. 230p $3 Smith, R.R. [12s Constable]

B or 92 India—History—Sepoy rebellion, 1857-1858

The autobiography of an Englishwoman, Augusta Becher, which sketches her life in England and India from 1830 to 1888. A member of one noted Anglo-Indian family, Mrs Becher married into another, and her diary gives lively pictures of domestic life in India between 1850 and 1870.

"The volume is hardly adapted for general circulation, though for the curious reader it contains stories of raw material and the very stuff of human drama—but one must read as much between the lines as in them." F. T. Marsh

Bookm 72:444 D '30 250w

Boston Transcript p2 O 25 '30 600w

"Mrs. Becher lacked a natural turn with the pen, nor was she an interesting woman, save in so far as all human beings are interesting. When she sat down, at the age of fifty, to write her memoirs for the benefit of her children, she certainly never thought that fifty years later they would be published. But the historic sense has grown so strong that anything more than thirty years old becomes an antique which we value for its period associations. The general reader, moreover, has learnt to let his fancy play around the lives of the obscure." Raymond Mortimer

Nation and Ath 48:18 O 4 '30 750w

"Professor H. G. Rawlinson, to whom we owe the publication of this vivid and interesting autobiography, stresses in the introduction he contributes the value of the major part of the book, which deals with Mrs. Becher's life as a soldier's wife in India before, during and after the Mutiny, and no doubt he is justified in doing so, for not only does Mrs. Becher give us an extraordinarily vivid story of the anxieties, terrors and sufferings endured by the women and children during the days of the killing, she also gives us many vivid domestic sketches of Anglo-Indian life in the 'fifties, 'sixties and 'seventies of the last century."

+ Sat R 150:424 O 4 '30 300w

"Mrs. Becher's pen is worn and blunt compared with Emily Eden's fine crowquill. And yet this new volume is exceedingly attractive with its artless description of Anglo-Indian life between the two tragedies of the Afghan War and the Mutiny. . . In recording the social background of the years just preceding the outbreak of the Mutiny, Mrs. Becher helps us to understand in what spirit that outburst was met, checked, and overcome."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p646 Ag 14 '30 800w

BECK, JAMES MONTGOMERY. May it please the court; ed. by O. R. McGuire. 511p il $5 Harrison; Macmillan

340 Law—Addresses, essays, lectures. United States—Constitutional law 30-16585

The addresses and arguments of James M. Beck, formerly solicitor-general of the United States, on the old and the new Supreme court of the United States, Washington and the Constitution, the lawyer and social progress, the nation and the states, the revolt against prohibition, the Northern Securities case, the Great Lakes controversy, the Constitution and the flexible tariff, and other subjects of legal or political importance. With an introductory biographical sketch by the editor.

Booklist 27:92 N '30

"A book of charm united with historical value." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 23 '30 750w

Columbia Law R 30:1126 D '30 110w

N Y Times p20 O 5 '30 320w

"There is not a single speech that does not impress with its artistry and erudition. They are addresses growing out of a ripe scholarship and differing from the average dry-as-dust speeches of the academy in their warmth, charm, brilliance and humor. They move sparklingly with the intimacy of a conversation, and belong to literature." C. G. Bowers

+ N Y World p5m Jl 27 '30 800w

"Mr. Beck has the not too common gift among lawyers of making a legal argument vivid and stimulating to the lay mind." W. B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 82:12 O '30 80w

"It was natural that in the selection of material for this book choice should be made primarily of addresses and arguments dealing with governmental policy and public questions. These reveal an alert and cultivated mind, but they are of uneven value as contributions to political thought or public knowledge. The advocates habit has strong hold of Mr Beck, and, in his constitutional discussions, he sometimes lets brilliant advocacy usurp the place of academic analysis."

+ — Springf'd Republican p10 Jl 24 '30 700w

BECK, MRS LILY (MORESBY) ADAMS (E. BARRINGTON, LOUIS MORESBY, pseuds.). Duel of the queens. 387p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Cassell]

Mary Stuart, queen of the Scots—Fiction 30-24775

The beauty and the gentle, loving character of Mary, queen of Scots, are contrasted in this romantic novel with the personality of the "ugly, redhaired witch" who sat upon England's throne. The careers of Mary, victim of tragedy, and Elizabeth, the arrogant victor, are followed from the accession of each to her throne, to the execution of Mary at Elizabeth's instigation.

Booklist 27:159 D '30

"Those who come to the story with prepossessions will find a swiftly moving history, compact of pathos, tragedy; royal state and royal misfortune; indeed, a most readable example of its genre."

+ Books p14 S 28 '30 350w

"There can be no doubt that E. Barrington has studied her character and the history of the times in which the two queens lived and waged their fight for supremacy. She knows every bit of scandal against Queen Mary which the gossips of that other day rolled under their tongues as a sweet morsel, and rolled off their tongues to the undoing of the queen—knows it, and in her romance has branded it false." J. W. M.

Boston Transcript p2 O 8 '30 850w

Cleveland Open Shelf p149 D '30

"Like so many of Mary Stuart's contemporaries, the author has fallen in love with the fascinating Queen who is her heroine, and whom she presents as a model of all the virtues. . . Mary being presented as a saint, it is of course to be expected that Elizabeth should appear as the worst of sinners, continually plotting against Mary."

N Y Times p24 O 12 '30 300w

Times [London] Lit Sup p785 O 2 '30 220w

BECK, MRS LILY (MORESBY) ADAMS (E. BARRINGTON, LOUIS MORESBY, pseuds.). Openers of the gate; stories of the occult. 368p $2.50 Cosmopolitan bk.

30-23901

A collection of short stories, all of which deal with the supernatural or the occult. Contents: The openers of the gate; Lord Killary; How Felicity came home; Waste Manor; The mystery of iniquity; Many waters cannot quench love; The horoscope; The tug; Hell; The man who saw.

"The author enters 'the undiscovered continent of the superconscious faculty' without a compass and emerges without a map. She leaves one with the feeling that the occult world cannot possibly be as absurdly ordered as these tales indicate; oblivion would be infinitely less confusing. From the evidence presented, the author would have us believe that people are called to the other world by the affection of departed dogs; that English squires who develop a sudden aversion to fox-hunting are reincarnated Hindus; that lost souls walk in Kensington Gardens unaware that they have experienced death, and so on. The episodes are as bizarre as the conclusions are diverse. The mixing of Oriental with Christian mythology has resulted in a strange emulsion."
— Books p10 Ag 17 '30 280w

"A deep seriousness underlies each of these ten stories of the occult, a seriousness that may be completely missed if one reads the book hurriedly, or for its entertainment alone. That the stories do please the senses and with their skilfully worked out plot provide entertainment for the mind is reason enough for the book."
+ Boston Transcript p2 D 24 '30 300w

"All the tales have too many details, too much explanation. The author seems to feel that she must carefully dot every 'i,' and cross every 't,' leaving nothing whatever to the imagination or the intelligence of her reader."
— N Y Times p16 Ag 31 '30 450w

"A touch less of certainty, even though the doubt was disingenuous, would in all probability have made the volume more persuasive, and hence more effective propaganda. But when were the bearers of a new faith ever less than cocksure? The stories are not entertaining, except in odd stretches here and there, because thesis always outrides plot."
— Sat R of Lit 7:226 O 11 '30 500w

BECKER, MRS MAY (LAMBERTON), ed. Gold-
² en tales of the old South. 348p il $2.50 Dodd
Short stories—Collections 30-30710

A selection of stories that reflect life in the old romantic South. Edited, with a general introduction and brief biographical sketches of the authors, by May Lamberton Becker. Contents: The militia company drill, by O. H. Prince; Taking the census, by J. J. Hooper, "Posson Jone' ", by G. W. Cable; The legend of L'île Dernière, by Lafcadio Hearn; A family flight in the forties, by Eliza Ripley; The last Christmas, by Eliza Ripley; The balloon hoax, by E. A. Poe; On review, by J. E. Cooke; Bill Arp addresses Artemus Ward, by C. H. Smith (Bill Arp); Jud Browning's account of Rubinstein's playing, by G. W. Bagby; A true Southern lady, by F. H. Smith; The fate of Mr Jack Sparrow, by J. C. Harris; Electioneerin' on Big Injun Mounting, by M. N. Murfree (C. E. Craddock); A Christmas guest, by R. McE. Stuart; The moment of victory, by W. S. Porter (O. Henry); The little faded flag, by E. L. White; The belled buzzard, by I. S. Cobb; The creation, by J. W. Johnson; A mean joke, by Don Marquis; Buttin' blood, by Pernet Patterson; Crowded, by Maristan Chapman; The hazy household, by A. H. Rice.

N Y Evening Post p4d D 6 '30 50w

"It is as a social historian rather than as an editor of lasting literature that Mrs. Becker attains significance in her compilation. In this collection of twenty stories (of which a number are episodes of the briefest sort) and one poem, there are only a few which are likely to endure as gems of good writing. There are a number which, in aim and execution, would be bad in any period. But the book is a door swinging wide to reveal a past that in its color and gallantry was a unique milestone in American cultural history; and this past has a way of shining through the most inane concealing fabrics."
N Y Times p8 D 21 '30 600w
Outlook 156:549 D 3 '30 180w

BECKFORD, WILLIAM. The vision; and, Liber veritatis; ed. with an introd. and notes by Guy Chapman. ltd ed 166p il $5 Smith, R.R. [18s Constable]

Two hitherto unpublished manuscripts of William Beckford, English man of letters, connoisseur and collector. The Vision is a fragment of a romance written when the author was only seventeen years old. Liber Veritatis is an attack on the claims to nobility of many titled families of his day, written to vent Beckford's disappointment in not securing a peerage for himself.

Reviewed by K. John
Nation and Ath 48:141 O 25 '30 700w

"Mr. Chapman has done his editorial work admirably, and the form of the book is, as usual with these publishers, extremely comely."
+ New Statesman 35:628 Ag 23 '30 100w

"The literary reputation of Beckford stands high at the moment with the cognoscenti, but it may be questioned if either 'The Vision' or 'Liber Veritatis' will enhance it. It is possible, no doubt, to discern in 'The Vision' the promise of 'Vathek,' and that is probably its only value. 'Liber Veritatis,' on the other hand, though equally illustrative of its author, is amusing in its way; though its way is a mean and malicious and disreputable way, and you come from reading it with the uncomfortable feeling that you have been listening to a gentleman's gentleman who has had a disagreement with the folk above stairs." F. A. Clement
— + Sat R 150:418 O 4 '30 600w

"The vain and eccentric author of Vathek would doubtless have been delighted to know that he was remembered a century after his death, and that a zealous admirer had dug up two of his unprinted MSS. and edited them for the delectation of the public. . . But the publication of his foolish book can only discredit him still further in the eyes of posterity."
— Spec 145:385 S 20 '30 180w
Times [London] Lit Sup p650 Ag 14 '30 1050w

BECKWITH, MARTHA WARREN. Black roadways; a study of Jamaican folk life. 243p il $3 Univ. of N.C. press
917.292 Negroes in Jamaica. Jamaica—Social life and customs. Folklore—Jamaica. Superstition 29-17106

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"This publication possesses two distinct merits: it presents an accurate, well-rounded account of Jamaican folk life, and it is extremely well written. The data collected by Miss Beckwith over a period of five years in Jamaica have been carefully synthesized with the material of more than fifty other and earlier observers. . . Miss Beckwith has maintained throughout her rôle of observer rather than annalist." A. H. Gayton
+ Am Anthropol 32:696 O '30 680w

"Because this account does attempt to record the culture of the Jamaican peasant, it represents an advance into the field of folk ethnology. There are chapters on the family, on obeah, on the spirit world, and several particularly interesting chapters on the religious cults. These last include autobiographic accounts of religious experiences. On the other hand, the book only incompletely describes the 'round of life.' There is much material, but much of the treatment becomes little more than lists of practices and beliefs. . . Nor is there any attempt to attack the problem of historical analysis of the culture into its African. British, Spanish, and East Indian elements, though the materials offer abundant suggestion." Robert Redfield
+ — Am J Soc 35:673 Ja '30 350w
Booklist 26:199 F '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p37 Mr '30

" 'Black Roadways' is characterized by the restraint traditionally befitting a college-press publication, and one may readily accept the book

BECKWITH, M. W.—Continued
as a straightforward and 'unemotionalized' account of the superstitions and odd customs of one of the most intriguing racial stocks of the entire West Indian heritage."

N Y Times p32 N 24 '29 250w

Reviewed by Tom Davin
N Y World p11m F 9 '30 320w

"Without disproving or attempting to discredit unbelievable tales, she presents all the evidence available and never loses her sense of proportion in describing the rites she is permitted to see. In this way, her book carries a conviction that was lacking for many who read William Seabrook's 'Magic Island.' Mr Seabrook became a part of the fantasies he witnessed: Martha Warren [Beckwith] remains a detached observer with her mind serene above emotional stress."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 Ag 14 '30 320w

BEDFORD-JONES, HENRY (JOHN WYCLIFFE, pseud.). Cyrano. 344p $2 Putnam

Cyrano de Bergerac, Savinien—Fiction

30-7569

A romance of France in the days of Louis XIII, based upon the life of Cyrano de Bergerac, poet, soldier and lover.

"It matters very slighty, if at all, that the author has taken large liberties with the slender records of his hero. The main thing is that he of the great nose struts and swaggers through a pretty lot of intrigues, foils the Cardinal de Richelieu and rescues Marianne not once but many times, all quite readably."

+ Books p10 My 11 '30 100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p111 Jl '30

N Y Evening Post p10m My 3 '30 70w

"A lively, swashbuckling, swiftly moving tale. It is rather a pity, however, that the author should have sacrificed plausibility to his desire to produce a dramatic climax."

+ — N Y Times p9 Ap 13 '30 350w

"An excellent cloak and sword romance which fills with exciting fiction certain lacunae in the known life of M. de Bergerac." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:548 Ap 2 '30 50w

BEEBE, ELSWYTH THANE. See Thane, E. pseud.

BEEDE, IVAN. Prairie women. 209p $2.50 Harper

30-5689

The lives of typical men and women in a small Middle-western prairie town are portrayed psychologically by means of separate story-flashes loosely strung together in the form of a novel. Among the central characters is Mrs Alfred Mason, whom we see first on her honeymoon trip to the Chicago World's fair, later as a wife and mother, and finally, as an aging woman whose family no longer needs her, on her way to Los Angeles.

"Mr. Beede has taken enough leaves out of Chekhov's notebook to make one of his own. And it is a notebook well worth looking at. To mention Chekhov in this connection is not to imply that either Mr. Beede's manner or his matter is borrowed from the Russian: both are obviously and genuinely his own, but the method is a happy echo of the great short story writer's, and makes us wish again that Chekhov had written a novel. If he had, it might have been something like Mr. Beede's."

+ Bookm 71:213 Ap '30 280w

"Ivan Beede's novel shows a writer attempting what he knows how to do, honestly, within his own limitations, and executing it uninfluenced by outsiders, so that the book is finished and sure because of its author's self-sufficiency. . . He uses refreshingly the curious trick which is wealth to a novelist of raising into relief the smallest gesture to make a figure human, or a situation significant beyond its content. His talent has worked best in the small; for while his complete plot is confused, yet separate scenes are almost perfect in their effectiveness." A. F. Basinger

+ Books p19 Mr 16 '30 600w

Boston Transcript p8 My 3 '30 320w

Chicago Daily Tribune p12 Ag 23 '30 180w

"One feels what one rarely feels about contemporary fiction, that it would have gained considerably had it been longer. It is, nevertheless, a competent piece of work." H. C. C.

+ — New Repub 63:161 Je 25 '30. 220w

"There are scenes so sharply and sensitively written that there is a growing sense as the pages are read and turned that here is an author of unusual spirit and power. Mr. Beede employs an economy of method in dealing with character and environment. Yet never is there a skimping of his material. He possesses a surety and insight into both scene and person and manages to convey both with extraordinary ability." Ben Wasson

+ N Y Evening Post p7s Mr 1 '30 500w

"Notwithstanding the incoherence of its form, 'Prairie Women' achieves isolated dramatic effects of some power. It contains a certain genuineness of emotion, which is emphasized by the general restraint of the style."

+ — N Y Times p9 F 9 '30 480w

Wis Lib Bul 26:106 Mr '30

BEEDING, FRANCIS, pseud. of JOHN LESLIE PALMER and HILARY AIDAN ST GEORGE SAUNDERS. Four armourers. 304p $2 Little [7s 6d Hodder]

30-20814

"Col. Granby tries to assist Hazelrig, an American plutocrat, to get hold of a secret formula for a gas which will end all war. Hazelrig wants to present it to the League of Nations, but there are four big armament mfgrs. after it too, and there's very little they'll stop at in their efforts to get it. But Col. G., with the help of his friend Baxter and the charming Julia Hazelrig, succeeds in turning, as they say, the trick."—Outlook

Booklist 27:165 D '30

Bookm 72:xx S '30 50w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p13 Ag 17 '30 120w

Boston Transcript p2 O 1 '30 300w

New Statesman 36:156 N 8 '30 180w

"A swiftly clicking tale of abduction, assault and assorted villainy. . . There is nothing credible in it and soon the patness with which surprise follows surprise becomes a little tiresome." Dashiell Hammett

— N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 23 '30 50w

"Good reading all the way through." Bruce Rae

+ N Y Times p20 S 7 '30 220w

"Although the tale is told with Mr. Beeding's customary wealth of exciting incident, Granby appears in it less advantageously than he has in previous novels." E. C. B.

+ — N Y World p5m Ag 17 '30 100w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 156:30 S 3 '30 100w

Spec 145:859 N 29 '30 280w

BEEDING, FRANCIS, pseud. of JOHN LESLIE PALMER and HILARY AIDAN ST GEORGE SAUNDERS. League of discontent. 312p $2 Little [7s 6d Hodder]

30-7301

While staying in the south of France with some friends Colonel Granby of the British secret service discovers a plot to wreck the peace of Central Europe. With the help of his friends he finds out the secret of the voluptuous living at the nearby Chateau, and what is under the fourteenth stair in the dovecote, and the peace of Europe is preserved.

Bookm 71:xxix Ap '30 100w

"'The League of Discontent' is for persons who require good English, expert plotting and civilized mood in their mysteries, as well as speed, surprise and bafflement." Will Cuppy

+ Books p16 Mr 16 '30 200w

"From a less skillful hand, the story might seem improbable or uninteresting, but Mr. Beeding manages to create an atmosphere of reality and blend into it a clever interplay of adventure and suspense." J. C. G.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 26 '30 500w

"Mr. Beeding employs in this story the usual elements of mystery, intrigue and adventure, but those of his readers who have followed the Colonel's adventures in other stories will find in this one plenty of new thrills."

+ N Y Times p20 Ap 20 '30 280w

"A prolonged round of desperate encounters, captures, escapes from death, sieges and pursuits, which are related entertainingly enough but grow wearisome through repetition. His readers are accustomed to look for a higher grade of goods from this author." E. C. B.

— + N Y World p10m Mr 16 '30 150w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 154:427 Mr 12 '30 160w

"The book holds the reader to the end, and is ideal for light reading."

+ Spec 144:714 Ap 26 '30 130w

"If 'The League of Discontent' is not up to the standard Mr. Beeding set himself in 'The Six Proud Walkers,' it is full enough of thrills and good writing to be well worth reading."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p354 Ap 24 '30 250w

BEER, THOMAS. Hanna. 325p $4 (16s) Knopf

B or 92 Hanna, Marcus Alonzo 29-24016

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"For those who must have their history and politics presented in the guise of a story deftly and brilliantly recounted, Mr. Beer's book will be welcome reading. The biography is vivid, the style easy and epigrammatic, the method rambling and indirect, the general effect graphic."

+ Am Pol Sci R 24:512 My '30 100w

"Beer has not whitewashed Hanna, but the book is so convincing in its presentation that we feel as though the author had just taken us into a room where Hanna was and left us with the living personality. We come out at the end saying to ourselves, 'So that is the old boy!' I am very tired of hearing books hailed as great. It is only once in a blue moon that a really great book is written. But this is a good book. It has its own original contribution to make for the student and is written extremely well. It is one of the most interesting I have read in a long time." J. T. Adams

+ Atlantic Bookshelf p24 Mr '30 350w

Booklist 26:200 F '30

"What does the reader of Mr. Beer's book, written in a distorted and pseudo-brilliant style, actually learn of Hanna—the real Hanna—in the course of some 325 pages? He closes the book with an exasperated memory of countless depictions of Hanna as a silent, obese, saturnine, red-faced, cigar-smoking political god-in-the-machine; but little else." Francis Snow

— Current Hist 31:835 F '30 170w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:2 Ja '30

Pratt p37 spring '30

St Louis 28:16 Ja '30

Sat R 149:564 My 3 '30 130w

Spec 144:499 Mr 22 '30 350w

"The outstanding feature of the book is its abundance of picturesque irrelevancies and of desperate efforts to say smart things. Mr. Beer seems incapable of recording a simple fact in plain language. . . Mr. Beer does not really help us to understand Hanna and his contemporaries any better than Mr. Croly had done. Whether as 'a study in character,' 'an essay on the politics of the time,' or 'a picture of the period,' the older book holds its own against the competition of its pretentious modern rival. It has the further merit that it does not fatigue or bore the reader."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p378 My 8 '30 950w

Yale R n s 19:595 spring '30 320w

BEERBOHM, MAX. Around theatres. 2v $7.50 Knopf

792 Theater—London. English drama—History and criticism 30-29892

"Here we have the record, covering the years from 1898 to 1910, of Max's impressions of the British drama as it was unfolded to his eyes and ears during the period which witnessed—among other and enormous matters—the passing of the preposterous prestige of Pinero and the arrival of Shaw as a towering figure upon the contemporary stage."—N Y Times

---

"What little masterpieces of literary art some of these weekly papers are! . . All Beerbohm's papers are informal, chatty, highly personal and impressionistic, but they never lapse into personal exploitations; they are never smart at the expense of justice, and, above all, they are never sloppy, but carefully and conscientiously wrought into gleaming ease and urbanity." W. P. Eaton

+ Books p5 D 7 '30 450w

"What he says is in most cases more important than the momentous messages which we are in the habit of hearing from our major prophets. Max is not merely one of the cleverest, he is also one of the most sensible of men. His running account of Shaw's development is the wisest I know, as well as the wittiest. If at the time he sounded snobbish about Pinero and many another lesser favorite, he now sounds merely true; his condescension was the condescension of posterity. And let no man think that because this man has a gentle style he has a gentle heart. He can murder a playwright, he can maul an actor—he can massacre a whole cast. But I shall make no attempt to describe the contents of these marvelous volumes." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 131:680 D 17 '30 600w

"The essays are grace and leisure itself. They lilt and smile, and, though the brain beneath them is shrewd enough, they adapt themselves to their salons and the pleasant air they must frequent." Stark Young

+ New Repub 65:192 D 31 '30 1350w

"Not since Shaw's own 'Dramatic Opinions and Essays' came out, a quarter of a century ago, have the fugitive reviews of any critic of the stage been so well worthy as Max's are of collecting and reprinting to the extent of two volumes. No more than in Shaw's case has the lapse of years made these essays stale. In some cases, what is said is more significant than it was when it was written hot for the press. In other cases, the first sharp impression of the piece—which may now be a legend or a quasi-classic—is an exhilarating thing to recapture." H. I. Brock

+ N Y Times p2 N 23 '30 1150w

"Beerbohm as a dramatic critic had an independent point of view and a respect for originality and good craftsmanship. He took his reviewing most seriously, with the result that little irony and humor got into these writings. We look for the fine edge of irony which we see in his caricatures and rarely find a biting line. Yet Beerbohm must have made more than one author squirm." Harry Hansen

N Y World p11 N 8 '30 700w

BEERY, PAULINE GRACIA (MRS WARREN MACK). Stuff; the story of materials in the service of man. 504p il $5 (21s) Appleton

660 Chemistry, Technical 30-13375

In this popularized outline of chemistry as it affects everyday life, Miss Beery narrates, in story fashion, the history of how man has converted air, water and food to his uses, and discusses all the "stuff" that has gone into the making of our civilization.

BEERY, P. G.—Continued

Booklist 27:52 O '30

"Miss Beery has taken the romance, the adventure, the fascination of the chemist's retort and woven from them a tale that eclipses the most imaginative episode the Arabian Nights can offer. . . No review could do more than hint at the vast amount of information the author has crowded into these five hundred pages, copiously illustrated and simply written. Medicinal chemistry and the modern curative rays are treated in a comprehensive manner, and the latest reports on synthetic chemistry and the atomic theory are given in a brief but complete form." J. C. G.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 25 '30 760w

"The reader is hurried so quickly through the history and present status of air, water, fire, weather, ice, aluminum, rubber, and almost everything else that man uses to his own advantage, that he emerges from the reading exhausted and rather unstrung. The book is popularly written, to the extent, indeed, that it may be almost too elementary for any beyond the high-school age. In fairness to the author, one must admit that her task has been difficult." Kathleen Robertson

+ — Chem & Met Eng 37:504 Ag '30 200w

"'Stuff' is chemistry done in the modern manner, for the author has not only followed trends by selecting the shortest possible title, but has chosen chapter headings which are catchy and even border on slang; alliteration finds its place also. The illustrations chosen are both appropriate to the subject matter and arrest attention. . . The book is readable and doubtless will appeal, as the author has said, to readers from eight to eighty. We would recommend it for its broad scope and its historical features, as well as its lucid presentation."

+ Ind & Eng Chem 22:810 Jl '30 200w

"A readable volume in which the author has shown great ingenuity in assembling and organizing information about the production and use of all sorts of materials used in ordinary life, and in doing this with many touches of humor as well as broad knowledge of the sciences."

+ J Home Econ 22:768 S '30 80w
N Y New Tech Bks 15:35 Jl '30

"Entertainingly ingenious in its conception and method of presentation, Miss Beery's sizable book is also sound and accurate in its account of the scientific aspect of the materials man uses in his daily life and of the marvels chemistry has wrought in their development and use."

+ N Y Times p26 Je 1 '30 200w
Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 155:148 My 28 '30 50w
St Louis 28:212 S '30
Survey 64:448 Ag 15 '30 30w
Times [London] Lit Sup p703 S 4 '30 280w

BEHRMAN, SAMUEL NATHANIEL. Meteor. (Theater guild plays) 178p $2 Brentano's 812 30-10494

"A quotation from Napoleon, 'Only one resource is left to me, to become an absolute egoist,' appears on the title-page, setting forth the theme. The first act shows the young egoist casting scorn upon his college environment and breaking away dramatically under the itch for power and the determination to gain wealth. He is represented as a partly reclaimed vagabond, not without neurotic tendencies, whose intellectual nature is thwarted by his ruthless desire for wealth and domination. Act 2 finds his dreams quickly realized, and act 3 shows him fighting to uphold his capitalistic eminence against other promoters no more scrupulous than himself."—Springf'd Republican

Booklist 26:386 Jl '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p72 My '30

"In 'Meteor' Behrman has drawn a dramatic portrait of extraordinary richness and originality. The record of his words and deeds is too vivid to be forgotten. If 'Meteor' be considered as a whole it is doubtless far from perfect, but I cannot, at least offhand, think of any character in American drama who is likely to remain longer in the imagination of the spectator." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 130:78 Ja 15 '30 500w
Reviewed by Stark Young
New Repub 61:250 Ja 22 '30 1250w

"If the author had built a little more sentiment into his plot he might have made a great play of it. As it now stands the final curtain goes down on a meteor that has butted its head against a stone wall and is sputtering with the ineffectual gasps of a spent rocket." Bellamy Partridge

— N Y World p11m F 23 '30 170w

"The original conception has definite emotional as well as psychological values in the theatre. The mystery of personality is inherent in it, and the emotions are oddly excited by its possibilities. But the play as it is written departs from the dramatic promise of the first act curtain and becomes something else." F. R. Bellamy

+ — Outlook 154:73 Ja 8 '30 550w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:69 O '30
Pratt p28 summer '30

"With his first two plays Mr. S. N. Behrman established himself as an American playwright capable of excellent work in high comedy. In this, his third play, he enhances his own reputation for skill in character drawing and absorbing dialogue. . . 'Meteor' is unique and arresting." Jane Dransfield

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1024 My 10 '30 500w

"The play achieves dramatic emphasis and suspense, but is not notable in the presentation of character or the suggestion of emotion."

+ — Springf'd Republican p10 Ja 12 '30 200w

BEIN, ALBERT. Youth in hell. 234p $2.50 Cape
30-14088

The author recounts his personal experiences while serving, at the age of fifteen, a term in a southwestern reform school. He tells of the brutal treatment given the boys, many of whom were in the reformatory for slight misdemeanors only; and his story includes the abominations practiced under the monitor system and the demoralizing effects in general of life at the school.

"Bein writes with dramatic vigor—and his book is a gruesome portrayal of the horrible treatment of lads and children. There is no reason to doubt its accuracy, though the experiences described happened some years ago and this particular school may have become better since then. . . The book is especially interesting as being one of the few first hand accounts of what goes on in institutions for children; we have had grim portrayals of prison life, but industrial and reform schools have not received the same amount of attention at the hands of those who once lived in them." W. D. Lane

+ Books p4 Ap 27 '30 950w

"The title tells the story. The disintegrating effect on character is shown with hideous completeness."

Christian Century 47:563 Ap 30 '30 30w
Cleveland Open Shelf p108 Jl '30

"Since the author vouches for the truth of his facts, the [novelized] form in which he has presented them does not much matter, for the bare truth of them gives validity to the whole. The damning quality rests in the simple facts and not in the way in which they are dressed. . . The book ought to have wide reading, for it deals dramatically, vividly and with emotion compelling power with an institution that needs just such attention."

+ N Y Times p27 Ap 27 '30 380w

"A true story, it is shaped into a powerful, dramatic narrative by the instinct which forces the literary artist to make his life into a novel, to turn his agonies into words."
+ Outlook 154:708 Ap 30 '30 380w
St Louis 28:207 S '30
Survey 65:112 O 15 '30 80w

BEITH, JOHN HAY (IAN HAY, pseud.), and KING-HALL, STEPHEN. Middle watch. 288p $2 Houghton
30-23086

A novelized version of the successful English play, The Middle Watch, a comedy-romance of naval life.

Books p12 O 5 '30 150w

"To turn a play into a novel is not easy, especially when the play was a farce. Many of the scenes must have been amusing in the theater. But to make a novel of the story necessarily requires a good deal of dilution."
— Sat R of Lit 7:253 O 18 '30 100w
Times [London] Lit Sup p784 O 2 '30 200w

BELL, HORACE. On the old west coast; being further reminiscences of a ranger; ed. by Lanier Bartlett. 336p il $5 Morrow
917.94 Frontier and pioneer life—California. California—Social life and customs 30-23564

A romantic account of western pioneering and gold-rush days centering about the author's reminiscences of his own experiences in California during this early period as ranger, soldier, lawyer and editor. The present volume is compiled by Lanier Bartlett from Major Bell's posthumous manuscript material additional to his Reminiscences of a ranger, published in 1881.

Booklist 27:150 D '30

"The late Major Horace Bell's new 'Reminiscences of a Ranger' is in reality a discursive and informal history of the reconstruction period as it affected California, and might very well serve as a case book in examining the effect on morals of the Civil War. On the surface it has no such serious purpose. It is a volume of the most delightful anecdotes of many an historical occurrence or spectacular personality from the days of the Mexican occupation up to 1901." R. L. Roe
+ Bookm 72:446 D '30 250w

"The ideal value in the past is just as important as the real one. Myth-making and research ought to go side by side, complementing each other. But just now the part of the American public that is intellectually aware is surfeited with myth. It has a healthy and necessary appetite for the awful and neglected truth. At such a time Major Bell's reminiscences seem as antiquated as the tandem bicycle. They are chiefly interesting as a revelation of his own mind and character. Here, at least, are the thought and memories of an old-fashioned gentleman, quaint and useless, like the contents of your grandmother's scrap bag." Harvey Fergusson
— Books p15 O 19 '30 600w

"This is one of the most interesting and valuable volumes of Americana published in recent years, for it has not only local interest to California but also a wide human appeal in depicting how Americans of the middle eighties acted when they were let loose upon a Spanish California living fully two hundred years behind the calendar." W. H. C.
+ Boston Transcript p4 O 18 '30 420w

"It is the combination of high tragedy and high humor that makes the great comedy of Western history. Such books as these are excellent footnotes to that comedy."
+ N Y Times p22 N 9 '30 380w

BELL, ISAAC. Foxiana; with an introd. by Crascredo. 83p il $6 Scribner [15s Country life]
799.2 Fox-hunting [30-25945]

"'Foxiana' is a series of sketches of the sort that huntsmen love to do—sketches in which the huntsmen, the hounds, the foxes, the horses, appear by turns as articulate relators of the story, the point of view of which remains throughout the point of view of the sentimentalist of the chase."—N Y Times

Boston Transcript p2 Ap 16 '30 250w

"Mr. Bell's are pleasant sketches, not devoid of the gentle humor which is the softer side of a tribe professedly predatory but singularly harmless by nature. The illustrations—reproductions in black and white of G. D. Armour's water-colors—are charming, as might be expected, even in the absence of color." H. I. Brock
+ N Y Times p20 Je 8 '30 100w

"Mr. Bell does not attempt originality of form, but he has no need to; his originality lies in his high quality, and he has produced the best book of light foxhunting sketches that has been published for many a long day."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p7 Ja 2 '30 800w

BELL, MARGARET. Margaret Fuller; with an introd. by Mrs Franklin D. Roosevelt. (Boni-books) 320p pa 50c Boni, C.
B or 92 Ossoli, Sarah Margaret (Fuller) marchesa d' 30-23909

The life story of Margaret Fuller, New England feminist, transcendentalist and intellectual leader, who died with her Italian husband in a shipwreck off Fire Island in 1850.

"Miss Bell has related the story of Margaret Fuller's life in an orderly and interesting fashion, but she has brought nothing new to the task, either in material or interpretation. In particular, she has added nothing to our conception of Margaret Fuller's character or temperament."
— + Bookm 72:316 N '30 300w

"This book is a sort of biography and a sort of novel. We learn from it easily a great many interesting things about an interesting person. But we don't know which of the facts here recorded are taken from the manuscripts, published or otherwise, and which are fiction, put in for readability, if we don't know what determined Miss Bell at various strategic points of the story to follow one school of opinion rather than another. In any case we read an enthralling story." A. B. Parsons
Books p15 O 12 '30 600w

"As an account of Margaret Fuller's personal life, Miss Bell's biography is likely to be useful. It is rather colorfully written, and presents the often dull events of Margaret Fuller's career in an interesting and readable fashion. But Miss Bell gives her reader little conception of Margaret Fuller's intellectual activities, or of the actual importance of her services to American letters. As a comprehensive or critical estimate of Margaret Fuller's work, it leaves much to be desired." Margaret Wallace
— + N Y Evening Post p4d O 11 '30 650w

"Apart from the fact that Miss Bell grows too lyric in her writing in spots, that she lacks humor, that she neglects to explain certain important characters in the life of Margaret Fuller . . . this book makes interesting reading. It may not be sufficiently mature to be a critical document of Margaret Fuller's life but it is rich with personal incident and characterization." R. C. Feld
+ — N Y Times p10 S 28 '30 1150w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:10 N '30 100w

BELL, THOMAS. Breed of Basil. 284p $2.50 McBride

30-10980

"A story of romance in the kingdom of Illyria, told in realistic style. The conflict between Brian, the illegitimate son of Basil, and Francis, his half-brother, whom he is forever trying to outdo is the basis of the plot."—Publishers' Weekly

Books p17 Je 29 '30 200w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 18 '30 200w

"There is much charming, lucid prose in the novel, much tenderness and humor and joy of living. The reader shares with Mr. Bell the pleasure he must have had in writing his book, which is decidedly a pleasure not often encountered in our experiences with first novels." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 19 '30 200w

"There are occasional touches of humor, but the fundamental defect of the book lies in its failure to touch the emotions."

— + N Y Times p24 My 4 '30 280w

"We recommend the book to those who like sentimentality without mawkishness, and who can find as much pleasure in a simple story of two lovers as in the novel which has some social or psychological ax to grind." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 155:68 My 14 '30 100w

"A young writer, by name Thomas Bell, has produced his first novel, 'The Breed of Basil,' and it is a delicious event. . . Mr. Bell, one would say, was a disciple of Cabell. His tempo is more moderated, though he tends towards the same mannerisms and occasional obscurity. Yet he has seized and created for himself a rich, brilliant style, sweeping, impetuously bold, Youth with his tongue in his cheek and yet moved by unexpected sagacity. It will be interesting to see his second novel."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1049 My 17 '30 650w

BELLING, JOHN. Use of the microscope; a handbook for routine and research work. (McGraw-Hill publications in the agricultural and botanical sciences) 315p il $4 (20s) McGraw

578 Microscope and microscopy 30-10389

"Describes in detail the various types of microscopes, their construction, care, testing, and how to use them. Includes chapters on microscopical objects of biological interest, fixing and staining microscopic objects, and practical exercises with the microscope. Bibliography."—Pratt

Booklist 26:382 Jl '30

Chem & Met Eng 37:376 Je '30 50w

"A certain vagueness of phraseology throughout the book detracts from the emphasis which many of its valuable suggestions merit. If one makes allowances for this, and for the fact that many of the apparent generalizations are actually limited to cytological microscopy, there is a great deal of information that ought to be useful to all workers who are concerned with 'critical' microscopy. The best chapter in the book—'Fifty Practical Exercises with the microscope,' is a collection of experiments illustrating the chief points which the author stresses." C. W. Mason

+ J Phys Chem 34:1615 Jl '30 400w

"The book is written by a practical user of experience, and should be valuable to anyone who finds himself confronted with a complicated piece of apparatus, usually with very little reliable help." R. S. C.

+ Nature 126:986 D 27 '30 500w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:23 Ap '30

Pratt p15 summer '30

St Louis 28:210 S '30

BELLOC, HILAIRE. Joan of Arc. 128p $1.75 Little [6s Cassell]

B or 92 Jeanne d'Arc, Saint [29-26890]

With simplicity, brevity and reverence and in beautiful biblical prose Mr Belloc tells the story of the Maid,—her faith, her victory and her martyrdom.

Booklist 26:65 N '29

"We have not seen her story set down more sympathetically and beautifully than here. This is the work not of the professional writer, but of the understanding lover."

+ Cath World 131:251 My '30 220w

"This beautiful little book tells the story of Joan of Arc as only it should be told, as simply as it would be told to a child. There is no criticism, no questioning of the facts, but a presentation of the beautiful legend in a style charming for its simplicity, the sincere simplicity of John Bunyan and the King James Version, but never so quaint as to become antiquarian." W. L. C.

+ Churchman 140:20 N 23 '29 80w

Cleveland Open Shelf p76 My '30

"Mr. Belloc's style is his own. If this time he owes anything to anyone, it is, rather oddly, to the translators of the Bible. But he adds to it a detachment, an understanding of previous ages, which, in spite of his frankly partisan opinions, makes him the great historical writer that he is. . . His concern is only to tell the moving story of Joan's triumph and martyrdom once again—and that he has done as nobody else could."

+ New Statesman 33:444 Jl 13 '29 600w

"Belloc has written no finer book, and no more beautifully realistic story has been written of the Maid." M. A. Stuart

+ N Y Times p8 F 16 '30 600w

Pratt p36 summer '30

"We feel sure Mr. Belloc enjoyed writing this story, and we feel equally sure that many people will enjoy reading it. Mr. Belloc's Joan of Arc is not so vivid or detailed a picture as Mr. Bernard Shaw's Saint Joan—it has been drawn with few but accurate lines—but it is certainly as moving."

+ Spec 142:834 My 25 '29 150w

"This is beautiful and sincere prose; probably it is ungracious to pretend to detect a scent of the lamp. In any event we should all be happy enough if we could produce the like, with or without that aid."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p430 My 30 '29 500w

Wis Lib Bul 25:411 D '29

BELLOC, HILAIRE. Missing masterpiece. 319p il $2.50 Harper [7s 6d Arrowsmith]

30-262

Bourrot's masterpiece, the Bourgeois Soul, a modernistic monstrosity, was faithfully copied twice by the crippled son of Delgrain, an Englishman. The death of the artist gives Sir Henry Bensington, an art dealer with a genius for business, the opportunity to capitalize on a hitherto obscure work. Mr Belloc's burlesque upon the world of art and art dealers is written with his customary robust satire, aided and abetted by the ingenious drawings of Mr Chesterton.

"This tremendous trifle is fully up to the Chesterton-Belloc par in such matters, which is saying much for its very British burlesque and its rollicking story." Will Cuppy

+ Books p17 F 23 '30 180w

Reviewed by I. W. Lawrence

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 8 '30 1450w

"The mystery story is only a peg on which Mr. Belloc hangs certain opinions and ideas, but this happens to be a rather good mystery story in itself—an essential element for first-rate satire. Mr. Belloc's satire, however, is not very subtle; indeed, it is extremely broad, not to say ill-tempered. Mr. Chesterton, who does this sort of thing even more successfully, has reproduced nearly all of the many characters in drawings which, though quite undistinguished, faithfully reflect the spirit of the book."

+ — Nation 130:334 Mr 19 '30 120w

Nation and Ath 45:632 Ag 10 '29 240w

"Mr. Belloc, though he now wields a battle-axe, often uses it as deftly as a sword. The exuberance of his fooling does not conceal the fact that he is continually getting in some dig that really goes home. And his familiar background of good-natured, half-witted Englishmen is sufficiently near the truth to add spice to the entertainment. There are satires that are only funny as satires—because they are so near the truth. There are others, and these the greatest, that are funny on their own account. Of these Mr. Belloc is our only exponent to-day. The Missing Masterpiece is a fine, robust example of the kind."

+ New Statesman 33:502 Jl 27 '29 900w

"Mr. Belloc's story is amusing except when it becomes tedious, although its tedium is often interrupted with flashes of real wit." Edwin Seaver

+ — N Y Evening Post p11m F 8 '30 220w

"The whole book is labored and unsubstantial. It is pretty thin workmanship and must be ranked in the category of intellectual hobbies or of pot-boilers. The Chesterton drawings are mildly amusing, though much of a muchness, and Mr. Belloc never allows the reader to forget that he is prejudiced against the Jewish race, to the detriment of his artistic judgment as well as of his former reputation for fair play."

— N Y Times p18 My 18 '30 380w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:50 Je '30

Pratt p37 autumn '30

Sat R of Lit 6:971 Ap 19 '30 330w

Spec 143:60 Jl 13 '29 130w

Times [London] Lit Sup p556 Jl 11 '29 550w

BELLOC, HILAIRE. Richelieu; a study. 392p il $5 Lippincott [21s Benn]

B or 92 Richelieu, Armand Jean du Plessis, cardinal, duc de 29-28658

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Reviewed by L. B. Packard

Am Hist R 35:663 Ap '30 380w

Booklist 26:232 Mr '30

Reviewed by D. C. Seitz

Churchman p15 D 7 '29 300w

"On the whole, one cannot help but admire the style, but the critic is almost certain to regret its dissipation upon such poor history." S. B. Clough

— + Hist Outlook 21:240 My '30 230w

"Mr. Belloc is always a great hand at the dogmatic presentation of highly doubtful statistics. . . By these methods [he] imposes on his guileless readers a degree of certitude which they can have no other justification for feeling. When Mr. Belloc is content to talk about Richelieu his book is excellent. . . [But] it would be difficult to collect into the form of a platitude a richer assortment of highly disputable assumptions." Francis Birrell

— + Nation and Ath 47:220 My 17 '30 600w

"Mr. Belloc, always more secure when writing on French historical subjects than on English, gives an objective account of Richelieu's work and correctly emphasizes the success of his internal and external diplomacy. He is prone to overestimate the influence of individuals on epochs and great world movements. He warms easily to his own ideas and once started goes too far. This study of Richelieu is not free from this defect, but what the author has successfully done is to portray a Richelieu devoid of the romantic trappings with which he has been encumbered, and to make him stand out as the first great minister whose energy and ambition were dedicated to the cause of French nationalism." Neilson Abeel

+ — New Repub 62:106 Mr 12 '30 270w

"It would be strange if one were to find oneself in complete agreement with so profoundly original (original in presentation if not always in historic doctrine), so strongly opinionated, so deliberately provocative, a writer as Mr. Belloc. Precisely when he says something with which one violently disagrees is he most interesting and illuminating. One would not have him otherwise. One would very much have him as he is, with his extraordinary force and sharpness." Peter Vernon

+ New Statesman 34:842 Ap 5 '30 1400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:48 Je '30

Pratt p36 autumn '30

St Louis 28:80 Mr '30

"The last chapters of 'Richelieu' are unavoidably crowded, but the first half adds one more splendid achievement to the most moving historian of our time. The attention which he compels may be reluctant or admiring, but of the genius that compels it there can be no doubt." Osbert Burdett

+ Sat R 149:389 Mr 29 '30 1700w

"Mr. Belloc, unfortunately, gives us a very high proportion of thesis to history. And he has put the thesis naked and unashamed in the first part of the book, before he has given us an ounce of history with which to support it. . . When the thesis of Part I is over and we reach Part II and history proper, Mr. Belloc is as admirable as ever." John Strachey

+ — Spec 144:sup617 Ap 12 '30 1200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p622 Jl 31 '30 1050w

BELLOC, HILAIRE. Wolsey. 336p il $5 Lippincott [15s Cassell]

B or 92 Wolsey, Thomas, cardinal 30-31156

Mr Belloc sees Wolsey as a tragic failure in the world's history—a failure because of two defects: lack of vision and overriding ambition. Hence, according to the biographer, the shipwreck of Christendom. Arranging his biography in the divisions of a five-act Shakespearean tragedy, Mr Belloc first introduces his fifteenth century stage, programme, plot sketch, and cast, following this preliminary material with analyses of the crucial steps, or acts, in Wolsey's career.

"'Wolsey' is Mr. Belloc at his best. No Englishman living is better able to expound a difficult subject: he makes even canon law seem interesting. That fondness for archaic turns of speech which mars his style is not out of place in a historical biography. He has all the qualities of a great writer except humility." H. B. Parkes

+ Books p25 N 23 '30 750w

Boston Transcript p1 D 27 '30 1350w

Cleveland Open Shelf p156 D '30

"If one ignores Mr. Belloc's dirge and his militant Catholicism, if one also ignores his rather quaint tendency occasionally to write down to his readers, one finds Mr. Belloc's most recent book rather good reading."

+ — Current Hist 33:xxv Ja '31 200w

"Only the structure of the book is open to question. Its first half is devoted to an analysis of the action and characters, of which the second half, the narrative proper, is the synthesis: the theme is stated and restated with constant amplifications of detail, and the final effect, while undoubtedly clear, is somewhat mechanical, leaving the impression of a thesis rather than of an organic, living and breathing creation. It is, none the less, extremely readable; the mannerisms of style, the occasional poetical inversions and lapses into the florid and the rhetorical, are submerged by the pressure of the matter and the urgency of the author's conviction." Ralph Roeder

+ — N Y Evening Post p4d N 8 '30 850w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p5 D 14 '30 1300w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p16 O 30 '30 600w

BELLOC, HILAIRE—Continued

"Belloc is, of course, a Catholic historian. His interpretations of English history, some of them a good deal more controversial than this, are often at variance with those of the great Protestant historians. . . His biography is all that it should be in the matter of historical background and illuminating detail. It may be read with especial pleasure by those who read Hackett's Henry the Eighth. Hackett and Belloc differ widely in their estimates of many of the characters involved." F. L. R.

Outlook 156:428 N 12 '30 400w

"Mr. Belloc dramatizes the story with his accustomed vigour and is careful to explain the background of European politics against which the play is set. But one could wish that he were less of the propagandist and more of the historian."

+ — Spec 145:701 N 8 '30 220w

"A study of the first four chapters, named successively 'The Stage,' 'The Programme,' 'The Plot' and 'The Cast,' leaves one at a loss to understand what Wolsey had to do with it all, and a receptive reader would be tempted to conclude that, if Mr. Belloc be not exaggerating, then reformation of some kind was overdue. But when Mr. Belloc at last gets to grips with Wolsey himself he provides extremely good reading and proves that he is one of the few authors who know how to write narrative."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p1028 D 4 '30 150w

BEMONT, CHARLES. Simon de Montfort, earl of Leicester, 1208-1265; a new ed. tr. by E. F. Jacob. 303p il $4.50 (15s) Oxford

B or 92 Montfort, Simon of, earl of Leicester 30-19982

Frenchman by birth, Simon de Montfort was a popular leader in England, where he came to claim his grandfather's earldom of Leicester, and champion of the rights of the middle class against the great barons in the time of Henry III. This biography, written by a French scholar in 1884, was immediately accepted as the standard biography of Simon de Montfort. After a lapse of nearly fifty years it has been revised by its author, in the light of fresh evidence, and translated into English by another student of the times.

Hist Outlook 21:399 D '30 280w

"It has been translated, with his usual care and sensitiveness for language, by Professor Jacob, a particularly appropriate choice, since much of the new material has been the result of his studies on the period. . . One may regret that M. Bémont has not brought out more clearly the class-divisions in the struggle; he indicates suggestively that Simon's support came chiefly from the lesser gentry and the towns. And these were the elements which, summoned to the famous Model Parliament of 1265, provided the class-basis for the Commons, the decisive factor in English history."

+ — New Statesman 35:86 Ap 26 '30 1150w

"M. Bémont unites with accurate learning a sense of style, while Professor Jacob himself has made a special study of Simon de Montfort's times, and his version of the French reads like an original. . . Simon's life, so ably written by the French scholar, is of lively interest still."

+ Spec 144:500 Mr 22 '30 600w

"This new edition, rewritten to incorporate such fresh evidence as has been brought to light during the last forty-five years, replaces the old but does not completely supplant it, as the appendix of documents given in full in the older edition is not reprinted. M. Bémont does not allow himself to be carried away by his enthusiasm for 'Sir Simon the Righteous'; he is a sober historian, more archivist than biographer."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p286 Ap 3 '30 1750w

BENCHLEY, ROBERT CHARLES. Treasurer's report, and other aspects of community singing. 345p il $2 Harper

817 30-29898

A new collection of Mr Benchley's recent humorous essays, skits and burlesques, including in addition to the title piece his views on community singing, the Sunday menace, exercise for those at sea, French news, sun-tan, sporting life in America, the bathroom revolution, and kindred affairs of interest to moderns.

Booklist 27:196 Ja '31

"A typical Benchley feast of unreason; no others are quite the same."

+ Books p10 D 14 '30 180w

Cleveland Open Shelf p154 D '30

Reviewed by S. T. Williamson

N Y Times p4 D 14 '30 380w

"The sketches in this book are his urbane humor at its best." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p14 N 6 '30 350w

"There is no subject that he touches that he does not illumine, none that he does not enrich." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 156:549 D 3 '30 230w

BENDER, HAROLD STAUFFER, comp. Two centuries of American Mennonite literature; a bibl. of Mennonitica americana, 1727-1928. (Studies in Anabaptist and Mennonite hist.) 181p il $3 Mennonite hist. soc., Goshen college, Goshen, Indiana

016.2897 Mennonites—Bibliography 30-3847

A bibliography of the literature of the Mennonites in America, 1727-1928, arranged chronologically, according to the distinct groups into which the Mennonites are divided.

"It is the most complete list of its kind. . . A few typographical errors have been noted. The use of three forms of an author's name in the body of the book and one form only in the index needs some explanation. The index is too brief for a reference work. The facsimile reproductions of the title pages of several rare books add to the value of the volume." J. C. Meyer

+ — Am Hist R 36:209 O '30 280w

"Mr. Bender has done an excellent piece of work not alone for his own religious body but also for all students of Christianity, and especially for those interested chiefly in the history of American Christianity. His bibliography is indispensable for those who would follow the achievements of those Continental folk who championed religious liberty not only in their native land but also in the New World to which they were exiled for their convictions and beliefs." R. E. E. Harkness

+ Crozer Q 7:402 Jl '30 200w

BENEDICT, AGNES ELIZABETH. Children at the crossroads. 238p il $1.50 Commonwealth fund

379.173 Children, Abnormal and backward. Rural schools. Visiting teachers 30-15917

The problems of nine typical maladjusted school children in rural counties of Ohio, New Jersey and Missouri are presented in this book. In these country districts the investigation of such cases is taken up by the National committee on visiting teachers. The author discusses the work of a visiting teacher in a rural setting, and group work in school and community.

"Here is a book that will be of interest both to the optimist and to the pessimist. The one will see in it what can be accomplished by painstaking, resourceful effort in rehabilitating children who, for one reason or another, are on the wrong track; the other will be impressed by the time, the effort and money that must be expended to bring about the desired results. A commendable feature of the book is its frankness; it discusses failures as well as successes." M. E. Champion

+ Am J Pub Health 20:1167 O '30 320w

Booklist 27:49 O '30

"Her analysis consistently fails to explore the basic aspects—economic and sociological—of rural educational conditions."

+ Books p11 Jl 6 '30 250w

"Social case workers, forgetting the difficulties in a rural community, may deal with the book critically, believing that an investigation perchance may have been inadequate and the time consumed on one case very long. However, the book makes a real contribution to the meager literature dealing with rural social work, in which interest is rapidly being aroused. This book will be interesting to anyone who enjoys a well-written, living story." W. W. Walker

+ — El School J 31:311 D '30 400w

J Home Econ 22:768 S '30 50w

St Louis 28:208 S '30

"Her tersely written, dramatic narratives are like little novels that one reads through breathlessly, regardless of the ulterior purpose of the book. Behind the desperate need of the principal character, however, against a warm background of human sympathy latent in the community, emerges this new type of social pioneer, familiar with country life, tapping just the right sources of help and sympathy, and bringing to the service of the whole neighborhood her expert knowledge of mental hygiene and her own adventurous faith."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:184 O 4 '30 250w

"Miss Benedict has brought to her task a knowledge of rural conditions, a grasp of the psychology of the farming community, a sympathetic appreciation of the needs of the rural school which should go far toward revitalizing this ancient institution to meet the present crisis. She has done more. Lovers of real literature will catch the thrill of a living story as they travel through these pages with the visiting teacher and watch the little actors in the absorbing game of life. . . There are no sermons in the book. Each story tells itself." O. R. Lovejoy

+ Survey 64:359 Jl 15 '30 400w

BENET, LAURA. Goods and chattels. 223p $2 Doubleday, Doran

30-11848

Twelve imaginative and delicately subtle tales. Contents: Goods and chattels; Eccentric is the manner; Never rent eyes; The saint's three sticks; The lake and the mountain; The harvest; The girl who wanted a career; The Toxberry tadpoles; Mr Windsor's back door; The blue village; Subject to the power; The wind that worked itself up; Always keep a butterfly; The magic balloon; Run, my sheep, run.

"The tales in this book are like soap bubbles, fragile, airy, exquisitely colored things which tease the imagination and draw it after them. They drift and change even while you look at them, and if you so much as touch them they vanish—a property which puts reviewers at an enormous disadvantage." Garreta Busey

Books p5 My 4 '30 500w

Cleveland Open Shelf p144 N '30

"Miss Benét's prose is really poetry and, on the whole, better poetry than she writes when she attempts verse form. Her touch is whimsical and delicate and sure. She never overstresses or wearies one with pointing a moral. She has a charming command of phrase and of picture-making. And she is always capable of getting from her reader that willing suspension of belief which allows him to accept and believe in her world and in all she may care to tell of her character."

+ N Y Times p22 Ap 27 '30 380w

"Laura Benet, with her slim output, has the conscience for art which many very talented writers lack. True whimsy at its best, is art's most 'inspired' expression, coming, as it does, like a less flamboyant wit, in unimpeded flashes, from the underconsciousness. In pure phantasy fact is not merely distorted, and it is not evaded; rather is the material garnered in a world of fact transmuted and a unique world thus created with its own laws. The whimsicality of Miss Benet at her best is the instinctive performance of this miracle." Evelyn Scott

+ N Y World p11m Ap 20 '30 800w

"One hesitates to write about the tales of Laura Benét. There is in them an evanescent quality that defies analysis and threatens disaster to heavy-handed paraphrase. Herself a master of figurative accuracy, she leads the hapless reviewer into unconscious and unsuccessful simile and makeshift metaphor. 'The Wind that Worked Itself Up,' 'The Lake and the Mountain,' and 'Always Keep a Butterfly' seem a little forced. They have a touch of heaviness and lack the sharp humor that keeps most of Miss Benét's prose so gratifyingly free from the sentimentality that has unfortunately come to be associated with fantasy." Gladys Graham

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:177 O 4 '30 750w

BENJAMIN, LEWIS S. (LEWIS MELVILLE, pseud.), and HARGREAVES, REGINALD, eds. Famous duels and assassinations. 288p il $4 Sears [18s Jarrolds]

343 Dueling. Assassination [30-14281]

"Mr. Melville and Mr. Hargreaves have included accounts of fourteen famous assassinations and more than twenty duels famous for one or another reason. Of the former, two are a part of the history of this country, the assassinations of Presidents Lincoln and Garfield. The history of England, Scotland, Russia and France furnish the others. The section devoted to famous duels begins with one fought in France in 1547 and, coming down through the next three centuries, picks out a great number of such combats. There is a chapter on women's duels, which tells the stories of a number of such encounters, and another on eccentric duels, into which are gathered tales of some amusing and bizarre contests, together with an account of a duel by Frenchmen which extended through nineteen years."—N Y Times

---

Books p18 Mr 16 '30 260w

"Book-making may be a legitimate if parasitic occupation, but of Mr. Melville at any rate we have the right to ask an elementary competence."

— New Statesman 34:399 D 28 '29 220w

N Y Times p3 Mr 9 '30 200w

"This volume of violence is carefully compiled and edited, although the writing and the argument are sometimes a little odd."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p877 O 31 '29 120w

BENN, SIR ERNEST JOHN PICKSTONE, bart. About Russia. 168p $2 Appleton [6s Benn]

914.7 Russia 30-23579

Refusing to visit Russia so long as the Soviet régime, with its present ideas, is in force but desiring to learn about present-day conditions in Russia, Sir Ernest Benn travelled round the western borders of that country, in the near Baltic states, Finland and Scandinavia, to get the views of Russia entertained by its neighbors and judge it from circumstantial evidence secured outside Moscow.

Boston Transcript p1 Jl 12 '30 550w

Reviewed by Alexander Nazaroff

N Y Times p5 Ag 31 '30 200w

Reviewed by John Carter

Outlook 155:471 Jl 23 '30 160w

St Louis 28:244 O '30

"Intellectual honesty is the key-note of the writings and sayings of Sir Ernest Benn, and his latest book is worthy of its predecessors. 'By refusing to visit Russia, far from disqualifying myself as an authority on the subject, I have fitted myself more specially as a fair judge of the great problem which that country presents.' That is a frank, honest, and original

BENN, E. J. P.—Continued
point of view, and far more likely to lead to useful results than books by politicians, who know no Russian, on their trips to Russia which lasted a few weeks."
+ Sat R 149:394 Mr 29 '30 650w

"The reader who takes up the book in the hope of finding some addition to the vast and ever-increasing mass of information about Russia will be disappointed. Of actual news of Russia there is no more than is to be found each day in the Press, on which Sir Ernest has freely drawn."
— Times [London] Lit Sup p326 Ap 17 '30 750w

BENNETT, ARNOLD. Imperial palace. 769p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [10s 6d Cassell]
30-26102

The central figure of the book is the Imperial Palace, a super-luxury hotel, "the kind of hotel whose directors are gods, whose managers are archangels, whose myriad head-waiters and staff are the choir of cherubim and seraphim." This vast and splendidly organized hotel is the creation of that artist among hotel-managers, Evelyn Orcham, and like every one else on its staff he is enslaved to it. Just for a moment he is deflected by the heady charms of Gracie Savott, who deliberately vamps him, but he returns to the more soberly satisfying Violet Powler, head housekeeper of the Imperial Palace, whose allegiance to the hotel is as strong as his own.

Booklist 27:207 Ja '31

"Because Mr. Bennett is an artist and because even a hotel de luxe shelters and is operated by human beings, the statistics and the minutiae of organization are not, of course, thrown down before us like so many little nails and nuts and bolts, but are used to hold the vast structure together. Nevertheless, they are the most impressive things in this book. They transform a delightfully written story into an epic of significance for the whole of modern society. So thoroughly has Mr. Bennett studied his subject that I feel sure we may take every figure as being authentic, if not for any one hotel in London today, at least for the composite Imperial Palace that he has built to scale." M. C. Dawson
+ Books p1 N 23 '30 1500w

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett
Boston Transcript p4 D 6 '30 1750w

"To this reader, at least, it is nearer the potboilers than the masterpieces, a pretty good book dressed up in the impressive raiment of the authentically great Bennett novels. Its sheer bulk would make most readers think it great. . . I don't say that 'Imperial Palace' hasn't moments of greatness in it. There are whole situations—two or three of them—which are superb with that keen magical understanding of human relationships that made 'The Old Wives' Tale' a masterpiece. The relation between Evelyn Orcham, the hero, and Gracie Lavott has all of the best Bennett tang. But mostly the book is a surface thing, a catalogue of observations that a good press agent would supply to an observant visitor in one trip around a vast hotel." Fanny Butcher
— + Chicago Daily Tribune p15 N 22 '30 500w

"The story which presents to us this splendid palace for the rich, with its hundreds of human cogs in the machine, carries us along from first to last without a pause. These hundreds of pages of elaborate description glow with the movement of things happening. It is a magnificent tour de force. The writing is a little hard in its detachment. There are no lovable characters. Mr. Bennett is not in the mood to enlist our affections. He awakens, rather, our amazed admiration." R. A. Scott-James
+ Christian Science Monitor p11 N 8 '30 420w

"When Mr. Bennett describes in great detail the conduct of the Palace he is interesting and convincing; when he describes in great detail how love came to Evelyn Orcham he is tedious and banal." Granville Hicks
+ — Nation 131:736 D 31 '30 450w

Reviewed by K. C. Tomlinson
Nation and Ath 48:170 N 1 '30 350w

"The descriptions of what goes on in a tremendous and luxurious hotel are very good, and to those who like facts, very interesting. Everything is gone into: the restaurants, the laundry, the kitchens, how the rooms are looked after, the policy towards guests, the rivalry between different departments of the hotel, and so on. On a definite, factual subject like this Mr. Bennett is clear, forceful and, one supposes, authoritative. He must have done a lot of snooping around at various Ritzes; it sounds as if he were in the hotel business himself. Had he confined himself to the more technical aspects of his subject and carefully avoided human nature outside of office hours, the result might have read more like an article for Fortune than a novel, but it would have made a better book." G. T. Hellman
— + New Repub 65:111 D 10 '30 700w

"This book will take first place among Mr. Bennett's novels as a feat in construction. It would be much easier for most men to find their way about this imagined building than in a large house in which they were actually staying; and there are very few of the characters who would not be as recognisable as the rooms and the corridors. . . Orcham, as Mr. Bennett's shows him, makes the institution seem tolerable. Violet Powler is one of Mr. Bennett's triumphs —and she does convincingly what few characters in any novel can do, she changes, develops as we read. She is the same woman at the story's end, yet quite different." R. E. Roberts
+ New Statesman 36:17 O 11 '30 1800w

Reviewed by Isabel Paterson
N Y Herald Tribune p12 N 21 '30 650w

"Why, one will ask, oh, why could not Arnold Bennett make up his mind what he wanted to do? If he desired to write an extravaganza on the life of a vast hotel, why did he not confine himself to that? And if he wished to do the study of a man immersed in big business momentarily disturbed by the interruption of a Venus, why did he mix up the two? . . . Nevertheless, one with sufficient leisure might do a lot worse than read (leisurely) 'Imperial Palace.' Such is the contradiction of this latter-day Arnold Bennett." Percy Hutchison
N Y Times p2 N 23 '30 680w

"I have enjoyed 'Imperial Palace' more for the world it portrays than for the love story. It is in Bennett's best manner." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p12 N 21 '30 480w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 156:627 D 17 '30 300w

"'Imperial Palace' reveals the real Arnold Bennett: benevolent, sensitive, understanding, and lovable." Henry Williamson
+ Sat R of Lit 7:415 D 6 '30 1050w

"Mr. Bennett has always made a point of deifying the banal and ordinary, and Violet Powler is his triumphant justification. This is the dull woman made beautiful, passionate, perfect, a character made to grow and deepen before our eyes, with masterly skill. The guests of the hotel de luxe have frequently been drawn by Mr. Bennett; now he has 'done' the staff, and, indeed, at the 'Imperial Palace' one has perhaps perversely the impression that there are hardly any guests. There is a great deal that is absolutely first class in this book, but one needs to be a very old patron of the management not to find pages and pages of it terribly dull." V. S. Pritchett
+ — Spec 145:553 O 18 '30 500w

"The characters are but the instruments of a large business enterprise, and as such exist only as parts of a machine. They lack the lively human characteristics that would make them real, and while such an organization has its impersonal fascination, it is a fascination that palls. Still 'Imperial Palace' maintains a sprightly and finished style and the few high lights of interest are spaced so that the reader keeps on to the end."
+ — Springf'd Republican p7e D 28 '30 380w

"Not much of a plot perhaps. It is as if Mr. Bennett really wanted to write a study of luxury hotel organization in all its branches, from the engine room and audit room in the basement to the staff arrangements of the topmost floor. This he has done with absolute competence. We can all now go into the Imperial Palace knowing exactly what goes on in every corridor, desk and mind. It is great fun, and so delightfully expensive."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p804 O 9 '30 600w

BENNETT, ARNOLD. Journal of things new and old (Eng title: Journal, 1929). 271p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Cassell]

B or 92 Authors—Correspondence, reminiscences, etc. 30-24831

These observations on people, places and things are taken from a journal of "daily worldly things" kept by Arnold Bennett during 1929.

Booklist 27:154 D '30

"Mr. Bennett has an able mind so far as the creative instinct goes; we all know that from reading Hilda Lessways and The Old Wives' Tale. But in his response to art and people and everyday things he shows only the sententious commonplaceness of the usual educated Englishman. He describes in this book a trip through Italy; but in the course of the whole journey he does not seize on a single thing which shows real subtlety of observation, real insight into a foreign race, real superiority over the contents of a guide-book."

— Bookm 72:197 O '30 380w

"Except for a section of travel notes which might have been written by any intelligent tourist, these small records of incidents and impressions are highly entertaining. The author's famous ability to find importance in a variety of details shows up nicely in diary form." M. C. Dawson

+ Books p4 S 7 '30 680w

"Mr. Bennett runs a brisk business. You may sniff because he holds clearance sales every few weeks, but as a salesman he is surprisingly free from humbug. The salesman-customer motif predominates and he assumes that in your own interest you must be as interested in him as he is in you and all other human goods. His prices, so to speak, are marked in clear figures. . . Even when Mr. Bennett bores us we remain astonished by the energy with which this super-provincial gets every bit of 24 hours out of his day." V. S. P.

+ — Christian Science Monitor p5 Jl 19 '30 550w

Nation 131:504 N 5 '30 280w

"The subject on which he is a supreme authority is hotels. It is his duty to write a supplement to Baedeker dealing in detail with hotels. To be the author of such a guide, as well as of 'The Grand Babylon Hotel' would be almost the next best thing to being the author of 'The Shropshire Lad' and an edition of Manilius." George Rylands

+ Nation and Ath 47:595 Ag 9 '30 200w

"The book as a whole shows us Mr. Arnold Bennett in activity—travelling, refusing a cocktail (though I am not sure that he is quite sound doctrinally on that heresy), going to the play or the opera, interviewing film magnates, eating Caucasian bear, thrilling at the Donatello in Verona, amiably enjoying the business of an Italian bank, resisting or not the temptation of play writing, perpetually interested in the ever-exciting spectacle of life, and rarely failing to communicate his interest to us." R. E. Roberts

+ — New Statesman 35:309 Je 14 '30 750w

"There is no more interesting form of reading than the intimate notations of an interesting and active and observant person, and Mr. Bennett certainly fills the bill. He has wit, charm, and admirable and shrewd practicality of observation, humor, drollery, a fine sense of the ironic. His journal offers delightful entertainment." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p8s S 13 '30 270w

"What one finds in the 'Journal' is a novelist's mind on a holiday, but none the less constantly recording, appraising and turning its wit upon, or smoothing with its humanity, the thousand and one bits of experience that properly unified and integrated might go to make a novel. And to some degree the book, like every book of its kind, is a reproach to most of us. It is only when a man like Arnold Bennett opens our eyes to the life-richness of small things that we realize how persistently blind we mostly are."

+ N Y Times p9 S 7 '30 650w

"With an audacious sprightliness that is as rare as it is engaging, Arnold Bennett leaps from one subject to another with no attempt to juxtapose likes and no cheap scheme for the conjuring up of dislikes. The book shows the author's mind in action: we have a mental barrage. The comment on hotels is gorgeous; the statement that a great modern hotel offers a splendid theme to a novelist is heavy with thought. . . You cannot read this book without undergoing permanent improvement." A. W. P.

+ Outlook 156:230 O 8 '30 220w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:89 D '30

"When a man learns to write twenty-four hours a day, he condemns himself to be a sort of recording machine. No phase of experience really exists for him till he has got it down, however briefly, in black and white. The record is what completes and verifies the experience. The recorder becomes a sort of victim or addict of this calling. . . The publisher discovers Pepysian merit in them, but they are not sufficiently unselfconscious for that. They are notes by a clever observer who is also, by trade, a searcher for copy. Anything that comes to him in the business of living may be useful in the business of writing for publication. As for Pepys, everything that happened enchanted him on its own account. Everything that happens to Bennett is noted and placed on file: you never can tell what may come in handy later on." H. W. Boynton

— Sat R of Lit 7:155 S 27 '30 1150w

Spec 144:1015 Je 21 '30 800w

"Arnold Bennett's 'private' notebook is a workmanlike affair with every phrase neatly turned for purposes of publication. . . [No one] will say of him that he touches nothing that he does not adorn. But he touches nothing that he does not turn into copy. And his copy, even if his thoughts are astute rather than ecstatic, is uniformly good. American writers who try for subtle and breathless effects by overwriting might well study Mr Bennett to learn how the simplest phrases can be marshalled to produce an impression of reality, even of atmosphere. . . On the whole, this book represents Mr Bennett's journalism and not at its best."

+ — Springf'd Republican p10 S 6 '30 900w

Times [London] Lit Sup p624 Jl 31 '30 750w

BENNETT, CHARLES M. Buccaneer's log. 287p il $2 Dutton [5s Nisbet]

29-14872

"Bert Debnam falls into the hands of pirates, wins his right to live by a heroic fight, impersonates the pirate captain until finally by his disguise he is brought to the scaffold. After a hairbreadth escape he leads the town of San Galma in valiant defense against the admiral of the pirates and his dreadful followers, and ends by a struggle to the death with this pirate chief, and the discovery of buried treasure."—Boston Transcript

---

"A real pirate story, in which every kind of fight from the leap and guard cutlass combat to the heavy bombardment of giant cannon is described in graphic and gory detail. . . Let no one scoff at an adventure story that can hold you to the end, blotting out reality until the last fierce struggle is over and the hero lies exhausted but triumphant beside his brutal foe." P. L.

+ Boston Transcript p1 O 11 '29 320w

BENNETT, C. M.—Continued

"The kind of a book that boys always like. If it sounds too obvious, remember that even in the log of a pirate ship there may be some unexpected entries." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 152:390 Jl 3 '29 30w

"A rattling good pirate story told from a new angle."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e D 22 '29 130w

BENNETT, CHARLES M. With Morgan on the Main. 287p $2 Dutton [3s 6d Nisbet]

30-7099

Arthur Ellis sails to Jamaica with his father in the good old days when Henry Morgan, the buccaneer commander, was operating in the Spanish Main. Their ship is beset by Spanish galleons and while Arthur escapes, his father is captured. Arthur joins forces with Morgan, accompanies him on three voyages to Porto Bello, Cartagena, and Panama, and finally effects his father's release.

Books p13 Mr 23 '30 150w

Boston Transcript p2 My 3 '30 220w

"Mr. Bennett, without ever risking suppression by any reasonable parental censorship, does succeed in convincing us of the wickedness of the times—the horror as well as the beauty of his scene. And he has concocted an excellent 'plot.' "

+ New Statesman 34:sup xviii D 7 '29 550w

"Mr Bennett has done an admirable job. His story fairly bursts with sea battles and sacked towns, and there is action of one kind or another on every page. Readers of Mr. Bennett's other piratical yarns will find this one fully up to the standard."

+ N Y Times p18 Ag 31 '30 120w

"Mr. Bennett is an authority on pirates and buccaneers, and there is no doubt that the tale is historically accurate in so far as it depicts Morgan and his exploits. Where it lacks reality is in the adventures of Arthur. The author seems forever in a hurry to get rid of Arthur and get back to Morgan, which we think is a slight to the juvenile reader who, of course, is imagining himself Arthur and doesn't care a whoop for Morgan except as an opportunity for further adventure for himself. Otherwise the tale is well told and contains some exciting incidents." R. L. Roe

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:906 Ap 5 '30 230w

Springf'd Republican p7e My 25 '30 100w

BENNETT, RICHARD REA. Aviation; its commercial and financial aspects. (Ronald aeronautic ser.) 127p il $3 Ronald [12s 6d Simpkin]

629.13 Aeronautics, Commercial 29-15119

"A brief survey of aviation as it affects the interests of various classes of readers: the layman, the banker, the investor, the economist, the educator, the lawyer, the business, advertising and insurance man and the transportation and public utility man."—Pratt

Booklist 26:57 N '29

"A survey of the aeronautical industry which is the epitome of simplicity, brevity, comprehensiveness and which is, with few exceptions, thoroughly reliable. What he has to say he says without any poetical embellishment, and the result is a sane and careful analysis of the many factors, harmonious and discordant, which are evident in the business of aviation." T. J. C. Martyn

+ N Y Times p27 Ja 12 '30 200w

Pratt p18 winter '30

BENNS, FRANK LEE. Europe since 1914. 671p il $5; text ed $4 Crofts [16s Bell, G.]

940.5 Europe—History—1914- 30-2322

A survey of the main events that have taken place in Europe during the past sixteen years. Among the most important subjects, compactly discussed by the author, are the Russian revolutions of 1917, the Paris peace conference, the problem of reparation, the German republic, the British struggle with unemployment, the Fascist régime in Italy, the Soviet régime in Russia, the turbulent Balkans, and the new Europe.

"This text of recent European history reaches a high standard in several particulars. Most notable is its impartiality in the treatment of a highly controversial period. It even avoids the subtle undertone of bias or theory that lurks in many apparently impartial books. Another excellence is a thoroughness of treatment combined with an avoidance of the excessive dullness so often associated with thoroughness." T. S. Anderson

+ Am Hist R 35:672 Ap '30 380w

"Apart from the needs of the college student, there must be a considerable demand among laymen for a reliable manual to serve as a background for the study of current affairs. Europe Since 1914 should fill this need admirably, for it is well proportioned and well informed, as well as being detached and unprejudiced. The general reader will find here all that he needs to know in order to follow the events of the day with intelligence. It may be questioned whether it was wise to separate the reparations question from a discussion of the domestic development of Germany after the war, or, for that matter, from the consideration of the problem of French security. It is in the coordination of material and in the study of interactions that the book is weakest, although the final chapter, in which the economic and social problems of post-war Europe are discussed, is the most adequate single part of the volume." W. L. L.

+ — Am Pol Sci R 24:515 My '30 320w

"Professor Benns' book is especially welcome in that we have no good and thorough manual on the tremendous changes which have taken place in Europe since the stirring days of July, 1914. It will be remarkably useful to student and teacher alike." H. E. Barnes

+ Ann Am Acad 150:298 Jl '30 400w

Booklist 27:21 S '30

Books p19 Mr 16 '30 180w

Boston Transcript p8 F 1 '30 450w

"This volume serves admirably as a general handbook for readers as well as students on the difficult and important fifteen years following the outbreak of the war. The fact that it has already had a wide adoption as a textbook should not by any means prejudice the reader against it."

+ Christian Century 47:659 My 21 '30 160w

"Not one of the least merits of this volume is the complete brevity, or rather, brief completeness of many of its chapters. Sixteen pages cover the German Revolution; fourteen, the settlement of the Irish Question; at the most, thirty-five pages are devoted to the Fascist Régime in Italy. From the viewpoint of the student-reader, these advantages will not be protested. What the last-mentioned category might and may object to, however, is an occasional obscurity, as in the abbreviated statements of the Dawes' Plan and the Fascist Electoral System. These few blemishes, perhaps the more apparent by reason of the excellence of the whole, should not blind the judicious reader to the outstanding merits of this clear, compact, and correct summary of the chief events and forces of the period from 1914 to the present." J. M. Barzun

+ Hist Outlook 21:132 Mr '30 700w

"Professor Benns has achieved the clarity at which he aims and for the general reader presents a concise but all inclusive picture of Europe since 1914 which has no trace of either bias or special pleading, no matter with what subject he is dealing." F. R. Dulles

+ N Y Evening Post p11m F 15 '30 750w

"The book is remarkably complete, admirably dispassionate, beautifully clear."

+ N Y Times p21 Ap 6 '30 400w

"The author of this volume has set himself to write a 'brief, clearly-written, well-organized' narrative, suitable for the general reader as well as for the class-room. In view of the vastness of the subject, a book of more than six hundred pages in small type may perhaps pass as 'brief'; that it is clearly written and well organized there can be no doubt. For all-round excellence and for content it is almost alone in its field." Duane Squires

+ Pol Sci Q 45:297 Je '30 700w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 81:18 F '30 100w

"A comprehensive and workmanlike textbook."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p83 Ja 30 '30 380w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1017 N 27 '30 300w

BENOIT, PIERRE. Axelle. 316p $2.50 Dial press

30-12525

The scene of this war story is a prison camp in Germany and the castle nearby, occupied by General Count von Reichendorf, last of an ancient family of Prussian barons, and his young kinswoman, Axelle von Mirrbach. One of the French prisoners, Sergeant Dumaine, is detailed to the castle to repair its electric wiring and repeatedly encounters Axelle. The story of their growing love is delicately told, but left inconclusive, with Axelle struggling between her love for Dumaine and her Prussian loyalty.

Booklist 27:64 O '30

Bookm 71:xi Ag '30 100w

"M. Benoit always succeeds in keeping you with him. He does not churn you up, nor does he let you slip into his hero's shoes. Yet you follow him hot-foot and if, for a paragraph, you lag behind he jerks you forward with a smart 'step lively' on the next page." V. P. Ross

Books p17 Je 22 '30 450w

"Pierre Benoit has executed a masterly work. From a subject that is not entirely original, he has evoked a novel that convinces, that drives home with brutal force to the reader the conflict engendered by the war in one girl's mind, and he has depicted that conflict with such compelling power that the reader must recognize 'Axelle' as a living tribute to the genius of the author, and to the French school of today." E. H.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 7 '30 700w

"In his perfect fairness to the hated Junkers, his appreciation of their qualities which the world at large and even many sections of the German people have ignored, Benoit has done a service to truth; and he has written a book which, because of its fine character analyses, possesses an interest beyond its value as fiction."

+ N Y Times p9 Je 1 '30 600w

"We are grateful for the restraint with which the author treats an old theme—the struggle between love of an enemy and loyalty to the Fatherland; and for the direct style which makes the simple story readable in one sitting. The unnamed translator has done an excellent job." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 155:106 My 21 '30 80w

"It is written in a straightforward, serviceable style, and some of its descriptions of prison camp life seem authentic, though the melodramatic character of the Prussian general is in the old tradition. Not an important book, nor a particularly interesting one, it yet serves to class its author among the rapidly increasing party in France which tends to advocate a wary, but quite definite, rapprochement with Germany."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:27 Ag 2 '30 380w

"Abounding in touches and incidents of character presentation, the narrative is penetratingly psychological. 'Axelle' is one of the bigger novels having their roots in the Great war."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Je 8 '30 320w

BENSON, EDWARD FREDERIC. As we were; a Victorian peep show. 306p il $4 (18s) Longmans

B or 92 Authors—Correspondence, reminiscences, etc. 30-29657

There were few men of real eminence in the last glittering decades of the Victorian era whom the author, son of the Archbishop of Canterbury and one of a well-known literary family, did not meet on terms of intimacy. They are all to be seen in this human "peep show"—Gladstone and Queen Victoria, Tennyson, Browning, Swinburne, Oscar Wilde and the great ladies of the Victorian pageant, endowed by their memoirist with a certain grandeur, yet treated with a sense of humor.

Booklist 27:203 Ja '31

"It is at once charming in its sentiment and shrewd in its satire. It sparkles with flashes of critical insight and good-humored wit. Indeed, it is so good for what it attempts that it challenges criticism for not having attempted more." F. T. Marsh

+ Bookm 72:333 N '30 350w

"A book that rambles without pattern, encroaches upon and hooks your attention, largely perhaps because personalities are true magnets, but also because the author is an uncommon wag." V. P. Ross

+ Books p26 O 26 '30 570w

Christian Century 47:1564 D 17 '30 220w

Reviewed by D. E. Wolf

Current Hist 33:xxii D '30 380w

"Before every spectacle Mr. Benson purrs with delight and professes a modish cynicism, but he leaves us in August, 1914, with as little sense of how we arrived there as if we had, indeed, spent fifty or sixty years inside Mme Tussaud's Museum, only to find the building suddenly ablaze, heroes and villains alike melting to featureless insignificance, and ourselves astounded at 'the beautiful ruins.'" M. D. Zabel

— Nation 131:529 N 12 '30 800w

"Mr. Benson gives the impression of being unaware of the existence of any interests outside the cathedral close, the courts of Cambridge, the salons of Mayfair, or the opulent studios of petted artists. That does not mean that he has not written a very readable and entertaining book of memoirs. It is indeed the best that has appeared for some time, and will undoubtedly achieve a certain permanence in the literature of Victorian gossip. . . . No book of memoirs has a better description of such notable incidents of the time as the baccarat scandal (though here, as I have said, it is difficult to swallow the whitewash), the downfall of Wilde, or the Whistler v. Ruskin trial." J. B. S. B.

+ Nation and Ath 47:736 S 13 '30 900w

"Much of his book is sadly over-cooked cabbage. Who to-day wants to hear once again the story of the Wilde trial, the Whistler trial, the Lady Florence Paget elopement, even the Tranby Croft baccarat case? . . . Mr. Benson writes lightly, and that part of the book that touches on family history, and does not trespass into literary criticism, for which he has no gifts, is fresh and entertaining. But the temper of the book, as of the society it presents, is rather maddeningly complacent to people of a younger generation."

— + New Statesman 35:740 S 20 '30 250w

"Mr. Benson attempts to prove nothing, but in the course of demonstrating his innocence of purpose he gives us some brilliant portraits of the great, specifically of Tennyson, Jowett, Oscar Browning, Henry James and Swinburne; and his anecdotes about the lions are, more often than not, highly amusing. His method shows to clearest advantage in his recollections of Henry James." John Chamberlain

+ N Y Times p4 N 2 '30 1350w

Reviewed by Harry Salpeter

N Y World p3e O 26 '30 270w

BENSON, E. F.—Continued

"Mr. Benson is to be thanked for giving us in a constantly entertaining way something more than Peep Show glimpses of English social, literary and political life in the later Victorian era." R. D. T.

+ Outlook 156:310 O 22 '30 330w

St Louis 28:301 D '30

"The Victorian era is proving a pie into which one has but to put in a thumb and out comes a plum; and here is Mr. Benson trying his luck and handing out a fist full. Mr. Benson has his likes and dislikes which he does not disguise, but he is a good showman, and although he calls his show a peep-show, it is really a show on the grand scale. His fat ladies are prodigious, his living skeletons rattle, and his fun is all the fun of the fair."

+ Sat R 150:495 O 18 '30 350w

"Mr. Benson's admirers, old and young, will find that his memories are not only vastly entertaining, but a permanent contribution to literature."

+ Spec 145:386 S 20 '30 1350w

"Mr. Benson quite convinces us that we cannot show academicians as lush, aesthetes as efflorescent, Judges of such slumberous awfulness or Turf magnates of such regal recklessness as blazed through the golden Victorian years. That aspect of our pomps of yesterday, at all events, recalled by Mr. Benson with mingled delight and melancholy, seems to be 'one with Nineveh and Tyre.' "

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p728 S 18 '30 1050w

BENSON, EDWARD FREDERIC. Ferdinand Magellan. (Golden hind ser.) 262p $4 Harper [12s 6d Lane]

B or 92 Magellan, Ferdinand 30-7087

A biographical account of Magellan's great pioneer voyage around the world. Not much has hitherto been written about this famous navigator, who was ugly and limped from a wound in the knee, who never received the slightest favor from the court of Lisbon and who for twelve years could find no one to back his proposed voyage. Mr Benson fully describes the vicissitudes of that illustrious expedition—mutiny, tempest, privation—up to the leader's death on the eve of his heroic achievement.

Booklist 26:309 My '30

Reviewed by W. H. Wells

Bookm 71:335 Je '30 230w

Reviewed by C. J. Finger

Books p10 Ap 6 '30 1300w

Boston Transcript p1 Mr 15 '30 1000w

"Mr. Benson's adroitness, grace and scholarship cannot be too highly praised. . . In his particular seas, he is as skillful a navigator as Magellan was in the Straits. The account of the intrigues of the Portuguese agent with Magellan's crew is a delightful piece of work; and the clear and simple handling of the mutiny episode, which in less clever hands might have degenerated into a confusion of conflicting testimony, is another good piece of writing." V. S. P.

+ Christian Science Monitor p15 Ja 4 '30 480w

Cleveland Open Shelf p123 S '30

"The author of this volume has marred the telling of an interesting story by using long paragraphs, by repeating often and needlessly many common facts, and by entangling the reader in involved academic explanations. Generally speaking, the last part of the book is more interesting and better written than the first part. The index is good." A. C. Wilgus

— + Hist Outlook 21:392 D '30 420w

"Mr. Benson's narrative of the explorer's feat is magnificently enthralling—so good that one is inclined at first to ignore his part in it, and say it was impossible to fail in the telling of a story such as this. . . But Mr. Benson must be credited with his due share in the success. Of Magellan's character little enough has been recorded; but Mr. Benson, putting facts and hints together so unobtrusively that the note is never forced, has made of his explorer a figure which is anything but a figurehead."

+ Nation and Ath 46:sup234 N 9 '29 220w

"Once in his stride, Mr. Benson tells of Magellan's great voyage and its vicissitudes of fortune with the true spirit of a story-teller, and the clarity of one who has been at pains to master the available facts."

+ New Statesman 34:sup x D 7 '29 1100w

Reviewed by H. E. Armstrong

N Y Times p11 My 25 '30 1150w

Reviewed by Bellamy Partridge

N Y World p10m Mr 23 '30 500w

"This is a very scholarly and readable book, the story of a man of one idea, who stuck to that idea through thick and thin, and successfully accomplished one of the greatest achievements of all time." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:510 Mr 26 '30 160w

Pratt p37 summer '30

"Mr. Benson is to be congratulated on his contribution both to the biography of adventure, and to the literature of history."

+ Spec 143:633 N 2 '29 900w

"Historically speaking, there is no new material in E. F. Benson's 'Ferdinand Magellan.' As an achievement in prose, however, the volume is noteworthy. It might well stand as an example to lesser writers, whose deft manipulation of the sensational, the dramatic and the romantic too often serve not only to screen mediocrity, but to accentuate poor literary craftsmanship."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 15 '30 500w

"At last we are given a full-length portrait, balanced and clear, of one who must always rank as one of the greatest of navigators. . . Mr. Benson has built up a fine study of a great explorer and a great character, and in a book of immense interest has made a definite contribution to the history of maritime enterprise."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p833 O 24 '29 1000w

BENSON, EDWARD FREDERIC. Inheritor. 316p $1 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Hutchinson]

30-33613

The story of a strange curse which persisted for generations in a Cornish family. The eldest son in each generation of Gervases was a monster with hoofs or horns. With young Steven, who was as beautiful as a Greek god, the curse was thought to have ended. Then it became apparent to Maurice Crofts, Steven's friend, and to Steven's mother that the curse had attacked Steven's mind, not his body, and the age-old terror took its toll.

Bookm 72:ix D '30 30w

Books p15 D 28 '30 350w

Boston Transcript p3 D 20 '30 420w

Reviewed by K. C. Tomlinson

Nation and Ath 47:740 S 13 '30 150w

"Not only is there an impossible plot, but the book is badly written, muddled and sentimental, and it will be a reader of great determination who is in at the death."

— New Statesman 35:576 Ag 9 '30 180w

"Mr. Benson's fantasy would perhaps be better as a long short story. Drawn out to novel length, it seems a trifle repetitious. Yet it has a good deal of charm. Many of the descriptions are not without a tincture of poetry, and Mr. Benson has recaptured more than a little of that woodland spirit the Greeks embodied in oread and nymph and satyr."

— + N Y Times p32 D 7 '30 320w

N Y World p3e D 21 '30 230w

Spec 145:107 Jl 19 '30 150w

Springf'd Republican p7e D 28 '30 180w

"Mr. Benson's descriptions of Dionysiac doings by Steven and his attendant satyr are effective, but somehow his words have not the headiness to produce the thrill required."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p572 Jl 10 '30 420w

BENSON, STELLA (MRS J. C. O'GORMAN ANDERSON). Far-away bride. 445p $2.50 Harper

30-30775

This story of a White Russian refugee family, the Malinins, in Manchuria, conforms in outline to the dilemma of the exiled Jews as narrated in the Apocryphal book of Tobit, which is added as an appendix to the novel. Interest centers about the tragi-comic misadventures of the Malinins: old Sergei, head of the family; his good-natured wife, Anna; and the nineteen-year-old son, Seryozha, for whom Mr Wilfred Chew, a Chinese barrister with London training, procures a bride with a fat dowry.

"Oddly enough the thing that strikes you most about this twice-told tale is its freshness. Everything about it seems washed and new, every word a clean little bit of glass through which we peep at an exquisite Chinese sunset or the subtle fears of a virgin mind. It makes no effort to be a profound book; it is chiefly a seeing of light, clear colors and a touching of sandy roads. But it would have been a boring book, too obviously picturesque, if back of these gracefully painted shapes the author had not put spiritual substance. And it would have been an overlong journey if she had not given us a nimble humor for guide."

+ Books p4 N 16 '30 650w

Boston Transcript p2 D 20 '30 560w

"A gorgeously amusing and ingenious literary tour de force." Margaret Wallace

+ N Y Evening Post p4d N 29 '30 500w

Reviewed by O. M. Fuller

N Y World p3e D 7 '30 250w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 156:585 D 10 '30 230w

"In a world really responsive to beauty, gusto, ironic insight, and high-hearted comedy, the novels of Stella Benson would stand well up on the roll of honor, and the announcement of a new story by this uncannily gifted author would be a public event. . . Stella Benson's eye misses nothing, and her pen has the magic of evocation. An extraordinary book! A fine genius went into its making. May it attain half the honors and popularity it deserves." L. W. Dodd

+ Sat R of Lit 7:415 D 6 '30 800w

BENSON, THEODORA. Anita agrees. 284p $2.50 Harper

30-7104

Driving back to London from a week end in the country Gervase Holt saw a beautiful girl leaning on a garden wall. Her face haunted him all day. That was the beginning of a long and very involved courtship which ended in happiness.

"The author deals with her heroine humorously and yet ruthlessly. Though she leaves the reader in no doubt as to the real Anita beneath the artificiality, she has succeeded also in portraying a wholly lovable character exemplifying the eternal feminine that has neither best nor worst. The other actors appear as shadows of ordinary people. The novel is saved, however, by charm of style, by humorous auctorial interpolations, and by that lightness of touch which characterizes good satire." E. R. Richardson

+ — Bookm 71:218 Ap '30 230w

"Miss Benson has taken the conventional masks and gestures of polite society at face value and has, by arranging them into a pattern, constructed a novel that is quite plausible but has scant relation to reality. What she would probably call 'life in the raw' is hidden under the manners of most ladies and gentlemen."

— + Books p25 Ap 13 '30 180w

Boston Transcript p10 Ap 26 '30 280w

"The book is pleasing, amusing and gracefully written, except when the author lapses into the first person and theorizes on the ways of women and life. She mocks her grave and model heroine, thereby making her possible to the reader."

+ — N Y Times p22 Ap 6 '30 200w

"This book, when not discussing intellectual problems, is exhilarating and quick. The author, however, facetiously interpolates her own opinions about life, warning the reader of impending disaster, and this, though a device legitimate in the ponderous eighteenth-century novel, impedes the speed and lightness of this narrative."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:904 Ap 5 '30 300w

BENSON, THERESE, pseud. The go-between. 270p $2 Dodd

30-3541

A story of amusing situations and humorous dialogue. Jerry Kip, who has written a novel under the pseudonym of Ivan Jay, and Diana Franklin, a manuscript reader who goes under the name of Gwyn Gale, have idealized each other in correspondence. But when they actually meet—under their true names—in America, they fail to recognize each other's identity. The "go-between" who finally brings them together, is Lin, a little girl friend of Diana's who, born in China of American parentage, has excellent Oriental ideas of matchmaking.

Booklist 26:312 My '30

"It is an entertaining story, sparkling with humor, with plenty of incident, and though not exciting it is interesting enough to make one sorry when the end is reached." G. B.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Mr 8 '30 600w

Cleveland Open Shelf p46 Mr '30

" 'A light, wholesome novel' of mistaken identity and strange entanglements." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p11m F 15 '30 40w

"A light and fairly entertaining story of the complications that may arise when people use one name in private life and another in their work. . . The plot is rambling and stretched rather thin at times to obtain the desired situations, while the introduction of a large number of minor characters tends to confusion."

+ — N Y Times p27 F 16 '30 220w

Wis Lib Bul 26:106 Mr '30

BENSON, WILFRID. Foreigner in the family. 300p $2.50 Harcourt [7s 6d Hogarth]

29-29977

An international marriage is the basis upon which the English and French character studies of the story rest. Helen Smythe-Jackson presents her newly acquired French husband, Robert de Boncourt, to her very English parents and relatives. The virtuous and reserved English expect (and secretly hope) that Robert is as lacking in morals and sportsmanship as they believe all Frenchmen to be; but when a certain comedy of errors involving a pretty maidservant is straightened out, Robert comes off with flying colors in the eyes of his English in-laws.

Booklist 26:279 Ap '30

"Slight as this story is in complications, it is a continuously amusing and adroit study of racial and human contrasts. The satire is pointed and the style is brisk and engaging."

+ Books p21 F 16 '30 160w

"It contains plenty of humor and the characters are well drawn representatives of actual individuals."

+ Boston Transcript p3 F 5 '30 80w

Cleveland Open Shelf p63 Ap '30

"This is far better written, more intelligent, and more witty than the usual comedy of errors (Wodehousean not omitted), while the fun is funnier, the characterization less crude." L. L. Irvine

+ Nation and Ath 45:436 Je 29 '29 180w

Reviewed by Oakley Johnson

N Y Evening Post p11m F 8 '30 500w

BENSON, WILFRID—Continued

"The book is notable for its humorous passages and for its excellent characterizations. 'The Foreigner in the Family' is a pleasant book, a clever book, and remarkably free from the self-conscious mannerisms which tend to characterize young English fiction. It has the strength of satire, the life of comedy, and the charm of wit. It is easy to read and not so easy to forget."

+ N Y Times p8 Ja 19 '30 700w

"The book is written in indifferent taste with an undertone of hard, disagreeable facetiousness. It has about as much relation to life as a fantasy by Mr. Belloc with none of the latter's charm and little of his good humour. It is childishly Franco-phil. . . The book is too ill-tempered for comedy, too serious for burlesque, too unnatural to be a convincing comment upon ordinary life. Its redeeming qualities are brevity, intellectual vitality and originality. The ingredients are familiar but the mixture is new, and there is something tonic in its harsh, unpleasant flavour." L. P. Hartley

— + Sat R 147:872 Je 29 '29 200w

Reviewed by Gilbert Thomas

Spec 142:982 Je 22 '29 160w

"The story is an intelligent skit on national prejudices, besides offering plenty of clever talk and mirthful complications."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e F 9 '30 300w

Wis Lib Bul 26:67 F '30

BENSTEAD, CHARLES RICHARD. Retreat; a novel of 1918. 355p $2.50 Century [7s 6d Methuen]

30-5240

The war from the viewpoint of an English priest, Chaplin Warne, is the subject of Mr Benstead's novel. The great German offensive starts at five in the morning following the chaplain's arrival at the front. The horrible reality of his experiences, the conflict between his ideal of God and the ruthless slaughter of trench warfare and the coarseness of men in battle, gradually breaks down his reason: he realizes for the first time the uselessness of what he thought would be his divine mission, and he degenerates from physical cowardice to madness, from madness to death.

Booklist 26:279 Ap '30

Bookm 71:xix Mr '30 170w

"Mr. Benstead has created the atmosphere for his story of inner decay with a skill beyond the reach of many war writers. He has painted scenes of the great German advance and the British retreat that are unforgettable." Eugene Lohrke

+ Books p4 F 16 '30 1050w

"This is an outstanding and a brilliant book. It is an understanding revelation of human experience in a great crisis and a masterful piece of powerful writing." R. K. M.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 5 '30 950w

"One thing that makes 'Retreat' such a memorable book is that besides being a narrative of the war, with that intensity of a personal narrative, it is a very fine study of character, its integration and its disintegration. It depicts man's clash with his environment—the fact that the environment was the war only makes man's reactions the more vivid, the more sharply cut." F. B.

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p11 F 22 '30 500w

"Psychologically the story stands foursquare; it is written with a fine penetration, an emotional honesty, and an insight that are most unusual. It is marred by the inclusion of too many war scenes, but the main story is hard and clear. It is free of any compromise with ordinary conceptions of religion or of the priest; in short, it is an exceptionally good, readable English novel." Clinton Simpson

+ Nation 130:329 Mr 19 '30 230w

Reviewed by Lionel Trilling

New Repub 63:296 Jl 23 '30 30w

"Mr. Benstead tells a rather horrible story with force and vividness; a little more sympathy, a more convincing display of the interior of the victim's mind, would have made it twice as good." E. S.

+ — New Statesman 34:504 Ja 25 '30 120w

"The story is impeded by digressions for the purpose of castigating the politicians and by the interlarding of philosophizings on the part of the hardy observers of the Rev. Mr. Warne. There is one outstanding piece of writing in the book, and it is as compelling a presentation of war incident as you are likely to find. Lieutenant Nash snakes two artillery pieces, marooned between the lines, away from the Germans whose machine guns are trained on them. Here is hard-bitten writing, as authentic as brandy. It balances the priestly wash and results in a net profit for the novel. 'Retreat' is no 'All Quiet,' but it's worth an evening." Byron Darnton

+ — N Y Evening Post p6s Mr 1 '30 400w

"If 'All Quiet on the Western Front' and 'Journey's End' had never appeared, Lieut. Commander Benstead's tale might have won high critical acclaim. As it is, 'Retreat' gives the effect of an unsuccessful blend of 'the best features of both' of these epoch-making literary productions and suffers from comparison with each."

— N Y Times p6 F 23 '30 420w

"The parson hunts in vain for God among the horrors of no man's land, and goes to his grave without discovering that if he had found a little more of God in his own heart he would have stood a good chance of finding him in the hearts of some of the coarse but kindly roughnecks in the line. Some fairly good pictures of the war here, and a very excellent portrait of a single-barrel parson who has run up against real men for the first time in his life."

+ N Y World p11m F 16 '30 280w

"The battle pictures are vivid and the characters sharply outlined." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:319 F 19 '30 120w

"Though hardly ranking with Erich Remarque and Arnold Zweig, the work shows ability and a deep understanding. Its message is not defeatism; but stark reality and acute neurasthenia." W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 81:16 Ap '30 200w

"It is perhaps to be expected from an experienced soldier who was not a chaplain that the better part of the book is the description of the retreat and of how a variety of men behaved in it. For instance, anger at cheap, safe politicians, insistent scraps of military history, and tired, caustic comment on the behavior of the French, ring distinctly more true than description of the stages of the Padre's breakdown. The horror, the humor, the profanity, and obscenity which were the ordinary channels of relief, the bestiality, and the amoral decency of officers and men are caught to the life." Bartlet Brebner

+ Sat R of Lit 6:752 F 22 '30 500w

"The central character of Retreat, a regimental padre, is another failure, another mediocre soul whose end can awaken in the reader scarcely more than a shrug of the shoulders. The book deals with two débâcles: the retreat of the Fifth Army in 1918, and the demoralization of the padre who, driven back upon himself, and lacking the support of the outward and conventional manifestations of his religion, retreats gradually into insanity, denial of God, and death. . . One is moved by his pathetic misery, but he is not worth a book to himself." V. S. Pritchett

— + Spec 144:64 Ja 11 '30 200w

Reviewed by Leon Whipple

Survey 64:34 Ap 1 '30 550w

"The picture is so complete and so vividly presented that those who followed the retreat will feel as if they were living those days over again. The figure in it over which its creator has obviously spent much pains is also very clever, but not quite so convincing. One cannot but think that, even if we accept all his other shortcomings and bad luck, Warne's sheer stupidity is exaggerated."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p98 F 6 '30 550w

BENT, SILAS. Machine made man. 341p il $3.50 Farrar

338.4 Machinery in industry 30-8121

The story of evolution, as seen from the point of view of machine development, from the beginnings of civilization to the present is the theme of Mr Bent's book. He traces the historical development of certain necessities of life such as food, clothing, shelter and weapons; three chapters are devoted to the development of communication; the evolution of transportation, commerce, money, and politics is outlined; and the chapters on labor, education and entertainment are of particular interest. Thruout the book, and in his conclusion, the author sums up the pros and cons, the advantages and disadvantages of living in a machine age. His chief conclusion is that the machine can, by saving time, give mankind more leisure; but what the mass of mankind can or will do with this increased leisure is another matter.

Booklist 27:59 O '30

"If Mr. Bent had contented himself with a simple outline of man's physical developments, he would have written a book to be read by those who do not have time for arduous study; but his interpretations of these changes and developments are open to the severest criticism, whatever refuge he and the other utilitarians may take in that 'vast and windy abode' —the future." A. B. Clarke
+ Bookm 71:466 Jl '30 500w

"It is a pleasure to read, and to recommend for wide reading, a book such as this one, which presents a defense of things as they are, and of man as machinery has made him, with such a rich profusion of anecdote as to make it actually entertaining, even to one who most violently dissents from its argument. . . Mr. Bent deplores the habit of looking backward at 'the good old days,' yet it is one of the most interesting facts in connection with his failure to analyze what is the real flaw in the machine-made world of today that he has permitted his book to be copiously illustrated, in the face of all the machine-made cuts available, with hand-made woodcuts." Ralph Borsodi
+ — Books p1 Mr 30 '30 2500w
Boston Transcript p1 Je 7 '30 500w
Cleveland Open Shelf p107 Jl '30
Nation 130:576 My 14 '30 250w

"In the clearness of his thinking and the force and pithiness of his style, Mr. Bent stands high." R. L. Duffus
+ N Y Times p4 Mr 30 '30 1150w
Reviewed by Shaemas O'Sheel
N Y World p7m Je 8 '30 280w
Pratt p32 autumn '30

"A really stunning book, in which, in extraordinarily entertaining fashion, and with great wealth of detail, anecdotal, statistical—a mine of sheer and occasionally queer information—he describes the accomplishments of mankind from primitive beginnings. It is a fine piece of work; journalistic in the best sense of the term—a first-class feature-story, well seasoned with reflective compunctions as to the cui bono of all this. It is wholesome reading—alike for those who do not know nor care whether 'progress' has any destination, and those who feel sure that we are headed for the demnition bow-wows." J. P. Gavit
+ Sat R of Lit 6:914 Ap 12 '30 1100w

BERAUD, HENRI. Wood of the hanging Templar (Le bois du Templier pendu); tr. by Samuel Sloan. 269p $2.50 Macmillan

30-25824

The story of a French feudal village from 1309 thru the French revolution. Beginning with the day when the villagers hung a member of the hated band—the Knights Templars, the novel recounts the calamities which befell the village as a result of that act.

"Béraud writes simply, clearly and always with restraint, none of which has been lost in Samuel Sloan's excellent translation."
+ Bookm 72:vi N '30 180w

"This is not a history for it leaves out too much; it is a highly condensed plot. The austerity of the plan is relieved by short but beautiful descriptions of the country. The artificiality of condensing is made honest at the end, when M. Beraud indicates the new bondage of industrialism, which weighs down the weak even while it liberates the strong, and makes men their own tyrants now. The flaw of any novel which has no focus in a single character is here partly reinforced; and in the lack of one individual perhaps a dozen solid characters file by the reader, consistent in the hope of freedom, but various in their interests, their tempers and their fate." A. L. Basinger
+ — Books p22 N 2 '30 380w

"The story is softened by love-tales of those yet too young to recognize hardship, and the utter simplicity and credulity of the peasants is exquisitely presented."
+ N Y Times p7 O 26 '30 450w

"This gloomy succession of troubles extends for two hundred and seventy pages without once being relieved by any foil of good fortune, or any character sufficiently boldly drawn to catch one's attention. Indeed, the four centuries of necessity pass too quickly to allow any interest in a given generation; the effect is simply that of a race of featureless gnomes trodden continually into the mire. Such was no doubts the effect the author wished to produce; but this is a book that compels one to wonder why it was written."
— Sat R of Lit 7:373 N 22 '30 420w

BERENSON, BERNHARD. Italian painters of the renaissance. rev ed 340p il $4.50 (12s 6d) Oxford

759.5 Painting, Italian [30-25246]

"Mr. Berenson's book assembles under one cover his well-known treatises on the Venetian, Florentine, Central Italian and North Italian painters, and concludes with the short paper on 'The Decline of Art,' first printed in 1907."—New Statesman

Booklist 27:114 N '30

"Berenson still retains his unassailable position as prince of art critics, won long ago by his consistent adherence to certain sound theories." A. McC. S.
+ Cath World 131:507 Jl '30 280w
Christian Science Monitor p7 N 1 '30 300w

"Mr. Berenson's authority as an expert is rivalled only by that of Sir Bernard Spilsbury. Attributions signed by him are attached to pictures in American collections like the Papal seals which guarantee the authenticity of relics." Raymond Mortimer
+ Nation and Ath 46:579 Ja 25 '30 700w
New Statesman 35:249 My 31 '30 250w

"Berenson's analysis of individual painters is acute and always revealing. It is not necessary that you agree with him in all his estimates in order to find real stimulation in the narrative. Having a vigorous point of view is what counts, and here we have to deal with a personality that has vividly reacted to a chosen period. The author's general estimate of the Renaissance, which, as it were, frames the whole substance of his criticism, is full of happy enthusiasm."
+ N Y Times p25 My 11 '30 380w
St Louis 28:140 My '30

"Much has been, and is being, written on Italian art at its greatest, but Mr. Berenson's book, distilled in long years of study and reflection, gives the essence of the matter. Those who read it and apply its hints as they go round the galleries of Burlington House will learn more from it than from any other book on the enthralling subject."

BERENSON, BERNHARD—Continued

+ Spec 144:94 Ja 18 '30 120w

BERESFORD, JOHN DAVYS. Love's illusion. 307p $2.50 Viking press [7s 6d Collins]
30-26268

Writing thirty years after the event a middle-aged man relates an episode of his sensitive, shy and impressionable youth, when, fresh from the university, he had his first experience of ardent young love and was sadly disillusioned both by the girl and her mother. The experience was so blighting that he had never married and had borne ever since the scar of the injury to his ideal of love.

Booklist 26:279 Ap '30

"It is an unpretentious, quiet story, yet, since a most difficult thing is so deftly done, one acknowledges its perfection."

+ Bookm 72:x S '30 50w

"In this novel Mr. Beresford, through elimination and a judicious understanding of dramatic values, gives his attention and ours only to the necessary characters. The memories of Geoffrey Phillips as he looks back on that summer at Elmthorpe must have included many individuals besides the ones whom he mentions in this story. With strict economy, more worthy of a New Englander than a British author, he links every character and each separate incident to the related whole. The novel is poetic and dignified, written with a taste which younger writers might wisely envy." D. F. Gilman

+ Books p2 Mr 2 '30 650w

Cleveland Open Shelf p77 My '30

Nation 130:402 Ap 2 '30 150w

Reviewed by L. L. Irvine

Nation and Ath 46:644 F 8 '30 20w

"Geoffrey's simple faith is uncommonly like callow credulity; and it is a real weakness in an attractive story that one cannot be certain whether Mr. Beresford perceives this grave fault in his hero. Brenda's character might easily puzzle a boy of Geoffrey's age and inexperience; but the circumstances of the Maxwells, the family's odd attitude to Mr. Maxwell—who is, with real ingenuity, only heard 'off'—should have aroused the suspicions even of young Geoffrey. No one could fail to admire the charm of Mrs. Phillips, though her relationship and conversation with Geoffrey do strain our credulity."

New Statesman 34:578 F 8 '30 320w

"The story is delicately and gracefully told, in mild autumnal mood that sometimes, but not often, verges on the sentimental. Geoffrey's idealism and his deceitfulness, vanity and self-distrust, all the ridiculous contradictoriness of a young man in love, are excellently presented by his middle-aged self, who regards him with a tender irony; he is absurd yet admirable, as a young man in love should be. The girl is less successful; her fascination even for the young Geoffrey is never satisfactorily explained, and that he should have remained unmarried on her account is, from the portrait we are given of her, incredible."

+ — N Y Times p9 Mr 2 '30 250w

"Mr. Beresford has handled his difficult theme with so much delicacy and propriety that it could not possibly offend the most pious or conventional."

+ N Y World p11m F 16 '30 220w

"Very competently written story of young love in 1902 or thereabouts, told through the recollections of a middle-aged man, who not too sentimentally regrets his vanished naïveté and youth." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:319 F 19 '30 80w

"Containing many good things of a minor sort, it yet lacks real distinction in its entirety. Unfortunately the matter-of-fact, too true-to-life, tone is here carried to such lengths that his book becomes uninteresting in spite of the author's good intentions and fine workmanship."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1115 Je 7 '30 280w

"In this book the mother's intrigue with a local clergyman and the young man's affair with the daughter, both of which end disastrously, run side by side. It is the weakness of the book that the two themes interact very little. One suspects that one or the other must be irrelevant. Mr. Beresford is interested in processes as processes rather than in processes as people. But I gather from an earlier book that he is tired of having this pointed out to him. It must be said that his gravity, diligence and skill in displaying a situation are pleasant compensations for an essential bloodlessness."

Spec 144:206 F 8 '30 130w

"Briefly summarized, this seems a commonplace little story, and so, in essence, it is: but Mr. Beresford has made all its circumstance so delicately clear that it gives great pleasure to read. Geoffrey is the character upon which his author is most to be congratulated. Such a limpid portrait of immature manhood is a very rare achievement."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p120 F 13 '30 550w

Wis Lib Bul 26:106 Mr '30

BERG, BENGT MAGNUS KRISTOFFER. To Africa with the migratory birds. 274p il $5 Putnam

598.2 Birds—Migration. Cranes (birds). Photography of birds 30-27998

When he was a boy in Sweden the flight of migratory birds, especially the cranes, fascinated the author. In this book he describes his attempt to explain the mystery of these birds and their destinations. Mr Berg has followed, with camera and field glasses, ducks, terns, gulls, white storks and many other birds, from the northern countries of Europe to Spain and then to North Africa.

Booklist 27:190 Ja '31

"A splendid book about splendid birds, splendidly illustrated. . . Bengt Berg has the art of conveying to us not only the sights and odors, the very breath of those wild marshes, but also his own throbbing excitement, his terror when there was a chance of discovery, his exultation when at last he had followed through all its stages the fine domestic life of the noble birds [the cranes], whose philosophic poise and wariness rightly kindled the sympathetic wonder of Aristotle." Charles Johnston

+ N Y Times p12 N 30 '30 1350w

"For one who loves Nature it is a gripping story, vividly illustrated, and the fact that it concerns European rather than American birds diminishes its interest by very little, if any at all."

+ Springf'd Republican p12 O 15 '30 250w

BERGE, VICTOR, and LANIER, HENRY WYSHAM. Pearl diver; adventuring over and under southern seas. 368p il $4 Doubleday, Doran

B or 92 Voyages and travels. Diving, Submarine. Pearl-fisheries 30-3975

Victor Berge's own story of his boyhood in a Swedish village, his sea adventures, and the beginning of his life as a pearl diver in the East. He describes his adventures with sea monsters, narrates anecdotes of cannibals and South sea headhunters, and gives some first-hand information on the value of pearls and coral.

Booklist 26:276 Ap '30

Books p22 Mr 16 '30 250w

"To Mr. Lanier Victor Berge told the story of his adventures. And Mr. Lanier transcribed it with such fidelity to its spirit as well as its matter, that Mr. Berge declared that in the finished narrative he 'found himself.' Seldom, evidently, is collaboration so entirely successful." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p1 Ja 18 '30 1200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p100 Jl '30

"For those who have fed on the highly colored books of adventure of recent vogue 'Pearl Diver' may at first seem wanting. But that will not be the opinion after a chapter or two. It is a narrative that is both convincing and satisfactory."

+ N Y Times p11 Ja 12 '30 1350w

St Louis 28:146 My '30

"This book is of outstanding merit for three reasons. In the first place the subject-matter depicts an aspect of the real pearling industry which nobody has ever dealt with before. Secondly, the first-hand experiences and life history of the man who sought his vocation the world over until he found it on the bed of the Pacific, are written in a virile, straightforward style characteristic of the self-made man which endears him at once to his reader. The third reason, though by no means the least important one, is the very rare feat accomplished by the editor-author, Mr. Lanier, of effacing himself and successfully vesting his pen with the personality of another."

+ Sat R 149:660 My 24 '30 500w

"The claim to have presented character is amply justified. Mr. Lanier has been so successful in investing Mr. Berge with a personality as uncommon as it is credible that the diver who seeks pearls where he may meet sharks and octopus is even more impressive for what he is than for what he does."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p386 My 8 '30 1000w

BERGER, HELEN, pseud. See Bamberger, H. R.

BERGLUND, ABRAHAM, and WRIGHT, PHILIP GREEN. Tariff on iron and steel. (Inst. of economics. Publications) 240p $3 Brookings [14s William & Norgate]

337.5 Tariff—United States. Iron industry and trade. Steel industry and trade 29-15466

"In this little volume an effort has been made to present in non-technical and straightforward style, the results of an intensive study of the iron and steel schedules in American tariff history. The book is opportune, for it helps to explain why the steel schedules, which for a number of years had been on the decline, were revised upward in 1922, and it should also prove of some value in interpreting the rates of the forthcoming tariff."—Am Hist R

"The data from which the authors worked appears reliable and their attitude peculiarly unbiased. The book is an effort to make the result of scholarship easily available upon a subject highly technical and riddled with politics, and the project is apparently based on the optimistic theory that the general public is interested in the truth regarding the tariff. While the student of American history may well feel pessimistic regarding this, the book itself deserves wide reading and should certainly not be neglected by the present tariff-makers." H. U. Faulkner

+ Am Hist R 35:385 Ja '30 500w

"In these uncertain days of tariffs and rumors of tariffs, when the senatorial and editorial protagonists and opponents of the new tariff bill are giving the lie to each other through clenched teeth and the public patiently hopes for the best, this new study is most timely. Dispassionate in tone and judicious in temper, the book throws a flood of light over the industry which comes first to the minds of most people whenever the word protection is mentioned. . . This book makes an impregnable case against the tariff act of 1922. Its significance for the Hawley bill is unquestionable." Horace Taylor

+ Nation 129:387 O 9 '29 900w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 34:88 D '29

"Aside from its usefulness to those particularly interested in iron and steel as such, the book attains two valuable objectives. In the first place, while at points displaying a necessary familiarity with the well-known concept of 'comparative advantage', the authors throughout show a willingness to analyze their problem, not alone in terms of a particular theory such as the 'classical' one, but in the light of practical conditions. The study is not doctrinaire. In the second place, by the same token, the book provides one more good 'case-study'. The revlwer believes that such analyses are the best means of testing, qualifying, and creating tariff theorems, and has for many years endeavored to stimulate this approach in advanced courses and seminars." John Donaldson

+ Pol Sci Q 45:440 S '30 900w

St Louis 28:95 Ap '30

BERKELEY, ANTHONY, pseud. See Cox, A. B.

BERNDORFF, HANS RUDOLF. Espionage! tr. by Bernard Miall. 268p $2.50 Appleton [10s 6d Nash]

940.485 European war, 1914-1918—Secret service. Spies 30-9748

The author outlines various systems of espionage in Europe preceding, during, and following the World war, and traces the individual careers of some of the most famous spies. Separate chapters are given to Annemarie Lesser, known as the "lady doctor," Alexander Szek, Mata Hari, Edith Cavell and Marthe Moreuil.

Reviewed by Edward Weeks

Atlantic Bookshelf p24 Je '30 220w

Booklist 27:21 S '30

Bookm 72:x N '30 100w

"Though it has passed through many editions in the original German and is touted as an 'international sensation,' I find this book disappointing. Outside of the 'Geheime Mächte' of Colonel Nikolai, late Chief of the Intelligence Service in Berlin, Berndorff's promised to be the most notable exposé of German espionage during the war. The author has sufficient knowledge of the subject to have made it so. One of the worst chapters is that on Mata Hari. It is full of chronological errors and advances fantastic reasons for her capture by the French. Because Berndorff misrepresents this case about which I happen to know a good deal, I cannot have confidence in his versions of affairs which are still obscure to me." W. A. Roberts

— Books p7 My 25 '30 900w

Reviewed by Fanny Butcher

Chicago Daily Tribune p8 Jl 26 '30 80w

Cleveland Open Shelf p101 Jl '30

"Here is a sort of super-spy book, one that ought to satisfy the most insatiable reader of this kind of literature. Apparently writing out of extensive knowledge of the subject, Herr Berndorff has brought to his task sense of drama, skill in the telling of a story, a happy faculty in the use of language and unusual good taste."

+ N Y Times p21 Ap 20 '30 450w

"Worth reading." W. R. Brooks

Outlook 154:629 Ap 16 '30 100w

Reviewed by H. J. Smith

Sat R of Lit 6:1023 My 10 '30 750w

Times [London] Lit Sup p672 Ag 21 '30 320w

BERNFELD, SIMON, comp. Foundations of Jewish ethics; auth. tr. from the 2d rev. and enl. German ed. by Armin Hajman Koller. (Teachings of Judaism) 265p $2.50 Macmillan

296 Ethics, Jewish (29-19216)

A discussion of Judaism and its teachings, in its doctrinal and ethical content. This is volume one of a series on the teachings of Judaism compiled by Dr Simon Bernfeld of the Union of German Jews.

BERNFELD, SIMON, comp.—Continued

"It is an admirable summary. Judaism shares with Christianity a sincere reverence for the Hebrew scriptures. But this work, like many others, fails to discriminate between the Hebrew ethical and religious teachings and its later development in the daughter religions of Judaism and Christianity."

+ — Christian Century 46:1546 D 11 '29 180w

"For those who would understand Judaism this is an indispensable volume. The book is well documented. Sources are always given and a very inclusive bibliography is appended to each chapter. It is no story-book with which to while away an idle hour, but for the student it is a thesaurus from which may be gathered the gems of religious thought that express the highest religious and moral ideals of a great people." I. G. Matthews

+ Crozer Q 7:140 Ja '30 200w

"In reading over the quotations one obtains an impression of fragmentariness and incompleteness. This method has the weakness of all efforts supported by collections of proof-texts arbitrarily extracted from their context. Notwithstanding the defects, the book will prove of value. The several introductions by contemporary Jews of note are illuminating commentaries upon the best in modern Judaism. The motive behind the book is highly commendable. Any serious attempt to interpret modern Judaism to the non-Jewish world will be gratefully received." O. J. Baab

— + J Religion 10:268 Ap '30 700w

"If one were to judge from this volume, not a touch of jingoism, chauvinism, snobbery or fanaticism ever marred the 'marmoreal calmness' of the Jewish soul. . . The Jew is here a kind of Sunday-school exemplar with all the unreality and tediousness of such a model. A self-respecting Jew might well exclaim with Cromwell, 'Paint me as I am.' Yet this book has its value. It can serve as a corrective of errors prevalent not only among non-Jews but also among the Jews themselves." Abraham Cronbach

— + World Tomorrow 13:39 Ja '30 550w

BERRY, ANA M. Art for children; [ed. by Geoffrey Holme]. 159p il $4.50 pa $3 Boni [10s 6d; pa 7s 6d Studio]

750 Art—Juvenile literature [30-26270]

"The book is divided into six parts: Beasts, Games and Amusements, Ships, Legends and Adventures, Angels and Fairies, Portraits of Children; each part carrying twenty odd full-page illustrations. . . The format of the book has dignity, beauty, and good color without and within. The eight illustrations in color include three paintings from India, a Chinese scroll painting, an English county fair and the French and English expedition to Barbary (Froissart). The index of illustrations includes the names and, in the main, a remarkably fresh selection from the works of the great artists of Italy, France, Germany, England, India, China and Japan."—Books

Booklist 26:285 Ap '30

"Designed as a kind of visual induction of children from ten to twelve years old into the beginning of conscious appreciation of art. The variety and strong associative interest of the pictures and the excellence of their reproduction give the book a place also among books for younger children. The explanatory letter press and captions carry a unifying thread of genuine intention and a direct appeal to the intelligence." A. C. M.

+ Books p8 F 2 '30 700w

"The outstanding, indeed the quite dazzling merit of this beautiful book lies in the intelligence and imagination put into the selection of the pictures. There is hardly a trite choice in this collection. Many indeed are pictures whose reproductions are difficult to obtain even in Europe and almost impossible to find in America." M. L. S.

+ Boston Transcript p3 F 15 '30 550w

"What the author of this admirable book offers the child is an attractively arranged initiation into the elements of good art. Well-chosen plates illustrating centuries of art are furnished with just enough—never too much—explanatory matter to catch the child's attention and stimulate enduring interest. . . The book invites the heartiest recommendation. It ought to be in every home where there are children." E. A. Jewell

+ N Y Times p16 Ja 19 '30 170w

Pratt p24 summer '30

"The net is widely flung, and it says much for the critical faculty of Miss Berry that, though Chinese and Mogul pictures are cheek by jowl with Rowlandson's drawings, and though Watteau shares a double page with Metzinger, there is no sense of incongruity—quite the reverse. The illustrations in colour are very successful, a success which is again achieved by careful selection."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p979 N 21 '29 350w

BERRY, CHARLES WALTER. Viniana; with an introd. by H. Warner Allen. 141p pl $3 Knopf [10s Constable]

663.2 Wine and wine making

"The author is both a connoisseur and a student of the subject, and he has set down a series of table conversations—a discussion of the best vineyards and the great vintages. One is invited to sit down to a claret dinner, a burgundy dinner and a champagne dinner. The correct viands are accompanied by the correct wines, and under the spell of that blended symphony of taste, anecdotes of drinking are recalled and the comparative merits of various bottles appraised with convivial decorum."—Books

Books p22 O 26 '30 180w

"This little volume is described as 'a blend of good wines and good stories as told at table by a wine merchant.' In point of fact, the wines are a great deal better than the stories. Mr Berry's anecdotes, reminiscences and quotations make a somewhat scratch collection, and he has not the art of writing a book. But he is certainly a connoisseur of wine. His Lafites and Mouton Rothschilds, his Clos de Vougeot and magnums of 1868 Romanée, his Veuve Clicquot and century-old Tokay Essence, might well melt the grimmest of Prohibitionists."

+ New Statesman 33:560 Ag 10 '29 150w

"The conversation during these dinners is charmingly interspersed with anecdotes and quotations from Rabelais, Lytton, Congreve, Cervantes, Martial, Ben Jonson, Sheridan. There are disquisitions on Brandy and on Tokay, on the growing, making and drinking of Champagne, on the adventure and excitement of coming across a rare old vintage in an unexpected place. There is not a little nostalgia in the pleasure one has reading this book." Louis Sherwin

+ N Y Evening Post p4d N 29 '30 500w

"For all its modest pretence of being just table talk, the little book is a contribution by one of the chief of living experts to the æsthetics of wine, and it must so be treated." T. E. W.

+ Sat R 148:191 Ag 17 '29 650w

"Mr. Berry can by no possibility be called an amateur. His book is the recreation of a professional who dispenses the lore of his craft out of the ripe fulness of his knowledge and blends instruction with stories arising out of his subject. Those pages which chronicle three repasts—a claret dinner, a Burgundy dinner, and a champagne dinner—have no value as instruction for the ordinary reader except to direct his dreams."

+ Spec 143:254 Ag 24 '29 480w

"It is the highest possible compliment to Mr. Berry's desultory commentary to say that it is worthy of its text."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p740 S 26 '29 350w

BERTRAM, ANTHONY. The sword falls. 276p $2.50 Harper [7s 6d Allen, G.]
[29-6858]

The story of a lovable, commonplace Englishman who lived to see everything he held dear taken from him, but whose courage never failed him. At the end of the war, which had left his world in ruins, he quietly took up his work again, to carry on with whatever there was left.

"Here is simple, honest action, still distorted by sentiment but with a dignity of its own and a very direct pull at the heart. The end, with its picture of the old clerk, defeated and alone, quietly resuming the dignified servitude that has always been his, is excellent." Guy Holt

+ Bookm 71:239 Ap '30 200w

Boston Transcript p5 Mr 15 '30 380w

Reviewed by L. L. Irvine

Nation and Ath 44:556 Ja 19 '29 270w

"The Sword Falls is a painstaking and well-written rather cockney study, a Kipps-Britling-Our-Mr. Dormer sort of book." Cyril Connolly

New Statesman 32:637 F 23 '29 80w

"Here is an unusually competent novel, which really deserves the strained and worried and misused epithet, 'an epic of the commonplace.' . . Mr. Bertram manages, with infinite tact and unobtrusive humor, to make the story of Albert Robinson an epic of the ordinary man and a summary of the average course of human life. Without being a great or pretentious work, it accomplishes everything it set out to accomplish, and perhaps a little more."

+ N Y Times p9 F 9 '30 550w

"Mr. Bertram is a sincere and conscientious artist: he does not believe in small profits and quick returns. He never forces his pace or his tone; he does not try to heighten the colours of ordinary life. . . One has little but praise for 'The Sword Falls.' Like Mr. Bertram's other books it is rich in invention. It shows a strong belief in human nature which makes it morally stimulating, and a breadth of treatment which few contemporary novels can rival." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 147:115 Ja 26 '29 700w

"The descriptions of London in wartime and of Albert in the Army training camp are often entertaining; the actual war scenes are vivid and convincing. But beyond this the novel is not successful. . . In general, we are justified in saying that the novel lacks warmth and humanity. Its appeal depends almost entirely upon a certain facility in description."

— + Sat R of Lit 6:856 Mr 22 '30 360w

"Mr. Anthony Bertram improves in skill with each of his novels. In the Sword Falls he shows many excellences; and not least amongst them a Dickensian fertility in humour. . . The character-drawing is firm; the execution is steady and quietly efficient; it is a novel which can be praised without reserve."

+ Spec 142:93 Ja 19 '29 140w

"We all of us know Albert Robinson. . . Mr. Bertram does not outrage any of our knowledge; in fact, he reproduces it with a skill which gives us all respect for his narrative talents: but he does not add to it. Our ground for criticism is that this plain and true tale is an old tale, and that its author, so far from giving it any original turns, has not risen to the heights of comedy, of tragedy, of pathos or of realism which other writers have already attained."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p42 Ja 17 '29 500w

BESSON, MAURICE, ed. Scourge of the Indies; the exploits of famous buccaneers, corsairs, and filibusters, from original texts and contemporary engravings; tr. by Everard Thornton. 334p pl $10 Random house [42s Routledge]

910.4 Buccaneers. Filibusters

"M. Besson has collected the tales of ten of the more famous desperadoes, relying chiefly upon the chronicle of the Flemish surgeon Oexmelin (known to the English as Esquemeling), and he has enriched the volume with scores of reproductions of contemporary wood engravings and of ancient maps in their original colors. The illustrations alone make the book a storehouse of treasures. The tales of the individual freebooters are preceded by a brief account of the origin, manners, and modes of warfare of these ungentlemanly adventurers, so that the reader may have a background for the stories that follow."—Sat R of Lit

"M. Besson, drawing chiefly on the Flemish chronicle of Oexmelin, paints hearty pictures of the Brothers of the Coast, and Random House has richly illustrated his chronicles with contemporary engravings and exquisitely tinted reproductions of old maps. The text is somewhat helter-skelter, but a gold mine of stories."

+ Books p6 Mr 9 '30 280w

Boston Transcript p3 Mr 19 '30 500w

"The Scourge of the Indies was written by a Frenchman, who not unnaturally devoted nearly all his space to the exploits of the French buccaneers, with some later French filibusters thrown in. Sometimes he merely summarises the original authority in his own words; in other cases he copies the original, almost in full. Unfortunately M. Besson, though free enough with his editorial comment, seldom gives us the kind of note we want. His account of L'Olonnois, the cruellest of all the buccaneer leaders, is taken from several sources, but he never tells us which. Worse still, he seems quite unaware of the existence of most of the English records."

— New Statesman 34:676 Mr 1 '30 1050w

"The most gorgeously thrilling piece of picturesque literature in many a day. The plates alone form a valuable collection." Percy Hutchison

+ N Y Times p8 Jl 6 '30 1150w

Reviewed by W. O. Scroggs

Sat R of Lit 6:866 Mr 29 '30 380w

Spec 143:856 D 7 '29 200w

"Such characters provide material for a very interesting book. The best way to write it would be either to compile a documented history or else to reprint contemporary works. Because neither method has been consistently followed, this book, with all its carefully collected matter, fails as an authority. . . The work has suffered in translation."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p113 F 13 '30 600w

BEST, HARRY. Crime and the criminal law in the United States, considered primarily in their present-day social aspects. 615p $6 Macmillan

364 Crime and criminals—United States. Criminal law. Criminal procedure 30-29229

An objective study of the situation as to crime and criminal law in the United States in the light of their social bearings today. Extensive use is made of statistics, with due reference to their source.

"Dr. Best's book comes under the head of 'compendiums.' If there are any facts about how to get into an American jail, how to be classified while there, and how to get out again, it is safe to assert that he has them all here. Statistics march across the pages in serried ranks; where statistics lack generations of experience and practice are compressed into a few paragraphs. . . Dr. Best sticks to provable facts. Because he does, his book becomes an essential for anyone who wishes to talk or write on what is one of the most vital problems confronting this country."

+ Christian Century 47:1418 N 19 '30 280w

"Best tells how the wheels go 'round but he neglects to tell us about the wheels within the wheels. It is one thing to discuss courts and criminal justice in general and theoretical terms, and quite another to describe the workings of these in a fluxing social system." Nels Anderson

Outlook 156:551 D 3 '30 100w

BEST, HERBERT. Garram the hunter; a boy of the hill tribes. (Junior bks.) 332p il $2 Doubleday, Doran 30-9309

Garram, the boy hunter, was the son of a chief of African hill tribes. With his great dog, Kon, for company Garram came safely thru many strange adventures and succeeded in outwitting his father's enemies.

Booklist 26:360 Je '30

"This story of an African boy from the hills and his wonderful dog, Kon, gives a good picture of Africa with its wide spaces, its terrific sun, its round huts with thatched roofs and its amazing variety of wild life. It is African life seen from the point of view of the native, not from the point of view of the visiting white man. The author has lived long enough among the hill people to carry real conviction in his writing of the country." H. H. Owen
+ Books p8 Mr 16 '30 450w

"It is a well written story. The author has spent many years in the English civil service among the hill tribes and knows them in their native haunts as the book amply testifies." A. L. Shea
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p12 Ap 5 '30 250w
Cleveland Open Shelf p89 Je '30

"The very feeling of Africa is in these pages. . . The story is told in a direct and vivid style that will delight the younger readers as well as older ones. In fact, the book will appeal to any one from 12 years old up. The illustrations by Erick Berry (Mrs Best) add to the atmosphere of the book." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p19 Mr 30 '30 320w

"It is a good story. It holds the reader fairly trembling with interest. Every boy will like to read it." B. K. A. I. LoBagola
+ Sat R of Lit 6:964 Ap 19 '30 380w

BEST English detective stories of 1929. 395p $2.50 Liveright [7s 6d Faber]

Detective stories

The second annual volume of selected British detective stories from the work of the most popular writers in England, including J. S. Fletcher, G. K. Chesterton, Agatha Christie, and E. Phillips Oppenheim.

Bookm 72:xxvii O '30 40w

"The anonymous editor of this volume has succeeded in picking a surprising number of winners." Will Cuppy
+ Books p12 Je 8 '30 200w
N Y Times p17 Je 15 '30 170w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 155:190 Je 4 '30 80w
Springf'd Republican p10 Jl 9 '30 150w

BETHUNE-BAKER, JAMES FRANKLIN. Early traditions about Jesus. (Christian religion; its origin and progress. Rise of the Christian church) 205p $1.50 Macmillan [2s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

232 Jesus Christ 30-6398

This interpretation of Jesus in relation to early beliefs and narratives follows modern orthodoxy. The book is third in a series on the rise of the Christian church.

Boston Transcript p5 Je 28 '30 320w

"This brief book has distinct value as a summary of the judgments of modern critical scholars concerning the foundations of our knowledge of the life and work of Jesus. Professor Bethune-Baker's own inferences and conclusions are somewhat less satisfactory than his setting forth of the data on which his judgments are built. But this does not seriously lessen the value of his work for all those who wish to have a handbook which will clarify the thinking of lay people as well as of clergymen on the whole question of the Gospels." W. R. Bowie
+ — Churchman p5 Jl 26 '30 180w

"It is difficult to overpraise this admirable little volume. The query is raised on the jacket, 'Where can I get a fresh and inviting account of Jesus which is straight in line with sound scholarship and at the same time intensely readable?' The answer to the query is justly, 'This book.' Sanity, poise, and scholarship; an attitude in the best sense of the word religious, yet without cant or the impression of 'whooping it up'; these are conspicuous elements in a book worth many times its price." M. E. Enslin
+ Crozer Q 7:524 O '30 180w

"The work of a very great scholar, it is written with great simplicity and deep piety, and it is admirably adapted for the layman. Its emphasis is on Christ's teachings, and it does ample justice to both the eschatological and the non-eschatological aspects of His message. A defect, perhaps, lies in a certain lack of sharpness of summary, so that these two aspects are not clearly brought together in a real synthesis. And a further defect is a somewhat 'old-fashioned' treatment of the first oral tradition."
+ — Living Church 83:275 Ja 21 '30 120w
Springf'd Republican p8 Mr 25 '30 500w

BETTERS, PAUL VERNON. Bureau of home economics; its history, activities and organization. (Inst. for government research. Service monographs of the U.S. government) 95p $1.50 Brookings

353.8 United States. Bureau of home economics 30-26806

"Brings together valuable and hitherto widely scattered information regarding the causes and events which led to the formation of the Bureau; outlines its activities up to 1930; describes the present organization of its divisions, including number and salaries of employees of various grades; indicates the character of its publications; mentions the laws under which it functions; gives appropriations and expenditures from 1924 to date; and lists important bibliographical references."—J Home Econ

"The study is wholly descriptive in character, and no attempt has been made to subject the facts to criticism, nor to indicate changes which might be made with advantage. The object is to enlighten the public and legislators as to actual facts—and as such, the book can be commended." M. P. Ravenel
+ Am J Pub Health 20:1169 O '30 280w

"A careful study in a series recognized as authoritative. . . A contribution welcome to all friends of the Bureau and students of home economics."
+ J Home Econ 22:862 O '30 120w
Pratt p11 autumn '30
St Louis 28:211 S '30

BETTS, DAVID. I'm lucky at that. 288p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran
30-4853

David Betts, graduate of the "School of hard knocks," writes in his own vernacular of his forty-six years' experience tramping in Canada and the West, his hacking business, and his homely studies of human nature. This taxi philosopher's tale is a record of his simple observations on prohibition, religion, women, taxi manners, nature, etc., made up largely of the letters he used to contribute to the columns of The New York Sun.

Boston Transcript p3 F 26 '30 650w

"David Betts is a sort of Trader Horn of Trafficland and his tale is mostly philosophizing on life, hacking, the people you meet and what deafness does to a man, the whole having a faint resemblance to the work of Zambesi Jack. Evidently the publishers have taken David at his word and let him ramble as he wished, retaining his original vocabulary and spelling." Harry Hansen
N Y World p14 Ja 24 '30 600w

"This is a book that just doesn't come off. Mr. Betts's mental processes do not seem to justify this charmless obscurity."
— Sat R of Lit 6:1015 My 3 '30 140w

BEVERIDGE, SIR WILLIAM HENRY. Unemployment; a problem of industry (1909 and 1930). new ed 514p $7.50 (21s) Longmans
331.137 Unemployment. Insurance, Unemployment. Labor exchanges

Part one is given over to a reprint of the author's analysis of the unemployment problem in Great Britain in 1909, when the government introduced compulsory insurance against unemployment and labor exchanges. In part two, dated 1930, Professor Beveridge considers the results of this policy—its successes and failures.

"Altogether, Sir William Beveridge's new book is a worthy pendant to his original study. It is not, and does not profess to be, based to anything like the same extent upon fresh research of his own. But the situation is now radically different; there is far more material gathered by other students on which he is able to draw. It is more controversial, especially in the section dealing with wages, than his earlier study; and it is a good deal less exhaustive in the method. But it is thoroughly stimulating, masterly in account of what has happened to the unemployment insurance scheme, and often tantalisingly suggestive."
+ New Statesman 35:797 O 4 '30 1500w
Reviewed by Nels Anderson
Outlook 156:429 N 12 '30 300w

"The book is singularly complete in its treatment of the subject. It could not come at a more opportune moment than to-day."
+ Spec 145:502 O 11 '30 750w

BEWS, JOHN WILLIAM. World's grasses; their differentiation, distribution, economics and ecology. 408p il $7.50 (21s) Longmans
584.9 Grasses 29-20304

"Dr. Bews, who is Professor of Botany, Natal University College, Pietermaritzburg, gives a general account of the differentiation and distribution of the grasses. Beginning with an account of the morphology of the group, he goes on to consider their differentiation into tribes and genera, and then considers the individual genera in three chapters. There follow two chapters which the general biologist will probably find the most interesting in the book—an ecological classification into eight groups. . . The book closes with a chapter on economic applications."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"The merit of this arresting book lies in the fact that our author has not been content merely to describe the grass species of the world, and to prepare a very carefully planned key to the tribes and genera, but he has boldly assumed the rôle of systematist, ecologist, and physiologist, and has welded the immense amount of evidence brought forward into a definite thesis—a definite guiding principle—which is presented in the stimulating form of an endeavor to trace the phylogeny of the various genera and their evolution in relation to ecology."
+ Nature 125:119 Ja 25 '30 1820w
St Louis 28:40 F '30
Times [London] Lit Sup p902 N 7 '29 150w

BIANCHI, LEONARDO. Foundations of mental health; auth. tr. from the first ed. of "Eugenica, igiene mentale, e profilassi delle malattie nervose e mentali," by G. A. Barricelli; with an introd. by Francis X. Dercum. 276p $2.50 (10s 6d) Appleton
613 Mental physiology and hygiene 30-3973

Leonardo Bianchi, late professor of nervous and mental diseases in the Royal university of Naples, discusses the main principles of eugenics and mental hygiene, especially with regard to their adaptation to conditions in Italy, as a means of preventing racial degeneration. Among the topics treated are sex and religious education, alcoholism, the penal code, and the prophylaxis of nervous and mental diseases.

Reviewed by H. D. Lasswell
Am J Soc 36:492 N '30 320w
J Home Econ 22:499 Je '30 80w

"One of the world's outstanding neurologists and psychiatrists, what Dr. Bianchi has to say on the subject to which he had devoted a lifetime of study should be of interest not only to eugenists, neurologists, biologists, sociologists but also to intelligent laymen everywhere who are interested in the betterment of man and his life both now and for the future. . . The high ideal of his purpose, the wholesomeness of his spirit and the warmth of human feeling which suffuses all his pages combine with a native clarity and grace of expression to make his book impressive and persuading."
+ N Y Times p26 Mr 2 '30 470w
Reviewed by E. T. Devine
Outlook 154:630 Ap 16 '30 100w
Survey 63:727 Mr 15 '30 30w

"There is ample room and a welcome for a survey written by an expert whose life has been spent in research, teaching and public service. Professor Barricelli's book, therefore, has more than ordinary individuality and value; also it has been fortunate in its translator."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p338 Ap 17 '30 100w

BIANCO, MRS MARGERY (WILLIAMS). The candlestick. 47p il $2 Doubleday, Doran
29-22916

To David, a boy whose father was a sailor, the old candlestick of twisted olive wood used to tell stories. When David grew up he too became a sailor. And after he had married and had a little boy of his own, his wife lighted the candle in the window of the cottage on a very stormy night, and David from his ship saw it burning and was saved from shipwreck.

Booklist 26:206 F '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p159 D '29

"Mrs Bianco has told a beautiful little story, and the illustrations breathe the spirit of Italy, the country of the candlestick." O. M. Fuller
+ N Y World p11m N 24 '29 100w

BIBESCO, MARTHE LUCIE (LAHOVARY) (PRINCESSE GEORGES V. BIBESCO). Egyptian day; tr. by Helen and Raymond Everitt. 184p il $2.50 Harcourt
916.2 Egypt 30-17088

These notes by Princess Bibesco on a three months' pilgrimage to Egypt record her impressions, in graceful and poetical prose, of the scene and its people. She writes of Cairo, Thebes, Assuan, Port Said; she comments on Egyptian art, on American and English tourists; she describes her meeting with Howard Carter, the discoverer of the tomb of Tut; thruout she jots down her own sensations, recollections, and the allusions that the trip brings forth.

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice
Bookm 72:xvii O '30 100w

"'Egyptian Day' is more than a mere inlay of travel impressions. One quickly perceives that the fragments are arranged, if not with a definite pattern, at least with a definite emphasis. Outwardly, they are disjointed entries in a day-book, but they posses a synthesis of thought which is disclosed little by little until it becomes the rich mosaic of an interpretation of Egyptian culture." Lisle Bell
+ Books p7 Je 29 '30 550w

"It is to be regretted that this book is so fragmentary, that it has no focus and no persistence. For otherwise Princess Bibesco might have produced a very great book, instead of merely a charming one." R. B. C.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 16 '30 850w

BIBESCO, M. L.—Continued

"What she gives is not a picture of Egypt but a picture of herself seeing Egypt—and that is a sight worth observing."

+ Christian Century 47:1155 S 24 '30 100w

"To have set down 200 pages of evocations of moods and people and places is a distinction very few modern writers attain. Marthe Bibesco stands out even among the brilliant company of these few blessed by the gods. . . 'Egyptian Day' is a book for those who can forget the names of the places they have seen, their historical value and the date on which they were first revealed to the world, and yet feel a distinct perfume arise to the nostrils or feel the limbs tingle and quiver at the memory of some spectacle that had suddenly unfolded itself. It is the work of a modern, highly cultured artist, who records her own sensibilities and her own reactions in a style which denotes the basic harmonies of her being." Konrad Bercovici

+ N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 5 '30 700w

Reviewed by L. M. Field

N Y Times p10 Ag 31 '30 800w

Springf'd Republican p10 O 21 '30 600w

BIBESCO, MARTHE LUCIE (LAHOVARY) (PRINCESSE GEORGES V. BIBESCO). Some royalties and a prime minister; portraits from life. 216p il $3 (10s 6d) Appleton

923.1 Kings and rulers 30-14614

Personal recollections of Alfonso of Spain, the Prince of Wales, the Empress Maria Feodorovna and her two sisters, King Ferdinand of Bulgaria, Princess Sophie of Wied, Grand duke Cyril of Russia, Michael, the boy king of Rumania, and Herbert Asquith, prime minister of England.

"Princess Bibesco is related to most of the Almanach de Gotha but her interest in royalty is that of a commoner. In this, as in her previous book of reminiscences, she writes about all her important connections with an intimacy that would enthrall the most rabid republican."

+ Bookm 71:v Jl '30 120w

Books p14 Je 29 '30 180w

"Princess Marthe Bibesco presents another collection of her gossipy portraits of European celebrities in this little volume. A life-time of association with royalty and nobility has equipped her for writing witty, interesting character studies."

+ Current Hist 32:825 Jl '30 70w

"The book is woven from the personal minutiae of public figures, elucidated, commented upon and expanded by a keen and observing mind. . . This book is not a cheap bid for popularity by means of juggling the tinsel titles of royalty; it contains patterns of simple sincerity which show that the great and the near great can be gallant and fine, can be mediocre, can be at times despicable, just as common clay." B. M. O'Reilly

+ N Y Times p11 Ag 10 '30 950w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 155:106 My 21 '30 100w

St Louis 28:272 N '30

BICKEL, KARL AUGUST. New empires; the newspaper and the radio. 112p $1.50 Lippincott

070.1 Journalism. Radio broadcasting

Two most important new empire builders, the newspaper and the radio, are discussed, the discussion turning upon the obvious relationship of the one to the other, and the growing competition between them. Karl Bickel is president of the United press association.

Reviewed by D. C. Seitz

Bookm 72:445 D '30 230w

"Mr. Bickel's thoughtful little volume is an excellent and suggestive introduction for every layman. The author's accurate appendix covering the facts of the development of radio broadcasting and receiving, which was compiled with the aid of the National Broadcasting Company and the United Press staff correspondents, is the most complete summary yet printed and has corresponding reference value." Carleton Beals

+ Books p6 N 30 '30 750w

"Mr. Bickel's picture of newspaper-radio coöperation is always that of a newspaper owning a radio station and controlling it, keeping it in a subservient position. Suppose radio stations should buy newspapers and use the press as an auxiliary, devoting perhaps a full page a day to station activities and programs. If the radio stations developed their own news service, radio-owned papers would be independent of regular news sources. Mr. Bickel has written probably the best treatise on radio and the press yet published, but in further discussion of the problem some of these conjectures should be considered." V. D. H.

+ — Christian Science Monitor p13 D 20 '30 450w

"This very up-to-date and very forward-looking little book . . . is intended particularly for journalism students, but it is well worth the reading of all who are actively engaged in newspaper work, and to the layman it will give a stimulating view of the important changes taking place in the making and the aims of newspapers."

+ N Y Times p39 N 30 '30 220w

"A book that reflects the energy and vitality of its author. His book shows a far-sighted comprehension of the future of the newspaper, which will not only keep step with the republic but give its readers a grasp of the forces behind the news. The radio and the newspaper are complementary in his eyes, not rivals." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p9 N 1 '30 300w

BIDDLE, GEORGE. Green island. 177p il $2.50 Coward-McCann

30-31485

A record in prose and picture of the artist-author's stay in Tahiti, and of his happy adventures with the old man who showed him how to build his house; Mari, the village chief; Moerai, the little boy whom he adopted; and others of the happy, carefree Polynesians.

"The pictures have the naive and humorous quality of the text, and neither obtrude upon it nor allow themselves to be ignored. The small drawings which head the chapters are particularly good. It is a pity that there is not one colored plate in the book. The island cries to be set down in all its brilliance. Should there be another edition, certain flaws in the text might be mended. Occasionally there are unwieldly locutions, and the difficulty of keeping the dialogue colloquial and yet retaining the foreign flavor sometimes proves too much for the author. Now and then a bit of American slang sticks out absurdly." Babette Deutsch

+ — Books p8 N 2 '30 1000w

"The illustrations are very entertaining and they have real character besides—they give us scene and type. The story is about Tahiti, and I have seen very few pictures that give the Polynesian place and people as well as these drawings do; they have humor and they have actuality, too. The doings on the Island are related with apparent casualness and much real skill: George Biddle with his painter's eyes can render the actuality of a scene with few strokes in his writing and his drawing." Padraic Colum

+ New Repub 65:22 N 19 '30 300w

"There is a fundamental unity between the simple unaffected prose and the absolute honesty of the pictures that is rarely attained by even the most devoted of collaborators. 'Green Island' is rare adventure and rich experience." Lynd Ward

+ N Y Evening Post p7d N 15 '30 200w

BIG business girl, by one of them. 278p $1 Farrar

30-22750

On leaving State university, Claire MacIntyre goes to Chicago to get a job with a dry-cleaning firm. She hopes to become successful in business—and to forget Johnny, an orchestra leader whom she had secretly married during her last year in college. But there are times when even the accomplishment of a business coup does not free Claire of loneliness. In the end the business career loses, and Johnny wins.

"Claire MacIntyre of this story grows more engaging the farther she retreats from her sorority house at the state university into the perilous paths of the dry-cleaning business in Chicago. The young lady's adventures and opinions are rendered with realistic effect."
+ Books p16 S 28 '30 150w

"It all sounds quite simple, and indeed it does verge on the hackneyed contemporary, but the suspected autobiographical tendency makes it warmly human and lifts it from the really trite to the class of human interest novels."
+ — Boston Transcript p3 N 8 '30 300w

"An amusing, light, attractive, alluring story of a really zestful young thing starting out to conquer life and it has the quality of gayety and authenticity about it." Fanny Butcher
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p8 Ag 30 '30 120w

"The author has a deft touch and she manages to make entertaining a flimsy tale; but she does not accomplish what is suggested in her title and foreword."
+ — N Y Times p28 S 28 '30 250w

BIGGERS, EARL DERR. Charlie Chan carries on. 334p $2 Bobbs
30-24840

"Inspector Charlie Chan, the Chinese detective, takes over the investigation of a murder in a personally conducted round-the-world party from Inspector Duff, who, along with one of his assistants, has been shot by a criminal with three other recent notches in his gun, and delivers said criminal to the police when the party reaches San Francisco."—Outlook

Booklist 27:106 N '30
Bookm 72:xxiv O '30 50w
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p12 S 21 '30 200w
Reviewed by Dashiell Hammett
N Y Evening Post p4d O 11 '30 150w
Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith
N Y World p3e O 12 '30 120w

"It's an exciting and entertaining book all the way through." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 156:196 O 1 '30 120w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 25:70 O '30
Sat R of Lit 7:511 Ja 3 '31 150w
Springf'd Republican p7e S 28 '30 200w

BILIK, SAMUEL ERNEST. Healthful living; the why and how. 261p il $2.50 Scribner
613 Hygiene 29-18917

The author of this book on personal hygiene is a practising physician and a gymnasium director. Writing in terms that can easily be understood and appreciated by the average reader, Dr Bilik discusses the nature and importance of proper diet and exercise, the choice of a physician, how to treat common ailments, etc. He concludes with a chapter on first aid treatment.

"Another book on the perennial subject of personal hygiene needs some distinguishing marks if it is to escape engulfment in the profusion of literature on this topic. This one is written in a breezy style which is neither difficult to peruse nor to comprehend. It has color and individuality and the author is outspoken in giving his own opinions, most of which, however, are sound and free from faddism." J. A. Tobey
+ Am J Pub Health 20:454 Ap '30 200w
Booklist 26:105 D '29
Pratt p15 winter '30
St Louis 28:136 My '30
Wis Lib Bul 25:408 D '29

BILLINGS, NEAL. Determination of generalizations basic to the social studies curriculum. (Univ. research monographs) 289p $3 Warwick & York
307 Social sciences—Study and teaching
30-830

A study of the basic generalizations, central themes and concepts needed by those who are making curricula in the social sciences to teach prospective American citizens to think intelligently about the conditions and problems of contemporary life.

"The work represents a significant approach in the determination of curriculum content. The author is careful to avoid extreme claim to objectivity in research technique. He bases his claim to validity of both sources and technique upon the expert character of the 'frontier thinkers' whose writings are investigated and upon the judgment of expert associates who contributed in one way or another to the determination of the technique employed." E. D. Grizzell
+ Ann Am Acad 149:217 My '30 280w
Reviewed by R. M. Tryon
School R 38:392 My '30 500w

BINDLOSS, HAROLD. Man at Willow ranch. 314p $2 Stokes
30-5695

Hugh Nicol, hunting on the Solway coast, rescues a former war companion, Harden, from a dangerous situation and finds himself involved with a blackmailing gang who are on the trail of Harden. Hugh, who has a farm in Canada, marries and leaves England for Saskatchewan. Here, in the Canadian Northwest, the adventures begun in England are brought to a happy conclusion.

Booklist 26:279 Ap '30
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 Mr 30 '30 120w

"Mr. Bindloss has rolled together such an evenly balanced group of characters and such a series of colorful incidents that the main thread of the story sometimes becomes hopelessly involved. The most marked and genuine characteristics of this book are revealed in the undeniable sense of soil, of earth, of sea and sky which Mr. Bindloss weaves through his story. This talent, this distinct flair for catching the smell of morning air, the dark flashes of the sullen Solway tides, or the fragrance of prairie flowers nourishes 'The Man at Willow Ranch.' "
+ — N Y Times p19 Ap 13 '30 280w
Pratt p39 summer '30
Springf'd Republican p7e Je 8 '30 100w

BINDLOSS, HAROLD. Rancher Jim (Eng title: Moorside feud). 312p $2 Stokes [7s 6d Ward, Lock]
30-20589

The romance of Jim Railton who went to England to begin life anew, after losing all his possessions in Canada. He found he had inherited a family feud, but his cool nerve helped him thru many tight places and won him the respect of the girl.

Bookm 72:x O '30 100w
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 O 12 '30 80w

"It is a clean, quietly told story, yet with dangers to overcome, injustice and revenge to fight, and adventures by flood and field sufficiently exciting to make one read till the end is reached."
+ Boston Transcript p3 S 20 '30 280w

"All this might have been innocuous enough, had it been presented to the broad-minded reading public as another recruit to the overflowing ranks of open-air novels. But the author unfortunately has a purpose behind all his banter—

BINDLOSS, HAROLD—Continued
and so we are treated to many laborious landscape descriptions, heroic sentiments and ponderous philosophies, couched in language that is rather stiff and stilted."
— N Y Times p18 S 7 '30 170w

"Mr. Bindloss steeps the conversation of his characters in good North Country dialect, but their expressions are often pedantically stilted, so that the length of the book seems to outrun its plot. The hardness of the North Countryman is excellently conveyed; old Jim, indeed, carries it near to vindictiveness and sharp practice."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p577 Jl 10 '30 150w

BINGHAM, HIRAM. Machu Picchu; a citadel of the Incas; report of the explorations and excavations made in 1911, 1912 and 1915 under the auspices of Yale univ. and the National geographic society. (Memoirs of the National geographic society) 244p il $50 Yale univ. press [£11 11s Oxford]

913.85 Machu Picchu, Peru. Incas. Peru—Antiquities 30-9963

"Dr. Bingham here presents the results of the exploration and excavation of Machu Picchu accomplished on his 1915 Peruvian expedition. . . The preliminary investigations made by the 1911 and 1912 Peruvian expeditions were described by Dr. Bingham in 'Inca Land' (1922). The current volume analyzes the plan, architecture, and masonry of the city; describes the roads leading to it and the burial caves on the eastern side of the ridge; examines the pottery, which with few exceptions is purely Inca in design and workmanship though including some uncommon types, metal articles, and other objects of material culture—all illustrated by exquisitely reproduced line drawings. Many photographs in collotype convey well the impression of this picturesque site. There is a separate map of the ruins on a scale of one inch to 120 feet."— Geog R

"Notwithstanding my regret that Dr. Bingham has persisted in ascribing great antiquity to a city that certainly does not antedate 1400, I gladly affirm that this book is destined to be of lasting usefulness to students of Incaic civilization, art, and history. It is, moreover, a volume of great intrinsic beauty which fully justifies the large price asked for it." P. A. Means
Am Hist R 35:899 Jl '30 850w
Geog R 20:696 O '30 280w

"The volume is intended by Dr. Bingham to be a summing-up and a final statement of the archaeological part of the labors of his expeditions at the site now known as Machu Picchu. The book accomplishes its purpose very well, so much so that the large price asked for it is not exorbitant. There are, to be sure, certain passages in the book with which some of its readers will not be in agreement; but the paper, the printing, the numerous and superb collotype illustrations—many of them not previously published—and above all, the mass of fresh information which the book contains, combine to assure this volume a permanent and important place to collections of archaeological literature and in bibliographies." P. A. Means
+ N Y Times p10 My 4 '30 1850w

"Genuine students do not value an archæological work by the grade of paper on which it is published, or by the unnecessary beauty of the plans and illustrations. For them, a high degree of usefulness in a book is the only justification for paying a high price. Very well; cutting the pages of 'Machu Picchu,' what do they find? A good summary of a difficult and important piece of work, composed mainly of material with which they have been familiar for more than ten years. Information which, confined to a group of late Inca ruins, contributes very little to the solution of the fundamental problems of Andean archæology. Speculations, entertaining and sometimes plausible, but not remarkably well founded." Walter Cline
— Sat R of Lit 7:119 S 13 '30 2150w

"A volume of considerable scientific import which will, in virtue of its illustrations depicting a great masonry citadel established by a primitive people in what would appear the most impossible geographical milieu, appeal to any one who possesses a sense of the romantic and picturesque."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p926 N 13 '30 550w

BINKLEY, ROBERT CEDRIC. Responsible
2 drinking; a discreet inquiry and a modest proposal. 215p $2 Vanguard press

351.761 Prohibition. Temperance. Liquor problem 30-29538

"Professor Binkley presents a moderate and concise analysis of the workings of prohibition, which leads him to the not unreasonable conclusion that 'the starting point in devising a liquor regime should be something upon which the country is agreed, and not a pair of opposed prejudices with 100 years of controversy behind them. . . He puts forward a 'modest proposal' that the liquor user should be licensed in much the same fashion that the automobile driver is licensed, that there should be a system of responsible drinking—a registration for drinkers and a bond of dealers. Those whose drinking became a nuisance to the neighbors or a menace to the public would be denied the privilege."—Books

---

Reviewed by Lisle Bell
Books p14 N 2 '30 150w

"A comprehensive, scholarly and statesmanlike study of the whole subject." James Rorty
+ New Repub 65:226 Ja 7 '31 320w

"Mr. Binkley's thesis is perhaps the sanest solution yet offered of a question that is not only vexing the country but is actually arresting the ethos of the American people. It is a clear, dispassionate, businesslike presentation by a broad-minded scholar who is a reformed Prohibitionist. . . This book may have been written in all modesty; but it is a noteworthy contribution to a topic which is fast assuming a portentious gravity." John Wurts
+ Sat R of Lit 7:469 D 20 '30 850w

BIRABEAU, ANDRE. Revelation; tr. by Una, Lady Troubridge. 236p $2.50 Viking press [7s 6d Gollancz]

30-19277

Mme Casseneuil loves her son more than anything else in the world. Then at eighteen, he is killed in an automobile accident at Avignon. The mother, grief-stricken, goes to the small hotel and enters the little room where her son has last been alive. There she finds some love letters. They are not from a woman, as she first thought, but a man. That is the terrible revelation. The memory of her son becomes hideous to her, and she makes a final trip to Avignon, with ideas of vengeance. But when the two who most loved the boy meet, the mutual bond turns the mother's hate to sympathy and allays the sorrow of both.

"The book drives an undeflected course through the maze of this woman's psychology. Its reality snatches your breath. Perhaps it is one answer to a profoundly disturbing question." V. P. Ross
+ Books p7 Jl 20 '30 600w

"It is certainly fair and certainly written with such a finesse, despite frequent excellent blunt figures of speech, that its theme is not offensive. Told in the present tense it forms almost the biography of Madame Casseneuil, to whom all others and all else are subordinated. The element of interest is constant and high. The book demands reading at a very few sittings; it is not to be digested slowly, a chapter a day."
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 13 '30 300w

"Even a bad translation cannot conceal the excellence of Birabeau's study of a mother who discovers that her dead son has been loved by a man. The main excellence appears in the novel's complete escape from the circle of a scandalous social problem. . . The faults of the novel lie entirely within the style. . . What remains a sincere, good novel might, with a richer style, have been a profoundly moving one." Kenneth White

+ — New Repub 63:379 Ag 13 '30 180w

New Statesman 35:768 S 27 '30 100w

"It is still open to argument whether the presentation of this problem in fiction satisfies anything but a morbid craving. And Andre Birabeau's 'Revelation' leaves the matter as deeply under dispute as before." Eugene Lohrke

N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 19 '30 600w

"This novel, the work of a writer whose interest in an unusual human situation is equaled by his skill in dealing with it, differs from any previous treatment of sexual pathology in literature. . . Emphasis is thrown not on the invert himself, but on his mother's reactions to the discovery, after he is killed in a motor accident, that he was homosexual. . . M. Birabeau's whole book is written with logic and detachment. However special its subject-matter, the author has made it a serious and dignified, if sometimes rather horrifying, work." Louis Kronenberger

+ N Y Times p7 Jl 20 '30 650w

"It is honesty of analysis that makes Birabeau's novel a profound psychological study, as well as an unusually well-told and dramatic story." Gertrude Diamant

+ N Y World p5m Ag 10 '30 550w

"André Birabeau has told his pathetic and passionate story with finished skill, with a deep understanding of how minds work, and with that rare combination of frankness and delicacy which seems to come unsought to French writers." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 155:505 Jl 30 '30 250w

"It lives as a story, and it moves its readers because of the understanding and the imagination which have worked out every necessary detail of the picture and have omitted everything else. Being only the fulcrum, the son, except through his mother's eyes in his infancy and after his death, forms no part. That is high praise for such a story as this. An erotic motive is not exploited, but used to show how average humanity behaves. These reactions are the marrow of the story, and the way in which they are woven into a living pattern is an object-lesson of narrative skill." Osbert Burdett

+ Sat R 150:348 S 20 '30 1050w

"The effect of 'Revelation,' more than that of most books, will depend upon the reader. Many people will no doubt feel that the entire conception is intolerably painful. But there will also be many readers who will value the book highly for its grave, unsentimental presentation of a difficult theme. The tone of the book has a notable Gallic clarity. Anglo-Saxon authors rarely find a middle ground, in treating sexual abnormality, between savage reprobation and a highly romantic, almost personal admiration. M. Birabeau writes with a dispassionate pity for a deformity that silently rebukes both."

Sat R of Lit 7:106 S 6 '30 400w

Times [London] Lit Sup p944 N 13 '30 220w

BIRD, FREDERICK LUCIEN, and RYAN, FRANCES MARY. Public ownership on trial; a study of municipal light and power in California. 186p 75c New republic

380.16 Municipal ownership—California. Electric power plants. Electric light plants 30-4533

"This is an inductive study of forty-five years of experience of some twenty-five California cities with municipally owned and operated light and power systems . . . The study devotes two out of nine chapters to the Los Angeles and Pasadena systems, four to the general subject of distribution systems, one to public power in irrigation systems, and one to the legal phases of public operation. The foreword by John Bauer is illuminating and adds to the general value of the book."—Ann Am Acad

"The authors have been most fair minded and objective in their study, and have confined themselves to the presentation of facts and actual experience rather than arguments for or against municipal ownership."

+ Am Pol Sci R 24:792 Ag '30 380w

"Mr. Bird and Miss Ryan have done an honest and thorough piece of research . . . The authors are, without apology, believers in public ownership of power, but they remain objective students and do not become propagandist in this volume. The study is well documented and the tables presenting almost every conceivable comparison of figure and facts give firmness and soundness to the text. The student of the present American power controversy ought not to neglect the book." C. A. Dykstra

+ Ann Am Acad 150:306 Jl '30 550w

Bookm 71:vi Ap '30 100w

BIRD, FREDERICK LUCIEN, and RYAN, FRANCES MARY. Recall of public officers; a study of the operation of the recall in California. 403p $4 (17s) Macmillan

351.9 Recall. California—Politics and government 30-2387

An intensive study, by two members of the political science department of Occidental college, of what has been done in the trial of the recall in California. The authors tell the story of the adoption of the measure in Los Angeles in 1903 and by the state in 1911, its operation in other California municipalities, the various recall campaigns and the circumstances that led up to them, and some conclusions concerning the effectiveness of the privilege of recall.

Reviewed by R. C. Brooks
Am Hist R 35:931 Jl '30 400w

Reviewed by Charles Aikin
Am Pol Sci R 24:768 Ag '30 850w

Reviewed by T. S. Barclay
Ann Am Acad 150:305 Jl '30 280w

"Presents in interesting fashion a thoughtful survey of the workings of the recall in the state of its origin. California has had over twenty-five years' experience with this device, which for many years was linked with the initiative and referendum as part of the progressive program for the recovery of popular sovereignty. . . The book also gives vivid accounts of many of the recall campaigns and the circumstances which gave rise to them, which should be of interest to all students of American politics."

+ Hist Outlook 21:92 F '30 230w

"A searching and detailed study that is admirable in spirit, scholarly and scientific in method and comprehensive in scope."

+ N Y Times p20 Ja 19 '30 330w

Reviewed by John Carter
Outlook 154:352 F 26 '30 150w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:69 O '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:10 Mr '30 160w

St Louis 28:96 Ap '30

"The authors of this study have made a valuable contribution to the literature of American government, and it is the more welcome because of its lively and pungent style."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p355 Ap 24 '30 350w

BIRD, MRS THEODOCIA WALTON. Bristles. 147p il $2 Little

Dogs—Legends and stories 30-23593

"The story of a wire-haired fox terrier who follows his young master and mistress to a circus, loses track of them and is befriended by a clown who decides to keep and train him in place of a trick dog who has recently died. In time the original owners discover the whereabouts of Bristles, but since his affections seem evenly divided between them and Beppino, the kindly clown, it is arranged that he spend half a year with each."—N Y Times

BIRD, T. W.—Continued

"No matter what your age, if you love dogs and children and real fathers and mothers and circuses, you will love this story. If you are a child you will adore it, and you will name your next dog 'Bristles.' "

+ Boston Transcript p5 N 12 '30 250w

"The author makes the mistake of starting to tell the story from the standpoint of the human characters in the book and then changing to the standpoint of the dog characters. A good dog story keeps consistently to one or the other. Commonplace in style and atmosphere, this story hardly seems worth a child's time and energy when there are so many better books about dogs." A. T. Eaton

— N Y Times p12 O 12 '30 120w

BIRKENFELD, GUNTHER. Room in Berlin; tr. from the German by Eric Sutton. 245p $2 Liveright [7s 6d Constable]

30-29015

A pitiful tale of a German widow and her three children, and of the dreary round of their poverty-stricken lives in the slums of Berlin. They are so crowded in their tiny rooms, with no normal pleasures whatever, that the result is an abnormal relationship between a brother and sister. Over it all broods the spirit of their weary, defeated, but brave mother.

"Propaganda that spurts up from the bowels of the earth is a great engulfing stream and sometimes it will carry a stern and naked emotion beyond the refinements of form. 'A Room in Berlin,' which draws a very terrible picture of overcrowded slum life, has not only the power of such an emotion, but great dignity as well. If it seems prompted more by a social attitude than an artistic one, it is, nevertheless, a very well written book, and its tragedy is not hysterically exploited, but told soberly for its horrible truth." M. C. Dawson

+ Books p3 N 2 '30 550w

"Gunther Birkenfeld writes about adultery, prostitution, and incest with the calmness of an anthropologist discussing the sex life of the ancient Assyrians. Because of the author's failure to realize his characters, the book is little more than a social document, but as such it is not unimpressive." Granville Hicks

Nation 131:620 D 3 '30 220w

"How Paul Schwarzer succumbs to the temptations that overcrowding of tenements so often brings in its train, is told with a real sense of delicacy and none of that forced absence of shame so popular with the writers of the Unnaturally Bright Young People school."

+ Sat R 150:51 Jl 12 '30 180w

"These things could happen, and Herr Birkenfeld is artist enough to make them happen quietly, without any shrieking, with a very real feeling for atmosphere and character, and to immerse them in a certain beauty. His is deft and to a certain extent persuasive work. It fails of full persuasion, it seems to us, in that one can't escape the notion that the author is a little too intrigued with his idea of the hideousness that might be compressed in, and partly produced by, his one tenement-house room; that it is with the room, perhaps, rather than with life that he started, and that given that plan and initial direction, its wretched occupants had to be carried to the direst extremities, whether or no."

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:307 N 8 '30 500w

"There is no ranting in this book which describes hopeless suffering in flat, slowly-moving prose. The beauty of some of the passages is only a foil to the soaking squalor of the general atmosphere." B. E. Todd

Spec 145:106 Jl 19 '30 250w

"As a moral tract on the evils of slum conditions and the dangers of over-crowding, the novel has its point; it is evidently meant to be depressing, and it is most successful on this score. But a little moderation in the recital of misfortune and ugliness would have enabled the author to achieve something more than depression."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p613 Jl 24 '30 230w

BIRKENHEAD, FREDERICK EDWIN SMITH, 1st earl of. World in 2030 A.D. 215p $3 Brewer [12s 6d Hodder]

901 Prophecies 30-24618

The Earl of Birkenhead in these nine deductive essays speculates upon the state of war, industry, everyday life, amenities, aeroplanes, politics, the position of woman and other matters a hundred years from today. The last essay attempts a description of the future as it may seem thru the eyes of a student in 2030.

Books p16 D 14 '30 250w

"The book is interesting and its dry, practical style gives a degree of authority to the work. So much has happened in the last thirty years that one must be rash indeed to ridicule any prophecy. One would be doubly rash to disclaim Lord Birkenhead's glimpses of the future, for he has avoided the extravagant and has confined himself entirely to the possible and in most cases the probable. We have one regret on reading 'The World in 2030' and that is that we cannot live to verify the guesses therein contained." H. G. K.

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 15 '30 800w

"Entertaining and brilliantly written book." William MacDonald

+ Nation 131:381 O 8 '30 1050w

"It is Lord Birkenhead's extraordinarily old-fashioned attitude to wealth which makes much of his book so negligible. . . An obsolete attitude towards women and wealth is perhaps to be expected in a Conservative politician, but it is indeed surprising to find Lord Birkenhead so little interested in the current tendencies of politics. . . [The book is] derivative in its suggestions, and remarkable only for what it omits." Raymond Mortimer

— Nation and Ath 47:322 Je 7 '30 900w

Reviewed by Richard Nicholson

N Y Times p3 S 7 '30 1350w

"The nine chapters of the charming book are so many booklets on the future. To read them is to have the mind extended and the fancy stimulated." A. W. P.

+ Outlook 156:108 S 17 '30 300w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:80 N '30

St Louis 28:274 N '30

"An entertaining volume which can temporarily be shelved with Gulliver and Jules Verne and 'Alice in Wonderland.' In spite of his great profusion of modern scientific knowledge, we feel that the noble Earl is pulling not only our leg, but sometimes his own." Shane Leslie

Sat R 149:624 My 17 '30 950w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Parsons

Sat R of Lit 7:301 N 8 '30 900w

"The book is a curious mixture, partly serious, partly fantastic; and, oddly enough, we believe that it is the seemingly fantastic, scientific part of the book which is most likely to be verified, and the avowed serious political and legal part which is likely to be falsified. Needless to say, the volume is excellent reading. Nothing could be more provocative than to observe a powerful mind applying itself to such questions."

+ — Spec 144:709 Ap 26 '30 830w

Springf'd Republican p7e D 28 '30 1000w

"A series of speculations, prompted by imagination, disciplined by logic and coloured by a delicately tart criticism of the tendencies of modern thought—such is the substance of Lord Birkenhead's essay in prophecy."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p344 Ap 24 '30 1120w

BIRMINGHAM, GEORGE A., pseud. See Hannay, J. O.

BIRNIE, ARTHUR. Economic history of modern Europe, 1760-1930. 304p $4 Dial press [10s 6d Methuen]

330.94 Europe—Economic conditions

"The book contains, besides an introduction and a few statistics in an appendix, fifteen chapters each devoted to a special subject, which is reviewed in relation to three countries—Britain, France and Germany—with occasional references to several others, notably Russia."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"In its field Professor Birnie's 'Economic History of Europe' from 1760 to the present day at once deserves to be called epochal. Reasons: (1) no adequate one-volume economic history of Europe exists; (2) its organization is by topics rather than chronological, with resultant ease of comprehension; (3) its conclusions are not so continually modified as to be paradoxical, meaningless; (4) it is up-to-date; (5) while decidedly not journalistic it is nevertheless pleasant reading, enlivened by an anecdotal quality which does not detract from the permanent value of the volume." W. M. T.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ag 27 '30 700w

Reviewed by S. B. Clough

Hist Outlook 21:393 D '30 600w

"To write a brief economic history of Europe is necessarily a difficult task; and Mr. Birnie has been none too successful in this attempt. He has chosen to cover the ground subject by subject rather than country by country, with the result that no very clear view is presented of the interaction of political and economic forces, or of the continuous development of any of the great industrial nations. Moreover, Mr. Birnie's choice of themes is astonishingly lopsided. The entire development of industry gets thirteen pages, or, with agriculture, transport and commerce added, sixty-four. On the other hand, the growth of Socialism, Trade Unionism, Co-operation and social legislation occupy more than half the book. The book would make a useful companion to a general economic history of modern Europe; but it cannot really claim to be such a history."

— + New Statesman 35:575 Ag 9 '30 200w

Reviewed by John Carter

Outlook 156:110 S 17 '30 80w

St Louis 28:289 D '30

"The book is open to criticism in detail, but as a whole it is decidedly interesting."

+ — Spec 144:1023 Je 21 '30 120w

"Here is obviously a vast field, requiring great economy of space and the omission of much, to bring the whole within reasonable limits. The author must make a selection of facts and state them concisely. On the whole, he does this well, perhaps as well as it can be done. And yet there is something unsatisfactory about it, for which the plan is responsible rather than the execution. Nothing is or can be fully or even adequately stated; everything is skimped, and dissatisfaction grows as one proceeds. Every subject handled and disposed of in a chapter needs at least a volume, quite apart from debatable points, which are numerous."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p544 Jl 3 '30 800w

World Tomorrow 14:28 Ja '31 30w

BISHOP, JOSEPH BUCKLIN, and BISHOP, FARNHAM. Goethals, genius of the Panama canal; a biography. 493p il $5 (18s) Harper

B or 92 Goethals, George Washington. Panama canal 30-22571

Authorized biography of the man who engineered the construction of the Panama canal. The biographers have sketched the training of Colonel Goethals at West Point, and have emphasized his ability to handle men as a cardinal point in his character and career. A large part of the book is given over to his work in the Canal Zone, backed by President Roosevelt, and the physical and political difficulties which he overcame during the execution of the great project. The latter part of the story contains an account of Goethals's less happy experiences in connection with the Shipping board during the war.

Booklist 27:100 N '30

Bookm 72:iv O '30 150w

"While the Bishops' biography of Goethals is largely concerned with the story of Panama, it by no means neglects other chapters of the colonel's life. Even the Panama period is dealt with intimately rather than historically, and it is on the personal side that the biographers are best." H. C. Commager

Books p3 Ag 24 '30 1050w

"Joseph Bucklin Bishop, Secretary of the Canal Commission, began this story of the life and public services of Goethals, and passing away almost at its beginning, handed on the work to his son, Farnham Bishop, who by a tragic fate likewise passed on before its publication. No two men could have been better informed as to the work of Colonel Goethals in 'digging the ditch,' and the part of the volume given to that period of his life is adequate and interesting." W. J. Abbot

+ Christian Science Monitor p6 O 14 '30 650w

"Mr. Bishop evidently means his book to be the last word on the subject, and it probably will be. A great deal of it is based on hitherto unpublished letters and manuscripts written by Goethals himself." C. W. Thompson

N Y Times p3 O 5 '30 1350w

St Louis 28:244 O '30

"To read [this book] is to be satisfied that Goethals deserved close study, but to think that the fruits of it would have been more vividly expressed if they had been given in a more concentrated form. What is to be gathered of his character from the chapters in which it is exhibited in his work on the Canal receives little essential augmentation from those others which take up about half of the 476 pages—indeed, the figure of Goethals would have stood out more clearly if the Canal chapters had been shortened. Many pages are given to the reproduction, verbatim, of letters and conversations of which the point could have been summarized in a few lines."

Times [London] Lit Sup p821 O 16 '30 950w

BISHOP, MORRIS. Paramount poems. 98p il $2 Minton

811 29-22940

These light and humorous verses have been for the most part reprinted from Short turns and encores of the Saturday Evening Post. Genial satire is the general keynote of Mr Bishop's verses; his subjects range from Sunday motorists, the milkman's horse, and K. O. Cook of Keokuk to the unlucky love affairs of lady poets.

"The creator of poetry designed for smiling or satirical purposes only employs the technique of football—the huddle, the shift, the fake reverse, the place kick. These forms are judiciously mixed and nicely timed by Morris Bishop; he runs up an impressive score in 'Paramount Poems.' "

+ Books p10 D 22 '29 150w

"It is probable that 'Paramount Poems' will send Morris Bishop near the head of the Don Marquis—Samuel Hoffenstein class. There is the same working up to an absurd surprise climax."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 4 '30 160w

Cleveland Open Shelf p25 F '30

Wis Lib Bul 25:369 N '29

BJERRE, POUL CARL. Death and renewal; tr. from the Swedish by I. von Tell. 346p $3 Macmillan [10s 6d Williams & Norgate]

111 Life. Death [29-30589]

Dr Bjerre, a Swedish specialist in psychotherapy, in this religio-philosophical discourse aims to show how life and death presuppose

BJERRE, P. C.—Continued
each other, and how existence with all its varieties of form can only be understood as manifestations of this rhythm.

Boston Transcript p3 My 10 '30 380w

Reviewed by Raymond Kresensky
Christian Century 47:941 Jl 30 '30 580w

Reviewed by L. C. Woodman
N Y Evening Post p7s Mr 1 '30 400w

"One of the most eminent of Swedish psychotherapists has written a book which is neither psychology, philosophy, nor religion. Death and Renewal is a book of apophthegms and fables all of which seek to present and refine the revelation of the interdependence of life and death and its thousandfold repercussions on the individual human life. The tone of Dr. Bjerre's fables is rather pessimistic, or even consciously tragic; they contain, however, a lifetime's experience."
Spec 143:55 Jl 13 '29 200w

"When Dr. Bjerre is clear, he is convincing and profound; but he seems to have cultivated deliberately the apocalyptic manner. It is more than a little difficult, more difficult indeed than we think it ought to be, to disentangle the main lines of Dr. Bjerre's thinking."
Times [London] Lit Sup p616 Ag 8 '29 1400w

BLACAM, AODH SANDRACH DE. Gaelic literature surveyed. 390p $5 Irish bk. shop, 780 Lexington av., N.Y. [12s 6d Talbot press, Dublin]

891.63 Gaelic literature—History. Irish literature—History

"This is the first attempt at reconstituting from age to age the historic as well as the literary background of the great treasures of Irish literature. Mac Liag and Cuan O'Lochain were poets, but they were more. They were living, virile sharers in the moving drama of the history of their day. . . This book goes back three centuries to recapture the native outlook; it is a rehandling of the vast material in the treasure house of Irish literature, particularly of the modern period. So full of life are these pages, that we see in vivid vision Mac Aingil wandering on foot in Spain and France and Italy, or sitting down to write his account of the Irish philosopher, Duns Scotus, or O'Rahilly on his death-bed hurling defiance at the fate that involved his country in ruin."—Spec

"Mr. Aodh De Blacam has written a study of Gaelic literature that is unique in plan, as exciting as an adventure story, indispensable to students, and a thing for poets to cherish and ponder. . . For a time, this should be the authoritative work in its field; scholars, must have it—poets, if they are wise, will study it well." S. O'S.
+ N Y Evening Post p12m D 21 '29 250w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:52 Je '30

St Louis 28:142 My '30

"This is no dead catalogue of literary work. The pages glow and burn with the fire of an imaginative soul. Here is light enough and to spare for the dark corners of literary history. The empty spaces are peopled with dead-and-gone Gaels of many generations. The bare bones of literature take on the flesh and blood of living men and women instinct with the feelings of their time. . . Irish Literature Surveyed is a book that will send students direct to the fountainhead of Irish literature, full of enthusiasm and fresh energy." A. O'F.
+ Spec 143:223 Ag 17 '29 1300w

"Nowhere else will the general reader find so comprehensive a survey of literary production in Gaelic speech. The specialist will have his quarrel with Mr. de Blácam here and there, but it is a considerable service to have made this matter accessible at all."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p738 S 26 '29 800w

BLACAM, HUGH DE. Flying cromlech (Eng title: Lady of the cromlech). 300p $2.50 Century [7s 6d Murray, J.]
30-18203

The romance of a young man who searches thru all Ireland for sight of the red-headed girl of whom he knows nothing except her first name, Sorcha.

Booklist 27:103 N '30

Bookm 71:ix Ag '30 30w

Books p10 Ag 31 '30 250w

N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 23 '30 180w

"Conceived in a mood which combines the humor and whimsicality, the imagery and the mysticism of the traditional Irish romance, this novel by Hugh de Blacam is an extraordinary compound of the conventional and the unconventional."
N Y Times p6 Jl 13 '30 700w

Reviewed by Bernice Whittemore
Outlook 155:389 Jl 9 '30 180w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:70 O '30

"It is a harmless, pleasantly written story, which the author evidently enjoyed, and which some of his readers will enjoy too."
+ Sat R of Lit 7:43 Ag 9 '30 230w

"There is such a passion of patriotism glowing underneath the extravagance, such delicate vignettes of Irish mountains and pearly mists, or white-walled Irish cities with their bells and convents blending in an alchemy of faith with their taverns and songs, such felicitous translations of the songs and ballads themselves that it is not hard to pardon some annoying tricks of style, the recurrent phrase 'my David,' for example, and to excuse some over-sugaring of the sentiment. For the tale steps smartly out and comes to a dramatic end that is at once a surprise and a parable."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p476 Je 5 '30 530w

BLACK, JAMES MACDOUGALL. Rogues of the Bible. 262p $2.50 Harper

220.92 Bible. Old Testament—Biography
30-4595

The minister of St George's, West Edinburgh, writes these essays in defence of certain Bible characters who have been "immemorially criticised or condemned." The term rogue is used, not in the common sense of rascal or miscreant, but as the biologist uses "sport" to indicate a variation from type. Contents: An apology for Cain; An argument for Esau; An appreciation of Korah; A discharge for Balaam; An appeal for Saul; A statement for Jezebel; A plea for Gehazi; An exoneration of Christ's generation; In defence of the elder brother and the Pharisees; A vindication of Pontius Pilate; In praise of two splendid cowards; A reconsideration of Ananias; The case for Demas.

"This is Biblical exposition of a high order. It is also true knowledge of human nature and sound judgment of history. This book is more important than appears upon the surface. We commend it enthusiastically, not merely to students of Scripture, but to anybody who enjoys good reading." J. H. Holmes
+ Books p17 Mr 23 '30 300w

"This book by Dr. James Black is very readable indeed. Its suggestiveness alone will commend it to ministers who have weekly preparation of sermon material to gather. But from the point of view of sheer interest it may be read with pleasure by the reading public in general. Its style and form are in keeping with the author's high standards in other writings." G. F. Finnie
+ Crozer Q 7:257 Ap '30 120w

"The reputation of Dr. James Black is established quite securely. Certainly this book adds nothing to it, even if it does not detract from it. . . None-the-less, here is an interesting and, on the whole, not unworthy book that will not fail to win praise, if not approval. It does have the virtue of furnishing the preacher who wants to shoot his arrows of sarcasm over the heads of the rogues of the Bible at the saints in his congregation, with a quiver full of well-pointed and neatly feathered arrows." M. H. Krumbine

+ — J Religion 10:624 O '30 450w

"About all these people Mr. Black writes engagingly and ingeniously, pleading for a revaluation of their characters, in each case building his argument for a more lenient and a more just appraisal of personality solely on the facts narrated in the Bible's account of the character and the event in question. The author's original viewpoint and new treatment give fresh interest to these characters."

+ N Y Times p30 Mr 23 '30 420w

BLACK, JOHN DONALD, and BLACK, ALBERT G. Production organization. 646p $3.75 Holt

330 Economics 29-24879

As a revision of John D. Black's Introduction to Production Economics, this text was prepared for, and has been given five years' trial in the School of business administration at the University of Minnesota. Part one discusses the nature of production as an economic function and sketches the evolution of modern economic society. Part two, on the principles of combination, treats mainly of specialization by producing units and combinations of business units. Part three describes marketing, financial and other aspects of the social organization of production.

"Throughout the text the authors display both originality and courage in striking out into new fields of analysis and in reworking time-worn concepts and applying them to specific and vital relationships of our modern economic activity. Much of what appeared to many as fine-spun and probably sterile analysis, found in the first edition, has been eliminated in this revision; resulting in the work being more closely geared to the actualities of economic experience." C. L. Holmes

+ Am Econ R 20:266 Je '30 1350w

"The work is obviously based on careful original research, especially in the field of agricultural economics. Detailed presentation of descriptive material is less rich in dealing with major trends of American productive life, the issues of machinery and management; too little attention, for instance, is given to mechanical and manufacturing industries, and to transportation and communication, when their preponderant place in producing our national income is considered. This lag in economic emphasis is doubtless related to the authors' agricultural background and to their apparent lack of familiarity with the new dominant trends in American production." F. D. Tyson

+ — Ann Am Acad 149:212 My '30 450w

"To teachers of beginning economics this revised edition should be welcome. For elementary instruction it possesses most of the merits and few of the faults—both considerable—of the first edition. The descriptive materials are well chosen and as good as could be expected in view of the extent of subject matter covered. The exposition of principles is, with few exceptions, excellent. It would be difficult to find in an elementary text a better treatment of diminishing returns, the economic combination of the factors, or the principle of comparative advantage. Among the improvements in this edition are the more adequate treatment of marginal cost and marginal productivity and the inclusion of numerous illustrations from business as well as agriculture." T. O. Yntema

+ J Pol Econ 38:727 D '30 360w

BLACKWELL, ALICE STONE. Lucy Stone: pioneer of woman's rights. 313p il $3 Little

B or 92 Stone, Lucy (Mrs Henry B. Blackwell) 30-25807

This biography of Lucy Stone, American pioneer of woman's rights, written by her daughter, reflects the courageous personality, the zeal for her cause, and the rare sense of humor that were important factors in her popularity and leadership. Lucy Stone's determination to have a college education, studying the same subjects as young men studied; her graduation from Oberlin; her public lectures against slavery; her wearing of the bloomer costume; and her acceptance of marriage only on condition that she be allowed to retain her maiden name, are among the most interesting incidents treated in the biography.

Booklist 27:154 D '30

"This book is a most dignified and successful example of the filial biography. It is admiring without excess of sentiment or of eulogy. It is rich in facts and anecdotes, and it leans heavily on contemporary records." Freda Kirchwey

+ Books p4 S 28 '30 1000w

Reviewed by S. L. Cook

Boston Transcript p2 S 27 '30 1550w

Cleveland Open Shelf p156 D '30

"Stripped of much of its sentimentality, this biography contains many picturesque incidents of the fight for women's rights, a fight which extended from the comparatively petty right of women to vote in church meetings to the exercise of the franchise in national elections. It is not a great book but it may pave the way for an adequate study of the first American 'Lucy Stoner.' " E. F. Brown

Current Hist 33:vi D '30 150w

"Alice Stone Blackwell has done an excellent job in portraying the life of her distinguished mother. Praise she has for Lucy Stone, but she falls into no snare of adulation or sentimentality. True, the portrait lacks the rude lines that a person wholly unprejudiced might have been impelled to draw, but that is an omission inherent in this type of authorship. One is grateful to Miss Blackwell for a live sense of humor which permits her to quote incidents that a less kindly annotator would have fallen upon with avaricious delight."

+ N Y Times p4 O 19 '30 750w

St Louis 28:301 D '30

"The story is written by her daughter and is in no sense a critical biography. There is no analysis of character that gets beneath surfaces and no attempt at synthetizing the personality on the deeper psychological levels. Actually the heroine of the biography might be the heroine of the romantic novels of her period, so simple and unmixed were her motives, so conscious and purposeful her acts. But if the reader suspects that this aspect arises from a too filial attitude on the part of the author he may well be disconcerted to find that the letters and journals quoted profusely and tellingly bear out exactly the interpretation presented by the daughter." Gladys Graham

Sat R of Lit 7:488 D 27 '30 600w

BLACKWELL, ALICE STONE, comp. and tr. Some Spanish-American poets; with an introd. and notes by Isaac Goldberg. 559p $3 (12s 6d) Appleton

861.08 Spanish-American poetry—Collections. Spanish-American poetry—Translations into English 29-16314

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"The chief service of this collection is to provide easy and inspiriting access to the sentiments, the ideas and moving concepts of our Spanish-American neighbors. No one should omit, on that count alone, to read it and to give Miss Blackwell her due measure of thanks for providing the occasion." Mary Austin

+ — Books p2 D 29 '29 1350w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:4 Ja '30

Pratt p30 spring '30

St Louis 28:13 Ja '30

"One must admire her laborious fervour if one is often depressed by her renderings. One presumes that her excessive addiction to some poets and her neglect or omission of others—there are pages of the good Chocano but only one brief thing of Juana de Ibarbourou, and nothing at all of her compatriot, Delmira Agustini, two very remarkable Uruguayan women—

BLACKWELL, A. S., comp.—Continued
are due to the amiable, chancy preferences of translation. But there is enough of Spanish America's respectable and prolific verse in her volume to satisfy the curious reader, and as the book contains, in the excellent American fashion, biographical information and notes, the traveller in new country has everything to assist him." V. S. Pritchett
+ — Spec 144:970 Je 14 '30 1550w
Springf'd Republican p7e N 10 '29 1300w
World Tomorrow 13:525 D '30 50w

"Such criticisms are not intended in any devastating spirit. For the tremendous work which she has undertaken, and for the extremely competent interpretation which she has given us in English verse, I see no possibility of denying her very high praise." W. A. Beardsley
+ Yale R n s 19:635 spring '30 550w

BLAIR, DOROTHY. See Scarlett, R., pseud.

BLAIR, MRS EMILY (NEWELL). Creation of a home; a mother advises a daughter. 279p $2.50 Farrar

640 Home economics 30-28168

The author was inspired to write this book on home making by a request from her newly married daughter for "something besides recipes." Her chapters deal with such matters as the education and practical training a girl needs for home making; the two essential bases for the successful home—proportion and scale; the significance of hospitality; housekeeping as a business; the expression of individuality in home and furnishings.

"Mrs. Blair has by no means written a book on home decoration. It does not tell what color combination to use in a living room with a sunny exposure and green woodwork. It does not give directions for making curtains or planning menus. It does attempt at considerable length to define certain fundamentals of homes as they need to be today and tomorrow—and to insist upon attacking the job of home making with the same seriousness, the same system, and the same interest that a man who wishes to make a success gives to his job."
Christian Science Monitor p13 N 22 '30 400w
N Y Times p23 N 2 '30 220w

BLAIR, WALTER A. Raft pilot's log; a history of the great rafting industry on the upper Mississippi, 1840-1915. ltd ed 328p pl $6 Clark, A.H.

634.982 Lumbering. Mississippi river. Steamboat navigation—Mississippi river 29-28832

"The author, with fifty years' experience as a Mississippi master and pilot, records the history of the great rafting industry on the upper Mississippi between 1840 and 1915."—Cleveland Open Shelf

"From the riches of his personal experience and knowledge he has made an invaluable contribution to the history of industrial America. With judicious care and research he has brought out the details of a vast business and laid them in order for the perfect use of all future historians, and the pleasure and instruction of the reader of to-day." C. E. Russell
+ Am Hist R 35:926 Jl '30 420w
Cleveland Open Shelf p35 Mr '30

"His book makes a valuable guidebook in this field of Americana. Unfortunately the book has practically no literary value and must remain merely a text for reference." Edwin Seaver
+ — N Y Evening Post p7m Ja 18 '30 200w
Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:17 My '30 100w
St Louis 28:70 Mr '30

BLAISDELL, DONALD CHRISTY. European financial control in the Ottoman empire; a study of the establishment, activities, and significance of the administration of the Ottoman public debt. 243p $3 Columbia univ. press

336.496 Finance—Turkey. Debts, Public—Turkey 29-15742

The first part of the book is an explanation of the financial confusion in Turkey which led up to the establishment of the administration of the imperial Ottoman debt. The conditions and fortunes of the debt since that time are described in succeeding chapters. The final chapter shows to what extent the governments of western Europe have developed a financial imperialism which seriously threatened the independence of small nations in the Ottoman Empire.

"Dr. Blaisdell's study is clear, logical, and well documented. It summarizes adequately a hitherto obscure chapter in the history of the Near East." A. H. Lybyer
+ Am Hist R 35:407 Ja '30 500w
Am Pol Sci R 24:789 Ag '30 280w
Reviewed by E. M. Patterson
Ann Am Acad 150:297 Jl '30 150w

"A straightforward, well-written account. Dr. Blaisdell was in every way well qualified to undertake the task of informing the world at large of the really enormous power and influence which the European-controlled Debt Administration wielded for several decades. He lived and taught in the Near East for a number of years, and then spent a full year doing research work on the subject in Constantinople, Berlin, Paris, and London. The volume is fully documented, and the footnotes give evidence of intensive research."
+ Hist Outlook 20:407 D '29 550w

"The book makes use of a greater abundance of source materials than were available to previous investigators, it is well-written and excellently documented, and it represents a distinct and valuable addition to the literature on this institution, already the most thoroughly investigated of all the international financial controls. There is no bibliography, however, which is regrettable in spite of the full documentation in the footnotes." Jacob Viner
+ — J Pol Econ 37:745 D '29 1000w

"Dr. Blaisdell has shown that scientific accuracy may be combined with the interest of a novel. He has presented a technical thesis so vividly that despite its prosaic title it can be of interest to the layman; on the other hand, he has written so clearly and dispassionately in the prejudice-filled field of international debts that, as Professor Edward Mead Earle says in his foreword, his book should attract the attention of all students of international relations whether or not they have heretofore concerned themselves with Turkish affairs." J. P. Clark
+ Nation 131:101 Jl 23 '30 600w

BLAKE, CLARICE. Sky farm. 298p $2 Little 30-20813

"In a primitive mountain district Bigony of 'Sky Farm' courts and marries Barbara of 'the Corners.' His younger brother has always been secretly in love with her. Barbara is aware of his feelings and dreads their inevitable outbreak. One day when her husband is out Esmond tries to make violent love to her. Bigony returns at that moment and orders him out of the house forever. Esmond settles in a shack six miles away. The couple gradually become afraid of the effects of his insane brooding. Their horror reaches an unusual climax."—N Y Times

Booklist 27:159 D '30

"Tragedy which stands too long on the leaves of foreboding goes flat. Miss Blake is so convinced that her somber themes can lead to but one fateful conclusion that she over-emphasizes the preliminaries and prolongs the suspense beyond a point where tragic values remain true."
— Books p10 S 7 '30 130w

"This family life story lifts itself above the mediocre pettiness of most such novels and plays. This family lives, humbly, happily, tragically. It is a genuine emotion which the author makes the reader feel, in sympathy with the people of her book."

+ Boston Transcript p3 S 20 '30 180w
N Y Times p18 S 7 '30 130w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:88 D '30

BLAKE, GLADYS. Even Sara. 231p $2 (5s) Appleton

30-5248

Sara was thin and quiet and fourteen in the days when Monroe was president, and her father was a member of the Senate. For all that she was so quiet Sara was clever, altho her family never suspected it until she courageously delivered an important paper to President Monroe, a paper which had direct bearing on the famous Monroe doctrine.

"The pretty little suggestion of a love-story ready to begin when Sara is old enough to have beaux detracts nothing from the value of 'Even Sara' as a story for young girls."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 2 '30 140w

"It is pretty safe to guess that most girls from twelve to fifteen will thoroughly enjoy 'Even Sara,' as will also a large proportion of their brothers of the same age."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:974 Ap 19 '30 100w

BLAKE, JOHN PERCY, and REVEIRS-HOPKINS, ALFRED EDWARD. Old English furniture for the small collector; its types, history and surroundings from mediæval to Victorian times. 155p il $5 Scribner [12s 6d Batsford]

749 Furniture [30-26557]

Within the limits of 155 pages the authors describe the main characteristics of furniture from the seventeenth to the nineteenth century.

Booklist 26:346 Je '30
Books p19 Je 29 '30 250w

" 'Old English Furniture' is a book primarily intended for the small collector, though others would find it interesting for the light it throws on past times. The authors apparently know the difficulties that beset the path of the beginner, and have given of their store of knowledge without stint. The book is profusely illustrated in so admirable a manner that it should prevent anyone from confusing the work of the master-craftsmen, such as the great Thomas Chippendale, Heppelwhite, or Sheraton." K. C. T.

+ Nation and Ath 47:sup194 My 10 '30 550w
New Statesman 35:314 Je 14 '30 250w
Pratt p23 autumn '30

"Though the number of books on furniture is legion, there is certainly room for Old English Furniture for the Small Collector. It is compact, practical and provided with over a hundred good photographic illustrations."

+ Spec 144:758 My 3 '30 140w
Times [London] Lit Sup p435 My 22 '30 220w

BLAKER, RICHARD. Medal without bar. 663p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [8s 6d Hodder]

30-12989

A novel of the war, concerned chiefly with the part played by the gunners, and written from the point of view of a subaltern, Charles Cartwright. Cartwright's military career is traced from his initial service at home at the outbreak of the war, to his years as a gunner officer, embodying the experiences in action of Cartwright and his friends. The book is a solidly realistic and thoro, tho unsensational record of events as seen from the average, undistinguished soldier's viewpoint.

Booklist 27:27 S '30

"Richard Blaker has given us an unforgettable picture of the mechanical aspects of war, of the work of the big guns and the subalterns who manned and directed them. This is the finest feature of Medal Without Bar. Otherwise, notwithstanding its prodigious accuracy, its faithful and sympathetic characterizations, its undeniably realistic dialogue, the book is liable to a charge of dulness." Margaret Wallace

+ — Bookm 71:441 Jl '30 300w

"It is as another document, another experience re-lived and re-told, that 'Medal Without Bar' strikes me as a moving and memorable book. . . Like most war novels worthy of consideration at all, it is an honest effort." F. T. Marsh

+ Books p7 Je 29 '30 700w
Boston Transcript p1 Je 7 '30 1000w
Cleveland Open Shelf p110 Jl '30
Nation 130:738 Je 25 '30 80w

Reviewed by Lionel Trilling
New Repub 63:296 Jl 23 '30 50w

"Mr. Blaker does succeed in getting one man's war down on paper. I shall not say that he has written a great novel describing the whole war, but I do say that, if no one does, this stands as good a chance of survival as any." E. S.

+ New Statesman 34:504 Ja 25 '30 300w

" 'Medal Without Bar' is a human document, where everyday people are subjected to terror and ghastly experiences and yet remain everyday people; it is an honest and poignant study and should deserve readers in this country as well as in England."

+ N Y Times p7 N 23 '30 350w

"Despite its enormous length it is always neat and orderly; and every literary device, including a heavy coating of sentiment, is applied to the home scenes and the hero's personal relationships. It is, in a word, the work of a practised hand."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p120 F 13 '30 500w

BLAKESLEE, GEORGE HUBBARD. Pacific area; an international survey. (World peace foundation pamphlets) 224p $2 World peace foundation

341 Eastern question (Far East). International cooperation 29-28978

A study of recent diplomatic developments in the Orient. China's relations with various other powers, agreements for preserving peace in the Pacific, extraterritoriality in China, Japanese policy toward China, the position of Manchuria, and agreements for peace are among the subjects discussed.

Am Pol Sci R 24:522 My '30 250w

Reviewed by W. L. Godshall
Ann Am Acad 152:406 N '30 380w
Booklist 26:145 Ja '30
Hist Outlook 21:399 D '30 230w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:40 My '30

"An accurate and concise account of developments in the Pacific region in the past few years and a well-chosen body of illustrative documentary material. Despite the highly controversial nature of the subjects with which it deals, the book is remarkably objective and dispassionate. . . By its impartiality, accuracy and brevity it is well suited for use as a text on international relations in the Pacific area in the period prior to September, 1929, the date of its composition." M. E. Cameron

+ Pol Sci Q 47:478 S '30 500w

"Professor Blakeslee has given us an excellent up-to-date and well documented summary of the recent diplomatic developments in the Orient. He deals authoritatively with the Manchurian tangle, the question of Chinese tariff autonomy, her extraterritoriality and of recent revision in China's treaties." J. S. Burgess

+ Survey 64:483 S 1 '30 80w

BLANCHARD, PHYLLIS MARY (MRS WALTER W. LUCASSE), and MANASSES, CARLYN. New girls for old. 281p $2.50 Macaulay

136.775 Girls. Young women. Woman—Social and moral questions 30-29149

Data from questionnaires sent to modern college girls, individual case studies, and letters written to newspaper "advice" columns, furnish the authors with their material for this survey. Tabulated answers to questions asked purport to reveal what the girl of today thinks concerning sex relationships, marriage versus a career, employment for women, divorce, companionate marriage, drinking and smoking, attitude of parents, etc.

Bookm 72:xii N '30 80w

"'New Girls for Old' should be read by every one working with girls and put into the hands of the girls themselves. My copy was promptly borrowed by a university boy, which may mean something for the next generation of these always old, always new, girls." Lorine Pruette

+ Books p12 D 7 '30 850w

N Y Times p32 N 9 '30 320w

"We have to remember that, although Dr. Blanchard is accurate when she describes the modern girl as frank about her sex problems, many of the cases on which she bases her conclusions are not of the average. Girls who answer questionnaires are especially qualified for introspective analysis. Even when chosen from a miscellaneous group of college girls they are already more conscious of their acts and desires than the average girl." Harry Hansen

N Y World p12 O 20 '30 850w

Reviewed by F. G. Seabury

Outlook 156:670 D 24 '30 250w

2 BLAND, EDITH (NESBIT) (MRS HUBERT BLAND). Five children. 306p il $3 Coward-McCann

31-26029

Three books by the author of "The Bastable children" brought together in one volume. Five children and It tells of the finding of the Psammead, the sand fairy, and the extraordinary events which followed; the Phœnix and the Carpet describes the new carpet for the nursery of the five children, and what happened when it turned out to be a magic carpet; the last story recounts the rescue of the sand fairy, and tells how he helped the children get the wonderful amulet.

Booklist 27:215 Ja '31

"The turn of Miss Nesbit's humor is identical with the children's. They will revel in the confusion that the wishes cause among grown-ups. Miss Nesbit's prose is sheer delight, and is at its best when it is read aloud." K. G. Landon

+ Bookm 72:247 N '30 220w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

Books p8 D 14 '30 250w

Boston Transcript p5 N 12 '30 380w

"All three tales are delightful, and one rejoices that these fine stories of wholesome, natural childhood are available in such attractive format for our children today." A. L. Shea

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p14 N 22 '30 200w

"The public of Mrs. Nesbit, so large and devoted, will rejoice in this American edition of a book which has been making friends everywhere for twenty years. The ingenuity of the author's imagination, her humor, and her charming outlook invest the adventures of her young characters with unceasing interest."

+ Nation 131:556 N 19 '30 80w

Reviewed by Padraic Colum

New Repub 65:23 N 19 '30 100w

Reviewed by Nancy Evans

N Y Evening Post p7d N 15 '30 80w

"In 'The Five Children,' apart from the natural interest of the amusing and exciting adventures that the children have with all this magic at their command, there is the charm implicit in all E. Nesbit's books. Part of it, of course, lies in the fun that is always to be found in stories about largish families of children. And the concentrated Englishness of them!" Marcia Dalphin

+ Sat R of Lit 7:206 O 11 '30 1250w

"Mrs. Nesbit's gay and thrilling book has come to us a long way in time and space. It is too full of really good stories to spoil it by writing solemnly about it. It means itself to be read and enjoyed and once it gets into a sensible home it never gets out again. The intelligent publishers have given it a strong tough binding that will stand the work of many hands. It is one of those loved and honorable books that look best when grimed by much happy reading." Christopher Morley

+ Sat R of Lit 7:419 D 6 '30 500w

BLAND-SUTTON, SIR JOHN, bart. Story of a surgeon; with a preamble by Rudyard Kipling. 204p il $3.50 Houghton [12s 6d Methuen]

B or 92 [30-25949]

The autobiography of the great English surgeon, Sir John Bland-Sutton. "He gives us an account of his career from the time of his first leanings toward science and his entry into Middlesex Hospital: a career in which he has met many interesting persons, including men so diverse as Lord Lister, W. G. Grace, and Selous, the explorer. His anecdotes throw a good deal of light on the progress of medical and surgical science, and the crudeness of the methods used before the days of the clinical thermometer, when the temperature was taken with the palm of the hand." (Sat R)

"Contrary to expectation, this book does not limit itself to tales of the operating room, for this amazing man is naturalist as well as surgeon. The author's sense of his own importance, though no doubt justifiable, and the scattering of annoying quatrains throughout are irritating factors. But Sir John's knowledge commands admiration and his experiences make absorbing reading."

+ — Bookm 72:vi S '30 80w

"The writer has spent fifty years of his life in the service of the Middlesex Hospital. It will be hard to find a more independent, generous, modest, humorous autobiography among the books of those fifty years than 'The Story of a Surgeon,' which the reader will wish twice as long." Edmund Blunden

+ Nation and Ath 47:249 My 24 '30 1300w

"It is always a rare occasion to meet a professional man who has some wit and general understanding outside the narrow circle of his trade. Reading Sir John's book provides such an occasion." E. S.

+ N Y Evening Post p5d N 29 '30 150w

Reviewed by G. W. Harris

N Y Times p9 S 14 '30 800w

"The author carries his learning lightly; he does not use too many technical terms, and at times he even introduces quaint pieces of doggerel which are apparently of his own composition."

+ Sat R 149:695 My 31 '30 400w

Sat R of Lit 7:273 O 25 '30 230w

"That great surgeon, Sir John Bland-Sutton, looking back over the seventy-five years of a well spent life, has made The Story of a Surgeon interesting alike to the practitioner and the layman. . . Sir John's career covers a complete revolution in surgical treatment as well as in the operations themselves."

+ Spec 144:833 My 17 '30 250w

"The records of a singularly simple and selfless life, rich in impersonal interests. Almost the only emotions that the author permits himself are sympathy and humor. Not only is anger missing, but the chronicle does not even contain indirect reference to any misunderstandings or friction. Yet these absences do not appear to be the result of suppression, but the natural consequence of a temperament upon which such episodes, inseparable from all prolonged activity, were incapable of leaving any permanent trace."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p404 My 15 '30 1050w

BLANDING, DON. Hula moons. 303p il $3 Dodd

919.69 Hawaiian Islands—Description and travel 30-28570

A chronicle of the author's sojourn in Hawaii, describing his impressions, adventures, and observations. He has touched on every phase of Hawaiian life and interpreted its people.

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice
Bookm 72:xix N '30 220w

Books p15 D 21 '30 200w

St Louis 28:300 D '30

" 'Hula Moons' is a convincing book. It convinces one that living is a delightful adventure—in Hawaii; that it was, indeed, for Don Blanding. . . But in creating his background Mr. Blanding has been guilty of what some may call 'stylistic outrages.' He has piled on adjectives in lavish fashion; exhausted every word of color, every superlative; used similes and metaphors without restraint (some are superb, others trite and commonplace); and to an annoying extent he has repeated certain favorite words and phrases. Nevertheless he has kept his material in hand; he has brought it through to serve his purpose." Helen Follett

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:392 N 29 '30 280w

BLASCO IBANEZ, VICENTE. Knight of the Virgin; tr. by Arthur Livingston. 305p $2.50 Dutton

30-13354

In this story of the Spanish conquest of America, Don Alonso de Ojeda, called the Knight of the Virgin, who had accompanied Columbus on his second voyage to America, settles down to carry out his three-fold purpose: to conquer virgin land, to love a woman, and to worship the Holy Virgin.

Booklist 26:396 Jl '30

"Though Senor Ibanez has failed to make his book anything more than a summary of a very important historical episode, his exceptional abilities as a writer cannot be called in question. Nowhere amidst this vast tangle of events—of exploration, of raids and sorties, of unexpected meetings and sudden death—does he lose his way. It is a workmanly survey. but it is not romance because there is no glamor, and it is not fictional biography because there is no character. A word must be said, finally, for Arthur Livingston's very idiomatic and readable translation." C. B. Hogan

Books p19 My 18 '30 450w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 21 '30 700w

"It is crude and dull and commonplace." Donald Douglas

— New Repub 63:106 Je 11 '30 80w

"This is a pleasant enough but not especially distinguished sequel novel to the late Spanish novelist's 'Unknown Lands.' " F. H. M.

+ — N Y Evening Post p11m My 10 '30 50w

"This period between the voyages of Columbus and the conquests of Cortez and Pizarro is one but little known to the average reader, who will therefore find a good deal of information as well as entertainment in this new novel by Vicente Blasco Ibañez."

+ N Y Times p9 My 18 '30 550w

Reviewed by Shaemas O'Sheel
N Y World p7m Jl 13 '30 120w

"There is a great deal of color in the book and one feels its firm historical foundation. But the narrative drags and gives the impression that the author was more determined to write it than inspired by it."

— + Outlook 155:104 My 21 '30 200w

Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 20 '30 600w

BLES, ARTHUR DE. Genuine antique furniture. 376p il $6 Crowell

749 Furniture—History 29-18648

How to tell a genuine, period antique from a faked representation is the main service performed by the author, who has during the past ten years delivered lectures on furniture at the Metropolitan museum. His book describes the furniture of the Gothic and the Italian and French renaissance eras, the Jacobean and other English styles, and American furniture and cabinet makers.

Booklist 26:227 Mr '30

"Colonel de Bles is an authority on the subject and gives his readers the benefit of years of careful study. He includes all the various styles from Gothic to Early American, never forgetting the close connection between architecture and furniture and the influence of history on both. It is rather technical but contains much useful information for the amateur collector, and is filled with pictures and sketches to illustrate the author's points more helpfully."

+ Bookm 70:viii Ja '30 80w

"His style is forthright, popular and not at all subtle. . . In dealing with American furniture, Major de Bles is occasionally naive. He says, for instance, that in the seventeenth century many Americans, even of wealth, dwelt in caves, and hence had no furniture."

+ — Books p35 N 17 '29 220w

Cleveland Open Shelf p153 D '29

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:1 Ja '30

Pratt p23 spring '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 80:30 O '29 120w

Wis Lib Bul 25:409 D '29

BLISS, HENRY EVELYN. Organization of knowledge and the system of the sciences; with an introd. by John Dewey. 433p il $5 Holt

112 Classification of sciences. Classification—Books 29-11489

"This sizable work by the Associate Librarian of the College of the City of New York is essentially a philosophical study of the logical principles which should govern the classification of knowledge, especially as regards the needs of libraries. Includes an historical survey of various systems from the time of Plato to the present."—N Y New Tech Bks

Booklist 26:143 Ja '30

"The form and style of the bibliographical references are not beyond criticism. . . To us, as a classifier, the most valuable part of the book is the brief and somewhat uneven, but encyclopædic survey in chapters 10-12 of the scope, content and relations of the different classes. The lack of this background is all too common among classifiers and is not supplied in our condensed tabular classification schedules. Not the least valuable feature of this survey is its up-to-dateness."

— + Library J 55:274 Mr 15 '30 1800w

Library J 55:605 Jl '30 600w

"This book is the most thorough discussion of the philosophical problems involved by our standard theories of library classification that has yet been written. As such it promises to become a classic for the subject. The thought is clear, its expression precise, and the argument thoroughly convincing. From beginning to end the author has achieved an enviable standard in his exposition. Granting his premises, one is led irresistibly to accept his somewhat startling conclusions. If classification is what Mr. Bliss believes it to be there can be no doubt that our libraries should be reclassified." Pierce Butler

+ Library Q 1:92 Ja '31 850w

Nature 126:199 Ag 9 '30 280w

N Y New Tech Bks 14:42 Jl '29

"Mr. Bliss, who is associate librarian of the College of the City of New York, achieves a work that is profound in conception and little short of monumental in scope. Basically, his work is historically and philosophically sound. He has done a commendable piece of work in gathering and organizing his material. The book is replete with authoritative references, biographical notes, and is fully indexed."

+ N Y Times p18 D 22 '29 700w

Pratt p67 spring '30

BLOCH, JEAN RICHARD. "—& co"; tr. by C. K. Scott-Moncrieff; [introd. by Romain Rolland]. 401p $3 Simon & Schuster [8s 6d Gollancz]

30-3347

This richly conceived novel is acclaimed in Romain Rolland's introduction as being written in the tradition of Balzac. In the story of a Jewish family of weavers, the Simlers, uprooted from their native Alsace in 1870, and transplanted in the French village of Vendeuvre, two problems are interwoven—the problem of the Jew in an alien soil and the problem of the Machine raising Man to riches and power but tyrannizing over and, in the end, devouring him. The unified strength of the Simler clan makes their fortune, but with the sacrifice of their ideals. The Simlers cease to exist except as —& co.

Reviewed by Mary Ross
Atlantic Bookshelf p22 Je '30 320w

Booklist 26:279 Ap '30

"M. Rolland's praise, high though it is, is very nearly justified by the performance. Jean-Richard Bloch has selected a large theme, in which there is room for him to move freely, in which there is exercise for a vast talent of observation and synthesis, in which there is also the possibility of a more than usually spectacular failure. And, for at least two-thirds of the way, he brought it off magnificently. . . It falters in the end because Bloch forgets his duty as an artist in his eagerness as a social philosopher. . . It is a common flaw, but one which we find hard to forgive because of the book's great promise."
+ — Bookm 70:671 F '30 400w

"Bloch's work will be classified with Israel Zangwill's novels, Lacretelle's 'Silbermann,' Mille's 'Harpagon's Revenge' and the brothers Tharaud's 'The Shadow of the Cross,' 'The Kingdom of God' and 'When Israel Is King,' as a novel of Jewish customs. But Bloch's '—& Co.' is more than that. . . Two added incentives to the reading of '—& Co.' are the excellent English version done by Scott-Moncrieff, master of translators, and Romain Rolland's enthusiastic introduction." Angel Flores
+ Books p3 Ja 26 '30 800w

"Absorbing as his characters are, they do not seem to belong to the earth; they are, rather, like shadows thrown on a curtain by a flickering, uncertain light—caricatures instead of portraits, grotesque and fantastic. His ideas far outweigh the personages of his book in interest, in interpretation and in presentation. . . Two decades elapse between the opening and closing chapters, but because of the many introspective and retrospective digressions, the time element is confused—without beginning or end, even as the Simlers themselves. The novel is so admirably conceived that the inadequate execution is a genuine disappointment." G. R. B. R.
+ — Boston Transcript p1 F 3 '30 1300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p62 Ap '30

Reviewed by J. W. Krutch
Nation 130:368 Mr 26 '30 700w

"The character drawing is rich and solid, with a touch of grotesque exaggeration; though some of the characters seem insubstantial in comparison with the monstrous figure of Hippolyte Simler, who dominates the book much as Galsworthy's Heythorp dominates 'Old English.' The translation by C. K. Scott-Moncrieff, is worthy of the book." Mark Segal
+ Nation and Ath 47:226 My 17 '30 230w

"The Simlers are spasmodically furrowing, roaring, swelling and barking throughout the book, but when it comes down to actual achievement they never live up to their implied glamor. Mr. Bloch has punctuated his book with coy rhetorical questions, he has juggled his men and women around like toy soldiers instead of letting them act for themselves, he has substituted cataloguing for description, he has relied on strained improbable situations to show character development, and he has failed to inspire any sympathy for his hero in his state of subjection to his family, since his hero has done practically nothing to indicate that he is any better than they." G. T. Hellman
— New Repub 62:163 Mr 26 '30 1450w

"An important and remarkable book."
+ New Statesman 35:151 My 10 '30 550w

"Here is a novel written in that older full-blooded tradition of French literature that produced 'César Birotteau,' 'Madame Bovary' and 'L'Assommoir'. A formidable conception, an unhurried and meticulous development, an imposing gallery of carefully delineated characters, and impressive philosophical implications have been welded into a book that has all the earmarks of a major work. That it is a major work in the full sense of the phrase is debatable. . . It may not be a major work, because of onesidedness or a final begging of important questions, but it is an important work and it is always interesting." Herbert Gorman
+ N Y Times p5 Ja 26 '30 1550w

"This solid and admirable book has nothing sensational about it, but its return to the older method of character drawing is a welcome change. . . This book should interest all Americans who have watched the industrial expansion of the last twenty years, but beyond that it should captivate those who look eagerly for the well-rounded, full-bodied novel of family life." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p13 Ja 28 '30 600w

"Subtle irony, a sense of human drama, a cold but warmly expressed interest in the persistence of family traits, color and passion restrained by a sure grasp on fictional values; these qualities mark Bloch's work. Above all it it notable for its classic style, its freedom from hap-hazard emotion and expression. Bloch's creative impulse is strong but it never gets beyond the control of his directing craftsmanship. While Jewish in its attitude toward man, life and fate, Bloch's work is strictly French in style." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 154:186 Ja 29 '30 350w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:39 My '30

"'. . . & Co.' is almost classical in its freedom from neologisms. For, as the bulk of the story is concerned with the period between 1870 and 1880, the aim of the author has been rather to reproduce the speech of a past epoch, and the style is close-knit to the verge of obscurity. But as a rule it is distinguished by graphic suggestiveness, due to the author's adroit handling of his wide vocabularly. The story itself is the work of a writer who possesses a deep insight into human character and a rare ability to trace the sociological factors by which human destinies are swayed."
+ Sat R 149:622 My 17 '30 1150w

"It is a book conceived on the old fashioned scale, carried out with a thoroughness unusual in recent Gallic novels and more reminiscent of the Balzacian period. . . It is a story that has been enacted in innumerable cases in any place where men have created that mysterious thing, a 'business,' but it has seldom been more expertly told than by M. Bloch, who is not perhaps one of the most original or important talents of his generation, and yet by reason of his strength and sanity of outlook will be understood and welcomed beyond most of his contemporaries." Theodore Purdy, Jr.
+ Sat R of Lit 6:669 Ja 25 '30 470w

"M. Bloch flogs his imagination, and strains after more than he can achieve. He has attempted a novel on the epic scale. He however, has no solutions to offer, and his effort to find them, being relegated to a didactic epilogue instead of being implicity woven into the narrative itself, does his story a positive disservice. Nevertheless, it remains an original, bold, and striking performance." Gilbert Thomas
— + Spec 144:837 My 17 '30 200w

"'—and Company' possesses sound craftsmanship and revealing character studies, but what makes it effective is the fact that Bloch has told a story which is close to his heart. Of Alsatian Jewish parentage, he brings to this novel a natural sympathy and understanding."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e F 2 '30 480w

"—And Company in its calm detachment and smoothly flowing prose is admirable in temper and style, and doubly welcome in a time of feverish and staccato novels and ex-confessions." Coley Taylor

+ Survey 64:36 Ap 1 '30 650w

Times [London] Lit Sup p367 My 1 '30 1050w

BLODGETT, RUTH ROBINSON. Wind from the sea. 291p $2 Harcourt

30-24244

Two men were in love with Miriam Dickerman: Joe Bernhard, young German radical; and Garret Lowrie, conventional young minister with poetic leanings. Miriam's Boston upbringing causes her to break with Joe; on the other hand, Garret does not represent her ideal. The conflict in Miriam's mind concerning the type of man best suited to her furnishes the drama of the story.

Bookm 72:ix N '30 80w

"Miss Blodgett is straightforward in her narration above all else. Large in her interest in human beings, she limits herself by a strict and vigorous economy of incident. And yet she did not accomplish all that she set out to do. Attempting a novel of social change (for old Boston rather than Miriam Dickerman is the protagonist), Miss Blodgett has been unable to reach an epic technique."

+ — Books p14 O 5 '30 500w

"The author effectively handles the varied elements in this story and makes it one highly readable as well as wisely interpretative of the struggles so frequently made by those who face modern life."

+ Boston Transcript p2 S 24 '30 300w

"The delicate and finely drawn study of youth's struggle against traditions and family loyalties. It is seldom that a novel on this theme leaves the reader with a feeling of satisfaction in the reality of the characters, their actions and the author's interpretation of them. Miss Blodgett has accomplished this. 'Wind From the Sea' has emotional unity, balance, restraint and definite characterization. It is an advance over her first book both in technique and character portrayal and definitely raises this author above the average run of fiction writers."

+ N Y Times p7 N 2 '30 550w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:88 D '30

BLOOMFIELD, DANIEL, comp. Selected articles on trends in retail distribution, incl. a brief on chain stores. (Handbook ser.) 509p $2.40 Wilson, H.W.

658.87 Retail trade. Chain stores 30-17809

Brings together material on the retail distribution of goods, with special emphasis on chain stores. Includes a twenty-page classified bibliography and a brief of points summarizing the arguments for and against the chain system. The material is grouped under the following topics: Status of retail distribution; Trends in retail distribution; Installment selling; Group buying; Chain stores and independent stores; Some other factors in retail distribution; Maintenance of resale prices; Mergers and consolidations; The growing importance of fashion; Some aspects of consumer demand.

"The collection of readings will be interesting and instructive to any reader who does not keep currently abreast of periodical literature in the field, and will prove a handy compendium of recent writing to any who wish to have a collected selection of the better statements which have recently appeared on distribution." L. S. Lyon

+ Am Econ R 20:734 D '30 300w

Booklist 27:52 O '30

Boston Transcript p3 S 13 '30 200w

J Home Econ 22:866 O '30 100w

Pratt p19 autumn '30

BLUM, WILLIAM, and HOGABOOM, GEORGE BYRON. Principles of electroplating and electroforming (electrotyping). 2d ed 424p il $4.50 McGraw

537.85 Electroplating. Electrotyping 30-5924

"Electrodeposition industries will welcome the appearance of the second edition of this well-known volume. In general, its layout follows the lines of the first edition, with important changes, however, in the inclusion of a new chapter on chromium plating and a revision of the other chapters to bring the subject matter up to date."—Chem & Met Eng

---

Booklist 26:321 My '30

Reviewed by C. L. Mantell

Chem & Met Eng 37:174 Mr '30 380w

"Until the appearance of this book six years ago, there was no adequate treatise in English covering the field. The revised edition should be of even wider interest to the practical man and to the college student, whose course in electrochemistry generally has neglected the subject of electrodeposition." R. M. Burns

+ Ind & Eng Chem 22:565 My '30 200w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:19 Ap '30

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:54 Je '30

BLUMENFELD, JOSEPHINE. Shrimps for tea [and other stories]. 315p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Heinemann]

30-23547

Twenty short stories in each of which, as in the work of Katherine Mansfield, the character of a person placed in a given circumstance, controls theme and action. The title story is about a love-swindle at the sea-shore.

"It is sensitive and well etched. What is missing is the terrific knowledge so delicately played with in all of Katherine Mansfield's writing; a lack, however, that any young author may cure by growing a little older. Incident is here, and character. The next job is to deepen the interplay of one upon the other and so reach the hidden pulse." Lynn Anderson

+ — Bookm 72:177 O '30 180w

Reviewed by Gerald Sykes

Books p18 O 19 '30 240w

Reviewed by Edith Weigle

Chicago Daily Tribune p8 D 27 '30 120w

"In these short stories of contemporary England Josephine Blumenfeld presents the detail of life with relentless and unemotional clarity, and its events and issues with overwhelming 'feeling.' She harnesses these strange team mates without fumbling or confusion. Her book is a notable achievement."

+ Nation 131:330 S 24 '30 100w

"Miss Blumenfeld's sketches are pleasantly written, with a neat economy of words, and make easy reading, though it is unwise to devour too many of them in succession."

+ — New Statesman 35:386 Je 28 '30 100w

"In spite of the variety and color of the material, the volume leaves one with an impression of monotony. Singly, the stories in 'Shrimps for Tea' are economical and sharply outlined. Taken together, they tend to blur indistinguishably. While she varies her material endlessly, Miss Blumenfeld has never varied her mood. Each of her twenty-one sketches strikes the same emotional keynote. They are studies, not of tragedy in the classic sense, but of blank and meaningless misfortune."

— N Y Times p6 S 14 '30 550w

"Some of the stories in this book make it worthy to be put on the same shelf with the work of the late Katherine Mansfield. They are of the same genre. They show the same understanding of the tremendous trifles that make up life, an equally clear illumination of the elusive, the lighting-up of personality and character with a phrase. The stories themselves are often elusive, mere nothings according to magazine standards. . . In any mood,

BLUMENFELD, JOSEPHINE—Continued
Josephine Blumenfeld is an author worth reading—and this first book marks her out also as an author to watch."

+ Sat R 149:831 Je 28 '30 220w

"Each of these twenty-one short stories is, within its own narrow compass, a perfect piece of work. Their author avoids that mistake so common among writers of brief fiction: she never attempts to make a pretty pattern. There is no rounding off, no grand flourish at the finish: each begins naturally and ends naturally."

+ Spec 144:913 My 31 '30 220w

"Miss Blumenfeld is guarded by a smooth and simple style and a strongly pictorial imagination."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p497 Je 12 '30 280w

BLUMENFELD, RALPH DAVID. In the days of bicycles and bustles (Eng title: R. D. B.'s diary, 1887-1914). 248p il $3.50 Brewer [8s 6d Heinemann]

B or 92 Journalists—Correspondence, reminiscences, etc. 30-25854

The author, an American journalist, in 1890 became London correspondent for the New York Herald. These extracts from his diary, covering the years from 1887 and 1914, are informal, gossipy bits in which Mr Blumenfeld comments upon his famous contemporaries, the politics of the time, the social life, economic and other changes encompassing the beginnings of motor cars, wireless, telephones, airplanes, etc., fashions and votes for women, and various amusing incidents typical of the period of bicycles and bustles.

Reviewed by M. D. Zabel
Nation 131:529 N 12 '30 280w

"Extracts he gives are too fragmentary and spasmodic. One would have liked a fuller and less edited selection. But they make, nevertheless, a very lively and amusing book." P. M.

+ — Nation and Ath 47:351 Je 14 '30 600w

"His diary is a record of many entertaining things: the oddities of late-Victorian London, encounters with various celebrities, and here and there a fragment of journalistic or political history not noted by any other chronicler. Mr. Blumenfeld must be very nearly the most ingenuous diarist of his time. . . The interest of a diary of this kind is that is contains numberless little things which, forgotten by most people, make illustrative material for the social historian. A hundred such are supplied by Mr. Blumenfeld."

+ New Statesman 35:sup xviii My 10 '30 580w

"It is a book which will provide you with an immense amount of entertainment." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 156:191 O 1 '30 100w

"One of the most interesting and amusing diaries that has ever got into print. And it is an honest diary. That is its outstanding characteristic, and the reason why so many of its pages make such diverting reading today. What R. D. B. put down twenty or thirty or forty years ago he reprints to-day—no matter how far time has falsified him as a prophet, or made his comments on men and affairs richly comic reading." Kenneth Kinninmont

+ Sat R 149:560 My 3 '30 950w

"There are no dull pages here, nothing to yawn over. Every incident is significant; every man or woman mentioned even casually makes an impression. . . R. D. B.'s contribution to posterity's knowledge of the past is light and casual. He picks dates here and there almost at random, it would seem. He really ought to expand and amplify. He could produce a work of uncommon merit. For he knows so exactly what to include and what to leave out. Isn't it of more interest to us to know that 1901 was the year in which straw was removed from the floors of omnibuses and lamps introduced 'so strong that one could almost read with them,' than to be reminded of an Education controversy or a tiff between Foreign Offices?" Hamilton Fyfe

+ Spec 144:786 My 10 '30 950w

"It is in several ways a bright journal of observation, and the author is to be commended upon the austerity of his writing."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p718 S 11 '30 200w

BLUNDEN, EDMUND CHARLES. Leigh Hunt, and his circle. 402p il $4 Harper [21s Cobden-Sanderson]

B or 92 Hunt, James Henry Leigh 30-30013

Mr Blunden's directly written and carefully documented story of Leigh Hunt's life is in the nature of a sympathetic rehabilitation of a man who—said to be caricatured by Dickens in the person of Harold Skimpole of Bleak House—has also suffered at the hands of previous biographers. Thru the pages move also Hunt's acquaintances and famous friends—Lamb and Shelley, Byron, Keats and Hazlitt.

Booklist 27:203 Ja '31

"Leigh Hunt stands out rather nobly, not only as an indefatigable and brilliant journalist, nor as the fortunate friend of so many notable men, nor as a passionate devotee of truth and liberty (one notes that both his parents were American, though he was born in England), nor even as, most especially, a man who thought it a privilege to assist and cherish talent wherever found. He stands, indeed, as Mr. Blunden portrays him, for culture itself. . . It is impossible to lay down the book without the intensest feeling of excitement and gratitude that the past contained so much, and all so significant to the present, thanks to men such as people its pages and to its author." Iris Barry

+ Books p7 D 7 '30 900w

"Mr. Blunden's story of this man and those about him is a scholarly book. It took Mr. Blunden, I believe, ten years to write it. But when I say scholarly I do not want the impression to be had that it is dull. It is as alive as Leigh Hunt was, and it flutters a lot less. It is an absorbing study of a strange personality. It abounds in delightful descriptions of one of the most fascinating periods of all time in England. In it is much new material along with much that is familiar, but never a hackneyed passage, never a dull moment." Karl Schriftgiesser

+ Boston Transcript p2 D 6 '30 2350w

"As a critic and interpreter of character Mr. Blunden does not incline toward the fashionable school of Lytton Strachey. His method is the straightforward presentation of facts rather than the subtle and ingenious arrangement of them to suit a portrait whose outlines have been already settled. And the facts are not unfriendly to Leigh Hunt."

+ Christian Science Monitor p13 Je 28 '30 350w

Reviewed by George Saintsbury
Nation and Ath 47:624 Ag 16 '30 550w

"One of Leigh Hunt's chief misfortunes was that he appeared too frivolous, and worked too hard. He has left behind him a reputation tinged with contempt, and a volume of work to which only a pre-conceived affection could do justice. So we may well be thankful to Mr. Blunden for bringing so clearly before us the results of his own labours. He makes no attempt either to explain Leigh Hunt or to galvanise him into romanto-biographic life in the Maurois manner. He simply deals out the facts, but such a super-abundance of facts that at times, in the earlier chapters, they seem about to overwhelm the biographer and drown his hero."

+ — New Statesman 35:278 Je 7 '30 1850w

Reviewed by Edgar Johnson
N Y Evening Post p4d N 22 '30 850w

"One of the best written and most scholarly of recent biographical studies. Mr. Blunden has imaginative sensitivity and profound respect for scholarship—two qualities which alone make possible the best definitive biographies of men of letters. He knows more about Leigh Hunt than anyone, save perhaps Mr. Humphrey Milford, and, what is almost more important, he understands this misguided idealist, this erratic, gentle, luminous mind, this man who, although he never achieved the highest rank as a genius himself save, perhaps, as an essayist, nevertheless had sufficient genius, beauty of character and insight to attract to himself all the famous literary figures of his own day."

+ N Y Times p5 D 7 '30 750w

Pratt p35 autumn '30

"The book is like a tapestry, woven of a dozen colours, with a uniformity of tone that makes delightful reading. If there is a defect in this biography, it is that the subject, though not lost in the crowd, seems a member of it, and that the various crises in his life scarcely stand out in the steady flow of circumambient narrative. . . Mr. Blunden has achieved several noteworthy purposes. His book, at this late hour, has done for Leigh Hunt that which Hunt himself did for many contemporaries. One leaves it with an increased respect for Leigh Hunt the writer, and with some of the feeling that Hunt himself excited in his many friends. . . No one interested either in Leigh Hunt or in the literary epoch of the Regency can read this book without enjoyment and without the gratitude excited by a work which could only have been written after many years of study. Mr. Blunden has added to his laurels, and his prose is a pleasure to read." Osbert Burdett

+ Sat R 149:691 My 31 '30 1050w

"Mr. Blunden has spared no pains in research, and his new data, if not of capital importance, at least shows how thoroughly he has explored the ground. His book is as scholarly as it is charming and humane, and, with all the available facts clearly marshalled, it finally vindicates Hunt's reputation." Gilbert Thomas

+ Spec 144:906 My 31 '30 900w

"There are all sorts of reasons why Mr Blunden should have written this book. He knows his Hunt-Lamb-Hazlitt period as few know it, being as familiar with the lives, letters and works of J. H. Reynolds, Cary and Clare as other scholars are with those of Keats and Shelley. He is by nature chivalrous and eager to champion the unduly neglected and the unjustly abused by nature, also, sympathetic and liable to be drawn toward anybody who was habitually kind and generous. . . Yet for all his qualifications there is one reason why he ought not to have done this book. . . He is a 'creative' writer of high rank, and it is to be hoped that in future he will leave works like these, which involve so much museum research, correspondence and collation of manuscripts to those capable scholars who cannot 'babble of green fields,' with his divine faculty."

+ Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 29 '30 1100w

"A book which may revive a drooping faith in the future of the art of biography. It shows its subject whole and in the round, and not in two dimensions, dashingly sketched from the angle which most amuses the biographer. It proves that plenty of detail is not incompatible with free movement and grace of narrative; that selection need not mean suppression, nor distortion; that to make a character live in a book it is not necessary to give up trying to grapple with all the evidence, and that a good biographer can express the truth of himself in expressing the truth of his sitter. Mr. Blunden's book is at once good narrative, good portraiture, and good criticism; and this is the more remarkable because his work upon it has been interrupted. The book appears years later than he intended, but it shows no signs of loss of grip or interest."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p441 My 29 '30 3550w

BLUNDEN, EDMUND CHARLES. Near and far; new poems. 64p $2 Harper [6s Cobden-Sanderson]

821 30-10000

This new volume of Edward Blunden's poems contains a number of Japanese pieces (reprinted from a limited edition in 1927), and, under the grouping Moods, conjectures and fancies, are lyrics of war and peace, nature and human affairs.

Booklist 27:148 D '30

"Near And Far is partly Japanese, partly war, and partly domestic. 'Japanese Garland' contains the best poetry—the images clear, the verse musical, sensitive and quiet; his war poems are unexpectedly subtle; and his domestic generally insipid. All the way through, however, he affords an excellent example of 'Bathos, or The Art of Sinking in Poetry', since no poet of his repute has such a capacity for composing indifferent lines." George Dangerfield

+ — Bookm 72:191 O '30 320w

"Is it possible to have the advantages of tradition without its hampering memories? Mr. Blunden's case would seem to suggest that it is not. He is a poet of talent who might have gone a long way if planted in stony soil. England's richness is as certainly a handicap as is our own poverty. Tradition may be the soil from which a sturdy contemporary literature will grow, as Mr. Eliot insists. But too often it becomes an academic reliance. The artist who knows all that there is to know about his craft, and who neglects for its sake the authority of creative experience is an academician. We find too seldom in this verse the luminous reason, the urgency, without which the noblest of traditions become a burden." Genevieve Taggard

— + Books p3 Ag 24 '30 750w

"It is unlikely that his later experiments will appeal much save to those whose interest can be based on technical and traditional acquaintance with Mr. Blunden's literary forbears. He is turning rapidly into a poet for the specialist." V. Sackville-West

Nation and Ath 46:178 N 2 '29 190w

New Repub 65:119 D 10 '30 80w

" 'Stands Blunden where he did?' Mr. Blunden's readers may inquire anxiously. Yes, he has not budged an inch, it is pleasant to be able to reply. Mr Blunden is as musical, as accomplished, as agreeably unperturbed as ever. He cultivates his garden-plot with a scholarly perseverance which does something to console us for the broader horizons from which he prefers to avert his eyes." P. Q.

New Statesman 33:746 S 28 '29 100w

Reviewed by Percy Hutchison

N Y Times p20 D 14 '30 200w

Reviewed by T. E. Welby

Sat R 148:352 S 28 '29 180w

" 'The Geographer's Glory, or, The Globe in 1730,' is wholly delightful and wholly original. The 'Japanese Garland' that follows is richly and beautifully descriptive, and 'The Author's Last Word to His Students' is moving. A section entitled 'Moods, Conjectures, and Fancies' makes up the rest of the book. If there is no one poem in it that profoundly impresses there are many lovely. There is always lovely language." W. R. Benét

+ Sat R of Lit 7:72 Ag 23 '30 250w

"We like Mr. Blunden best of all in his characteristic rôle of quiet country observer and chronicler. Such poems as 'The Kiln,' 'Epitaph,' and that charming portrait of an old-time village schoolmaster, entitled 'The Geographer's Glory, or, The Globe in 1730,' show that he well sustains his supremacy in that capacity."

+ Spec 143:416 S 28 '29 700w

Springf'd Republican p7e O 12 '30 1000w

Times [London] Lit Sup p786 O 10 '29 600w

BLUNT, KATHARINE, and COWAN, RUTH. Ultraviolet light and vitamin D in nutrition. (Univ. of Chicago home economics ser.) 229p il $2.50 Univ. of Chicago press [11s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

612.39 Vitamines. Ultra-violet rays. Growth. Nutrition 30-3361

A summary of the work of the last few years in the study of the effects of ultra-violet light and vitamin D, which will be of use to the student, the teacher, the nutrition worker, the dietitian and the medical man.

"It has been extremely difficult to keep up with the literature in this field. Miss Blunt and Miss Cowan have summarized the enormous amount of work and done it in an extremely interesting way. They have recorded the literature in sufficient detail and then, at the end of each chapter, have summarized the results. The book, therefore, is very interesting reading as well as an excellent source of information. To anyone who is interested in the field this book is an excellent beginning for further studies. It has summarized in a very fair way all the literature up to 1929." J. C. Aub

+ Am Chem Soc J 52:2593 Je '30 150w

"One is impressed with the large amount of material that has been reviewed and compressed into this small volume. That this has been done with so gratifying a result in the direction of clarifying the whole field, is due to the excellent analysis of the subject into its component parts. . . This book should prove useful to the student, the teacher, the nutrition worker, the dietitian, and the medical man. In addition, because of the very readable style in which it is written, it should appeal also to the intelligent lay public concerned with matters of public health and welfare." Grace MacLeod

+ J Home Econ 22:49 Ja '30 650w

Pratt p16 summer '30

BOAS, FREDERICK SAMUEL. Marlowe and his circle: a biographical survey. 160p il $2.50 (7s 6d) Oxford

B or 92 Marlowe, Christopher 30-17

"The discovery by Professor Hotson in 1925 of the papers relating to Marlowe's death at the hands of Frizer has stimulated research into the characters of the men with whom the poet was associated. Professor Boas has put the results of this research, with other known matter touching the life and death of Marlowe, into an intelligent sequence. There is a list of the principal documents at the back, and an index."—Bookm

Bookm 70:xxii D '29 80w

Sat R of Lit 6:969 Ap 19 '30 80w

Times [London] Lit Sup p919 N 14 '29 1250w

BOAS, MRS LOUISE SCHUTZ. Elizabeth Barrett Browning. 216p $3.50 Longmans

B or 92 Browning, Mrs Elizabeth (Barrett) [30-6271]

Fully exploiting the Victorian privilege of female invalidism—a pose fostered by an adoring father—Elizabeth Barrett spent many years of her life, up to the age of thirty-nine, in a darkened, airless room, writing poetry prodigiously and receiving the adulation of her admirers. Then she met Robert Browning. Their romance, apart from the influence of her father upon her life, is the chief concern of the biographer.

Booklist 26:309 My '30

"Very simply, as one would talk of a great and charming friend, she tells the story of the woman who was almost the Poet Laureate of England. The term 'great lovers' takes on a new meaning when we read of the long courtship of these two poets. These two intelligent people loved each other devotedly and unselfishly. So, in spite of the literary atmosphere created and the great names that file through it, this book is, first and foremost, a love story." Paul Allen

+ Bookm 71:113 Mr '30 200w

"Mrs. Boas writes the story well. She is supremely good in the art of portraiture, and characters like Richard Hengist Horne, Miss Mitford and Mr. Kenyon are excellently presented. Her fondness for the concrete might be a dangerous quality, but she is deft in its use and manages to include details even of the pet dog's sybaritic diet without making us conscious of triviality or disproportion. Of the love story itself she can write with a sure sympathy that never degenerates into sentimental ecstasies." H. F. Whicher

+ Books p18 Mr 16 '30 500w

Boston Transcript p3 Mr 19 '30 480w

Christian Century 47:274 F 26 '30 220w

Cleveland Open Shelf p77 My '30

Reviewed by E. L. Walton

Nation 131:45 Jl 9 '30 150w

"If fleshly details are to be introduced at all, one suspects that the marital experiments and adjustments of these eminent Victorians would be more instructive than either their pre-nuptial cooings or the pretty tricks of the Browning dog and the Browning baby. Nevertheless, Mrs. Boas is entertaining throughout, and her last chapter, quite free from smartness, is genuinely moving." Hazelton Spencer

+ — New Repub 62:252 Ap 16 '30 230w

"Perhaps Mrs. Boas strains a point, here and there, in order to get color into her narrative, but she undeniably succeeds. Her 'Elizabeth Barrett Browning' is a swift and amusing study, true to the facts, and, in general, faithful enough to its probabilities." Margaret Wallace

+ N Y Evening Post p9s F 22 '30 650w

"It is not the least pleasing feature of Mrs. Boas's book that while she never rudely shatters Elizabeth Barrett's veil of reticence—as she could readily have done with the modern weapon of psychoanalysis—she does puncture it with many a sly sally that is itself so reticent as scarcely to be noticed for its slyness."

+ N Y Times p11 Mr 2 '30 1300w

"Mrs. Boas' excellent biography is the progress of a luminous, gentle soul, literally from darkness into light—from a tomb-like chamber into a 'world of men.' "

+ Outlook 154:386 Mr 5 '30 350w

Pratt p36 summer '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 81:25 Mr '30 100w

St Louis 28:111 Ap '30

"Mrs Boas has produced an interpretation of Mrs Browning that, barring a few exceptions, is far worthier of its subject than books of the three women writers who have so recently preceded her in presenting a life of Mrs Browning. . . The complete biographer of Elizabeth Barrett Browning is yet to come." Lilian Whiting

+ — Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 9 '30 1550w

Wis Lib Bul 26:104 Mr '30

BOAS, MRS LOUISE SCHUTZ. Great rich man; the romance of Sir Walter Scott. 224p il $3.50 Longmans

B or 92 Scott, Sir Walter, bart. 29-21389

A romanticized and in no sense a full-length biography of Sir Walter Scott, from his early romantic love for Williamina Stuart to the climax of his popularity as poet and novelist, his financial crisis later in life, and his gallant battle in the face of adverse circumstances.

Booklist 26:115 D '29

"It is as interesting as one of Scott's own novels."

+ Bookm 72:v D '30 30w

"It is an oft-told story, familiar enough in its main features. But Mrs. Boas makes it live again in bright, vivid colors. . . Nothing new about Scott, we suppose, is claimed by the author. This is frankly romance which is not fiction, but appreciative reconstruction of the actual. Perhaps it may be called superficial. Certainly at times it seems unnecessarily garrulous in its gossipy amplification of the trivial."

+ — Christian Science Monitor p7 Ja 18 '30 650w

Cleveland Open Shelf p4 Ja '30

Nation 129:500 O 30 '29 20w

"In all this material there is a deep inherent interest that no biographer could quite conceal; and it is therefore not surprising if Mrs. Boas's pages are interesting. But the amount of research and understanding revealed by the book is small; there is no evidence of a comprehension of Scott's character or of an appreciation of his work; and the inconsistencies in the author's statements are glaring." S. A. Coblentz

+ — N Y Times p30 F 16 '30 600w

Pratt p38 spring '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 80:14 O '29 150w

Wis Lib Bul 25:371 N '29

BOBBE, MRS DOROTHIE (DE BEAR). Mr. and Mrs. John Quincy Adams; an adventure in patriotism. 310p il $3.50 Minton

B or 92 Adams, Louisa Catherine (Johnson) (Mrs John Quincy Adams). Adams, John Quincy 30-25083

The biographer of Abigail Adams continues her study of the "most distinguished family in the United States" with an account of John Quincy Adams and his wife, Louisa Johnson. Taking the reader to both Quincy and Washington, Mrs Bobbé tells the remarkable story of a long life of almost continuous public service and shows the president in the informality of home as well as in the full limelight of public life.

Booklist 27:154 D '30

"This book adds much to our understanding of a most interesting and significant family; the idealism and heroism and intelligence of John Quincy make him a figure almost sublime in its greatness, and it is encouraging to read of him so well understood. Mrs. Bobbé's writing is also proof, if one were again needed, that an author need not bow down before popular taste in order to write biography that is excitingly interesting." Coley Taylor

+ Bookm 72:182 O '30 650w

"Though Mrs. Bobbé has given us a fresh and vivacious picture of Mr. and Mrs. Adams, it cannot be said that she has penetrated beneath the surface, or that her personal approach has cast any new light on the problem that Adams presents." H. S. Commager

+ — Books p1 S 14 '30 1450w

Cleveland Open Shelf p159 D '30

Reviewed by E. F. Brown

Current Hist 33:vi N '30 200w

"The author has written a fairly good life of Louisa Adams, an indifferent biography of John Quincy Adams and has not succeeded at every point in bringing them together. This, though, is the close view of her work, which may reasonably crop out in an examination of it in detail. Since the book is virtually a blend it must be considered as such and when the general perspective is taken into account the whole effect is one of a readable and important contribution." A. S. Will

+ — N Y Times p5 O 5 '30 1650w

"A few more biographies such as this, and we will know how this country came by its ideals." A. W. Porterfield

+ Outlook 156:228 O 8 '30 700w

St Louis 28:301 D '30

BODENHEIM, MAXWELL. Bringing jazz! 70p $2 Liveright

811 30-4245

"Maxwell Bodenheim's latest book of poems might well be used as a starting point for a definition of jazz esthetics. First of all, it provides a particular kind of superlative entertainment that depends almost entirely upon the titillations of jazz rhythm and the impact of a brilliant, quickly assimilated image. Here is a swift panorama of Chicago's South Side, Greenwich Village, Harlem and Broadway. It is strictly urban poetry shot out at you from the roar of a subway, an automatic Army Colt, or the whining brass lungs of a saxophone—the jazz of Broadway that seems to rise from the pavements at the corner of Forty-second Street."—New Repub

"Maxwell Bodenheim has undoubtedly done what he set out to do. All he needs, as he suggests in the foreword, is a composer to set his poems to music. The lyrics are interesting in the way jazz is interesting; they should be appreciated by those who appreciate jazz; they are cheap, as jazz is cheap. Their author is at all times a showman, and he has the saving grace of individuality and a sarcastic tongue. And because he is as willing as any one else to admit that the great god Jazz, viewed in the more sober light of the morning after, has unmistakably clay feet, his book is worth the experiment." Ruth Lechlitner

+ — Books p16 Mr 9 '30 600w

"In spite of the many attempts to capture jazz rhythm with all its essentials intact and at the same time to create actual poetry, we have but two successful examples of this style, both significant because they display a like precision in technique: T. S. Eliot's 'Fragments of an Agon: Wanna Go Home, Baby?' and a selection of three or four poems from 'Bringing Jazz.'" Horace Gregory

+ New Repub 62:107 Mr 12 '30 380w

Reviewed by J. T. Farrell

N Y Evening Post p10m F 15 '30 500w

"Apart from his method, Maxwell Bodenheim is interesting for the sharply pictorial nature of his poems. He sees human beings for what they are. To many, if not to all of his pieces, there is a quick twist at the end which brings into clear relief the pathos or the callousness, or, mayhap, the manliness, of this character or that. And when all has been said, it is for this that the compositions in 'Bringing Jazz' have their worth, not in their method, which, at best, merely diverts."

+ N Y Times p14 F 23 '30 400w

"'Bringing Jazz' is a spirited job filled with leers and sneers and ogles, a jolly compilation exposing the foibles of Greenwich Village, Harlem, the Bronx, Chicago's underworld and other points on the Saxophone railway. Here are poems filled with cayenne and paprika, much more direct and outspoken than the lines that Maxwell used to twist and torture into a semblance of intense intellectuality. Here is the short, sharp jab of fact, the quick, nervous delivery that calls for recitation." Harry Hansen

N Y World p13 Ja 23 '30 750w

Reviewed by L. T. Nicholl

Outlook 154:549 Ap 2 '30 20w

BODENHEIM, MAXWELL. Virtuous girl. 260p $2.50 Liveright

30-15102

Romancing Emmy Lou, born in Chicago in the days when nice girls didn't have love affairs, ran away from disapproving parents and an outraged neighborhood to Kalamazoo, Michigan and independence. Emmy Lou became a chambermaid but keep her head high; and when Elmer came along she was quite willing to live with him, remaining true to herself and her ideas of love.

Bookm 71:xi Jl '30 100w

"Despite Mr. Bodenheim's angry defense of Emmy Lou, his elaborate poeticized explanations of her character and motives, any number of people might manage a friendly response to her defiant stand had he not wrapped her in layer upon layer of sentimentality until she is nothing but a shapeless bundle. . . Can even the boldest lover of paganism find joy in the game of 'grown-up children' played by Emmy Lou?" M. C. Dawson

BODENHEIM, MAXWELL—Continued

— Books p4 Je 1 '30 650w
Boston Transcript p2 Je 28 '30 220w

"Maxwell Bodenheim has his style in better control in A Virtuous Girl than he has had in his last few novels. He forgoes diatribe and polemic and contents himself with heavily decorative embroidery on his simple theme. He is always essentially a prose writing poet." F. L. Robbins

Outlook 155:188 Je 4 '30 200w

BOGEN, BORIS D., and SEGAL, ALFRED. Born a Jew. 361p $3 Macmillan

B or 92 Jews—Political and social conditions
30-11748

This autobiography of a Russian Jew is equally important for its dramatic history of Jewish life and movements during the past fifty years. Boris Bogen, born in Moscow, spent his childhood in the shadow of oppression and persecution. There followed immigration to America, the poverty of the East Side, and education in a Jewish school in New Jersey. The latter part of the book deals with his work as superintendent of the Cincinnati Jewish charities, and a return to Russia for Jewish relief work.

Booklist 27:24 S '30
Bookm 72:v O '30 50w

"Not a line of his story, from the departure on the first trip, through all the elaborate relations with State Department, foreign governments, with sects within sects of the Jews themselves, to Poland in 1919, one of the most dreary and terrible pageants of the war, on down through the work in Hungary and Austria, and further on into Russia, but is absorbing. Now he writes like an Old Testament prophet bewailing the fate of Israel in the language of a poet; now again in the language of a poet recording the warmth and richness of the Jewish brotherhood making itself felt in the time of gall." Ernestine Evans

+ Books p4 My 11 '30 1150w

Reviewed by Frances Bartlett

Boston Transcript p3 Jl 19 '30 1500w
Cleveland Open Shelf p124 S '30

"Jews and non-Jews alike will find this book an interesting and rather important commentary and record of certain phases of life to-day." Victor Bienstock

+ N Y World p7m Je 22 '30 320w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:77 N '30
St Louis 28:218 S '30

"The present account is necessarily too personal, too individual to tell the whole story and to view it objectively and in proper perspective. It has no documentation and is purely a personal record. Nevertheless, it will always have value to the historians of this activity primarily because of its intimate relation to a magnificent pioneer undertaking and conditions of the very greatest difficulty. It affords a fitting picture of the remarkable vitality of this ancient people and its survival under a stress greater than any to which it had been previously subjected." Solomon Lowenstein

+ — Survey 65:286 D 1 '30 1000w

BOGORAZ, VLADIMIR GERMANOVICH. Sons of the mammoth; tr. from the Russian by Stephen Graham. 254p $2 Cosmopolitan bk.

29-19241

"A Russian novelist and anthropologist vitalizes his study of Stone age lore in a fantastic novel. In this tale he spins a weirdly thrilling adventure yarn in which an ingenious prehistoric man and his mate are the central figures. Through this melodramatic story he undertakes to interpret, in an imaginative way for the average reader, the strange drawings of mammoths scratched ages ago on the walls of caves found in various parts of Europe and Asia."—Springf'd Republican

---

"Although the narrative is probably based on fact, it leaves the reader incredulous, and in spite of the thrilling occurrences related, it is oddly wanting in suspense. These hungry, fearful, daring creatures somehow lack authenticity."

— Books p17 S 22 '29 160w

"This is a good novel. . . M. Bogoras approaches his subject with easy dignity. He has looked at the accumulation of knowledge about the Stone Age thoroughly, and then, unabashed by the scientific implications, proceeded to write a living story of the persons who lived in that time."

+ N Y Times p6 D 22 '29 450w

"The author is an anthropologist and the action is considerably delayed by his descriptions of tribal rites. Or perhaps the descriptions are delayed by the story. Both story and descriptions are quite superb, generally, but they stumble over each other and evidently do not belong in the same book."

+ — N Y World p11m Ja 26 '30 100w

"All his actors are rather incarnations of abstract qualities or institutionalized puppets than plausible human beings. However, which of us has met Pleistocene men and women in the flesh and can gainsay the realism of these characters from personal experience? Moreover, however the anthropologist may cavil, Bogoras has written a very readable and entertaining yarn."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:815 Mr 8 '30 180w
Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 19 '30 100w

BOLITHO, WILLIAM, pseud. (WILLIAM B. RYALL). Camera obscura; pref. by Noel Coward. 219p $2.50 Simon & Schuster

824 31-26030

A collection of William Bolitho's essays from his column in the New York World, selected by him before his death. Included among the fifty sketches are the following: Sky line; Speakeasy; Subway delights; Street music; The pony ballet; Mei Lan-Fang; Fairy tales; The medium; Radio; The Deslys mystery; Green pastures; Berkeley Square; Whalen's education; The last bow; Journey's end.

"Bolitho wrote only of those things which touched him in such a way that they created a compulsion to write. His mind did not play upon the surface of events, but permeated them and seemed to effect a chemical change in their values. Because he understood that chemical change, and had the gift of communicating its nature in what he wrote, his pages have a living glow. . . He could write with the jeweled precision of a craftsman in one of the fine arts, but he had reckless creative moods in which words were tossed into the crowded arena of his thought with no regard for consequences." Lisle Bell

+ Books p4 N 9 '30 600w
Boston Transcript p5 D 10 '30 470w

"The title is, perhaps, too modest in that the essays not only project but interpret. His camera pierces beneath the surface and reveals underlying meanings. That—unless one prefers to give precedence to the somewhat angular though real distinction of Bolitho's style—is the most valuable quality of his writing."

+ Christian Science Monitor p13 D 20 '30 420w

"The distinguishing mark about William Bolitho which set him apart from and beyond most journalists, as displayed in these essays from the New York World, was not his style, which was often unnecessarily involved and turgid, but the nature of his mind—quick, fresh, curious, and literary all at the same time. He saw New York or Chicago as a native American could never see them. He went to a play and the performance started things going in his head, so that when he wrote about it the next day he wrote about the world at the same time, his own world, original and strange."

+ Nation 131:740 D 31 '30 150w
New Repub 65:227 Ja 7 '31 100w

"The articles are stimulating and courageous, even though made conformable with the policy of a metropolitan daily. Bolitho's superiority is ever refreshing. He could write the most magnificent prose if he so desired, as demonstrated in the essays 'Fairy Tales' and 'Dietary for Civilization,' but he elected to be intentionally complex." J. L. Greenspan
+ N Y Evening Post p4d N 22 '30 600w

"In Bolitho there were both satire and amazement, a sense of values and an absorbing interest in all perversions of values. Sense and the unduly sententious jostle each other in his erratic prose; ideas that would make another man a library of books go hand in hand with the obvious, dressed out in tricky phrases. It is sometimes difficult to make out where one sort of thing ends and the other begins." John Chamberlain
+ — N Y Times p2 N 16 '30 750w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p12 N 7 '30 450w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 156:430 N 12 '30 80w

"The reader need not fear that these essays, published after Bolitho's death, represent the dishonest and disloyal effort of his executors to capitalize his death by printing his trivia and his rejects. While many of these papers are written upon trivial subjects, and nearly all of them upon subjects of transitory and often ephemeral interest, yet these essays, originally done as journalism, still retain—as the publishers state in an oddly decent blurb—'the indubitable accent of permanence.'" Brooks Shepard
+ Sat R of Lit 7:487 D 27 '30 450w

BOLITHO, WILLIAM, pseud. (WILLIAM B. RYALL). Twelve against the gods; the story of adventure. 351p il $4 Simon & Schuster [10s 6d Heinemann]
920 Biography 29-24645
For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:200 F '30
Christian Science Monitor p10 My 17 '30 450w

"At the start Mr. Bolitho renounces romance and gives his fealty to impartiality and cold-bloodedness. He keeps his vow almost to the end. But in the essay on Woodrow Wilson it is impossible not to feel the genuine emotional impetus behind his writing. It is the finest writing in the book, and that is saying a great deal." D. E. W.
+ Current Hist 31:860 F '30 700w

"Mr. Bolitho's estimates, which are just without being cynical, his enthusiasm, and his vibrant prose are really worthy of his subjects. His book should make a holiday for all who worship at the same shrines."
+ Nation 130:225 F 19 '30 120w

"With his acute intelligence and powerful imagination Mr. Bolitho might have made the most exciting explorations in the character of the adventurer. He has preferred to write potted lives of such old favourites as Lola Montez and Napoleon III., rocketing continually into epigrammatic comments and explosive phrases, but producing finally only a Rhapsody in Blue." Raymond Mortimer
— Nation and Ath 47:145 My 3 '30 1000w

"Mr. Bolitho is a journalist: he knows how to get his effects. He proves his point about adventurers; all his subjects fit in with his definition, but so would a great many others. One feels that he has made use of a generalization in order to string together a few glittering personalities in what seems, at first glance, a strikingly paradoxical fashion. His interpretation is clever, but there is a great deal that anyone who knows history would find repetitious." G. T. Hellman
— + New Repub 61:258 Ja 22 '30 380w

"Mr. Bolitho, duly averting his gaze when necessary, has as fine a talent for making a modern version of the vulnerable past as any writer living. . . He is so interesting in any brief survey he makes of times and tendencies that one finds oneself coming with actual excitement upon his generalities. He has a scholarly imagination for the past, because the present has taught him so much, his speculations starting from a keen observation of his own day, as his earlier book Leviathan showed; and in the course of any inquiry he can always with good effect search his own mind for psychology or circumstance."
+ New Statesman 35:156 My 10 '30 750w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:2 Ja '30
St Louis 28:51 F '30

"Whether one agrees or disagrees with his estimates of some of those whom he ranges among the adventurers, he makes them living figures instead of mere exhibits in the waxworks show of the history book."
+ Sat R 149:532 Ap 26 '30 170w
Times [London] Lit Sup p290 Ap 3 '30 850w

BOLLINGER, JOSEPH WALTER. Elementary
^{2} wrought iron. 139p il $1.32 Bruce pub.
672 Ironwork 30-7396

A text devised for industrial arts courses in metal work. An introductory discussion of the properties of iron and steel is followed by descriptions of the basic operations necessary to the making of projects. The latter half of the book gives directions for making tools, articles of furniture, andirons and fireplace accessories, candlesticks, lamps, and miscellaneous articles such as door knockers and paper weights.

Booklist 26:382 Jl '30
N Y New Tech Bks 15:21 Ap '30
St Louis 28:265 N '30

BOLTON, CHARLES KNOWLES. Real founders of New England; stories of their life along the coast, 1602-1628. (Useful reference ser.) 192p il $3.50 Faxon
974 New England—History—Colonial period. New England—Biography. Fishing—New England 29-19510

An account of the fishing stations and trading posts established along the coast of New England before the landing of the Pilgrims, which gathers together much material on the lives of the men who founded these outposts.

"A good deal of valuable material is conveniently compiled in the appendixes: a list of 'Old Planters', and a list of early settlements and their founders. The narrative portion of the book moves easily, though it is occasionally marred by repetitions." Fulmer Mood
+ Am Hist R 35:674 Ap '30. 450w
Booklist 26:153 Ja '30

"What Mr. Bolton has done of greatest importance is to gather fugitive facts and records and write what has not hitherto existed in anything like completeness, a history of New England prior to 1630, and it is a surprising volume to most of us who think that the history of New England began in 1620. . . Mr. Bolton has done wonders with his material. He has delved very deeply into old sources, and he has drawn a picture of the adventurous days of the time of which he writes that is alike authoritative and interesting. . . The many old pictures with which the book is laden have been redrawn by Mrs. Bolton and are a great addition to the reader's enjoyment, just as the many maps increase his understanding. Altogether an excellent piece of difficult research which has been transformed into an historical work of permanent distinction and great value." S. L. Cook
+ Boston Transcript p4 S 21 '29 1550w
Cleveland Open Shelf p43 Mr '30

BOLTON, C. K.—Continued
Pratt p42 spring '30
St Louis 28:115 Ap '30
World Tomorrow 13:379 S '30 100w

BONAVIA, FERRUCCIO. Verdi. 162p $3 (7s 6d) ^{2} Oxford
B or 92 Verdi, Giuseppe [30-31881]

"Mr. Bonavia, with the 'Copialettere' beside him, has set himself to display Verdi's character largely through his own comments on his several occupations. They refer to matters as wide apart as the productions of his operas and the exercise of his horses. . . Mr. Bonavia, intense admirer of Verdi though he is, is by no means a lenient critic towards the faults of the earlier operas; but his honesty and his insight show us more of the stature of the man than any author writing in the English language has yet shown." —Times [London] Lit Sup

---

"This concise volume has value because of the abundant information which it gives with regard to Verdi's life, and also because of its interesting accounts of the circumstances attending the composition and production of his operas. As criticism the book, though duly sympathetic with its subject, is less sure of foot." Peter Bowdoin
+ — Books p19 Ag 3 '30 300w

"There is no very searching analysis into the matter of the operas, but the author's comments on them and on the aspects of Verdi's life and career which his letters reveal, make interesting reading. The composer's attitude to public opinion, his directness, his generosity and dislike of advertising it, his impetuosity and his extreme orderliness are all discussed, and a successful indirect portrait of him is arrived at, with a realization of his particular genius. The quality of Mr. Bonavia's writing is excellent." John Piper
+ Nation and Ath 47:506 Jl 19 '30 130w
Times [London] Lit Sup p407 My 15 '30 1100w

BONE, WILLIAM ARTHUR; NEWITT, DUDLEY M.; and TOWNEND, DONALD T. A. Gaseous combustion at high pressures. 396p il $15 (42s) Longmans
536.46 Combustion 30-6532

A continuation of the authors' "Flame and combustion in gases" (Book Review Digest, 1927). The book describes the equipment of the new high pressure research laboratories at the Imperial college of science and technology, London, as well as the apparatus and methods employed there by the authors in their researches upon gaseous explosions at high pressure. The experiments deal with the mean maximum temperatures attained in explosions, the specific heats of explosion products, the rôle of nitrogen in explosions of carbon monoxide and air and the effect of replacing nitrogen by other gases.

"The book is remarkable as a record of achievement and of triumph over difficulties. As such, it should make a wide appeal." R. V. Wheeler
+ Nature 125:302 Mr 1 '30 800w
N Y New Tech Bks 14:54 O '29

BONSELS, WALDEMAR. Adventures of Mario; tr. by Whittaker Chambers. 239p il $3 Boni
30-11281

"The story of Mario, a twelve-year old boy, who, at his mother's death, goes into the depths of the forest where he grows up with the animals and birds as his friends, and is cared for by an old herb-woman. The illustrations are by Kurt Wiese."—Publishers' Weekly

Reviewed by George Dangerfield
Bookm 71:325 Je '30 200w

" 'Mario' is finely written, rich in imagination and descriptive power. Young people who read it will find much to enthrall them, a little that is puzzling and—here and there—a little also that is disturbing. Bonsels is not only a poet, he is also philosopher and mystic, and his mysticism is at times the predominant note. He is not content to let the story be a story." M. W. Bianco
+ — Books p8 Je 1 '30 1050w

"One of those occasional, finely written books which must fall into the hands of the right person to be fully appreciated." A. L. Shea
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p10 Ap 19 '30 120w

" 'The Adventures of Mario' is about the experiences of a 12-year old boy in the woods, but its full beauty and meaning will be apparent only to adult readers."
Christian Science Monitor p15 My 10 '30 300w

"The delightful humor of 'Maya the Bee' is lacking and the ending falls rather flat. Nevertheless, even in the translation, which is excellent, one feels the rare beauty of Bonsel's style."
+ — N Y Times p18 My 11 '30 180w
Outlook 155:346 Jl 2 '30 80w

"It is a volume deserving in every way of a permanent place on the bookshelf of a child who is learning to love literature and the out-of-doors as well. Whittaker Chambers has translated it into exquisite English, and the unusual charcoal drawings by Kurt Wiese express perfectly the delicious woodland setting of this charming tale."
+ Springf'd Republican p5e Je 22 '30 380w

BOOKMEYER, MARY B. Candy and candy-making. 127p il $2 Manual arts press
641.85 Confectionery 30-277

The author, a teacher of home economics, furnishes in addition to simple technical rules for candy making a variety of standardized recipes for the more difficult forms of confections. Each chapter ends with blank pages that may be used for notes or additional recipes.

Booklist 26:225 Mr '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p123 S '30
J Home Econ 22:223 Mr '30 100w
N Y New Tech Bks 15:5 Ja '30
Pratt p20 summer '30
St Louis 28:138 My '30

BOOTH, CHARLES GORDON. Murder at high tide. 296p $2 Morrow [7s 6d Hodder]
30-4723

Dan Parados, whose evil genius had either wilfully destroyed or threatened the lives of all who ever came in contact with him, was murdered in the library of his island-house off the California coast. It is more than chance that explains the genial presence of M. Flique, the principal agent of the Paris Sureté. The disappearance of a jade phoenix, Parados's luck-piece, and the subsequent murder of the gardener, who apparently knew more than the killer liked, established some important clues that aid the suave Anatole Flique in solving the problem.

Bookm 71:xxviii Mr '30 100w

"Anatole Flique, of the Paris Sureté, an amusing but sapient sleuth, performs deductive wonders in rather a new way, and the highly unusual background adds to the tale's effectiveness. 'Murder at High Tide' is not at all the usual drivel." Will Cuppy
+ Books p22 F 9 '30 150w
Boston Transcript p3 Ap 18 '30 220w
Christian Century 47:1093 S 10 '30 100w

"Mr. Booth has constructed a mystery story which keeps the reader guessing to the very end."
+ N Y Times p23 Mr 9 '30 170w

"There is an abundance in the story of about every element which goes to the making of a Class A thriller."

+ N Y World p11m F 9 '30 150w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 154:351 F 26 '30 80w

Springf'd Republican p7e My 25 '30 100w

"The plot is ingeniously contrived, and though the reader may feel that in some respects the methods of the murderer are too clever to be true he will not be able to complain that he is not kept guessing right up to the end."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p654 Ag 14 '30 140w

BOOTH, HENRY KENDALL. Bridge between the Testaments; a survey of the life and literature of the period of the connections. 210p $2 (7s 6d) Scribner

296 Jews—History. Hebrew literature—History and criticism 29-19211

This survey of four centuries of Jewish history from 444 B.C. to 44 A.D. bridges the gap between the Old and the New Testament.

Booklist 26:274 Ap '30

Boston Transcript p4 S 21 '29 550w

"As a piece of English prose composition this book should have been better done. It is too hastily written, too carelessly revised. But it is, notwithstanding, a useful little volume. For those to whom the four centuries between Malachi and Matthew are centuries of silence, this will serve as a primer of the life and literature of an important period." W. E. Barton

+ — Christian Century 46:1378 N 6 '29 120w

Cleveland Open Shelf p19 F '30

Pratt p10 spring '30

St Louis 28:65 Mr '30

"Though Mr Booth's emphasis on certain points may be disputed, the book makes an excellent example of the popularization of biblical study."

+ — Springf'd Republican p8e N 6 '29 350w

"The book is carefully arranged and supplies an excellent introduction to the further study of a period whose importance for the understanding of later Judaism and the rise of Christianity is frequently ignored."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p827 O 17 '29 230w

BORDEN, MARY (MRS EDWARD LEWIS SPEARS). Forbidden zone. 211p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [6s Heinemann]

940.476 European war, 1914-1918—Hospitals, charities, etc. 30-11044

A collection of essays, notes and poems written by Mary Borden between 1914 and 1918 when she served as a nurse with the French Red cross unit. Part one contains short stories; part two, hospital sketches; and part three, poems reflecting scenes and impressions of the War.

"Under her sensitive impressionistic handling, pain, terror and death are transformed into a mysterious malignant Force that defies cynicism and sophistication. The book is too emotional to represent Miss Borden at her best, but her exquisite prose rescues it from hysteria."

+ — Bookm 72:xi S '30 80w

"Nothing is invented, and yet it is evident that a vivid imagination has taken hold of the material, pulled it into shape and made of it a vehicle for indignation, bewilderment, and a kind of frozen horror. The sketches and little stories are not direct transcriptions from reality, but bits of art. It is where she attempts to portray individuals and their personal relationships that Miss Borden is weakest. But what more natural than that, in the shadow of this war, the human beings should not be individuals?" Garreta Busey

+ — Books p24 Ap 13 '30 650w

Boston Transcript p8 My 10 '30 350w

Cleveland Open Shelf p102 Jl '30

"It adds nothing fresh to our knowledge; but it is written vividly, sincerely, and movingly. . . The sketches in which the author gives imaginative interpretation to her own war-time moods, and the prose poems in which she rails against Jehovah and fulminates against organized religion for condoning the War are no less sincerely inspired, but are, somehow, less impressive than her simple, objective records. Sympathy suits Mrs. Borden better than indignation. On the whole, however, this is a vital and haunting book."

+ — Nation and Ath 46:489 Ja 4 '30 500w

"There is a poetic, 'literary' quality to Miss Borden's writing which, while it keeps her book from having any great force and in some places seems rather out of place in the face of the subject matter, is occasionally very charming." G. T. Hellman

+ — New Repub 62:357 My 14 '30 280w

"The descriptions of the hospital, of the horrors of the operating room and the shamefaced politeness of dying men, are written with a remarkable detachment. It is a moving and rather painful book to read."

+ New Statesman 34:482 Ja 16 '30 200w

Reviewed by L. C. Woodman

N Y Times p9 Je 15 '30 420w

St Louis 28:246 O '30

Sat R 149:83 Ja 18 '30 150w

"Despite the interval of time between the Armistice and the date of writing, one feels that these war impressions were done at fever pitch, that they consumed their author. Scientific detachment played on the heart-strings of a woman but could not deaden the sound of human shock coming from within. With a poet's gift of rhythm, beauty, and feeling, Miss Borden has taken the rawest materials of lite and turned them into a work of art. But what price art?" Clarice Aiken

+ Sat R of Lit 7:7 Jl 26 '30 850w

"It is an interesting book, and only falls to be impressive because it so often wanders off at the critical moment into a vague whirl of emotion, and loses the objective picture. But it keeps the reader on the stretch, and that is a virtue which is too often absent for us not to be grateful when we find it."

+ — Spec 143:911 D 14 '29 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1030 D 5 '29 500w

BORDEN, MARY (MRS EDWARD LEWIS SPEARS). Woman with white eyes. 328p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Heinemann]

30-32847

Telling her life-story and that of her friend Maggie, in retrospect, when she is nearing sixty, Caroline Merryweather attempts to analyze both their emotional lives, and to discover just why it is that certain events and incidents can be recalled with greater clarity than others. Certainly the remembrance of Maggie's love for Buck Dawson, who was not always faithful, despite his strange fidelity to her, has a much stronger retrospective outline than the memory of men who were important to Caroline herself: Hugo, her lover; Jock Bailey, her husband; and Tawaska, the Finnish mystic, who of all men best understood her.

"While patly modern in its impressionism, the novel avoids stylistic experimentation and keeps to a prose that is clear and idiomatic. But otherwise—in its conception of character and in its underlying philosophy—the modernism of the novel is extreme. Most of the characters lack either a sense of humor that keeps emotion from kicking over traces and reason from

BORDEN, MARY—Continued
succumbing to false concepts, or a will that acts as a deterrent to irrational impulse." J. L. Davis

+ — Bookm 72:415 D '30 850w

Reviewed by V. P. Ross
Books p4 N 23 '30 600w

"'A Woman with White Eyes' is anything but a simple book. It is perhaps the most complex novel of the year, for the author has so embroidered every little tendril of her theme and of plot that the reader is dazed by that intricacy before the book is finished. The author's technique at times makes her story—which really interests the reader—such a melange the reader wishes that Caroline Merryweather, the person who pours out her memory in the book, had either a more orderly or a less detailed flow of consciousness. If 'A Woman with White Eyes' had been a little less diffused, technically, it would have been a much more powerful book. There is a certain sincerity about it which makes it impressive, a certain cold looking of life in the face." Fanny Butcher

+ — Chicago Daily Tribune p13 N 8 '30 450w
Nation and Ath 48:sup352 D 6 '30 150w

"No one, to be sure, would ever suppose it the work of an unpracticed novelist—it is a far too brilliant and subtle piece of writing, too carefully planned beneath its apparent formlessness. If anything, Miss Borden has been betrayed into artistic faults by her very confidence in her own skill and virtuosity. She yields too often to the temptation to mystify and excite and surprise her readers—not unnaturally, perhaps, for she does these things extremely well. But, in spite of its dramatic qualities, 'A Woman With White Eyes' lacks the homely virtues of clarity and simplicity." Margaret Wallace

+ — N Y Evening Post p4d D 6 '30 600w

"'A Woman With White Eyes' is a strange, confusing and apparently formless experiment in fiction writing, but a great deal of skill and originality has gone into its composition. It may, indeed, puzzle the reader at times, but it can hardly fail to interest him."

N Y Times p6 N 23 '30 550w

"The attempt to include a genuine philosophy in her stories is a new departure for Miss Borden, and a promising one. The book has a great deal that is good, and a great deal more that should make it popular. Under all the attempt to make a greater tragedy than there is in the story, lie a real feeling for character and atmosphere, a remarkable ability to move the reader almost against his reason and his will, and some truly brilliant technique." Basil Davenport

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:470 D 20 '30 580w

"This is a most impressive and moving book, full of scenes that haunt the memory: a book so calm, so steady, so sure of itself that it makes the reader feel his difficulties are probably his own fault, and, in any case, of small importance." L. A. G. Strong

+ Spec 145:605 O 25 '30 230w

"Miss Borden's cleverness in conveying social types, in sketching in her background be it country or town in displaying speed, riches, brilliance contrasted with an authentic nursery or simple New England scene, is exerted here to its full power."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p860 O 23 '30 400w

BORING, EDWIN GARRIGUES. History of experimental psychology. (Century psychology ser.) 699p il $4 Century

150.9 Psychology, Physiological—History 29-24651

A carefully documented and annotated volume covering the psychology of a half-century, from 1860 to 1910, with its preceding development and its consequences. The main sections of the book discuss, in the order named: Physiological psychology in the first half of the nineteenth century; The preparation for experimental psychology within philosophical psychology; The founding of experimental psychology; Modern experimental psychology; Survey of experimental psychology.

"In terms of comprehensive scholarship well-seasoned and integrated no other work has appeared in America equal to this history since Titchener's four-volume series of manuals in experimental psychology. . . Only those who know the amount of effort and discipline that lies behind historical contributions can appreciate the place which this book is bound to occupy in American psychology. The style is lucid, direct, and lively. Interpretations, both expressed as actual textual content and implied in terms of place and area of treatment, may rightly differ from writer to writer. But there is no book now available that is as circumspect and pithy as this History of Experimental Psychology." C. A. Ruckmick

+ Am J Psychol 42:654 O '30 1550w
Boston Transcript p4 F 15 '30 650w

"The appearance of Professor Boring's 'History of Experimental Psychology' is, in its own field, an event of the first magnitude. It is conceivable, even, that this book may mark a turning point in the whole outlook of psychologists. . . The volume is fittingly dedicated to the author's teacher, the late Professor Titchener of Cornell, who was possibly the greatest bibliographical scholar in American psychology. The reviewer believes, however, that the present volume is superior to any single work of Titchener in its unbiased attitude and in its almost unbelievably painstaking scholarship." Leonard Carmichael

+ New Repub 64:330 N 5 '30 850w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:34 Ap '30
Pratt p7 autumn '30

BORSODI, RALPH. This ugly civilization. 468p $3 Simon & Schuster

330.1 United States—Civilization. Factory system. Conduct of life 29-24750

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Reviewed by R. G. Tugwell
Ann Am Acad 152:417 N '30 320w
Booklist 26:222 Mr '30
Christian Century 47:723 Je 4 '30 250w
Christian Science Monitor p15 My 10 '30 270w

"Although, like all propagandist's work and special pleadings, This Ugly Civilization presents a somewhat distorted picture, yet it is a book which can be recommended as a much-needed corrective for those who think that progress comes only through the increase in mass production and the growth of Big Business." W. C. Waterman

+ — Hist Outlook 21:184 Ap '30 400w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:42 My '30
St Louis 28:37 F '30

"Mr. Borsodi, however good a philosopher he may be, has not found a Utopia. Forty books, even more ponderous than this, would not convince me that he has. He has only had a kind of luck that the rest of us cannot legitimately count on. Other men have got to go on calculating, as they have had to do in the past, on how they can make the world independent." R. G. Tugwell

Sat R of Lit 6:1143 Je 21 '30 1650w

Reviewed by R. A. Brady
Survey 64:101 Ap 15 '30 300w

Reviewed by C. C. Webber
World Tomorrow 13:182 Ap '30 350w

"That the book is too discursively written is the fault of the enthusiast, but Mr. Borsodi's analysis of the disease from which we suffer seems to me bitterly true. . . Perhaps most important of all the book's contributions is the fact that it is also a record of Mr. Borsodi's own experiences with the life he urges." C. P. Rollins

+ Yale R n s 19:622 spring '30 700w

BOSE, SIR JAGADIS CHUNDER. Growth and tropic movements of plants. 447p il $8.40 (21s) Longmans

581.1 Growth (plants). Plants—Irritability and movements [30-595]

This volume, by the author of Motor Mechanism in Plants, is a description of experimentation upon the growth of plants as affected by stimulation or by variations in environmental conditions. Prof Bose's principal conclusion is that weak stimulation accelerates plant activity, and strong stimulation retards it. Another feature of special interest is his study of the mechanism of the twining of climbing stems.

Nation and Ath 47:256 My 24 '30 230w

"His methods are often stupendous in their departure from orthodoxy (for which, maybe, he is to be congratulated), in experimental accuracy, and in the forethought for possible experimental error. His results, too, have often astounded many of his contemporary workers; but their value, unfortunately, is too often uncertain, through his being rather precipitate in drawing his conclusions. . . The whole book may be described as a practical note-book—one written by a student with endless originality, perseverance, conception of method, and amazingly delicate technique; but also with a tendency to misconstrue results and form precipitate conclusions." L. J. F. Brimble

+ — Nature 125:438 Mr 22 '30 2300w

"On the whole we can have nothing but praise for Professor Bose's ingenuity and skill."

+ New Statesman 34:606 F 15 '30 800w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:9 Ja '30

Reviewed by Charles Johnston

N Y Times p9 Jl 20 '30 1300w

St Louis 28:99 Ap '30

Spec 144:23 Ja 4 '30 150w

BOSWELL, JAMES. Everybody's Boswell;
2 being the life of Samuel Johnson; abridged from [the author's] complete text; ed. by F. V. Morley; il. by Ernest H. Shepard. 665p il $3.50 Harcourt [10s 6d Bell, G.]

B or 92 Johnson, Samuel. Hebrides—Description and travel 30-33162

An abridgment, uniform with Everybody's Pepys, of James Boswell's Life of Samuel Johnson, with illustrations by Ernest H. Shepard. The editor has shortened the complete text but no important incident has been omitted. The Journal of a Tour to the Hebrides is included.

"The abridgment is exceptionally skilful; the book is a pleasure to hold, and Mr. Ernest H. Shepard's illustrations are delightful to look at."

+ New Statesman 36:218 N 22 '30 80w

N Y Evening Post p4d Ja 3 '31 80w

"There was need of a good one-volume abridged edition of Boswell's 'Johnson,' and Mr. Morley has filled it admirably. Every lover of the Life of course cherishes it in a complete edition, but there are obvious uses for this abridgment. And then one must take into account the Shepard drawings. No one could have done them better—with more grace, or greater fidelity to the period."

+ N Y Times p15 D 14 '30 100w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p11 D 30 '30 300w

"Mr. Shepard's illustrations are in the sweety-sweety manner which is suitable to Christopher Robin, but not to James Boswell. There is a useful index, and, on the whole, 'Everybody' is well served." W. S. Lewis

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:488 D 27 '30 480w

"No harm is done to Boswell or to Johnson, for the whole work has been subjected not to arbitrary cutting, but to a uniform reduction: the cow, in Johnson's own metaphor, has become a calf, but a calf which retains in proportion all the features of the grown animal. Everybody, therefore, may be quite sure that he is being honestly treated, and that here is no arbitrary fragment of Johnson, but the representative man."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p985 N 20 '30 500w

BOTKIN, GLIEB EVGEN'EVICH. Baron's fancy. 308p $1 Doubleday, Doran

30-23092

How Baron Maximilian Nikolaevich von Waldenscherna escaped from the Bolshevists and came to New York to earn his living as a painter; how he became the confidential adviser to the Duchess Alexandra, claimant to the Romanoff throne; and how he preferred to marry the charming Nancy of the Titian hair rather than the duchess.

"Gleb Botkin proves himself a light fictioneer of promising gifts, including a sense of humor."

+ Books p14 O 5 '30 100w

"The novel is great fun. It is designed to amuse, and it does. If you have been taking your Russians a little heavily, if you are tired of the Russian Menace and the Russian Invasion and the Russian Whatnot, do read 'The Baron's Fancy' and learn that Russian life isn't all real and earnest."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:224 O 11 '30 250w

BOTTOME, PHYLLIS (MRS ERNAN FORBES-DENNIS). Tatter'd loving. 240p $2 Houghton [7s 6d Collins]

30-24772

A character sketch of a beautiful but thoroughly selfish woman, who subtly demanded from her family and friends an absolute devotion, and did not deviate in her course until threatened by the loss of her husband's love and that of her sturdy and clear-eyed young daughter.

"Miss Bottome's subtlety, her brilliant force, her exquisite grace and impeccable taste, the calm astuteness which identifies so many of her previous books, are all here." C. L. Aiken

+ Bookm 71:551 Ag '30 220w

Boston Transcript p2 S 17 '30 380w

"A familiar tale? Perhaps, but it is admirably done; the minor characters are not only drawn with an utter sureness, but they are interesting in themselves—and likable in themselves, a rather rash departure in this acrid age. The book ought to be an excellent if tantalizing, object lesson for young writers; it proves that you can make anything and anybody interesting if you know how."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:75 Ag 23 '30 250w

"It is hard to believe in Miss Bottome's characters—though if there are people like Vera, Edward and Ariadne, thank heaven we do not meet them every day. . . Miss Bottome writes with some competence, but we remain sceptics to the last page."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p686 S 5 '29 180w

BOUGHTON, RUTLAND. Bach, the master; a new interpretation of his genius. 291p il $4 Harper [7s 6d Routledge]

B or 92 Bach, Johann Sebastian 30-28046

"Rutland Boughton gives an interesting study of Bach's struggles for spiritual expression while serving feudal aristocrats and dominating orthodox churchmen in an anti-Christian society. He traces the story of Bach's external life only to show the tragedy 'of an artist whose inmost nature and external material conditions are in irreconcilable opposition' and studies his work in relation to its position in the story of Christian civilization."—N Y Evening Post

"Mr. Boughton's 'Bach, The Master' is controversial; it has a thesis to prove. And the author would be the more convincing in his methods if he had refrained from belittling certain other composers, conspicuously Handel.

BOUGHTON, RUTLAND—Continued

. . An engrossing book, a book to be pondered, in spite of its occasional unfairness and its extremities of inference." Peter Bowdoin

+ — Books p22 D 7 '30 250w

Reviewed by Evelyn Brown

N Y Evening Post p4d D 6 '30 400w

"This book shows one of the most spontaneous and natural composers of all history to be a kind of Jesuit with a cross-word-puzzle mind. Mr. Boughton's study has been a profound disappointment, for from him, if from anybody, we might have expected a book which insisted upon the central truth that great music, whatever coincidences it might hold, ultimately means nothing except itself. Oh Bach, how thou art translated!" Basil Maine

— Spec 145:950 D 13 '30 500w

"If we cannot concur in Mr. Boughton's reading, either of general history or of the personal history of his hero, chiefly because we have to admit so many other factors which he excludes, we shall find much that is cogent in his description of the actual content of Bach's work, particularly in those too rare passages where he allows himself to discuss musical details. . . If at the end we put down the book with some feeling of disappointment, it is because in its 300 pages we have found too little of the musician's experienced insight and too much of the callow sociologist's excitement."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p857 O 23 '30 1100w

BOUQUET, JOHN ALEXANDER. People's book of saints. 299p il $2.75 (7s 6d) Longmans

922 Saints [30-12393]

Brief, sympathetic stories of the saints, written for young people.

"A brief, edifying and uncritical hagiography."

+ Christian Century 47:724 Je 4 '30 30w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:66 O '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p419 My 15 '30 150w

BOWDEN, ABERDEEN ORLANDO, and CLARKE, MRS IDA CLYDE (GALLAGHER). Tomorrow's Americans; a practical study in student self-government; with an introd. by William McAndrew and Richard Welling. 200p $2 (5s) Putnam

371.59 Self-government (in education) 30-10387

Training for citizenship thru the medium of student self-government is the thesis of this book. The authors take up the various arguments definitely in favor of such self-government in educational practice, and show how it may most easily be established and adapted as a system.

Bookm 72:v S '30 100w

Pratt p11 autumn '30

St Louis 28:208 S '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p736 S 18 '30 350w

BOWEN, STIRLING. Wishbone. 310p $2.50 Dutton

30-9730

Three long short stories, An imperfect crime, Townsman, and Some go away, with frustration the motif of each. The first is a story of Laura, member of a gang, who gets caught; the second of Will, a townsman who never succeeded in rising above his provincial environment; the third of Eileen Layne, an artist married to a blind writer.

Bookm 71:213 Ap '30

"Mr Bowen writes with beautiful simplicity, and his prose is his own. Literary prophecy is a rash business, but I am not at all sure that [Townsman] is not a really great story." A. B. Parsons

+ Books p4 F 16 '30 600w

Boston Transcript p7 Mr 15 '30 300w

"Mr. Bowen has an honest and searching mind and a feeling for little souls that reminds the reader of the early Sherwood Anderson. The first novel from his pen should be worth reading. His main defect is his insensitive Middle Western prose, which suffers from a youthful revolt against undue color or variety."

+ — Nation 130:686 Je 11 '30 180w

"'Wishbone' is Stirling Bowen's first book. It is composed of three long stories which are obviously influenced in tone and feeling by Sherwood Anderson and in method by Hemingway. It would be a mistake to regard Bowen's work as merely derivative, however, for there is enough in it that is singular, enough that is characteristic of a fresh personality, to make it interesting as a promise of future creation. . . His people are quiet and so is the prose in which he portrays them. There isn't a real shout in the book. He scrutinizes the various characters sympathetically, but from a distance. The instinct is warm and human, but the reflections are those of twilight—cool and gray. It is a curious book." Bernard Smith

+ N Y Evening Post p9s F 22 '30 600w

"Mr Bowen's choice of a short form for stories like these was initially wise; at this length they can be perfectly conveyed. But as he has written them there is waste material and imperfect cutting of the cloth; they are the work of a good local tailor, but they do not come from Bond Street. One can say of Mr Bowen what one is forced, even though disliking the phrase, to say of so many writers, that he is promising; but one dare not say more."

— + N Y Times p7 F 23 '30 550w

"The story of Will, who longed for new horizons but never tried to reach them, is the best. This is a really fine story, written with economy, restraint and what we can only call an immediacy which makes you know the town and its characters as if you had lived there for years." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:388 Mr 5 '30 80w

"All three stories are bleak. The only voice that bespeaks the spirit is that of an economic radical, who, in the form of one minor character or another, moves through each story. This motif of reform shoots like a thin current through the stagnant pool. But the waters of the two never mingle. The current shoots out of the pool again, and goes on its own vigorous course. It is powerless against the weaknesses and ignorances of the uncaring, unambitious masses. These stories are sincere and true, and to that extent, significant."

— + Sat R of Lit 6:1095 My 31 '30 380w

BOWER, B. M., pseud. (MRS BERTHA [MUZZY] SINCLAIR-COWAN). Fool's goal. 309p $2 Little

30-1261

Young Dale Emery had a hankering for wide open spaces, so he went to Wyoming to buy a ranch and raise cattle. But he took fifty thousand dollars in cash with him, thereby inviting the attention of thieves, and some wholesale adventure in the bargain. Along with this game of hide-and-seek runs the romance, with a happy ending, of Dale and Cynthy Burnett, a ranchman's daughter.

Booklist 26:235 Mr '30

Books p18 Ja 26 '30 80w

"Here is a clean and interesting tale of cattlemen in the West, with sufficient adventure and danger to make it interesting, yet not enough to make it improbable, a breezy and humorous story of a guileless and obstinate young man." G. B.

+ Boston Transcript p3 F 8 '30 400w
Cleveland Open Shelf p46 Mr '30

"B. M. Bower's large audience knows just what kind of a novel to expect from her pen and will find in this new one a characteristic tale with plenty of authentic Western incident and action and a breezy love story as well."
+ N Y Times p22 F 9 '30 160w
Times [London] Lit Sup p518 Je 19 '30 100w
Wis Lib Bul 26:67 F '30

BOWER, MARIAN. Glory place. 500p $2.50 Bobbs [7s 6d Mills & Boon]
30-24852

"Anthony Gayteways determined to get possession of Glory Place, the ancestral home of the Gaisely family, with whom he himself could claim a distant and left-handed connexion. His heart was also passionately set upon bringing up a son to succeed him. To achieve these ambitions he sacrificed honour, love, and peace in his home, scheming and working with cool brain and tireless energy. So intense was his concentration that success would seem inevitable; and yet he failed, defeated partly by ill fortune but even more by the dour loyalty of East Anglia."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"The story has the virtue of growing better and better as one reads on. All through this long book one is conscious of Miss Bower's hold on her subject, characters and atmosphere."
+ Bookm 72:305 N '30 180w
Reviewed by C. B. Sherman
Books p17 O 19 '30 550w

"Miss Bower has tréated her theme in a Galsworthian manner. She tells her story slowly, carefully, and it must be read in the same way. Its dullness in spots, due to the weight and complexity of her plot, is excused by the interest which she arouses in the reader in the sinister trend of the events related." F. E. W.
+ — Boston Transcript p2 N 5 '30 650w

"This is a well conceived, carefully worked out and skilfully told novel. . . Miss Bower's multitude of characters are individuals with vital personalities, with lives that are bitter or tragic or happy. Not one is uninteresting, not one is neglected or carelessly dealt with. She has told her story concisely in the 500 pages of her book and she has not overwritten her plot."
+ N Y Times p22 O 12 '30 420w

"Whether Marian Bower, as her publishers suggest, has been likened to Thomas Hardy or not, she needs no comparisons, as her latest novel 'Glory Place' can quite well stand on its own merits both in dramatic story value and the steady upbuilding of real characters doing real things in a real way. . . There has seldom been a picturization of a more self-centered, purposeful character in recent novels than that of Anthony. . . Miss Bower has depicted a tragic progress with power and effectiveness."
+ Sat R of Lit 7:184 O 4 '30 180w

"A book that is remarkable for its subtle characterization, its leisurely unravellings, and its careful craftmanship."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p613 Jl 24 '30 280w

BOWER, WILLIAM CLAYTON. Character through creative experience. (Univ. of Chicago publications in religious educ. Handbooks of ethics and religion) 276p $2.50 Univ. of Chicago press [11s 6d Cambridge univ. press]
377 Moral education. Character 30-13661

"The Professor of Religious Education in the University of Chicago, holding that, in spite of increasing efficiency in the matter of technique, modern education is seriously defective in its sense of moral and spiritual values, here considers the objectives of education in terms of the achievement of an intelligent and effective moral personality and the technique involved in 'creative experience.' "—Times [London] Lit Sup

"Here is a book destined to exert a profound influence on education—education of every realm. It is not too much to say that it marks an epoch in the development of educational philosophy. . . Educational prophets may not wish to endorse Dr. Bower's new technique, but they will undoubtedly applaud his new ideal, and they will as certainly be forced, whatever their own philosophies of education may be, to pause and give consideration to this challenging volume." W. A. Harper
+ Christian Century 47:1015 Ag 20 '30 1450w
Reviewed by G. A. Coe
J Religion 10:625 O '30 1600w
St Louis 28:208 S '30
Times [London] Lit Sup p536 Je 26 '30 70w

BOWERS, CLAUDE GERNADE. Tragic era; the revolution after Lincoln. 567p $5 Houghton
973.8 Reconstruction. United States—Politics and government. Johnson, Andrew 29-17848

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Am Pol Sci R 24:511 My '30 350w

"Here is a book to be read and enjoyed, to be valued for its wide learning and fine writing. But do not trust it too implicitly." A. B. Miller
+ — Ann Am Acad 147:222 Ja '30 420w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 34:77 N '29

"While confessing to a keen enjoyment of Mr. Bowers' arraignment of the radicals both in Washington and in the southern state capitals, the reviewer does not find himself in entire accord with the major thesis. Mr. Bowers, like many of his forerunners, is at some pains to point out that in all its essentials Johnson's policy was merely a continuation of that of Lincoln. Therefore it was good. But was it? . . . It does not appear that Mr. Bowers and the other recent writers have made out their case for the acquittal of Andrew Johnson." B. B. Kendrick
Pol Sci Q 45:288 Je '30 1300w
Pratt p33 winter '30
Wis Lib Bul 25:370 N '29

"It is a splendid piece of work, eminently worth reading." H. C. Engelbrecht
+ World Tomorrow 13:87 F '30 260w

"Mr. Bowers is frankly an apologist for Johnson. This is the book's great fault. Mr. Bowers is an historian turned advocate. He appears at the bar as counsel for the defense. It may be that after much more collection of dispassionate evidence Mr. Bowers's interpretation will establish itself. But students who are wholly sympathetic with Mr. Bowers's general trend do not as yet see the Johnson case as he sees it. They hold their judgment in reserve and wait to see the future come." N. W. Stephenson
— + Yale R n s 19:607 spring '30 1000w

BOWERS, EDISON LOUIS. Is it safe to work? A study of industrial accidents. (Publications of the Pollak foundation for economic research) 229p $2.50 Houghton; Pollak foundation
331.823 Accidents, Industrial. Workmen's compensation 30-13863

Three related subjects are here considered,—industrial accidents, workmen's compensation and vocational rehabilitation. The prevention of accidents is treated as the first step in the program of producing goods and services with the least cost to society, thereby making unnecessary the compensation for injuries and the re-training of crippled workers.

BOWERS, E. L.—Continued

"Whether Professor Bowers is right or wrong in his major recommendation, his study is timely, informing, and suggestive. This is only the second book devoted exclusively to the economic aspect of workmen's compensation, the other being the late E. H. Downey's 'Workmen's Compensation,' published six years ago. The great merit of this new book is that it brings home this truth and provokes thought as to how the compensation laws can be made to serve better the purposes for which they were intended." E. E. Witte
Am Econ R 20:782 D '30 700w

"The present work is a forcible presentation of the essentials, shortcomings, and possible solutions of the great 'accident-compensation-rehabilitation' question. The material is fluently presented, the type is large and readable, and the subdivisions are logically captioned." E. R. Hayhurst
+ Am J Pub Health 20:1379 D '30 450w

Reviewed by A. J. Todd
Am J Soc 36:483 N '30 500w

"Professor Bowers gives a readable and fair summarization of some of the most important features of workmen's compensation laws in the United States and Canada. . . It is to be hoped that his book will be widely read and that his analyses and conclusions will influence legislators to enact more just and adequate laws for industry." Royal Meeker
+ Ann Am Acad 151:292 S '30 1100w

Booklist 27:11 S '30

"After many years of experience with, and detailed study of, workmen's compensation laws in various forms in many countries, a book like 'Is It Safe to Work?' can be written, giving a clear-cut criticism of the operation of these laws, and a complicated but intelligible program for improving them. . . It is to be hoped that this concise and convenient volume will help to infuse new life into what should be a lively public issue."
+ Books p18 S 14 '30 350w

N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 23 '30 50w

"All who are interested in this branch of social welfare will find it a suggestive and stimulating study of the problem."
+ N Y Times p27 Je 1 '30 380w

Reviewed by E. T. Devine
Outlook 156:232 O 8 '30 200w

St Louis 28:206 S '30

Reviewed by Marguerite Marsh
Survey 65:228 N 15 '30 380w

World Tomorrow 14:28 Ja '31 50w

BOWLES, MRS ELLA (SHANNON). About antiques. 263p il $3.50 (15s) Lippincott

749 Antiques. Collectors and collecting
29-27652

A book on New England and colonial antiques of all kinds: pewter ware, Sandwich glass, old chests, clocks, tapestries, chairs, dolls; with a chapter on New England cookery.

Booklist 26:148 Ja '30

"Frequently the author plunges into the history of an art and takes the reader back to its first beginnings, ages ago. And constantly she enlivens her narrative with anecdotes and stories and descriptions of the early New England life."
+ N Y Times p30 N 3 '29 170w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:1 Ja '30

Pratt p23 spring '30

St Louis 28:72 Mr '30

Spec 144:59 Ja 11 '30 130w

"A book for those who collect antiquarian knowledge and old things for sentimental reasons rather than genuine interest in either life or art."
— Times [London] Lit Sup p1059 D 12 '29 180w

BOWMAN, WILLIAM DODGSON. Divorce case of Queen Caroline; an account of the reign of George IV and the king's relations with other women. 301p il $3.75 Dutton [12s 6d Routledge]

B or 92 Caroline Amelia Elizabeth, consort of George IV, king of Great Britain. George IV, king of Great Britain

Mr Bowman's biography tells how Queen Caroline, wife of King George IV, was insulted and persecuted by her bullying husband, suffered slanderous charges at his hands and was tried for misconduct with the Italian Bergami. The book includes the testimony given at this famous royal divorce trial, including Lord Brougham's speech for the defence.

"The account of her trial occupies but one chapter of this volume; it is, however, scandalous enough to justify the titular emphasis. Into this chapter Mr. Bowman has crammed what one must believe to be the most astonishingly unabashed court testimony available. For the rest, the lady's unsavory husband is the central figure. The volume is eked out with other familiar figures of the time, presented in pedestrian and somewhat ill-organized manner."
— Books p25 N 23 '30 130w

New Statesman 36:122 N 1 '30 150w

'Mr. Bowman has done a thorough job and created sympathy for Caroline, even though the suspicion may linger that she may have revenged herself upon the brazen infidelities of her consort." C. G. Bowers
+ N Y World p3 O 5 '30 450w

BOX, GEORGE HERBERT. Early Christianity and its rivals; a study of the conflict of religions in the early Roman empire at the beginning of our era. (New lib.) 128p 60c Cape [6d Benn]

270 Christianity and other religions 30-26629

A brief study of the conflict of religions in the early centuries of the Christian era and the beginnings of conflict between Judaism and Hellenism in the pre-Christian period.

Books p23 Ap 6 '30 150w

"This is a concise yet authoritative treatment of influences which beat upon Christianity in the days when the Church was being fashioned. The part played by Judaism and Hellenism and the conflict of other Roman faiths with Christianity are outlined and appraised. One cannot understand the Church without having a knowledge of this period and this little book is a first rate way to get it." E. B. Chaffee
+ Outlook 155:549 Ag 6 '30 200w

BOYD, JAMES. Long hunt. 376p $2.50 Scribner

30-10711

A novel of the move to the Mississippi and beyond in the early nineteenth century. Murfree Rinnard was one of the Long Hunters who paved the way for the settlers in the Indian country between North Carolina and the Mississippi. He valued his freedom beyond all things; women meant very little to him until he met Laurel. The rest of his life he spent in trying to forget her, and when he found that impossible he gave his life in an effort to save hers in a last great fight with the Indians.

Booklist 26:356 Je '30

"The essential strength and beauty of the book are in its texture and detail. One could readily believe Mr. Boyd to have been brought up by wolves, a veritable Mowgli of the American wilderness, so profound and intricate seems his knowledge of the strife of the forest."

+ Books p16 Ap 20 '30 180w

"The story of this important period in our country's history is graphically retold. The reader lives again the days of the covered wagon and the hardships that went with it. The author of 'Drums' and of 'Marching On' has made a valuable contribution to the literature on the early days of America, the era when the Middle West was opened and developed." L. E. S.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 18 '30 950w

"Superbly written story of the frontier."

+ Christian Century 47:690 My 28 '30 220w

"Murfree Rinnard's story is not pretty. The West was raw, and Mr. Boyd paints it in crude colors. With unflinching consistency he has maintained the tone of the harsh man about whom he is writing. The short sentences, the unpolished language, the simple, earthy thinking, are not James Boyd's but Murfree Rinnard's. Mr. Boyd can be, if he wishes, pictorial, glowing and exalted. This he has proved in other novels, but he shows none of those qualities here because Murfree Rinnard was not like that. Even a reader who prefers the style of 'Drums' and 'Marching On' will admit Mr. Boyd's right to choose the medium that he thinks best suited to his material, and will recognize his mastery of it."

+ Christian Science Monitor p8 My 3 '30 450w

Cleveland Open Shelf p110 Jl '30

Nation 131:187 Ag 13 '30 180w

"Mr. Boyd has chosen as his hero a long hunter named Murfree Rinnard—as independent and unsentimentalized a hero as was ever put between the covers of a book, and yet so splendidly alive and so alertly honest to himself that his charm is inescapable. . . The book is written in sturdy prose, shot through with a virile, stanch poetry. And it is a healthy thing to encounter, in our contemporary American letters, a man who has so much ruggedness and yet so much tenderness and understanding of human beings and the mysterious ways of the lights and shadows of their hearts." Ben Wasson

+ N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 19 '30 550w

"A more romantic and a more sentimental work than 'The Great Meadow.' Nevertheless, its sentimentality is so slight and its story is so adroitly contrived to sustain suspense and to build up a realistic picture that one reads it gladly." John Chamberlain

+ — N Y Times p9 Ap 6 '30 650w

"Here we have the frontier scene in all its authenticity and the frontier folk in all sincerity. We have a book as full of adventure as any 'Western,' as thrilling as the most robust tales of the Northwest Mounted, as bloody as a Chicago May Day, that is nevertheless a work of art. Which only goes to show that tales of adventure need not be shoddy, that romance can be handled in a way that is neither silly nor sickening. 'Long Hunt' adds very considerably to the literary stature of Mr. James Boyd." Bellamy Partridge

+ N Y World p11m Ap 20 '30 550w

Reviewed by Parkhurst Whitney

Outlook 154:588 Ap 9 '30 300w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:39 My '30

Pratt p37 autumn '30

"In his choice of incidents and his descriptions Mr. Boyd mingles effectively a rough, homely realism, sometimes verging on coarseness, with a natural feeling for the romantic. Best of all; a strong narrative pulse beats in the body of the book, giving it heart and life. It is a tale that holds the listener." Allan Nevins

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1127 Je 14 '30 600w

Springf'd Republican p7e Je 1 '30 250w

BOYD, WILLIAM, and MACKENZIE, MURIEL M., eds. Towards a new education; a record and synthesis of the discussions on the new psychology and the curriculum at the fifth World conference of the New education fellowship; with an introd. by Michael Sadler. 498p $3.50 (10s 6d) Knopf

370.6 Education

This volume is a report of the proceedings of the international conference of the New education fellowship held at Elsinore, Denmark, in August, 1929, and attended by a great number of educators from all parts of Europe and America. The digest of the points made in three hundred and fifty addresses at the conference is arranged by the compiler in four parts: Education in a changing civilization; The living school; The social background of the living school; New psychology and new education.

Reviewed by James Thornton

Nation and Ath 47:414 Je 28 '30 300w

"Admirably edited summary of the papers and discussions at the Elsinore Conference of the New Education Fellowship. As Sir Michael Sadler remarks in his stimulating introduction, the N.E.F., as it has come to be called, is 'the most highly vitalized body which exists in the world for the investigation of new methods of teaching and for the recording of experience.' The Elsinore Congress of 1929 was undoubtedly the most successful and representative yet held and this record of its proceedings is of permanent value." Alfred Zimmern

+ Spec 144:sup825 My 17 '30 150w

BOYDEN, MRS ELIZABETH CLARK. New backgammon. 104p il $1.50 Harcourt

795.1 Backgammon 30-19985

An explanation, with diagram illustrations, of the game of backgammon, with its modern innovations.

Booklist 27:97 N '30

N Y Times p20 Ag 10 '30 220w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:77 N '30

BOYLE, KAY. Wedding day, and other stories. 122p $2 Cape

Short stories and sketches, in the impressionistic manner, by a writer belonging to the Paris group that contributed largely to Transition. Contents: Episode in the life of an ancestor; Bitte nehmen sie die blumen; Wedding day; Theme; Madame Tout Petit; Summer; Polar bears and others; Uncle Anne; Portrait; Vacation-time; Spring morning; On the run; Letters of a lady.

"She deals with language as with a soft stuff that can be wrenched and persuaded into any shape and that will harden in whatever mold she chooses, attaining a permanent beauty. Had she been more rigidly bound, she would have been infinitely diminished, for the great point of her work is its nakedness, and she is, therefore, a magnificent example of the point and purpose of the experimental school. But though she writes as one of a company of explorers, there is nothing tentative about these stories. They are the bold and insolent establishments of a spirit." M. C. Dawson

+ Books p6 N 16 '30 600w

"The stories themselves succeed well in holding the interest they invite. They cover many well-contrasted sides of life in their brief pages. Sometimes the results are still at the experimental stage, but on the whole they speak of real accomplishment as well as promise for the future."

+ Boston Transcript p3 N 29 '30 300w

BOYLE, KAY—Continued

"She is potentially valuable because it is possible—as it is so rarely possible—that she may write something that has not been written before. For although she has allowed herself absolute freedom on one of the most delicate of all subjects she has not written an offensive line. In fact, she has put to shame nearly every other emancipated woman writer who has attempted to deal with this subject: she is by comparison so simple, so honest, so pure. In view of her virtues it is all the more unfortunate that her work abounds in mannerisms, that it lacks a face of its own, that it bears so continually the stamp of fashionable influences. It is unfortunate that she has expended so much of her freedom in exile toward the development of an impeccability of style which is after all but the testimony of her admiration for Hemingway, Cocteau, and others. The result of her smartness is that even her best work has its roots in nothing, being nourished by the repetition of a repetition." Gerald Sykes

+ — Nation 131:711 D 24 '30 550w

"Because the best of Kay Boyle is quite good (as in 'Episode in the Life of an Ancestor') it is easy to forgive the inclusion of the worst of the five-finger exercises (let us choose 'Spring Morning' as the scapegoat) in this slim volume. Bits like 'Spring Morning' may be queer jumbles, calling for an alertness at untangling them that is not quite worth the effort, but Miss Boyle's effort in such jumbles to catch all the fleeting impressions of a moment of living have resulted in solid good."

+ — N Y Times p8 N 16 '30 550w

BRADBY, GODFREY FOX. About English poetry. 78p $1 (2s 6d) Oxford

821 English poetry. Poetry [A30-1061]

"Starting with the generous assumption that nine people out of every ten are capable of understanding and enjoying poetry, Mr. Bradby inquires 'Why we read poetry.' In the succeeding chapters, entitled respectively 'The Beauty of Significance,' 'The Beauty of Restraint,' 'The Beauty of Rhythm,' 'The Beauty of Melody' and 'The Magic of Words' Mr. Bradby surveys the various aspects of the poetic art, and seeks to reduce them to plain terms. . . The book ends with a brief homily on 'The Right Attitude towards Poetry.' "—Times [London] Lit Sup

"The book is very pleasantly written, and all lovers of poetry will enjoy it, for the opinions expressed are sane and well thought out by one who has had experience in presenting them to seekers after this particular sort of knowledge. It will appeal especially to teachers of English literature, and they will find it helpful and suggestive." F. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 17 '30 500w

"Mr. Bradby has attempted a difficult task in this admirably concise and unassuming little book. In seventy-odd pages he seeks to justify the ways of poets to the 'plain man' who cannot (or will not) read them. A formidable undertaking; but Mr. Bradby is well equipped to do battle with the Philistine, and if any one could hope to succeed in so desperate an encounter, he is the man. His patience, his lucidity are unfailing."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p160 F 27 '30 1050w

BRADEN, CHARLES SAMUEL. Religious aspects of the conquest of Mexico. (Duke univ.
2 publications) 344p il $3.50 Duke univ.

277.2 Mexico—Church history. Mexico—History—Conquest, 1519-1540. Indians of Mexico—Religion and mythology. Roman Catholic church in Mexico 30-31135

"What were the processes by which Mexico was Christianized at the time of its conquest by Cortez and in the years immediately following? To what extent was it actually Christianized? And to what extent were the former religious ideas and practices of the Indians of Mexico incorporated into Roman Catholicism as it now exists in that country? These are some of the questions which Professor Braden undertakes to answer in this carefully written monograph."—Christian Century

"Mr. Braden has done a scholarly piece of work with a complete absence of partisian bias, and has rendered available to all readers material which was badly needed to supplement all previous histories of the conquest and lives of Cortez." W. E. Garrison

+ Christian Century 47:1595 D 24 '30 650w

"The value of such a work as this must lie almost wholly in its freedom from prejudice and in its scientific spirit and objective method. In all these Mr. Braden's work is worthy of praise. He has tried only to set forth what happened without feeling for either side, to discover what its results were and whether or not the influences of the conflict are still evident in Mexican religion and culture, and his volume makes an important contribution to the history of Mexico."

+ N Y Times p44 D 7 '30 380w

BRADFORD, GAMALIEL. Daughters of Eve. 304p il $3.50 Houghton

920.7 Woman—Biography. France—Biography 30-5265

Psychographical sketches of seven fascinating women: Ninon de Lenclos, the sprightly courtesan who held modern radical views concerning the rights of women; Madame de Maintenon, the mistress of a king; Madame Guyon, the religious mystic; Mlle de Lespinasse, the great lover; Catherine the Great, a sovereign who ruled an empire with the efficiency of a German housewife; George Sand, both lover and writer; and Sarah Bernhardt.

Booklist 26:310 My '30

"Even more than by the sensitive and delicate style he has achieved, Mr. Bradford excels as a biographer by virtue of his human sympathy. He writes for love. His method is to sort over the evidence, first hand and hearsay, searching minutely and patiently for the characteristic action, the phrase which crystallizes a personality. When he has gleaned enough, or all that his scheme will contain, he reassembles them in just order and proportion, weaves them together with the necessary narrative and the gentlest explanation and comment. The result may be incomplete for want of space; sometimes it is perhaps as flattering as a painted portrait which has been done to please the sitter; but it is never false." Isabel Paterson

+ Books p3 F 9 '30 900w

"Like all of his character studies, 'Daughters of Eve' is marked by that inborn culture which is peculiarly Mr. Bradford's, and which the writings of no other American can quite achieve. In the rounding out of his ideas, and in sheer charm, this new book seems to me the best Mr. Bradford has yet done." J. W. Maury

+ Boston Transcript p2 F 8 '30 3000w

Cath World 131:506 Jl '30 180w

Reviewed by Francis Snow

Current Hist 31:840 F '30 150w

"There is a touch of the 'let us now join the ladies' manner in Mr. Bradford's deft 'psychographies'—an excess of consideration. Yet one has confidence in the soundness of his scholarship and in the balance and the sympathy of his judgments." Dorothy Brewster

+ Nation 130:710 Je 18 '30 400w

Reviewed by Hazelton Spencer

New Repub 62:252 Ap 16 '30 400w

"Mr Bradford has a recognized talent for organizing biographical material into attractive forms and his present work is no exception to the rule. You look in vain for a dull page or a halting paragraph and yet you feel a general lack of excitement. The ladies seem to have warmth and personality; and Mr. Bradford is eager to let you know that every one of them is a human being. But, somehow, the ladies refuse to come to life." Horace Gregory

+ — N Y Evening Post p11m F 8 '30 550w

"Mr. Bradford's wide sympathies, his tolerance of the human animal, his historical sense, his meticulous logic and his clever avoidance of being fooled by the bewildering manifestations of his subjects combine in a result that is always illuminating and convincing. There are, perhaps, moments when he understates, or travels a little too rapidly by, certain aspects of his subjects but he may be forgiven that for the sake of the result as a whole. It is always a difficult task that he sets himself and it is an earnest of his ability that he never fails to accomplish it." Herbert Gorman
+ N Y Times p9 F 23 '30 1900w

"It appears that like the good New Englander that he is, Bradford is not at home with Eve's daughters. He is not the painter, par excellence, of women. . . One admires the hardness of Bradford's mind, the clarity of his expression, his dry wit, the orderly force of his style. But Daughters of Eve is his least interesting book." F. L. Robbins
— + Outlook 154:266 F 12 '30 300w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:47 Je '30
St Louis 28:146 My '30

Reviewed by Bartlet Brebner
Sat R of Lit 6:1143 Je 21 '30 700w
Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 6 '30 750w

BRADFORD, ROARK. Ol' King David an' the Philistine boys. 227p il $2.50 Harper
30-7427

More Biblical stories told as the Mississippi Negro would tell them, by the author of Ol' Man Adam an' His Chillun. Some of the stories are: Little David and his mouth harp; The wild-oat harvest of old King David; The widow woman named Ruth; Good-looking Esther; Elijah and the meal barrel; Jonah and that whale; The last romance of Old King Ahab; and Elijah's chariot ride.

Booklist 26:356 Je '30

"'Ol' King David an' the Philistine Boys' was written obviously not to cash in on the success of 'Ol' Man Adam an' His Chillun,' but to perfect the experiment in style of the earlier book. And it seems to me as fine an expression of genre humor as I have ever read." Marc Connolly
+ Books p1 Mr 23 '30 850w
Boston Transcript p5 My 17 '30 350w
Cleveland Open Shelf p138 N '30

"Roark Bradford's sketches are much more than amusing. They are very sweet, tender and wholesome. They are sound psychologically from a simple and reverent Negro viewpoint and they are reverent because the Negro, as characterized here, has made God and His associates, people like himself." B. W.
+ N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 19 '30 600w

"That the tales will command a wide reading is certain. That they will be read almost exclusively for the entertainment they offer is equally certain; although it should be pointed out that their engaging quality rapidly lessens if they are taken in more than small doses. A few will find in these tales much that is of sociological significance. They illuminate the Negro mind, and suggest how it should be dealt with. For the rest of us, however, it is enough that in 'Ol' King David and the Philistine Boys' there is abundance of entertainment at a period when literature seems peculiarly devoid of entertaining matter." Percy Hutchison
+ N Y Times p10 Mr 23 '30 1350w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p13 Mr 12 '30 900w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:599 Ap 9 '30 40w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:39 My '30

Reviewed by Jonathan Daniels
Sat R of Lit 6:941 Ap 19 '30 600w

"There is more than a possibility that some 19th century saints still with us may be shocked at the seeming irreverence of this offering, but most people will welcome its naivete and humor."
Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 6 '30 300w

BRADLEY, JOHN HODGDON. Parade of the living. 308p $3 Coward-McCann
560 Paleontology. Evolution 30-30021

The philosophy of evolution motivates this account of the geological history of life on earth in which the author traces the parade of living organisms from its beginnings to the present. He takes up the anatomy of the earth, the earliest forms of life, the rise and fall of various animal dynasties, the history of disease, the evolution of intelligence, etc.

Booklist 27:191 Ja '31

"The fantastic procession of living forms that has come and gone upon this earth has never been more vividly touched off than in these rapid sketches. They are written out of an accurate scholarship, yet nevertheless with lighthearted enjoyment of the bizarre facts of which paleontology is essentially made up." Ruth Benedict
+ Books p18 N 9 '30 750w
N Y Times p39 N 30 '30 350w

"It is written in the clear style used by J. Arthur Thomson for his scientific essays. When you are fed up with men, you will find dinosaurs diverting." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p11 O 8 '30 650w

"The book is in most respects just what every professor of historical geology who loves his subject, and wishes that the every-day man loved it also, must have dreamed of producing. It is readable, breezy, and at the same time sound in its presentation of the present beliefs of geology as regards the progress of life on the earth and its interpretation. Even in the midst of almost flippant paragraphs the initiated can recognize the teachings of Clarke, Lull, Matthew, Osborn, and many other authorities of the present and past generation. It is brought up to the minute, as the reference to Peking man shows. . . The reviewer knows no better book of its kind." H. P. Little
+ Sat R of Lit 7:205 O 11 '30 750w

"The general reader, if such exists, will find here a charming presentation of a great scientific theme, the facts of which, while increasingly well known to the scientist, are but sparingly and often incorrectly part of the knowledge of the man in the street." R. S. Lull
+ Yale R n s 20:396 winter '31 520w

BRAITHWAITE, WILLIAM STANLEY BEAUMONT, ed. Anthology of magazine verse for 1929, and Yearbook of American poetry. 677p $4 Sully
811.08 American poetry—Collections

The seventeenth annual issue of Braithwaite's anthology contains its characteristic representation from the work of American poets published in current periodicals; the yearbook summaries; a list of articles and reviews of poetry appearing during the year; volumes of verse published, etc.

Booklist 26:194 F '30

"There are virtues to Mr. Braithwaite's selections of importance to contemporary poetry. The faults are the faults of a man who has done a large and trying task each year, with a very strong desire to aid the growth of poetry in the United States, and who has given his time and a warmth of feeling to helping young poets to find the recognition of print. Mr. Braithwaite has found so much which is good that it is regrettable that he has not placed it in the fine setting of pure companionship." Lawrence Lee
+ — Books p17 Ja 26 '30 450w
Boston Transcript p2 D 11 '29 800w

BRAITHWAITE, W. S. B., ed.—Continued

"As a practical achievement, useful alike to lovers and perpetrators of poetry, one is not at all sure that the most valuable Braithwaite contribution may not be in his Yearbook rather than in his Anthology—that is to say, in his fairly (but of course not wholly) complete list of poems, books of verse and poetic criticism published during the past year." K. B.
Cath World 130:761 Mr '30 300w

"As a reference book, as a readable collection of verse, as a study of the American people, Braithwaite's Anthology is standard, fortunate and authoritative." J. R. S.
+ Christian Science Monitor p7 F 8 '30 300w

"As a whole, I find Braithwaite's seventh annual catalogue of American magazine poetry unpromising. There is almost a wholesale lack of precision in the analysis of sensation and emotion, and coeval with this, an application of much-used word values. Too many poets invoke metaphors, rather than evoke fresh scenes, as does William Carlos Williams in his refreshing contribution, 'The Source,' reprinted from the defunct Dial." J. T. Farrell
— N Y Evening Post p10m D 28 '29 550w

"Mr. Braithwaite, though he now has two or three competitors in the field of the annual anthology, continues to offer far and away the most comprehensive summary of American poetry. The rival anthologies manage to secure a larger proportion of distinguished work by printing fewer poems, but none of them is so thoroughly representative of all the various tendencies in the poetic world. The very fact that Mr. Braithwaite's standards are not unduly high adds to the value of the book for the student." Granville Hicks
+ N Y World p10m Ja 12 '30 160w

BRAMAH, ERNEST, pseud. See Smith, E. B.

BRANCH, EDWARD DOUGLAS. Westward; the romance of the American frontier. 627p $5 (21s) Appleton

973 United States—History. West—History. Frontier and pioneer life—United States 30-22840

A vivid, panoramic history that unites, in one comprehensive volume, the various and complicated stories of westward migration from colonial days to the last skirmishes of the conquest. Mr Branch has told, with an appreciative feeling for the dramatic, something of the personal experiences of the pioneers themselves, who quickly adapted their talents and energies to the exacting needs of the ever-changing frontier. For the background of this personal epic he has sketched the important religious, social, political and economic factors in the settling and development of the West.

Booklist 27:150 D '30

"'Westward' is excellent journalism for the most part. It suffers in interest chiefly because of its bulk. . . The author has done an immense amount of research and his errors of statement are few and minor. . . The reader may feel somewhat breathless in trying to keep up with Mr. Branch, but he will certainly keep trail with him to the end." C. L. Skinner
+ — Books p3 S 28 '30 200w

"Mr. Branch has a well-developed selective capacity. He has picked out typical incidents without losing the continuity of his story. . . His research from first to last must have been exhaustive, but the latter years have been enriched by personal recollections or by contact with some who acted in the final stages of the great drama. The details of Western life have varied enormously but many a hunter, trader, voyageur and plainsman, translating the words into terms of his own life, might have expressed himself as did the old cattleman who talked to Mr. Branch." R. L. Duffus
+ N Y Times p14 O 19 '30 700w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:89 D '30
St Louis 28:303 D '30

BRAND, MAX. Destry rides again. 296p $2 Dodd
30-24855

Convicted on a false charge Harry Destry, a vigorous young cow puncher, served his years in prison and then returned to wreak vengeance on the members of the jury which convicted him. He worked his way thru the list with remarkable success and survived to marry the girl who had waited for him.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 S 7 '30 100w

"In 'Destry Rides Again' we have an old-time wild West story with all the zeal and thrill of its predecessors. However, it is different from them in these two respects: first, that it gives some insight into the character of its actors; and, secondly, that it has a fairly modern atmosphere."
N Y Times p16 S 7 '30 250w

BRANDEIS, LOUIS DEMBITZ. Social and economic views of Mr. Justice Brandeis; coll., with introd. notes by Alfred Lief; with a foreword by Charles A. Beard. 419p $4.50 Vanguard press

308 Social problems. United States—Constitutional law 30-30043

"In this selection of Justice Brandeis's opinions, thirty in number and twenty-six of them dissents, Mr. Lief has again given the lay reader an opportunity to see in action the mind of a great figure in American government. Though Justice Brandeis's majority decisions far outnumber his others, it is in dissent that one gets the full sweep and impact of a wisdom that is compounded of idealism and legal learning, humanity and expertness in facts and figures." (N Y Times) Contents: Labor problems; Regulation of business; Public utility economics; Guaranties of freedom; Prohibition and taxation; State and nation; Ideas expressed before 1916.

Booklist 27:187 Ja '31

"The papers are, primarily, the work of a great lawyer—for it is widely admitted that the Justice is one of the most acute minds that have distinguished the American Bar. In fact, his work is considered to have a tremendous effect upon not only the body of the law already assimilated and codified but also upon that law which is being called into being in response to the modern development of society, particularly as regards the industrial situation."
+ Boston Transcript p5 N 22 '30 300w

Reviewed by Max Lerner
N Y Evening Post p6d N 15 '30 800w

"There are some people to whom this book will not be as readable as the Holmes book. Justice Brandeis is not a judicial essayist like Holmes or Cardozo. He is not a phrase-maker, not given to polished and rhythmic words, and not brief. But as he marshals his endless facts and figures in support of his logical reasoning, one is bound to be moved by the intensity of conviction, the spiritual fervor, with which he marches on to his conclusions." J. P. Pollard
+ N Y Times p9 N 2 '30 1350w

BRANDENBURG, ALBERT JACQUES (ALBERT ERLANDE, pseud.). Life of John Keats; tr. from the French by Marion Robinson; pref. by J. Middleton Murry. 244p $3 (7s 6d) Cape

B or 92 Keats, John 30-10614

A short biographical study of John Keats and his work by a French poet, from a French interpretative viewpoint.

Booklist 27:61 O '30

"A Frenchman grows romantic about Keats and writes the kind of life which we do not need any more. One hopes for a really intelligent and dry discussion of Keats some day. A school of critics already exists out of which such a discussion might come, and one awaits it wearily."
— Books p22 F 16 '30 180w

"M. Erlande's book is exceedingly satisfying, and despite its brevity gives no sense of over-condensation, of omissions or of haste. It is in many ways an original contribution to the already overlong list of biographies of the beloved and ever-interesting poet of poets." G. R. B. R.
+ Boston Transcript p1 F 21 '30 1650w

Reviewed by E. L. Walton
Nation 131:45 Jl 9 '30 170w

"Mr. Middleton Murry observes truly that 'something more readily accessible' than either Sir Sidney Colvin's or Miss Amy Lowell's life of Keats is required. It is; and it exists in the admirable volume which Colvin himself contributed to the English Men of Letters Series long before he wrote the full-dress biography that Mr. Middleton Murry has in mind. But, of course, Colvin never had the inestimable privilege of steeping himself in Miss Lowell's massy tomes—a privilege of which M. Erlande has availed himself with almost too much assiduity!" D. M. Stuart
— Nation and Ath 45:685 Ag 24 '29 450w

"His book, being written for his own countrymen, is almost naive in its presentation of facts which are perfectly familiar to us. Comparing it, for instance, with Colvin's monograph in the 'English Men of Letters' series, we find practically nothing, except a detail or two from Amy Lowell, which is not already in Colvin. And, incidentally, Colvin can be purchased for two shillings, while this book costs half a guinea!"
— New Statesman 33:580 Ag 17 '29 850w

"M. Erlande's lapses into inaccuracies are supplemented by bad editing of this translation of his book into English. Inconsistencies in spelling and page layout run riot throughout an otherwise attractive contribution to the present biography market." Horace Gregory
— + N Y Evening Post p11m Ja 25 '30 800w

"This excellent biography makes no attempt to place anything new before the reader. But with that clarity which is so notably a French characteristic in writing, M. Erlande, with an economy of interjected passages of his own, builds from Keats's letters, and from autobiographical poems, or portions of poems, a tragic picture that is poignantly alive. Mercilessly, yet tenderly, he has laid the soul of John Keats bare."
+ N Y Times p5 Ja 19 '30 1250w

"Here, at last, is a well written life of Keats, done in reverence and with understanding, that comes in a moderate sized volume." Bellamy Partridge
+ N Y World p10m Ja 26 '30 200w

"The clever brevity of the book gives the long-needed popular story and serves to focus attention on the tragic effect of the critical activities of the Edinburgh Review. Poets, nowadays, are hardier. Or are they not such poets? Or not such critics?" F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 154:149 Ja 22 '30 80w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 21:25 Mr '30 80w

St Louis 28:81 Mr '30

"M. Erlande's book is quite a little one. It would be harsh to call it misbegotten, but it is superfluous. . . M. Erlande is fully informed, except, perhaps, since he mentions neither Mr. Bridges nor Mr. Symons, regarding criticism of Keats; he is lucid and easy to read; but, all the same, his book is unnecessary."
— + Sat R 148:299 S 14 '29 600w

Reviewed by C. D. Thorpe
Sat R of Lit 7:6 Jl 26 '30 180w

"The author has poured out his gleanings without discrimination or a coherent purpose. His facts, especially as they are narrated through the bad English of this translation, have no artistic arrangement. . . It is obvious, from the author's quotations from Keats' work, that his appreciation of it is limited to the vaguest enthusiasm, a common fault in any person admiring the art, life, and customs of another country. Invariably he chooses the more conventional passages. This limitation of insight has led to pronouncements on aesthetics which make the reader distinctly uncomfortable." Richard Church
— Spec 143:102 Jl 20 '29 750w

BRANDES, GEORG MORRIS COHEN. Voltaire; [tr. by Otto Kruger and Pierce Butler]. 2v 408;385p $10 Boni

B or 92 Voltaire, François Marie Arouet de 30-30420

Georg Brandes's two-volume biography of Voltaire is a work of deep sympathy for and understanding of its subject. Tho writing from the point of view of an admirer, Mr Brandes does not color the undeniable facts concerning Voltaire's character and actions. As a background to his actual study of the great Frenchman, Brandes has told the story of the intellectual renaissance of the eighteenth century.

"Voltaire, in this biography, moves against a social background that is generously and vividly described; and his various writings, as they appear in the course of the narrative, are submitted to the acute intelligence of a critic who realized that the literary standards of one age are not those of another. Rich in history, anecdote, gossip and literary criticism, Brandes's life of Voltaire is a full book, a valuable one, and eminently readable." B. R. Redman
+ Books p5 N 23 '30 900w

"It is the output of a famous literary historian and critic whose grasp of the vast material available for his theme comes out on every page. To the personal record of the man full justice is done, his voluminous writings are called up for quotation whenever the occasion demands it, and every important episode in which he figured gets ample attention." E. N.
+ Boston Transcript p1 N 26 '30 1200w

Reviewed by Matthew Josephson
New Repub 65:196 D 31 '30 1000w

"With prodigious industry Brandes has plunged into the long and tortuous mazes of Voltaire's life, carrying along a narrative in which Voltaire's literary activities, now the least interesting, are treated abreast of his other activities, and set in the background which explains their, to us, exaggerated success with his contemporaries. Brandes never loses sight of the man or the period, and yet he does leave us with a fair estimate of the vast body of Voltaire's writings." Ernest Boyd
+ N Y Evening Post p4d D 27 '30 1450w

Reviewed by Pierre Loving
N Y World p3e Ja 4 '31 1250w

"Let it be said once for all that this is the life of Voltaire. . . The work is a moral history of the whole of Europe in the eighteenth century. Its most splendid feature is its fairness." A. W. Porterfield
+ Outlook 156:466 N 19 '30 1300w

BRANDON, JOHN G. Nighthawks! 304p $2 Brentano's [7s 6d Methuen]

30-3074

"Two sinister Chinamen, several wily Greeks, a gigantic Hollander and two desperados from New York comprise an international opium ring that takes the combined efforts of Scotland Yard and the United States Secret Service to frustrate."—Bookm

---

Bookm 71:xxix Mr '30 80w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p17 F 23 '30 100w

Boston Transcript p3 F 21 '30 200w

BRANDON, J. G.—Continued
Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith
N Y World p11m F 9 '30 80w
Springf'd Republican p7e S 28 '30 100w
Times [London] Lit Sup p670 Ag 29 '29 240w

BRANN, ESTHER. Lupe goes to school. 126p ^{2} il $2.25 Macmillan
30-27931

"A story of a little Spanish girl, Guadalupe Gonzales y Sanchez, but Lupe for short, who goes to a convent school. She goes under protest, to be sure. . . [but] it is not long before she begins to enjoy life in the school and to make friends with Julita, Innocentia, Pilar and the other little girls. Between classes they play games in the garden and discover singing crickets, lizards, even a tarantula."—N Y Times

Booklist 27:211 Ja '31
Bookm 72:xxviii D '30 50w

"Without a single incident that is too highly colored or even improbable the story is thoroughly interesting. The author has a real gift in drawing characters that are alive and individual even in so brief a story and the book has a quiet humor that is irrestistible. The illustrations are both accurate and charming." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p26 D 14 '30 180w

"The main value of the little book, for adults and adolescents alike, lies in the accuracy of its atmosphere and local color; those of us who know the difference of the many Spains, one from another, will close this little glimpse of true Andalusia thinking, in the quaint local idiom of Lupe herself; 'Ay, how well!' " E. M. Kelly
+ Sat R of Lit 7:490 D 27 '30 480w

BRAY, HELEN AGNES. Textile fibers, yarns, and fabrics. (Century vocational ser.) 236p il $2.50 Century
677 Textile fibers. Textile industry and fabrics 29-17910

A textbook for home economics students on the classification of fibers, development and manufacture of yarns, silks, rayon, etc., selection of fabrics, and the chemical analysis of textiles.

Booklist 26:225 Mr '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p122 S '30
N Y New Tech Bks 14:57 O '29
Pratt p22 spring '30
Wis Lib Bul 26:38 Ja '30

BRENDON, JOHN ADAMS. Great navigators & discoverers. 282p il $2.50 Harcourt [7s 6d Harrap]
923.9 Explorers. Discoveries (in geography) 30-7089

Brief accounts of the careers of twenty-four navigators and explorers. Contents: Hanno the Carthaginian; Leif Ericsson; Marco Polo; Prince Henry the navigator; Christopher Columbus; Vasco da Gama; Ferdinand Magellan; Sebastian Cabot; Richard Chancellor; Sir Walter Raleigh; Sir John Hawkins; Sir Francis Drake; Jacques Cartier; Henry Hudson; Abel Janssen Tasman; Robert Blake; Sir Henry Morgan; William Dampier; James Cook; Lord Anson; William Bligh; Paul Jones; Thomas Cochrane, tenth earl of Dundonald; Sir John Franklin.

Booklist 26:400 Jl '30

"Each study is provided with sufficient historical background to give the reader a general idea of the progress of navigation and discovery, and although specialists may quarrel with a statement here and there, the book should make a good introduction to maritime history. It should certainly whet the appetite, and, from this point of view, the lack of a bibliography is a regrettable omission. The illustrations are very numerous, and well chosen, including reproductions of old maps, contemporary portraits, and prints of ships and places, as well as more modern pictures."
+ — Nation and Ath 46:150 O 26 '29 120w

"The only serious mistake he has made is in his chapter on Dampier, whose most important discovery—that of the Dampier Straits —is entirely omitted. For the rest, he is both entertaining and informative. Mr. Brendon's reading is considerable. He has produced a book which should have a wide appeal, and thereby add considerably to the general stock of knowledge on a subject which every Englishman should know something of."
+ New Statesman 36:754 S 28 '29 200w

"Mr. Brendon has a special faculty for the writing of such narratives as the twenty-four life stories of great sailors that compose this volume. His success is due quite as much to his responsive eye for the intriguing incident, the human quality, the dramatic element in the text upon which he depends for his material as to his own ability to weave out of that material a story that the reader feels to be authentic and dependable although it is also keenly and humanly interesting."
+ N Y Times p21 Mr 2 '30 380w
St Louis 28:217 S '30
Sat R 148:787 D 28 '29 120w
Reviewed by Catherine Woodbridge
Sat R of Lit 7:31 Ag 2 '30 500w
Springf'd Republican p7e My 25 '30 180w

BRENNECKE, ERNEST, and CLARK, DONALD LEMEN. Magazine article writing. 388p $3 (12s 6d); special college ed $4 Macmillan
070 Journalism. Authorship 30-4614

"This book is planned to fill the needs of three types of students: first, the undergraduate who studies magazine-article writing as part of his regular curriculum in a school of journalism; second, the undergraduate who selects an advanced course in expository writing; and third, the graduate or other advanced student specializing in a field other than English, who may be called on, from time to time, to write articles on his specialty. Part I considers the reasons and occasions for producing articles, the gathering and organizing of the material and its adaptation to reader and publication, the actual composition, and the selling and publishing of articles. Part II takes up in detail the composition of the more important special types of articles."—Publisher's note

Booklist 26:379 Jl '30

"Though this is essentially a text-book, it should for its thoroughness and originality be of great use to professional writers. The authors, both members of the faculty at Columbia University, consider practically all types of magazine work and give detailed advice on the collection and presentation of material."
+ Bookm 71:xxxi Ap '30 70w
Boston Transcript p3 Ap 9 '30 600w
J Home Econ 22:1018 D '30 40w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:55 Je '30
Pratt p7 autumn '30
Springf'd Republican p7e Ag 31 '30 800w

BRENNER, RICA. Ten modern poets. 279p il $2.50 Harcourt
928 Poets, English. Poets, American. English poetry—History and criticism. American poetry—History and criticism 30-13387

Five American poets; Robert Frost, Amy Lowell, Edna St Vincent Millay, Edwin Arlington Robinson, and Carl Sandburg; and five English poets, Walter de la Mare, A. E. Housman, Rudyard Kipling, John Masefield, and Alfred Noyes, are presented in the volume. The poets were chosen on account of their "liberalized intellectual attitude," and the author includes an evaluation of their work along with the biographical sketches.

Booklist 26:392 Jl '30
Boston Transcript p2 Je 18 '30 800w
Cleveland Open Shelf p87 Je '30

"The author has evidently made a careful search for authentic material. She writes well and sympathetically, telling what readers of poetry like to know about poets, but always with good taste and without gossip. Many quotations are included. The book will be enjoyed by boys and girls of high-school age and by adults as well." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p16 My 25 '30 100w

"With a little biographical data, some local color and a modicum of critical appreciation, the unpretentious book rests upon its simplicity and upon its author's intelligent devotion to her subject. Although it is probably designed for young people, Ten Modern Poets should serve to initiate older readers into the ways of modern poetry."
+ Outlook 155:189 Je 4 '30 160w
St Louis 28:215 S '30

"A well-written book with a style and subject matter crediting the young readers for whom it is intended with some sense and appreciation."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e My 25 '30 180w

BRENT, STEPHEN, pseud. See Buntin, S. W.

BRIDGES, CONSTANCE. Thin air; a Himalayan interlude. 384p il $3.50 Brewer

915.46 Himalaya mountains—Description and travel. Kashmir—Description and travel
30-16137

An American woman narrates the experiences of a trip with her husband and a young Englishman to the Himalayas and Tibet. The author vividly describes this land of the Lamas, interspersing her description with conversation and anecdote relative to the trip and its adventures. Thruout her story runs the mystery of the strange disappearance, into "thin air," of David Wendell, a young American who followed a mystic cult.

"'Thin Air,' while it has a certain tenuous, stretched-out quality, gives you a quite incisive idea of life at those altitudes and among those people who are separated from us by a chasm of immemorial differences. It makes you realize that nothing, up there, would seem too sinister, too strange, or too miraculous. It carries you far geographically; it carries you still farther, by suggestion, into the remote world of your imaginings."
+ Books p10 Jl 6 '30 400w

"Miss Bridges tells her adventure-mystery story in professional fashion. She handles her situations so well that you suspect she could write excellent detective stories. What is more, she refuses to overdo the business of exploiting her altogether charming personality. The very fact that Miss Bridges does not attempt to tell you more than she knows inspires a fair degree of confidence in her ability, even though she offers you nothing more than a slight effort at a travelogue, touched up here and there with highlights of fiction." Horace Gregory
+ N Y Evening Post p8m Je 28 '30 480w

"'Thin Air' combines the humorous happenings of everyday comradeship on a trying march with an amazingly vivid power of description. For a first book, a book of travel, it has much of the suspense of a novel."
+ N Y Times p18 Je 29 '30 400w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 Je 10 '30 750w

"An enchanting travel book. Miss Bridges writes delightfully. Her descriptions of Leh, the Vale of Kashmir and all that enigmatic country that is shrouded by the towering heights of the Himalayas are compelling and exciting. It is her ability to suffuse her writing with the disquieting atmosphere of high altitudes that sets this far above the average travel piece. The book is greatly enhanced by Ronald Balfour's charming drawings." Bernice Whittemore
+ Outlook 155:310 Je 25 '30 130w
St Louis 28:244 O '30

"Excellent reading with no more than the author's fresh style, good humor, and the interest of the country she describes to go on. One of the few, among many published, good travel stories of the year."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1174 Jl 5 '30 230w

BRIDGES, JAMES WINFRED. Psychology, normal and abnormal; with special reference to the needs of medical students and practitioners. 552p il $3.50 (12s 6d) Appleton

150 Psychology 30-4507

Based upon a consideration of the actual and assumed function of the nervous system, this text book on normal and abnormal psychology sets forth at the same time a system of psychology "based upon the double-aspect theory of mind-body relation, and thus recognizes both introspective and behavioristic methods." The book is written with special reference to the needs of medical students.

"This book is an eclectic treatment of the field of psychology. The author declares that he has written it primarily with the needs of the medical students in mind. It contains no consistent point of view, nor does it provide anything distinctly original or unique, but it does bring together in a fairly well-worked-out scheme most of the main concepts of psychological interest which have developed through the last two or three decades. . . Notwithstanding the deficiencies incident to an eclectic treatment of a very confused field, the volume should be of interest and value to the beginning medical student."
+ — Am J Soc 36:166 Jl '30 300w
Booklist 27:9 S '30

"Professor Bridges's grasp of his field, as well as his tolerant, broadminded point of view, cannot fail to commend this volume to all its readers, both lay and professional." Margaret Flenniken
+ N Y Times p12 Ag 24 '30 300w

Reviewed by E. T. Devine
Outlook 154:630 Ap 16 '30 80w
St Louis 28:127 My '30

"An interesting textbook by the professor of psychology in the faculty of McGill University, who has the distinction of having taught for several years the first required course in psychology in an American medical school. Written clearly, with interest and authority, the book covers the fields of both abnormal and normal psychology."
+ Survey 64:281 Je 15 '30 80w
Times [London] Lit sup p538 Je 26 '30 50w

BRIDGES, ROBERT SEYMOUR. Testament of beauty; a poem in four books. 191p $3.50 (7s 6d) Oxford

821 30-3054

"The work is a long philosophical poem in which through an Introduction and three Books, Selfhood, Breed and Ethick, the poet seeks to dissolve the problem of man's discord with nature. As for Mr. Bridges, no such dilemma exists; he has, apparently, undertaken the task, not so much to clarify his own beliefs as for the delight in affirming them—and, incidentally, of instructing others. . . Taken as a whole, this is a major poem, but it is chiefly when the poet-philosopher forgets his philosophy that it reaches peaks."—N Y Evening Post

---

"The Testament of Beauty has the apocalyptic force which is the quality of great works. It raises facts hitherto unrelated to a high unity of poetic vision, and in that act acquaints the reader with a standard of character and insight which may well take a place in his mind beside similar standards received by him from the great works of the past." John Finley, Jr.

BRIDGES, R. S.—Continued
+ Atlantic Bookshelf p24 Ap '30 800w
Booklist 26:386 Jl '30
Reviewed by Garreta Busey
Books p7 F 16 '30 600w
Reviewed by Robert Hillyer
Boston Transcript p4 F 21 '30 3700w
Living Church 8:14 My 3 '30 450w

"If Mr. Bridge's argument remains unconvincing in view of the discoveries of history, science, anthropology, and psychology, if the proof is based upon an ephemeral idealism with which we today have little patience, this may not necessarily condemn the poem as poetry. Many a poet has gone badly astray in manipulating argument. But since, with the exception of the gracefully medieval tone of the Introduction, poetry here is freighted much too heavily with argument and philosophical jargon; since, indeed, most of 'The Testament of Beauty' cannot be called poetry at all—even in its ineptly applied literary echoes of earlier poets, its pallid allegory, archaisms, inversions, and rhetoric—but is rather a prose tract cast into verse, we may consider its logic and its argument rather than its poetic quality." E. L. Walton
Nation 130:193 F 12 '30 2000w

"There is something dry and disdainful, ascetic and Calvinistic throughout—a lack of warmth and humanity." Herbert Read
— Nation and Ath 46:287 N 23 '29 800w

"It is a mildly philosophical essay, a good deal influenced by Santayana's 'Sense of Beauty' and 'Life of Reason'; very loosely assembled, not always very cogent in reasoning, suffused everywhere with an odd and almost medieval simplicity and old-fashionedness. It reminds one even a little of 'The Anatomy of Melancholy'; it has the same air of amateurish charm, the same earnest sincerity. It is a gentle testament, and ingenuous—the gentle praise of a gentle ideal. There is no wrestling here with the dynamics of the soul, no probing horrors or sounding of wonder; chaos has removed itself from the shores of Albion; everything is peaceful and detached and comfortable; and everything is as consciously and purely English as it can possibly be." Conrad Aiken
New Repub 62:164 Mr 26 '30 850w

"The Testament of Beauty, like the majority of adventures, is interesting less for its aims and partial success, than for the unusual intrepidity by which it is inspired. It is a desperate attempt to re-enthrone Poetry among the splendours of her forgotten attributes. Can the poet be blamed if, during his efforts to reawake the sibyl in his art, he sometimes tends to re-arouse the school-mistress? As we have said, there is probably no other living English poet who would have undertaken the same task. That this poet should have been a Laureate makes his accomplishment doubly memorable."
+ — New Statesman 34:125 N 2 '29 950w

"This poem is not only a Testament of Beauty, but of the amazing vitality of a spirit that, maintaining its supremacy over the wasting flesh, has, at an age when most other men who have lived as long are drifting into senility, attained increase of power and intensity of poetic vision. . . The poem has dull pages, stretches when one becomes conscious of the long road that is being patiently, sometimes ploddingly, traversed. Always there are fresh and buoyant images." Lola Ridge
+ — N Y Evening Post p7m Ja 18 '30 980w

"'The Testament of Beauty,' which at first tends to repel because of its extremely metaphysical content, displays new and individual beauties on successive inspections. In his rigid adherence to the utmost simplicity made imperative by the need for clarity, the laureate has denuded his verse of almost every vestige of color. But he has compensated for this loss in the attainment of a certain softness of texture that is the more remarkable in view of the bare intellectuality of the theme. 'The Testament of Beauty' is a noble experiment, whatever other verdict may be rendered." Percy Hutchison
+ — N Y Times p1 Ja 19 '30 1850w
Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p13 Ja 17 '30 420w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:34 Ap '30

"The moral value of a poem depends on the poet's grasp of the physical and spiritual reality to which his morality applies. Bridges has been denied this control by his intellectual austerity, his fastidious aloofness from the world in which the true poet mixes. Unable to arrive there imaginatively he has turned his best efforts to prosodic and linguistic studies. . . The Testament of Beauty may well be one of the personal triumphs of the day, but this will remain largely the satisfaction of its author. He has not found the words or the art which would liberate his message, and make it the property and guide of his contemporaries." M. D. Z.
— + Poetry 36:96 My '30 1100w
Pratt p27 summer '30
St Louis 28:107 Ap '30

"It is a long journey through the fourteen hundred lines of this poem; there are stony tracts; there is much up-hill going. And I will not deny that there are five or six moments when only the scholar's touch keeps one from wondering whether one is reading Mr. Bridges or the author of 'Proverbial Philosophy'. . . But here, all the same, is the final message to us of a rare artist in poetry who is also among the wisest of our poets. Clever fools, a breed that is not checked by birth control, may easily enough make game of it, but we others, readers of this paper and writers for it, who do not set up to be clever and are unlikely to be fools, will approach it as we would the unequal, in part unexacting, history of a poet's mind written by Wordsworth." T. E. Welby
+ — Sat R 148:545 N 9 '29 1650w

"It stands by itself alone, a great didactic poem, something not to have been expected of the times, and something altogether apart from and above the easy professional commentary that critics write, and which for reasons unknown readers will apparently read. Whatever else may be true of 'The Testament of Beauty' it is noble with a nobility unknown to the categories of our clichés. A splendid severity of thought and expression goes hand in hand with a sympathy wide enough to touch and include all living. One may not understand it perhaps, but I cannot comprehend how any one with enough intellect to be allowed his liberty could fail to feel the noble beauty implicit in every page." Leonard Bacon
+ Sat R of Lit 6:913 Ap 12 '30 1450w

"The Testament of Beauty is, I think, the greatest English poem of our time. It is a poem not of romance but of 'high argument,' Dr. Bridges' essay de rerum natura. If it seems to lack heat and variety of fancy, to be too austere for popularity, the reason lies mainly in its seriousness and philosophic import. . . Over the whole of it there is an air of serenity and deep cultivation of mind; idiom and cadence are perfectly matched with substance; we feel ourselves in the presence of a true poetic comprehension of human history." Alan Porter
+ Spec 143:635 N 2 '29 1950w

"To-day, his eighty-fifth birthday, the Poet Laureate gives us what we believe to be the greatest poem he has written. In verse which untiring discipline has moulded to a new freedom he tells us that life is happiness, and reasons with us why it must be so, and, better still, invites us to share with him the breath of a happiness that is unassailable."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p829 O 24 '29 4000w

"It is an invocation that achieves; the more marvellously because it is now eighty-five years that Robert Bridges has been bearing these sacred things. No poet on record before him ever bore them so long to so late and so perfect acceptance." W. B. D. Henderson
+ Yale R n s 19:601 spring '30 700w

BRIDGES, THOMAS CHARLES, and TILTMAN, HUBERT HESSELL. More heroes of modern adventure. 266p il $2 Little [7s 6d Harrap]

920 Adventure and adventurers. Explorers 30-7770

Accounts of the daring achievements of some modern adventurers. Among the exploits are the first ascent of Mount Everest; the first crossing of the waterless Kalahari desert by motor; Hinkler's flight to Australia; Captain Knight's efforts to photograph and tame the golden eagle; the deeds of the International ice patrol in the North Atlantic; Sir Douglas Mawson's sledge journey to the Antarctic; and Dr Schweitzer's fight with disease in equatorial Africa. The authors' earlier book "Heroes of Modern Adventure" was entered in the Book Review Digest, 1927.

Booklist 27:32 S '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p60 Ap '30

N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 19 '30 120w

"The authors of this book are thoroughly expert at telling a long story in a few pages, and in many cases they have drawn the heart out of the books which they have been permitted to summarize."

+ Sat R 148:696 D 7 '29 120w

"The book is crammed with thrills as well as with information of unusual sorts. Naturally, in a book that consists mostly of summaries of longer works a good deal must be left to the imagination, but it is remarkable how much the authors have been able to get into their short accounts." R. L. Roe

+ Sat R of Lit 6:906 Ap 5 '30 350w

Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 13 '30 150w

BRIDGES, VICTOR. Secret of the creek. 319p $2 Houghton [7s 6d Hodder]

A cipher on the title page of a rare seventeenth century volume that young Cameron has just purchased leads him and his friend Peter into a strange adventure. Some attempted murders, a pretty girl, two thrilling rescues and a search for buried treasure are among the ingredients of the tale.

Bookm 72:xxv O '30 80w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p14 N 2 '30 80w

"An excellent story."

+ Sat R 149:666 My 24 '30 180w

"A well-planned, spirited adventure story."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p301 Ap 3 '30 280w

BRIGHT, JOHN. Hizzoner Big Bill Thompson; an idyll of Chicago; introd. by Harry Elmer Barnes. 302p $3.50 Cape

B or 92 Thompson, William Hale. Chicago—Politics and government 30-11876

A breezy, satirical biography of the man who as mayor dominated Chicago politics for many years. While the robust, good-natured, "perennial boy" personality of Big Bill Thompson made him Chicago's logical leader, the power behind the buffoon on the throne is the real concern of the biographer. He describes the political machine with its maze of issues, graft, and corruption, colored by Chicago in the background and Big Bill in the foreground. These inside ramifications cover Thompson's career from his beginning as an alderman to his election to the mayoralty in 1915, with special attention to his spectacular war attitude and the "British menace," culminating with his attack upon George V, and the closing events of his administration, up to his defeat in the last city election.

"Mr. Bright scrutinized Thompson sharply and with obvious intent to deal fairly with him. He has followed his man through newspaper files and come out with a racy and humorous portrait." Lloyd Lewis

+ — Books p3 My 4 '30 1050w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 4 '30 320w

"The smart alecky style of biographical writing applied to Chicago's far-famed mayor. Thompson isn't worth a book of this size, even as an American phenomenon. And if he were, reading twenty pages of this flip sport-sheet diction would be as much as the ordinary reader would want at one sitting."

— Christian Century 47:563 Ap 30 '30 80w

Cleveland Open Shelf p99 Jl '30

"The book is one that should not be overlooked by any one who is not thoroughly familiar with the inside workings of politics in American cities. And those to whom the—sad, or funny—facts are no news may get added information, as well as good reading out of the work. . . Mr. Bright has done a grand job with Big Bill Thompson, the individual, and just as grand a one in his exposition of the workings of a democratic government in Chicago." D. H. Clarke

+ N Y Evening Post p10m My 3 '30 800w

"A detached reader, interested in the substance of the tale rather than in the manner of telling it, will be likely to have a feeling after reading it that, on the whole, the undoubtedly expressive style is adapted to the subject. It is, in a sense, an appropriate frame for a photograph of the ex-cowboy Mayor." A. S. Will

N Y Times p5 My 18 '30 1250w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 81:10 Je '30 100w

St Louis 28:218 S '30

"The latest Chicago book is disappointing. There is in it little original information or analysis. But there is a constant attempt at definition and provocative phrasing. . . Mr Bright strives at rhetorical decoration in the style of the American Mercury and misses lucidity and directness. Essentially, the book is honest, but it lacks workmanship."

— Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 24 '30 320w

BRINIG, MYRON. Anthony in the nude. 320p $2.50 Farrar

30-12292

Anthony was a young man in love with his profile. He sold the profile to Helen, who was old enough to be his mother, and lonely—but rich. That was all right till Helen, in a fit of jealousy one day, poisoned his little Aberdeen dog, a gift from Emilienne, a very fine girl whom he had loved. Anthony left Helen: he had dreams now of going back to his old job, and maybe finishing the novel he had long contemplated writing. But when Helen called him up, dreams of the Ritz again proved much more desirable; and Anthony became once more a young man with a profile.

"The conception is cheap; the crude execution is dishonest and insincere, both in essentials and in details; the effect is tawdry. If Mr. Brinig had not written such a book as 'Singermann' one would dismiss him with a shrug, but after such a fine novel no words are too damning as comment on this absurd prostitution of real talent." Thayer Hobson

— Books p17 Je 15 '30 550w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 21 '30 250w

"It would be easy to damn this book entirely and let it go at that, were it not for the fact that it is written with a considerable degree of honesty and good humor, which serve to leaven the lump of its appalling tastelessness. . . Mr. Brinig's novel provokes the inevitable comparison with the 'Cheri' of Colette, in which skill and taste and compassion transmute scabrous material into a fine and often beautiful book. Mr. Brinig's 'Chéri' is scabrous at the beginning and scabrous at the end, and so is the lady who supports him. And the author's insistence upon certain aspects of their sexual life is, to put it gently as possible, a bore."

— + New Repub 63:108 Je 11 '30 130w

BRINIG, MYRON—Continued

"The tale on the whole is too pointless for the satire to become very effective. The meager intellectual and emotional responses of his central character, Anthony, do not bear the detailed and subjective examination given them by the author. . . Frequently Mr. Brinig has been savagely direct in his treatment of this theme; too often he lets his tale get out of hand, and it degenerates into repetitious and rambling passages of exposition and dialogue. The style is extremely uneven, without ever achieving a full assurance."

— N Y Times p24 Je 8 '30 300w

"A featherweight novel about a young man who, in love or not, spends his time admiring his own matchless profile." Clinton Simpson

— N Y World p11m My 11 '30 320w

BRINIG, MYRON. Singermann. 466p $2.50 Farrar [8s 6d Cobden-Sanderson]

29-26895

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Reviewed by L. L. Irvine

Nation and Ath 46:866 Mr 22 '30 70w

"Mr. Brinig has a quite unusual conviction of beauty under all appearances, and it is when he is dealing with sordid themes that one is most conscious of this. His insight may not amount to genius, but it is what no genius could be without."

+ New Statesman 34:840 Ap 5 '30 700w

Sat R 149:525 Ap 26 '30 500w

"Mr. Brinig has a style to match his imagination. A style, too, that is not the slave of its own conventions, but a live, lithe, almost inspirational style, ready to take on new forms of thought and language, and to adapt itself to all emergencies. In particular it is a style capable of astonishing variations in rhythm and tempo." I. M. Parsons

+ Spec 144:634 Ap 12 '30 380w

"The unlikely material for interesting narrative, the unprettiness of the Singermann home, is one proof of Mr. Brinig's mastery. For the important element in this work is the power of the writing. The author has taken an insignificant and rather squalid piece of life and made it glow with splendour. Story in any traditional sense there is little; there is no dramatic climax, but there is a searching analysis of human lives."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p270 Mr 27 '30 470w

BRINTON, ANNA COX, ed. See Vegius Mapheus.

BRINTON, HOWARD HAINES. Mystic will; based on a study of the philosophy of Jacob Boehme; with an introd. by Rufus M. Jones. 269p $2.50 Macmillan

B or 92 Böhme, Jakob. Mysticism 30-15635

"According to the author of this volume, Boehme's problem was that of all the great mystics: that of bridging the gap between the outer and the inner world. Outwardly he seeks totality; inwardly he struggles for unity. The thesis is that in this cobbler-philosopher the connection is made through an evolutionary process. In this evolutionary mysticism are supposed to be the seeds of the German Romantic philosophies. The volume opens with an introduction by Rufus M. Jones. This gives it standing in the field of contemporary mysticism. At the close is a bibliography with separate lists of the works of Boehme and those of commentators."—Int J Ethics

"A disappointing book, this. An impartial study of Boehme is greatly needed, but it must be imaginative as well. Brinton is a twentieth-century professor, not a nineteenth-century amateur and devotee. Accordingly, we have full documentation and bibliography. But quotation and paraphrase still constitute an unsatisfactory substitute for interpretation." Austin Warren

— Bookm 72:445 D '30 420w

"Professor Brinton's book is a lucid setting forth of the mystical doctrines of Boehme that culminates in a plea for the mystical factor held to be needful in both the intellectual and the religious outlook." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p1 Ag 9 '30 700w

"Doctor Brinton has placed us under a debt of gratitude for this study of the philosophy of Protestant mysticism, a field which has been unhappily neglected. Boehme needs an interpreter, and in Brinton we have the man. He has been able to give us an exceedingly illuminating study." A. S. Woodburne

+ Crozer Q 7:526 O '30 500w

"Not many persons make the attempt to read the works of Jacob Boehme at first hand. To those who consider him as being of sufficient interest or importance to be known, this volume will perhaps be of value. On the whole, however, the place of Boehme is probably not so great as Mr. Brinton would have us believe." M. H. Moore

Int J Ethics 41:139 O '30 280w

St Louis 28:229 O '30

BRINTON, JASPER YEATES. Mixed courts of ² Egypt. 416p $5 Yale univ. press [22s 6d Oxford]

347.99 Courts—Egypt. Law—Egypt 30-29268

A study of the judicial system of Egypt in which the author sketches the origins of the institution of mixed courts, follows its history thruout half a century, describes the judicial machinery actually at work, and summarizes the principal problems connected with its probable future activities.

Reviewed by Henry Morgenthau

N Y Times p9 N 23 '30 2150w

"For anyone who wishes to be fully informed as to the origin, development and present system of international justice in Egypt Judge Brinton's book will prove an indispensable guide. Partial and incidental accounts of the Mixed Courts are to be found scattered in many books, but this is the first volume which has so far appeared in any language which can claim with justice to present a compendious record of the evolution of the Mixed Tribunals from their original establishment to the present day, together with a full exposition of their actual organization and methods."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1000 N 27 '30 1050w

BRION, MARCEL. Alaric the Goth; tr. from the ² French by Frederick H. Martens. 259p il $3.50 McBride

B or 92 Alaric I, King of the Visigoths

"A dramatic conception of this military genius of the early fifth century is developed by Marcel Brion. . . The Alaric pictured here is no bloodthirsty barbarian, delighting in the ravage of a beautiful city. He is the scion of a noble family, of a people betrayed by the treachery of the Romans. An attractive boy, he is saved from slavery and early enters on a military duty—the beginning of an eventful career in the course of which he was to change the course of empires. The attack on the Roman empire resulted not from desire for conquest but because he felt that the Romans had not given him due recognition for his military service." Springf'd Republican

Bookm 72:vi N '30 70w

"If you will, it is fictionized biography; but M. Brion is an impeccable historian and where he delves to the soul of his hero he does so by a sure process of inspired understanding. You may find the story of Alaric in the earlier writers and later in such eminent historians as Gibbon, Grotius and Gregorovious. Never, one may believe, has it been so well told as in M. Brion's pages, for M. Brion can do what not one historian in a thousand can do: he can identify himself with the passions, ambitions, strength and weakness of his character." Donald Douglas

+ Books p14 D 7 '30 700w

"While romantically conceived and written in the vivid modern manner, with the author's imagination providing for the gaps left by historical writings, this story of Alaric is reasonably dependable and such events as the sacking of Rome are handled with verbal restraint. For in the main it follows the pattern of Brion's earlier work, 'Attila, the Scourge of God.' "

+ Springf'd Republican p12 O 22 '30 500w

BROAD, CHARLIE DUNBAR. Five types of ethical theory. (Int. lib. of psychology, philosophy and scientific method) 288p $4.50 Harcourt [15s Routledge]

171 Ethics [30-8851]

The book expounds and criticises five typical and widely differing systems of ethics, those of Spinoza, Butler, Hume, Kant, and Sidgwick.

"The treatise is marked by two characteristics: the first, a self-confessed emotional and practical cramping of experience 'rather exceptionally narrow even for a [Cambridge] don'; the second, a dialectical skill and patience rather exceptionally broad even for a Cambridge don. . . But for what it purports the volume would be difficult to better. Five complete skeletons in a single book, and not a tiniest bone uninspected. The analysis is singularly clear and the criticism incisive." T. V. Smith

+ — Am J Soc 36:327 S '30 380w

"The intelligent amateurs will get their wits sharpened, but they will find no great belief in ethics or knowledge of forces that shape ethics. Dr. Broad's logical and psychological methods show best in his brief critical handling of Kant; his own limitations are most obvious in Spinoza." E. F. Mettrick

+ — Int J Ethics 40:566 Jl '30 150w

"Dr. Broad has many of the more important merits of a fine philosophical writer. He ingratiates himself at once by his unpretentiousness and remarkable lucidity. He is a rigorous and acute logician, quick to smell and pounce upon a fallacy or an ambiguity." Henry Hazlitt

+ Nation 130:424 Ap 9 '30 1150w

"Dr. Broad's may be described as the surgical method. He is for ever dividing thought and cutting it up, introducing distinctions which are usually ignored, and pointing out ambiguities which others have failed to detect. Once the distinctions have been made and the ambiguities cleared up, little remains to be said. . . Dr. Broad's method, applied in previous books with conspicuous success to the problems of psychology and epistemology, is particularly valuable in the sphere of ethics." C. E. M. Joad

+ Nation and Ath 47:54 Ap 12 '30 950w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:87 D '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p406 My 15 '30 1300w

BROCK, EMMA L. To Market! to market! unp il $1.75 Knopf

30-18300

How the Dutch Duck and the Dutch Mouse who lived in a little black house in Holland found a silver gulden and went to market to spend it, and how they brought home their main purchase, a great round cheese.

Booklist 27:107 N '30

"Little children will like the boldly drawn pictures, full of authentic Dutch detail, and the text is simple enough for a child who has had a year of reading."

+ Bookm 72:xxvii S '30 40w

Reviewed by K. G. Landon

Bookm 72:245 N '30 40w

"All who enjoyed 'The Runaway Sardine' will appreciate this new book, with its sturdy characteristic drawings, its humor and delightfully nonsensical story. . . I like Miss Brock's easy line and clever indication of detail, never obtrusive. There is a freshness and unity to the book which is very attractive." M. W. Bianco

+ Books p7 Jl 13 '30 750w

"Miss Brock has succeeded in putting much atmosphere of the country into both tale and illustrations." A. T. Eaton

+ N Y Times p5 N 16 '30 120w

St Louis 28:247 O '30

"An unusual picture book. Children from four to seven will follow with enjoyment the experiences of the two animals when they go to the market at Op-Zoom to buy a fish for the duck and a round yellow cheese for the mouse."

+ Springf'd Republican p5e Ag 3 '30 100w

BROCK, HENRY IRVING. Meddlers; uplifting moral uplifters. 307p $3 Washburn

323.4 Reformers. Liberty. United States—Social conditions 30-8891

An account of the various reforming movements and individuals in this country whose activities intrude upon personal liberty. Among the meddlers he attacks are: richly endowed churches; psychoanalysts; missionaries; the public relations committee; the anti-saloon and anti-cigarette people; the "volunteer firemen" (under which he groups the Klan, preparedness and pacifist groups, Comstock's successors, anti-birth control groups, the Society for the prevention of cruelty to animals, the Society for the prevention of cruelty to children, and the Lord's Day alliance); Washington lobbyists; schoolmarms; the Reverend James Cannon, Jr. and others.

Booklist 27:11 S '30

"Mr. Brock's thesis that the doctrine of New England theocracy is the original source of all the meddling energy with which this country is afflicted is not only rather too glibly supported by superficial selection of historical evidence, but seems to have little application to some of his most interesting chapters. I seem to detect, too, occasional unfairness. But Mr. Brock has written some effective and engaging chapters and it is as a series of disconnected commentaries by an experienced, tolerant, metropolitan newspaper man that his book is best considered." F. T. Marsh

— + Books p10 S 14 '30 800w

"Unfortunately, Mr. Brock has not been altogether successful in controlling his feelings. His book, therefore, does not present as orderly an array of argument and exposition as one might expect. Perhaps it would lose much of its appeal and warmth by a more considered treatment. Honest conviction, the use of last-minute evidence, and a journalistic style, help to make 'Meddlers' interesting reading. Had it been written with more care and had the arguments and proof been marshalled with more deliberation, it might carry more weight and last much longer than it will." S. H.

+ — Boston Transcript p2 My 14 '30 700w

"What Mr. Brock has expressed and detailed interestingly, painstakingly, dashingly and powerfully is what many other Americans are thinking and saying. Deep in his task of analysis he had little opportunity to look up for the sunrise. Those who agree with much of what he says, among whom this reviewer would like to be counted, may suggest to him that there are faint streaks discernible in the East." Arthur Krock

+ N Y Times p6 My 11 '30 1300w

"Mr. Brock is against the puritans and the puritan tradition, of course, and he is against all theocratic influence on politics and manners. But he is just as certain that Sigmund Freud is making an ass of the American radicals. . . Now this verdict, it seems to my slight understanding, is an example of meddling. If Mr.

BROCK, H. I.—Continued
Brock is all het up against meddlers, if he objects to every form of interferences in human affairs by others, he ought to let the psychoanalysts go their own sweet way. They, at least, have not been in favor of repressing anything." Harry Hansen
N Y World p13 Mr 11 '30 850w

"Very outspoken, very entertaining. A book that every American citizen should read and ponder over." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 155:69 My 14 '30 80w
St Louis 28:204 S '30

Reviewed by Elmer Davis
Sat R of Lit 6:867 Mr 29 '30 800w

"A gay book—a horrendous catalog of the forces the author believes are meddling with American folk-ways and opinions. One is left benumbed by this kaleidoscope of contending forces: it must be a rare citizen who would not be labelled 'meddler' under some of Mr. Brock's categories. The sum is exciting, and often penetrant, but not convincing that all we need for salvation is a pogrom of meddlers." Leon Whipple
+ — Survey 64:155 My 1 '30 380w

BROCK, HENRY IRVING. New York is like this. 236p il $6 Dodd
917.471 New York (city)—Description
29-29704

Sketches describing the city and life of New York in all its varied aspects,—buildings, parks, night-clubs, subway construction, harbors, restaurants, etc. Illustrated with pencil, ink and charcoal drawings by J. W. Golinkin.

Boston Transcript p2 D 28 '29 220w
Cleveland Open Shelf p103 Jl '30

"Mr. Brock and Mr. Golinkin have chosen to convey an impression of their city's personality by means of certain of its moods and phases. They have seen it rather as a process than as a collection of sticks and stones. And Mr. Brock has a sense of humor that keeps him from making the mistake of taking the process too seriously. So, incidentally, has Mr. Golinkin, for the two make so good a team that it is hard to tell whether the text or the illustrations come first."
+ N Y Times p5 Ja 12 '30 900w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:20 Mr '30 80w
St Louis 28:78 Mr '30

BROCK, LYNN, pseud. See McAllister, A.

BRODY, CATHARINE. West of Fifth. 318p $1 Doubleday, Doran
30-20812

The career of Grace Kline, press-agent, is the main interest in this story of New York life between Broadway and Fifth avenue. Grace is a modern girl who knows how to capitalize her sex appeal, and who gets what she wants in the way of a job—or another woman's husband.

"A well-written novel about an unpleasant young publicity woman. A little cosmos of posers and drifters and wire-pullers surrounds the heroine, with one decent human being thrown in to show what Miss Brody can do in that line."
Bookm 71:xi Ag '30 100w
Books p17 Ag 3 '30 220w
Boston Transcript p2 S 10 '30 200w

Reviewed by G. T. Hellman
New Repub 64:81 S 3 '30 60w

"A great many characters are encountered and, while true to type generally and mildly amusing, they tend to submerge the main story. Grace Kline is never a poignantly real character and her story lacks dramatic intensity."
— N Y Times p6 S 21 '30 230w

BROMFIELD, LOUIS. Twenty-four hours. 462p $2.50 Stokes [7s 6d Cambridge univ. press].
30-26944

Mr Bromfield brings together an ill-assorted group of six guests in the beautiful New York apartment of old Hector Champion, connoisseur and voluptuary, and follows them from the dull dinner party on their devious ways to the real, tho secret interests of their lives. That fateful, snowy night and the following day brings a crisis to each one of them and weaves together the pattern of their lives.

"It is as brisk, as exhilarating, as cleverly compounded of balanced diversities as that peculiarly American institution, the cocktail." Mary Ross
+ Atlantic Bookshelf p42 D '30 200w
Booklist 27:103 N '30

"Mr. Bromfield, as always, manages his complicated stories skillfully. His method here is a little like that of an extremely intelligent dog herding a flock of sheep: he rushes now at this one, now that, giving each a nip forward at just the right moment, massing the group and driving it, at last, compactly together through the gate. And finds it, apparently, no trouble at all. For a novel with so complicated a superficial technique, '24 Hours' is curiously brooding and powerful.'" F. H. Britten
+ — Books p5 S 14 '30 650w

"From the mere technical standpoint the book is an achievement. As a revelation of the strangeness, the varied forces, and the whole amazing fabric of American life it realizes more completely than ever before the breadth and depth of Mr. Bromfield's genius." D. L. Mann
+ Boston Transcript p2 S 13 '30 1750w
Cleveland Open Shelf p147 D '30

"Like 'The Strange Case of Miss Annie Spragg' it moves, panoramically, over a vast deal of scenery in a very short space of time. Mr. Bromfield has, however, stretched this technique beyond its limits, and the result is shoddy and even slovenly. The occasional excellences of the book are incidental to its effect as a whole and inherent in the nature of Mr. Bromfield's talent." Eugene Löhrke
— + Nation 131:503 N 5 '30 420w

"Mr. Bromfield has chosen his types excellently and etched them in strongly. The form he has chosen for his book, however, in spite of his style and his remarkable craftsmanship, has not helped him; for the necessity of cramming into his twenty-four hours sufficient incident to make his story, while at the same time managing to fit in the earlier history of his characters, strains his book and gives it an appearance of artificiality which it need not have had. Nevertheless, it is a clever and well-wrought piece of work, and in some places the writing shows real imagination."
+ — New Statesman 36:148 N 8 '30 320w

"In 'Twenty-four Hours' he has tried his hand at what is for him a new form of technique, and has successfully brought it off. His manner of taking up each character separately and giving you the core and the impulse of that person's life, shows not only brilliant conception but masterly control of design and execution. In some respects this book will be more satisfying to those who have not read Bromfield's previous books. A little, some of his settings are reminiscent of those which have appeared in the books where Lily Shane figures. There is the same glamour and the same breadth of view about women who have lived deeply and unconventionally; the same tenderness and feeling for old things that are pregnant with the beauty of forgotten arts. But this is minor criticism. One finds no fault with a poet singing continually of love and romance nor with an artist for painting variations of the same theme." R. C. Feld
+ N Y Times p7 S 14 '30 750w

"Admitting that it is a glamorous idea to imagine a cross-section of New York life, as it hurtles on its swift axis, you still cannot subscribe to the authenticity of his picture. The author plays stage manager too obviously. He seems to give little credit to your imagination. He slips into hackneyed phrases, worn gags, descriptions of the New York skyline and of women afraid to grow old. He finishes off the sharp edges of his people too smoothly, pat, pat, and there you have another stock character. Yet the book takes some hold on your fancy." V. P. Ross

— + Outlook 156:147 S 24 '30 480w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:79 N '30

"Bromfield's surface is good surface and most shrewdly contrived. His talent is admirably adapted to the tempo of American life where change seems more significant than endurance. He has the reporter's eye for the news of the town, and far more than the reporter's skill in assigning effects to causes. His characters are always faintly reminiscent of someone recently known or seen, and if this sometimes lessens the imaginative content of his fictions it enhances their interest." H. S. Canby

+ Sat R of Lit 7:137 S 20 '30 900w

"The book is an exceedingly able piece of work, by a serious novelist. Its moral is stern. Mr. Bromfield knows a great deal about men and women, and he writes of them very well. Twenty-four Hours is solid, exciting, cunningly handled, full of action, of distinct characterization, and an irony which never degenerates into comment. Above all, it tells a story." L. A. G. Strong

+ Spec 145:697 N 8 '30 150w

Springf'd Republican p7e O 12 '30 350w

Times [London] Lit Sup 1084 D 18 '30 420w

BRON, SAUL G. Soviet economic development and American business; results of the first year under the five-year plan and further perspectives. 147p $1.50 Liveright

330.947 Russia—Economic conditions. Russia—Economic policy. Russia—Commerce—United States. United States—Commerce—Russia 30-11536

"'Soviet Economic Development and American Business' is the work of the former Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Amtorg Trading Corporation, which is the commercial representative of the U. S. S. R. in this country. The book is really a plea for recognition and normal business relations between the two countries. Valuable statistical information on economic progress under the Soviet five-year plan may also be found in Mr. Bron's little book."—N Y World

"This little book presents a very interesting resumé of the achievements of the planned economy in the U. S. S. R. during the first year of operation under the five-year plan. Still more significant to the American reader is the comprehensive statement of American-Russian business relations, which have been developing very rapidly in recent years." Karl Scholz

+ Ann Am Acad 150:303 Jl '30 130w

Reviewed by Alexander Nazaroff
N Y Times p5 Ag 31 '30 380w

Reviewed by Bernard Smith
N Y World p10m Ap 13 '30 100w

Reviewed by John Carter
Outlook 155:108 My 21 '30 70w

Reviewed by F. A. Fall
Outlook 156:264 O 15 '30 150w

St Louis 28:205 S '30

Reviewed by Amy Hewes
Survey 64:47 O 1 '30 500w

"It is a competent view, and the statistics are highly revealing about the inevitableness of foreign trade for Russia."

+ World Tomorrow 13:278 Je '30 50w

BRONSHTEIN, LEV DAVIDOVICH. See Trotsky, L., pseud.

BRONSON, WILFRID S. Fingerfins, the tale of a Sargasso fish. 52p il $2 Macmillan

597 Fishes—Juvenile literature 30-13341

"The author was staff artist on a scientific expedition to the Sargasso Sea. In 'Fingerfins' he tells the story of a Sargasso fish, who lived in the Sargasso weed, pulled himself along by his fins, like webbed fingers, swelled up to prevent the larger fishes from swallowing him, was caught by a member of the expedition and kept in a tank on the ship's deck, but was washed overboard, tank and all, by a gigantic wave and so returned to his home in the City of Sargasso Weed."—N Y Times

Booklist 27:107 N '30

"Here is an original and charming addition to sea lore and true story books. It puts one, in short, completely in the mood of a fish and incidentally gives the clearest account, both in picture and text, of that 'strange river in the Atlantic Ocean'—the Gulf Stream—and the Sargasso Sea that I have yet seen in a child's book." A. C. Moore

+ Books p8 Je 15 '30 500w

Reviewed by A. L. Shea
Chicago Daily Tribune p10 Ag 9 '30 150w

"An unusual and delightful little book for children from 7 to 10. Scientifically accurate, the book is written with a charming humor and an imaginative quality, which will make Fingerfins very real to child readers. The illustrations are unique; without losing their scientific value they have the same humor and zest as the text." A. T. Eaton

+ N Y Times p17 Je 8 '30 200w

Outlook 155:340 Jl 2 '30 20w

St Louis 28:247 O '30

"A little book of perfect accuracy and excellent illustration. . . Every child who can read English should say, 'Thank you, Mr. Bronson!' for this delightful story." Ida Mellen

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1146 Je 21 '30 550w

Reviewed by Rachel Field
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1146 Je 21 '30 40w

BROOK, BARNABY, pseud. See Brooks, C.

BROOKE, MRS DOROTHY (LAMB), ed. Private letters, pagan and Christian; an anthology of Greek and Roman private letters from the fifth century before Christ to the fifth century of our era. 207p $3.50 Dutton [15s Benn]

808.6 Letters 30-6405

"Lady Brooke has brought together from a number of sources some two hundred letters written over a period of about nine hundred years, from Plato to the Early Christian Fathers, and Greek, Roman, and Hellenist- and Roman-Egyptian in origin. Many famous names appear in the list of authors and addressees, and in the letters themselves—philosophers, generals, emperors, priests, and saints—but the topics discussed are even more widely various, ranging from the smallest domestic intimacies to imperial affairs and things of the spirit. Speaking generally, the interest of the letters is of two types, public and private, historical and individual."—Nation and Ath

"The long, long dead live again in these letters, and Miss Brooke is to be sincerely thanked." B. R. Redman

+ Books p11 My 4 '30 600w

"Miss Brooke's fascinating volume is an excellent example of how vividly a lost age can be conjured up by this most informal and veracious of mediums. Some of the letters, notably those of the saints, were translated by Miss Brooke; others are older translations. An interesting introduction concerning the prevalence of letter writing among the ancients and their preservation, and a scholarly and indispensable biographical index add to the value of the volume." M. L. S.

BROOKE, DOROTHY—Continued

+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 5 '30 400w
Nation and Ath 45:372 Je 15 '29 420w

"Though the fact that the letters in this volume are 'private' letters is part of their attractiveness, it will be found that few of them fail to reflect some light on public affairs as well. They enliven, and often enable us to criticise, the generalisations of the historians. Perhaps someone will do us the same service for the thousand years that followed and produce a worthy companion to this agreeable volume."

+ New Statesman 33:342 Je 22 '29 1450w

Reviewed by S. A. Coblentz
N Y Times p26 S 28 '30 500w
Sat R 148:76 Jl 20 '29 500w

"This anthology of Greek and Roman private letters from the fifth century before Christ to the fifth century after Christ both creates and supplies a demand. Even if we have not reached out for it, we no sooner find it within our hands than we are conscious of a previous lack in our intimacy with the classical past. And on reading the letters we realize that Mrs. Brooke's selection has admirably bridged over the gap between formal literature and daily life. The translations are by well-known scholars." A. C. E. Allinson

+ Sat R of Lit 7:178 O 4 '30 620w

"The fascination of her book lies in the fact that it is a farrago, not of odds and ends thrown into the pot as into a swill-tub, but of savoury tit-bits selected from all the doings of men and served up to us in an excellent dish." B. L.

+ Spec 142:939 Je 15 '29 650w
Springf'd Republican p10 F 21 '30 330w

"This is a pleasant, well-printed book, light to handle, entertaining to dip into, both lively and scholarly in the editing."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p467 Je 13 '29 1000w

BROOKE, HUGH. Mad shepherdess. 345p $2.50 (7s 6d) Longmans
30-3767

Quartilla, the mad shepherdess, is a strange, unbalanced kind of girl, whose sole object in life is her own peculiar brand of happiness. She has no thought for the morrow or the rights of others, and goes blithely on her way, continually a source of anxiety to her friends and relatives, and continually upsetting other people's apple carts.

"There is nothing in 'The Mad Shepherdess' to justify its title. Quartilla, around whom the story is centred, is as unpastoral as she is worldly; scarcely aware of the lovely countryside in which she is now living, she is so concerned with herself that she behaves all the time as if 'she were before a camera.' The author has assimilated his material excellently. No detail is lacking nor at fault, but the reader is never granted any intelligence or imagination."

+ — N Y Times p22 Ap 20 '30 500w
Times [London] Lit Sup p252 Mr 20 '30 200w

BROOKES, SALLY. Manhattan fever, a girl's story that's true. 289p $2.50 Sears
30-7428

"The confession story of a Middle Western college girl who comes to live in New York. Sally does not remain naive. She has success at work, followed by failures resulting from dissipation. But you knew all along that she was good at heart; she never goes too far; and in the end, after her illness and return home, she once more sets her face toward Manhattan, unbeaten, determined now to reform and 'get somewhere' at last."—Books

"What is unusual in 'Manhattan Fever' is the naive style, which suggests, at the end, a belief that Sally is worldly-wise as well as world-weary; but at the beginning is in its catch-phrases and its mistakes and rawness, perfectly authentic. It sounds like an undoctored confession story."

Books p17 Mr 30 '30 220w
Boston Transcript p3 My 24 '30 250w
N Y Times p16 Jl 20 '30 150w

"'Manhattan Fever' seems another attempt to capitalize an almost universal itch for the big city where almost anything can happen. It is distinctly adolescently told in the first person in diary form with pages of rhapsodies on everything from the Statue of Liberty to one of the palatial movie houses. It is generally slight and frothy but might be found exciting by a sentimental school girl."

— Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 6 '30 150w

BROOKINGS, ROBERT SOMERS. Economic democracy; America's answer to socialism and communism; a coll. of articles, addresses and papers. 151p $1.50 (6s 6d) Macmillan

330.4 Economics—Addresses, essays, lectures. United States—Economic conditions. United States—Industries 29-27769

"Among the themes which Mr. Brookings discusses are big business, which he heartily endorses, if it does not become monopoly; the relative places of cooperation and competition in business practice, the proposed European economic union, industrial management, trade relations and agriculture, raw materials and prosperity, overproduction. Mr. Brookings thinks that the economic democracy which has been developed in this country is in some respects even more important than political democracy, and his book is an exposition of the policies and methods which have been thus worked out."—N Y Times

"Presents in interesting fashion some important conclusions concerning our economic order based on the author's long experience as a leader in the business world." J. E. LeRossignol

+ Am Econ R 20:553 S '30 250w
Am J Soc 36:509 N '30 100w
Booklist 26:262 Ap '30
Boston Transcript p2 Mr 19 '30 220w
Christian Century 47:243 F 12 '30 120w
Hist Outlook 21:400 D '30 80w

"Here is a stimulating and suggestive book, so intimately in touch with present conditions and tendencies in our economic life that students of economics and others interested in the relations between labor and capital cannot afford to miss it. The work is eminently realistic, the outcome of its author's experience and observation both in the very midst of our industrial life and in the sidelines of study, research and experiment."

+ N Y Times p18 D 22 '29 350w

Reviewed by John Carter
Outlook 154:352 F 26 '30 80w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:49 Je '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:12 F '30 130w
Special Library 21:264 S '30 100w
Survey 64:281 Je 15 '30 100w
Times [London] Lit Sup p320 Ap 10 '30 80w
Wis Lib Bul 26:37 Ja '30

BROOKS, ALDEN. As I saw it. 299p il $3.50 (10s 6d) Knopf

940.4144 European war, 1914-1918—Campaigns—Western. France—Army—Artillery
30-13510

The author, an American by birth, went to a French artillery school and became a lieutenant of field artillery in the French army. He records his war experiences from the point of view of one interested chiefly in military manoeuvers; his viewpoint is more or less detached and unbiased, his manner dispassionate.

Booklist 27:150 D '30

"It would be difficult to find a more readable eye-witness account of the military maneuvers of 1918 than is given in Alden Brooks's 'As I Saw It.' . . Patriots will take issue with him on this evaluation of the merits of British, French and American troops, and tacticians will dispute many of his comments on the conduct of the war, but the ordinary reader will forget these things in the war panoramas which his narrative affords. . . The appeal of his book rests primarily on his unique position as an eye witness and his great ability at objective description." Lambert Davis

+ Books p7 Ag 10 '30 250w

"This is a valuable book for the student of the history of the war, as well as an interesting narrative of the days when the Allies had their backs to the wall and the world watched in breathless suspense for the coming of victory or defeat."

+ Boston Transcript p2 S 10 '30 500w

Reviewed by J. B. Wharton

Nation 131:530 N 12 '30 30w

Nation and Ath 48:sup354 D 6 '30 100w

Reviewed by John Chamberlain

New Repub 64:80 S 3 '30 350w

"Mr. Brooks's volume is the most important record of observations by an American that has appeared. Although a copy of this book, eventually, must be in every comprehensive library, it will never be generally popular. Its appeal is to the intellect rather than to the emotions. It tells what actually happened, not how the author felt. The descriptions are written calmly and with restraint, by a man, who is obviously carefully trained as a reporter. Sometimes the reader may become indignant, but the author never shows that he was disturbed." Elmer Adler

+ N Y Times p2 S 21 '30 800w

Outlook 155:588 Ag 13 '30 300w

St Louis 28:274 N '30

"By his vivid depiction of the anxieties, desperate worries, and herculean labor of the men responsible for the successful conduct of difficult movements, by his many and striking illustrations of the tasks an operations staff must accomplish in the face of apparently insuperable odds, Mr. Brooks has rendered a genuine service to the memory of a much misunderstood but perfectly invaluable class of officers. He will interest without question all those readers who, after years of hearing the 'brass-hats' berated and blamed by all self-appointed champions of troops of the line, incline to give ear, when opportunity offers, to the modest staff officer's side of the story."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:477 D 20 '30 450w

BROOKS, COLLIN (BARNABY BROOK, pseud.). Prosperity street. 308p $2.50 Minton 30-24773

Frank Peyton, an ambitious young journalist in London, began his career while a "permanent" boarder with the cheerful Gallus family, of Dickensian flavor, in the poverty of Prosperity street. He loved Joan—but she, with tragedy for a background, loved him too much to stand in the way of his coming political career. Seven years later Frank, a candidate for Parliament, married Florence, a charming and ambitious young woman suited to his personality and assured success. But Joan and Frank never forgot their idyllic love, not even when they met again in middle-age and reviewed their life experiences.

Booklist 27:103 N '30

"Told tenderly, with a civilized wit and the gentlest irony, and lifted from the ruck of standardized popular fiction by the adroitness of its characterization; yet it definitely does not belong in the class of literature proper. Why? Simply because, blasphemously un-Aristotelian as the reason may seem, it is too credible, too perfectly, sanely probable."

+ Books p14 Ag 3 '30 250w

Boston Transcript p2 S 13 '30 700w

Cleveland Open Shelf p142 N '30

"Mr. Brook's hero has just the right ingredients of good humor, cheerful stupidity, grateful selfishness, vulgarity, lack of background and general ignorance to make a first-rate latter-day statesman. The reader likes him for his normalcy and finds himself quite prepared to vote for him."

+ N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 2 '30 130w

"Mr. Brook has drawn an excellent and compelling portrait of Frank Peyton. He is presented fully and without bias, and the reader will find him no more, and no less sympathetic than such a personage might be in actual life. The narrative itself has movement and color. Quite apart from the problem which it contains, 'Prosperity Street' justifies its existence on its merits as a lively and readable story."

+ N Y Times p6 Ag 17 '30 700w

Sat R of Lit 7:92 Ag 30 '30 380w

BROOKS, CYRUS HARRY. Your character from your handwriting; a guide to the new graphology; with a foreword by Robert Saudek. 207p il $1.75 Morrow [3s 6d Allen, G.]

137 Graphology. Character 30-27706

The science of graphology set forth in a simplified technique based on the work of Robert Saudek, a world authority on the subject. The author tells how to estimate speed in handwriting, how to distinguish between natural from unnatural writing, proffers a scheme of analysis, and gives a specimen analysis.

Booklist 27:185 Ja '31

"This is certainly the best short book we have read on an interesting and perhaps important subject."

+ Spec 144:943 Je 7 '30 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p538 Je 26 '30 150w

BROOKS, FOWLER DELL. Psychology of adolescence. (Riverside textbooks in educ.) 652p $3 Houghton [10s 6d Harrap]

136.7 Adolescence 29-23704

A treatise in which the author assembles, in textbook form, the results of numerous investigations in the field of adolescent psychology. The book, based on the general point of view that development is a continuous function from childhood to and thru adolescence without any abrupt break or change, discusses mainly physical and mental development as they affect adolescent emotional life and personality.

Booklist 26:188 F '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p71 My '30

St Louis 28:35 F '30

"The author is to be commended for assembling a vast amount of data and presenting it in such a way as to assist the reader in developing an adequate basis for his conclusions. In the field which it covers the book is a valuable contribution." R. H. Ojemann

+ School R 38:155 F '30 650w

BROOKS, JONATHAN, pseud. See Meliett, J. C.

BROOKS, WALTER ROLLIN. More To and again. 306p il $2 (6s) Knopf 30-22055

Further adventures of the animals on Mr. Bean's farm, some of which appeared in To and Again by the same author (Book Review Digest, 1927).

BROOKS, W. R.—Continued

"The popularity of 'To and Again' will find readers for this second book but it bears the unmistakable marks of a sequel. The illustrations lack something of the kindly humor which Adolfo Best-Maugard put into those for the first." A. T. Eaton

— N Y Times p20 S 14 '30 320w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 155:670 Ag 27 '30 200w

Reviewed by M. L. Becker
Outlook 156:587 D 10 '30 50w

Times [London] Lit Sup p977 N 20 '30 180w

BROPHY, JOHN. Peter Lavelle. 298p $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d Dent]

30-15221

The main theme of the novel is a contrast-study of the war generation and the younger, post-war generation. To the former belong Peter Lavelle, an Irish hero of the war, and Isobel, whom he met and loved while in service; to the latter, Daphne Semple, musical-comedy dancer, and Hugh Richmond, in love with her. Matters of sex, morality and ideals are the threads upon which the characters hang; the conclusion of the author is that while behavior may change, the fundamental virtues in human nature remain about the same.

"The sincerity of the author is apparent, but the naïveté of his characters is occasionally disconcerting."

+ — Bookm 71:xxvi Mr '30 120w

Books p10 F 23 '30 200w

Boston Transcript p5 F 21 '30 280w

"The post-war generation now occupies the centre of the stage, and it is to his rather unfavorable opinions concerning this generation that John Brophy devotes the greater part of his new and not particularly interesting novel."

— N Y Times p8 Ja 26 '30 460w

"An excellent novel." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:226 F 5 '30 120w

"Peter is a fascinating personality, attractive even in his embittered moods. The only unconvincing note is the explanation of Daphne's shielding of the philandering Eugene Turton, but that is easily forgiven the author of so delightful a novel."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 2 '30 230w

"A rather disappointing story. . . Mr. Brophy's performance is very unequal in this book, although Peter's soliloquies and meditations are extraordinarily stimulating at times and his phrase-making is often delightful."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p868 O 31 '29 550w

BROSTER, DOROTHY KATHLEEN. Flight of the heron. 372p il $2.50 Coward-McCann

30-7303

Scotland in the days of the '45 is the scene in which Ewen Cameron, a young Highland chief, and Keith Windham, a captain in the English army, become friends, even tho they are in opposing camps.

Booklist 26:401 Jl '30

Reviewed by Sophie Goldsmith
Books p8 My 11 '30 600w

"The generosity and mutual respect of men fighting on opposite sides give a fine touch of nobility to the story. The book is attractive in form. . . D. K. Broster is popular in England as a writer of excellent historical tales, but although several of her books have been published in this country she is not so well known over here. It is to be hoped that this attractive edition of 'The Flight of the Heron' will bring this thoroughly worthwhile writer to the attention of a large circle of readers."

+ N Y Times p18 Mr 16 '30 280w

"This theme binds together a maze of exciting incidents set in a most authentic frame. Miss Broster's historical reconstruction has a very immediate and personal quality. She uses details of places and people to illustrate and make plausible the action rather than to hamper it. Her description of the gathering of forces before Culloden is particularly memorable." Catherine Woodbridge

+ Sat R of Lit 6:906 Ap 5 '30 500w

BROWN, BETH. Wedding ring. 317p $1 Doubleday, Doran

30-17935

The love story of a charming but temperamental Russian dancer, the object of many men's love, and the American whom she met while on tour in California.

Books p14 O 5 '30 220w

— Boston Transcript p3 N 1 '30 250w

"Every situation is romantic, every simile flowery, with the heroine the self-conscious centre. The descriptions are vivid and the characterizations strong. The author shows how jealous a mistress is art, and how the artist is at the mercy of her public. As a frank statement of an individual's idea of what a man expects from a woman and vice versa this book should be worth reading."

+ N Y Times p7 Jl 13 '30 150w

BROWN, CARLOTTA M. Millinery processes. 187p il $1.60 Ginn

646.5 Millinery 30-16662

"A school textbook for use in millinery courses, giving clear, detailed directions, with a useful chapter on the selection of hats for wearers of different types."—Cleveland Open Shelf

Booklist 27:142 D '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p122 S '30

J Home Econ 22:768 S '30 50w

St Louis 28:263 N '30

BROWN, CHARLES REYNOLDS. Gospel for Main street. 263p $2 Century

252 Christian life 30-10965

Short sermons applying the basic principles of the Christian life to the experiences and understanding of the average man.

Booklist 27:137 D '30

Reviewed by J. H. Holmes
Books p28 S 28 '30 100w

"Dean Brown has done it so often that one expects him as a matter of course to do it again—which he has. There is the same pungent phrasing in 'The Gospel for Main Street,' the same effective use of simple illustration, the same hearty faith and warm vigor, that have made the whole troop of his numerous volumes a perennial inspiration and real delight to many people who would run from an ordinary book of sermons as they would run from the bubonic plague. . . This latest book runs true to form. There is no superfluous verbal upholstery, no useless emotional detouring—nothing but good old-fashioned spiritual dynamic, and a Yankee thrift in the use of words, and a steady getting forward with the business in hand." H. D. Gallaudet

+ Christian Century 47:1087 S 10 '30 320w

"There is a practical wisdom of a spiritual worth in these sermons." R. P. Kreitler

+ Churchman p4 Ag 30 '30 130w

St Louis 28:258 N '30

"Charles R. Brown, dean emeritus of the Yale Divinity School, is a preacher's preacher. It is doubtful if piety will ever have a more dexterous advocate. He has made, in the course of his venerable ministry, a painstaking yet buoyant study of the art of preaching—has, in fact, written a book on the subject—and his sermons move along such precise lines with such obvious grace that one is aware chiefly of the smoothness of his craftsmanship."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:43 Ag 9 '30 220w

BROWN, CORINNE. Creative drama in the lower school. 226p il $2 (8s 6d) Appleton
792 Drama in education. Amateur theatricals
29-25763

A book on creative drama for children which supplies the teacher with suggestions on how to utilize the child's natural gift for dramatization in a constructive way. Part one treats of the transition from dramatic play to dramatizing Mother Goose; part two deals with dramatizing simple stories and the production of original plays; part three discusses variants of the drama, such as pageantry and marionettes; part four, stage craft and production; part five, theory of creative drama for young children.

Booklist 26:268 Ap '30

"Creative Drama in the Lower School could be used as a practical workbook by primary-school teachers. Many examples are given of the way in which the work has actually been carried out, of what the pupils and the teacher said, and of what the pupils and the teacher did. The work suggested is both practical and possible. Since the book deals only with practices which have actually been worked out, impractical and impossible modes of procedure have been eliminated. Practical suggestions of costumes, scenery, and properties are given." Ruth Cope
+ El School J 30:798 Je '30 320w
Pratt p11 summer '30
School Arts M 30:320-a Ja '31 220w

"The author of this volume has gone into the subject of play-production and play-acting for children with admirable educational zeal. Many years of experience with children from five to nine years of age and with students in teacher-training classes have contributed to the ingenious experiments in juvenile dramatic entertainment which are illustrated in her pages."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p191 Mr 6 '30 250w
Wis Lib Bul 26:64 F '30

BROWN, MRS ESTELLE AUBREY. With trailing banners. 295p $2.50 Little 30-10096

The story of a girl, Merry Melton, from a village in northern New York, who, after a sturdy, independent girlhood, gave up her chances of a better education to marry a handsome, brutal village youth. The aftermath was one long session of suffering, until Merry took her secret savings and slipped away down East.

"A decidedly interesting first novel. . . Mrs. Brown is not a past mistress of style. Her dialogue, however, reflects character clearly, and her narrative has the not altogether discredited quality of making one desirous to see what is on the next page. Her novel, it should be added, is not for those who like to think of youth in a village as an idyll scented with apple blossoms." E. W. Hawkins
+ Atlantic Bookshelf p20 My '30 150w
Booklist 27:27 S '30

"The crisp, positive sentences and the engaging rapidity of the action are more than half responsible for the success of the book. It is, as a picture of small-town life under certain given conditions, completely successful, and we may watch with a great deal of interest for the development of Mrs. Brown's obvious talents."
+ Books p17 Je 15 '30 380w
Boston Transcript p2 Je 11 '30 550w

"The earlier part of the book, describing Merry's childhood, is well documented and enlivened with humor. The rest is just plain dull, as dreary as the villagers themselves. Mrs. Brown has a keen, uncompromising eye. It is a pity that she should lavish her talents on one more conscientious chronicle of futility."
— New Repub 63:134 Je 18 '30 150w

"There is a sunny vitality about this book that is heartening. It has an intoxicating cleanliness and freshness for all the sordidness of its subject. Merry is a character that all of us have dreamed of being and Mrs. Brown has endowed her with a fiery verisimilitude."
+ Outlook 154:667 Ap 23 '30 180w

BROWN, HARRIET CHEDIE (CONNOR) (MRS HERBERT DANIEL BROWN). Grandmother Brown's hundred years, 1827-1927; [foreword by Charles G. Dawes]. 369p il $3 Little [12s 6d Allen, G.]
B or 92 Brown, Mrs Maria Dean (Foster)
29-22546

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Cath World 131:252 My '30 280w

"There was much packed into her hundred years, and Mrs. Brown, the author, has presented the story beautifully." N. G. Goodman
+ Hist Outlook 21:338 N '30 500w

"The story is significant and entertaining, made so both by the large element of universality and by Grandmother Brown's distinct individuality. Her portrait might be regarded as a composite picture of all who have lived through experiences similar to hers, although by no means all who have had such experiences have met them as successfully and serenely as she did." R. V. Harlow
+ Nation 130:429 Ap 9 '30 420w

"To be, at a hundred years old, at once a nobody and a vivid personality is both an unusual and an admirable equipment for presenting a panoramic view of an age through the eyes of an individual. Old Mrs. Brown was a very 'ordinary' woman, whose life—except for its mere span of years—was no different from that of thousands of other women. It is the precise value of this book that she tells her life-story, simply and naturally, exactly as it was. It is the story of a nobody, and therefore of anybody and everybody."
+ New Statesman 35:90 Ap 26 '30 950w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:2 Ja '30
Pratt p36 spring '30
St Louis 28:17 Ja '30
Spec 144:676 Ap 19 '30 220w

"Every authentic record of pioneer life has a certain value, and this account of an upright and happy woman who apparently never knew a day's discontent in spite of many hardships and losses will take its permanent place among the domestic annals of American history."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p238 Mr 20 '30 600w

"A fine, vigorous narrative."
+ Wis Lib Bul 25:411 D '29

"As literature her story is surely not distinguished; but as a chronicle of the best of the frontier stock it is valuable, and as the portrayal of exuberant, undaunted life and living it is unforgettable." M. E. Chase
+ Yale R n s 20:210 autumn '30 280w

BROWN, JOHN MASON. Modern theatre in revolt. (New arts) 89p $1.25 Norton
792 Theater. Drama—History and criticism
29-29124

Tracing the course of the theater's development during the last hundred years, Mr Brown shows how each new generation of revolutionists has torn down the work of its predecessors, and how, in turn, the changes thus brought about have been superseded by the rebels of a later generation. The contribution of each generation is given adequate consideration and appreciation, and the book ends with an interesting discussion of the modern theater of social revolt in Russia.

BROWN, J. M.—Continued
Booklist 26:303 My '30

"The book contains nothing in the least original or unfamiliar, but it summarizes briefly much that has until now been scattered. It may thus be useful as a handbook for students." Edgar Johnson

Books p25 F 16 '30 70w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:43 My '30
St Louis 28:75 Mr '30

"The history as he relates it is fascinating, even to those to whom its material is far from new. It is the struggle of the generations expressed in terms of an art that reflects more than any other the life of its time. Mr. Brown's understanding of each generation's desires for its own theatre, his appreciation of its contribution, his sympathy both with each doctrine of revolt and its downfall, gives the book a special authority that is a fine background for its bold enthusiasm."

+ Theatre Arts Mo 14:177 F '30 400w

BROWN, JOHN MASON. Upstage; the American theatre in performance. 276p $3 Norton
792 Theater—United States 30-30800

A survey of the current American theater by a young dramatic critic. Contents: The playwright and the American theatre; The actor's plight; Enter the scenic artist; Types of American direction; The men on the aisle; Theatre buildings and modern America; We—of the audience.

"His preoccupation with local color, with characterization, perhaps accounts for the exuberant garrulity of his style. At its best this style can deliver us the very feeling of a performance; at its worst it degenerates into a baroque efflorescence of adjectives. His book is to be recommended to those who want a vicarious experience of the stage. But it must be taken in very small doses." Francis Fergusson

+ — Bookm 72:446 D '30 380w

"He brings to his task a real enthusiasm for the playhouse, an ample background of study, respect for the potential dignity of his calling, and a belief not yet chilled by experience and disappointment that serious critical discussion, not personal exhibitionism or back-stage gossip, is the desired and desirable goal. . . In the main the interest and readableness of his book come from its critical common sense and sincerity, and from the direct and clear expression of its critical ideas." W. P. Eaton

+ Books p5 D 7 '30 350w

"The theatre you get in Mr. Brown's volume is the theatre as it is, not the theatre as it might be or ought to be or will be. That is the virtue of the book. For withering metaphors, for inspirational exhortation, go elsewhere. Mr. Brown, who has as keen a perception as any one now writing about the stage or what our theatre might become, here confines himself to writing graciously about the things he has recently seen. He tells, accurately and clearly, what is good and why. . . For the moment, this volume gives a more nearly just impression of our theatre than any other recently published book." Hiram Motherwell

+ N Y Times p6 N 30 '30 1200w
Outlook 156:508 N 26 '30 80w

"Mr. Brown's writing springs from a direct personal response to the theatre. He writes from the theatre, rather than about it. When under its immediate stimulus, his writing is full and five-sensed; at other times, it may be empty and routine. His discussion of the American drama's belated emancipation and his restatement of the evils of type casting dwindle into the weary imperfection of all self-inflicted writing. Mr. Brown's judgments are the personal, present, judgments of informed pleasure. He is a writer and a super-theatre goer!" Walton Losey

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:422 D 6 '30 320w

Reviewed by Leon Whipple
Survey 65:396 Ja 1 '31 300w

BROWN, MRS ZENITH (JONES) (DAVID FROME, pseud.). Hammersmith murders. 294p $1 Doubleday, Doran [3s 6d Methuen]
30-17702

A doctor's stolen drug case containing tetanus and influenza cultures, hyoscine and digitalin results in three deaths at 60 Caithness Road. Inspector Bull plunges into the investigation and is able to prevent a fourth murder.

"David Frome's new volume belongs to the realm of good light entertainment by virtue of a readable and frequently amusing style, here subdued to the uses of gooseflesh and ghastly details." Will Cuppy

+ Books p12 Je 29 '30 150w
N Y Times p16 Jl 27 '30 120w
Times [London] Lit Sup p518 Je 19 '30 120w

BROWN, MRS ZENITH (JONES) (DAVID FROME, pseud.). In at the death. 278p $2 Longmans [7s 6d Skeffington]
30-8608

Thru the complications of a plot provided with murder, blackmail, robbery and romance, Major Lewis, private agent, finds a way to solution.

"An unusual tale of a family skeleton with a far-reaching effect."

+ Bookm 71:xxix Mr '30 50w
N Y Times p17 Je 15 '30 100w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:547 Ap 2 '30 30w
Times [London] Lit Sup p540 Jl 4 '29 220w

BROWNING, MRS ELIZABETH (BARRETT). Letters to her sister, 1846-1859; ed. by Leonard Huxley. 344p il $5 Dutton [21s Murray, J.]
B or 92 [30-5428]

A collection of 107 hitherto unpublished letters from Elizabeth Barrett Browning to her sister Henrietta, the first written from Pisa a month after the Brownings had arrived there on their wedding journey. These letters are filled with her happiness in her marriage, with her friends, her occupations, and her small son, Pennini.

Booklist 27:61 O '30

"The letters have been discreetly, but not harshly, edited. They provide an entertaining commentary, not only upon the minor details of the Browning ménage, but also upon the interesting, sentimental and curiously dependent quality of Elizabeth's mind." Margaret Wallace

+ Bookm 72:83 S '30 200w

Reviewed by G. F. Whicher
Books p4 Ag 31 '30 550w
Cath World 132:496 Ja '31 450w

"In 1849, a son was born to the Brownings. . . Robert Wiedeman Barrett Browning, self-styled Pennini. His diminutive form pervades two-thirds of the book, setting the ringleted, untidy, ecstatic figure of his mother in its most attractive light. Previously published letters have made us familiar with Mrs. Browning's epistolary style, her inveterate slipshodness, her facile ardours, her courage, her idealism, her little exasperating tricks of habit and humour. There is nothing here, in this series admirably edited by Dr. Leonard Huxley, to suggest that earlier verdicts should be revised or rescinded now." D. M. Stuart

Nation and Ath 46:319 N 30 '29 900w

"These letters reveal a very human 'E.B.B.', very like the woman one had guessed behind her poetry. The same rather breathless style, the same wild ardours and enthusiasms—Louis Napoleon, the Grand-Duke of Tuscany, Pennini, Spiritualism; the same blinding and contemptuous antipathies—Mazzini, the British Government and English climate, the Grand-Duke of Tuscany again. But the hostilities are rarer; she was an affectionate creature and, like most happy people, saw life rosily. Not intellectual—totally unlike the generation of emancipated women that was to come after her and storm the universities—she was not above judging people by their appearances and taking an intense interest in the latest fashions."
New Statesman 34:304 D 7 '29 900w

St Louis 28:245 O '30

"In some respects this new collection of letters by Mrs Browning is the most important contribution made to the voluminous Browning literature since the publication of the 'Love Letters,' in the light it throws on all the family relations. Otherwise their value is in the vivid revelation of the writer." Lilian Whiting
+ Springf'd Republican p7e F 9 '30 1550w

Times [London] Lit Sup p893 N 7 '29 2000w

BRUCE, MURIEL. Mukara. 278p $2.50 Henkle
30-12289

The possibility of the discovery of a fabulous, pre-Mayan civilization in the heart of the Amazonian jungle is made the basis for this tale of adventure and romance. Four Americans go on a scientific expedition to South America and make some amazing discoveries there among the ruins of the ancient kingdom of Mu. The story is said to be based on the data of the Fawcett expedition in 1924.

Boston Transcript p1 D 20 '30 550w

Cleveland Open Shelf p112 Jl '30

"Incredible as much of the story is, it holds one's interest for its factual basis and the fascination of civilizations of which we have no record except that which may be gathered from crumbled ruins and strange legends. The style is clear and readable, well away from the flowery and stilted phraseology into which the subject matter might so easily lead."
+ N Y Times p25 Je 1 '30 220w

BRUCE, PHILIP ALEXANDER. The Virginia Plutarch; the biographical story of the Old Dominion in the light of its contributions to the greatness of America. 2v 327;353p il $9 Univ. of N.C. press [42s Oxford]

920 Virginia—Biography. Virginia—History
29-27915

"Thirty eminent Virginians, from Powhatan to Woodrow Wilson, furnish the biographical materials for this modern Plutarch."—Christian Century

---

"Inevitably he praises Lee, Jackson, and J. E. B. Stuart about whom romance will ever linger. The sketch of Woodrow Wilson, however, is so unsympathetic and so out of character with the rest of the book that we wish it had been omitted altogether. With this exception, the dignified portraits in this gallery have been painted with kindly hand. The glory which they reflect upon Virginia few will desire to dim." Dumas Malone
+ — Am Hist R 35:885 Jl '30 700w

"The idea behind the compilation is a suggestive one, and the purpose—to illustrate, in terms of individuals, the greatness of Virginia's contribution to American and world history—is reasonably successful. A number of the essays possess decided merit and even some originality. The studies of William Byrd, Alexander Spotswood, John Sevier, Captain Lewis and Commodore Maury are particularly notable." H. S. Commager
+ — Books p10 Mr 2 '30 1150w

"Not every one will approve of Dr. Bruce's chapters, either as to subject or as to treatment, but the book as a whole is an outstanding achievement none the less, and a truly fitting recognition of our present interest in biography, as it is an appeal to the highest manifestation of that interest." G. R. B. R.
Boston Transcript p2 Ap 16 '30 1600w

"The author has done a substantial piece of work covering a wide range and variety of materials, but there is no evidence that he has used other than secondary sources and no case has been noted in which he has thrown new light upon a character or an incident or departed widely from the standardized judgments of the older historians."
— Christian Century 47:310 Mr 5 '30 250w

"One is regretfully compelled to say that the present volumes add nothing to the author's reputation. They seem to be rather random reminiscences, composed without scrupulous attention to accuracy, careless of the results of recent critical scholarship, and often unduly indulgent to popular legends which have little historical support. There are, to be sure, excellent chapters on some of the minor figures. The chapters are rhetorical in style, commonplace in matter and uncritical in method." D. S. Muzzey
— Current Hist 32:216 My '30 1200w

"The sketches do not add anything important to what was already known about their subjects, nor does Mr. Bruce trouble himself to explain—if it can be satisfactorily explained—why Virginia has been so preeminently rich in distinguished names. The omission at this point is the more remarkable because Mr. Bruce knows the plantation system and the early social life of Virginia extremely well, and could, if he had chosen, have illumined his chapters with more than incidental references to the social and economic background. The volumes may be commended to readers who like to take their history in the form of biography."
— + Nation 130:401 Ap 2 '30 230w

"Dr. Bruce's two volumes are given over for the most part to straightforward and agreeably written sketches, nowhere profound and sometimes slight, of the thirty-odd personalities whose contributions to American greatness in action he thinks it worth while to signalize. . . Dr. Bruce writes judiciously, and seldom allows himself to intimate either praise or blame." William MacDonald
+ — N Y Times p13 Ja 12 '30 1300w

St Louis 28:80 Mr '30

"Because he aimed at a continuous narrative of deeds, Dr. Bruce has fixed his attention not upon subjective aspects of his various heroes, but upon what they contributed in action to American life. The emphasis upon action gives the book movement, sweep, and variety. It leaves it a little poor in one Plutarchian quality, the presentation of intimate traits of character." Allan Nevins
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:708 F 8 '30 1300w

Sat R of Lit 7:44 Ag 9 '30 180w

Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 6 '30 780w

"In these readable, learned and pious pages Dr. Bruce has reminded us of the great roll of names which Virginia can boast and in which she can take such unadulterated pride."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p244 Mr 20 '30 650w

BRUERE, MARTHA S. (BENSLEY) (MRS ROBERT WALTER BRUERE). Sparky-for-short. 85p il $2 Coward-McCann
30-24635

Story of the adventures of Bo and his sister Jane with Sparky, the boy who came in over the radio, but who later turned into a real boy.

"An excellent story for the mechanical-minded modern youngster."
+ Bookm 72:xxvii N '30 50w

BRUERE, M. S.—Continued

Reviewed by Elizabeth Culbert

Books p8 S 14 '30 750w

"The book is well written and never banal—as so many instructive books for children often are; perhaps it is the high touch of fantasy that carries the tale along. But it is also full of fact and information, and yet these bits of knowledge are not at all dry-as-dust. In short, it will be an excellent book for harassed, unscientific mothers to read to children possessed of an 'insatiable' curiosity. The scissored illustrations, white on black, are agile, fanciful, and full of swift motion; always the paper portraits of ideas rather than the more concrete flesh and blood." A. Van L. Carrick

+ Sat R of Lit 7:330 N 15 '30 400w

Reviewed by Beulah Amidon

Survey 65:341 D 15 '30 30w

BRULLER, JEAN. 21 delightful ways of committing suicide; for the use of persons who are discouraged or disgusted with life for reasons which do not really concern us; pref. by Corey Ford. [56]p pl $2 Covici

817 30-4019

"Do you like bread pudding? Do you wear one glove and carry the other? Do you take your unfinished cocktail in with you to dinner? Do you use asparagus tongs? An affirmative answer to any of these questions—according to Corey Ford, who introduces the Bruller text and drawings—makes you a logical candidate for one of the twenty-one methods. Some of the instructions are very merry. The accompanying drawings are highly colored and some of them are rather unpalatable."—Books

Bookm 71:xviii Mr '30 100w

Books p10 Mr 23 '30 120w

Reviewed by Mary Poore

N Y Times p15 Jl 20 '30 400w

"The illustrations by Jean Bruller done in color, in a manner reminiscent of Dr. Syntax are extremely clever; and some of them are tremendously funny. And to us, some of them just aren't. The effects of strangulation, immersion and decomposition are, it seems to us rather difficult to make pictorially amusing. But Corey Ford's preface, reprinted from Vanity Fair is funny." W. R. Brooks

— + Outlook 154:269 F 12 '30 100w

BRUNDIDGE, HARRY T. Twinkle, twinkle, movie star! with an introd. by Jesse L. Lasky. 284p il $3 Dutton

927.9 Moving pictures—Biography. Actors and actresses 30-21858

Short biographical sketches of the following moving picture stars: Clara Bow; Gary Cooper; Lupe Velez; John Barrymore; Mary Nolan; Victor McLaglen; Betty Compson; Rudolph Valentino; Joan Crawford; Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.; Mary Brian; Buddy Rogers; Al Jolson; Renee Adoree; Wallace Beery; Charles Farrell; Esther Ralston; Ronald Colman; Monte Blue; Ben Turpin; Hal Skelly; Buster Keaton; Mae Busch; Lon Chaney; Norma Shearer; William Powell; Lily Damita; George O'Brien; Maurice Chevalier; Richard Dix; George Bancroft.

"Excellent photographic portraits."

+ Bookm 72:xxvi S '30 30w

"With this warning in mind [that you get out of Hollywood the stories Hollywood wants you to have], you may still find Mr. Brundidge's breathless tabloid biographies entertaining. There are inaccuracies, discrepancies, suppressions here, but the data given are sure to provide an evening's entertainment to anybody who has not already met with much of the same material in the innumerable 'fan' magazines, which are serving the more youthful and naïve members of the motion picture audience so prosperously." F. H. Britten

Books p6 Ag 31 '30 800w

BRUNNER, HEINRICH EMIL. Theology of crisis. 118p $1.75 (7s 6d) Scribner

230 Theology 29-29538

Emil Brunner, professor of theology in the University of Zurich, is one of the original and most noted representatives of the so-called "Barthian school" of theology. This volume is the first definitely designed to introduce English readers to the school's teachings, which, in the opinion of many on the continent, have revolutionized religious thinking.

Boston Transcript p3 Ja 4 '30 600w

"It is an important event that such a competent member of the Barthian theology as E. Brunner has published the lectures which, not long ago, he delivered before American audiences. He is doubtless the most systematic and the clearest thinker of the movement of which he is a leader. This little book gives ample proof of his extraordinary intellectual capacity." Wilhelm Pauck

+ Christian Century 47:304 Mr 5 '30 650w

Churchman p16 Ja 25 '30 600w

"I put this book down, shocked, aggravated, illumined, puzzled, benefited. I have found it as helpful as it is thwarting; as enjoyable as it is disturbing; as sensible as it is the near-ridiculous. There is in this book a strange mixture of conservatism and liberalism, rationalism and irrationalism, criticism and naïvete, speculation and dogmatism. There is enough Calvinism in it to tickle the fancy of Calvinistic orthodoxy, enough Lutheranism to please Lutheran conservatism, and enough else to embarrass both. There is sufficient philosophical insight to gratify the critically reflective mind and enough of the illogical to stir up a hot intellectual fever. There is the warmth of religious fervor in it to comfort the pious and at the same time there is the chill of irrationality to please any agnostic critic. To seek consistency in the point of view requires the closing of one's eyes to patent inconsistencies (especially the discussion of ethics); to expect it, is to miss the whole point entirely." Vergilius Ferm

Int J Ethics 41:120 O '30 1050w

"With charming lucidity and passionate earnestness Brunner presents the point of view of this new school. The uninitiated reader will probably skim its pages without finding anything which seems either very new or very radical. The book is fundamentally a criticism, a very trenchant and compelling criticism of the shallowness and easy-going optimism of much present day Christianity. . . This book of Brunner's, so provocative of thought, so rich in suggestion, so full of zeal and faith, ought to be read by every thoughtful Christian." D. F. F.

+ Living Church 83:200 Je 7 '30 800w

"It is an attack upon liberal Christianity which liberal Christianity must meet. It cannot be laughed off." E. B. Chaffee

+ Outlook 154:270 F 12 '30 100w

BRUSH, KATHARINE (MRS HUBERT CHARLES WINANS). Young man of Manhattan. 325p $1 Farrar [7s 6d Cassell]

30-2051

Toby McLean, sports writer of the New York Star, and Ann Vaughn, movie columnist, meet and in a space of five days marry. Ann, beautiful and much more clever than Toby, makes more money than her easy-going husband. He doesn't like it when she pays a vast accumulation of debts accrued from night-clubs, speakeasys, and fast life in general. Toby has dates with a sophisticated young flapper, Puff; Ann, who has urged him on, becomes jealous. Things go from bad to worse, and a temporary separation follows. Then Ann gets methyl-poisoning from drinking bad bootleg whiskey. While she is slowly recovering, Toby reforms, swears off drinking, writes three short stories which the editors immediately accept for $500 and more each, and produces a novel which the publishers consider a knockout. The book ends on a note of happy reconciliation between the young couple.

"Excellent writing of its kind, for Miss Brush manages to convey the atmosphere of her story with sincerity and ease."

+ Bookm 71:xxv Mr '30 80w

"'Young Man of Manhattan,' perhaps because its background is newspaper life, has a slapstick journalism which lacks the distinction of Miss Brush's short stories. Yet the book triumphs. It triumphs for one quality. And that is its aching reality." V. P. Ross

+ — Books p5 Ja 5 '30 750w

"This story is far and away a better newspaper story than the much-vaunted 'Splendor' of two seasons ago, for it has the breath and life of modern and actual newspaper experience in it. . . In the language of the city room it is a 'swell yarn.'" Karl Schriftgiesser

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 28 '29 1500w

"The point about 'Young Man of Manhattan' is that it is the usual story, but told with such skill and such reality, such sympathy, such gayety of spirit that it immediately assumes the position of being the only authentic story of a young man of the Manhattan press." Fanny Butcher

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p11 Ja 11 '30 750w

"The story has a glamour of the sort that surrounds the flappers and philosophers of Scott Fitzgerald. It is a true glamour, in part, for the youths of Fitzgerald and Miss Brush give life a content of richness which may not be there for older, sadder and wiser people, but which is undoubtedly there for them. But glamour is one thing and a falsification of psychology to make the glamour last is another. Miss Brush prolongs the glamour unduly by falsification."

— N Y Times p6 Ja 5 '30 420w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p15 Ja 6 '30 350w

"This tale of the marrige of a newspaper playboy is told with such swift deftness and humor that it stands out as something more than just another novel about people who live in studio apartments and have impromptu parties, unpaid bills and broken hearts."

+ Outlook 154:71 Ja 8 '30 130w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:23 Mr '30

"An excellent story, well written and breathing the spirit of big city newspaper life and those who live it, 'Young Man of Manhattan' is praiseworthy not only for what it is but also for what it is not. Politics, graft, cub reporters, grouchy editors, scoops and rival sheets are among the things one finds missing and gives thanks for. And yet, in spite of these absent but heretofore essential features, Miss Brush's work is comparable in its field to 'Front Page' of stage fame and that superb short story, 'Deadline.'" H. L. Cail

+ Portland Evening News p5 Ja 7 '30 360w

"One could not ask for anything pleasanter or more entertaining than the opening chapters, while Toby and Ann are still perfectly happy; one would be satisfied if there were no pretence of plot, if these witty people did nothing for three hundred pages but fleet the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world. But if there is to be a plot, it should be worthy of its reckless and unconventional setting; and one cannot say of this story that it is. 'Young Man of Manhattan' is much below the best of Miss Brush's short stories, and will probably be much more successful. One cannot help suspecting that it was meant to be so." Basil Davenport

— + Sat R of Lit 6:652 Ja 18 '30 500w

"In its superficial vein, the story is spirited and readable. One could think of such a narrative having human depth or pungent satire as a portrayal of the minor ranks of professional authorship. But Miss Brush means only to be agreeable and entertaining, and mostly succeeds."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 5 '30 270w

Times [London] Lit Sup p701 S 4 '30 280w

Wis Lib Bul 26:67 F '30

BRYANT, ALFRED T. Olden times in Zululand and Natal; containing earlier political history of the Eastern-Ngũni clans. 710p il $5 (12s 6d) Longmans

968.3 Zululand—History. Natal—History. Zulus. Bantus 30-7875

"Mr. Bryant has spent nearly fifty years in missionary work among the Zulus, and has obtained from their old men and women an immense amount of traditional history, which, but for his interest in it, would have passed into oblivion. With the aid of this information, as well as what has already been printed in scores of volumes, he has produced an extraordinarily full account of the reigns of Dingiswayo and Chaka, the two great chiefs who formed the hundred clans of the Zulu race into a nation which for three generations held unquestioned sway in the country now known as Natal."—Sat R

"This book is an epoch-making study of the Zulu natives and of their early relations with a few white men. Mr. Bryant, an author of a Zulu-English dictionary and an authority on the Zulu language, during an active career of forty-five years has combined the work of the scholar with the life of the missionary. He has succeeded in carrying out his objective of presenting 'a complete conspectus of the earliest known history of the natives of Zululand and Natal'. He has preserved the folklore of the Zulus for the anthropologist, the ethnologist, and other students of primitive man." F. J. Klingberg

+ Am Hist R 36:200 O '30 650w

"The author of this book has spent forty-five years among the natives of Natal and is thoroughly familiar with their lore and history. All his material has been acquired first hand, and one feels that very few of the natives can have as intimate a knowledge of their own culture." R. Linton

+ Am J Soc 36:339 S '30 320w

"The detail of the book, the result of the closeness of the author to his problem, makes it difficult to follow. . . It is unnecessarily involved, it seems to me, because of the manner in which the author presents native names. . . The involved character of the data must be blamed for the involved nature of the result, and we must be grateful for the recognition that tribal history is as worth the study as that of the predatory Dutch, Portuguese and English who overran the land and despoiled the natives." M. J. Herskovits

Ann Am Acad 147:225 Ja '30 500w

St Louis 28:135 My '30

"Mr. Bryant is undoubtedly correct in claiming that his book is 'unique of its kind,' and lays the foundation on which all future Zulu history must be based. . . There is probably no race of equally primitive manners which has yet had its tribal history so completely told."

+ Sat R 148:166 Ag 10 '29 220w

"Years and diligence have made Mr. A. T. Bryant our most erudite interpreter of the Zulu."

+ Spec 143:192 Ag 10 '29 200w

"His theme is the native clans in Zululand and in Natal as they existed before the rise of the Zulu nation. . . Mr. Bryant has rendered a conspicuous service by giving us the ascertainable facts concerning them in Zululand and Natal before their absorption. By doing so he lays the foundation on which all future Zulu history must be written. He brings to the task a sympathy, a wealth of knowledge and a familiarity which are the result of over forty years of close personal contact with the people of whose ancestors he writes."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p675 S 5 '29 1800w

2 BRYDEN, HENRY ANDERSON. Enchantments of the field; chronicles of sport and wild life. 286p il $4 Lippincott [15s Seeley]

799 Hunting. Fishing

A book on various kinds of hunting and fishing written for the sportsman. Chapters on foxhunting, French hunting since the war, hares, falcons, elephants and ivory, trout-fishing in Norway, and sea fishing at the Cape of Good Hope indicate the varied interests of the author.

"It would be a curious taste that could not be suited in H. A. Bryden's 'Enchantments of the Field.' His chapter on American fox hunting is, however, unfortunately merely culled from several works by American authors in whom he puts rather too much faith."

+ — Boston Transcript p5 D 3 '30 200w

Reviewed by Adrian Bell

Nation and Ath 48:sup343 D 6 '30 60w

BUCHAN, ANNA (O. DOUGLAS, pseud.). Day of small things. 312p $1 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Hodder]

30-23085

Kirkmeikle, a quiet village in Scotland, is the setting for this romance. Althea, used to sophisticated London life, finds it difficult to fit into the ways of the sober Scots, but she finally succeeds, and marries a local parliamentary candidate.

Books p28 D 7 '30 150w

Boston Transcript p2 S 24 '30 270w

"This book should have a wide appeal. It is very pleasant and restful."

+ N Y Times p29 S 28 '30 180w

Springf'd Republican p7e S 14 '30 120w

"The gossipers are human and rather likeable, but 'small things' throughout make the book tiresome reading for those who prefer things to happen."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p670 Ag 21 '30 180w

BUCHAN, JOHN. Castle Gay. 317p $2.50 Houghton [7s 6d Hodder]

30-21167

A tale of adventures which took place in the Scottish moors when Thomas Carlyle Craw, famous journalist, was kidnapped at a most auspicious moment and rescued by those intrepid heroes, Dickson McCunn, Dougal and Wee Jaikie.

Booklist 27:103 N '30

"Mr. Buchan writes in any easy pleasing style. He is thoroughly at home with three of his favorite characters and his own Scotch moorland scenery."

+ Bookm 72:xxii S '30 100w

"Mr. Buchan's racing plot provides him with grateful opportunities for satire political, personal and miscellaneous. Our guess is that the author is even now writing a sequel about the restoration of Prince John of Evallonia to the throne of his fathers, and that it will be another adventure knockout." Will Cuppy

+ Books p12 Ag 24 '30 250w

"'Castle Gay' may not be Buchan at his best, but it is good reading, as Scotch as purple heather." J. W. M.

+ Boston Transcript p1 Ag 23 '30 550w

"This is not a good Buchan; it bears too many signs of hasty writing and disuse of imagination. But, even here, Colonel Buchan shows that there are phenomena and persons that he can understand when he chooses."

— + New Statesman 35:474 Jl 19 '30 300w

"This dour Tory novelist is always dependable and entertaining. Moreover, this particular book has fewer corries, gillies, corbies, scaurs and other gaelic peculiarities than is customary with Mr. Buchan, and there is even a decorous love-interest."

+ N Y Times p6 Ag 24 '30 450w

"Buchan writes pleasantly and entertainingly; frequently the story becomes exciting. But Stevenson knew how to omit—and Buchan does not. The story is too long by half." W. R. Brooks

+ — Outlook 155:630 Ag 20 '30 180w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:70 O '30

Pratt p37 autumn '30

"A story which is as good reading as 'Huntingtower,' though it falls short of the fine frenzy of Mr. Buchan's first successes."

+ — Sat R 150:122 Jl 26 '30 200w

"There is much pleasant description of the countryside of lowland Scotland, and a number of engaging characters, some of whom are resurrected from Mr. Buchan's 'Huntingtower' of a few years past. Evidently the author, with truly Scottish economy, is going to use them again in another novel; but that hardly excuses him for letting down the purchasers of this one, who keep expecting something of some sort for three hundred pages, and never get it."

— + Sat R of Lit 7:92 Ag 30 '30 320w

"Mr. Buchan is an excellent yarner, though he has a rather irritating trick of manufacturing situations and a tantalising way of hurtling the reader into a new set of people just as they are beginning to be interested in another set. In spite of this we cannot help being amused by Castle Gay." B. E. Todd

+ — Spec 145:106 Jl 19 '30 220w

"His well-cut phrases; his tactical inventiveness in details; his genuine love for brave men; his disinclination to be bothered with poltroons—all these are exemplified in his new tale and help to make it brisk reading."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p590 Jl 17 '30 480w

BUCHANAN, JOHN JENKINS. Take your own car abroad and find your own Europe; a book of modern independent motor car travel. 372p il $3.50 Pittsburgh ptg. co., 530 Fernando st., Pittsburgh, Pa.

914 Europe—Description and travel. Automobiles—Touring 30-5419

"[An account of] Dr. Buchanan's journey of four months in his own car through Italy, France, Belgium, Holland, England, Wales and Scotland. He found none of the predicted troubles, and kept an expense account that is of sound practical value to anyone contemplating a similar adventure."—Bookm

Booklist 26:308 My '30

"A homespun narrative that is all the better for lacking any pretence to literary quality. It is illuminating in many ways." A. B. Maurice

+ Bookm 71:xxii Ap '30 220w

Cleveland Open Shelf p92 Je '30

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:43 My '30

BUCK, ARTHUR EUGENE. Public budgeting; a discussion of budgetary practice in the national, state and local governments of the United States. 612p $6 Harper

336 Budget—United States. Municipal finance 29-21695

"An exhaustive account of the history and present practices of the budget procedure and methods of national, state and local governments in the United States, with an evaluation of these social methods. Written by the foremost American authority on budgeting procedure. Of greatest value to budget officers, but of interest to all students of public finance or of government."—Wis Lib Bul

"This is an admirable and comprehensive study in financial administration. No other American writing on the subject has been so complete or has shown as adequately the larger problems of administrative statesmanship interwoven with the technique of budget processes." H. J. Reber

+ Am Econ R 20:147 Mr '30 450w

"Mr. Buck's wide range of contacts and his wealth of material are revealed by the abundance of his references to actual budgetary practices throughout the country. He knows what is being done in federal and state budget construction; but he also knows what the budget officers of Berkeley and Boston, of Detroit and Brunswick, Georgia, not to mention the cities in between, are doing. This practice of keeping his discussion in close contact with the realities gives a vitality and reality to Mr. Buck's treatment of the subject which is at once the envy and the despair of the armchair scientist." H. L. Lutz

+ Am Pol Sci R 24:202 F '30 700w

Booklist 26:223 Mr '30

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:32 Ap '30

St Louis 28:96 Ap '30

Wis Lib Bul 26:37 Ja '30

BUCK, FRANK, and ANTHONY, EDWARD. Bring 'em back alive. 291p il $3.50 Simon & Schuster

799.2 Zoological specimens—Collection and preservation. Animals—Habits and behavior 30-24956

For eighteen years Frank Buck has collected live animals, reptiles and birds for zoos and circus dealers. This book tells of his experiences hunting these valuable specimens and bringing them back, alive and in good condition, to captivity. Often his own life has been endangered in the process, but Mr Buck has made a thoro study of his business, and believes in taking no unnecessary risks.

"Mr. Buck acknowledges that he is in business and therefore he does not seek any more danger than is necessary. Such honesty in a book of this type is almost unique. And in spite of it his story is packed with excitement and common sense and a real feeling for animals."

+ Bookm 72:xxii O '30 100w

"Any one interested in animals or actual stories of adventure will find the work of this author good reading, where the completion of one chapter lures one into another. It is an exciting trail. The experiences largely center in India and Malaysia." R. L. Ditmars

+ Books p6 O 5 '30 650w

Nation 131:684 D 17 '30 180w

"A most exciting book. The stories are told modestly, as mere matter of fact and all in the day's work. It is a conversational sort of narrative, as if Mr. Buck were talking it to you off-hand and so, inevitably, it is a bit overstocked with words. But it is vivid and lively and the book can be recommended to anybody who likes being made to sit on the edge of his chair and gasp for breath as his eyes eat up the print to see what happens next." F. F. Kelly

+ N Y Times p13 D 14 '30 1000w

"I am glad that the publishers have let Frank Buck tell this story as he pleased, with an occasional sprinkling of cuss words and tales inclined to be frank. The circus is one of the unexpurgated arts, and a good circus man packs a choice assortment of cuss words in his baggage. I can recommend Bring 'Em Back Alive as a rattling good yarn, but I make the usual reviewer's reservation, which has become necessary since we all fell for Joan Lowell: Believe it at your own risk." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p11 S 18 '30 850w

"If you like animal adventure stories, read his book." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 156:312 O 22 '30 50w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:83 N '30

BUCK, FRANKLIN AUGUSTUS. Yankee trader in the gold rush; the letters of [the author]; comp. by Katherine A. White. 294p il $3.50 Houghton

B or 92 Frontier and pioneer life—California. California—Gold discoveries 30-29653

A book made up of a series of personal letters written by Franklin A. Buck to his sister, between the years 1846 and 1880. At the age of twenty he left his home in Maine to go to California, where he made a better living by trading than by gold-mining.

"His letters, written over a period of thirty years to his sister in Bucksport, are among the most genuine and amusing records we have of pioneer days in California. Buck's Yankee humor was excellently adapted to the portrayal of those rough-living times. . . His interests were universal, and his letters afford us an extraordinarily complete description of California in the fifties, its vigorous, turbulent, colorful society, and its gradual and painful growth from lawlessness to civilization. The letters have been ably edited by Katherine A. White." Margaret Wallace

+ Bookm 72:316 N '30 350w

"You have a book that is a human document and a history, also a first hand record of the Far West in the building, done by a man who writes with simple grace and with no view to publication. You have something as valuable as Pepys's diaries, or as Sewall's journals, or as Barthema's Itinerario or Batuta's Voyages. . . To have written such letters is splendid, to have guarded them is excellent, to have published them without editing is remarkable. Apart from the historical value and the evocation of the romance of the West, the book is thoroughly entertaining." C. J. Finger

+ Books p1 O 26 '30 1000w

"Both as a valuable historical document and an interesting story, the book is a tribute to the tireless energy that carved a new empire out of the wilderness." W. E. M.

+ Boston Transcript p1 N 22 '30 480w

BUCK, MRS PEARL S. East wind: West wind. 277p $2.50 Day

30-10986

A story of the contrast between eastern and western civilization in China of the present day. Two young Chinese of aristocratic families are married; the husband, a doctor, educated in the universities of the West, the wife brought up to revere the age-old teachings of her race. Happiness and understanding come to the wife thru the devotion of an intelligent husband, and the friendship of her brother's American wife.

Booklist 27:207 Ja '31

Reviewed by Guy Holt

Bookm 71:475 Jl '30 180w

"Mrs Buck knows her China intuitively, and it is not necessary to read her biographical notice on the jacket to know that she was born there. And she tells more of contemporary China than a year of newspaper headlines or a shelf of volumes by political minded experts, and tells it entertainingly." Nathaniel Peffer

Books p6 My 18 '30 380w

"Mrs. Buck makes this a tale of absolute distinction. The old mother is a gorgeous creation. Others are of equal brilliance." A. C.

+ Boston Transcript p8 My 3 '30 750w

Cleveland Open Shelf p95 Je '30

"An ordinary, quite mechanical novel, full of plot and sentiment, but empty of any lifelikeness in its characters or significance in its thesis —the clash between modern and traditional China." Isidore Schneider

— New Repub 63:24 My 21 '30 100w

"A novel off the beaten path, and a very good novel, too. Mrs. Buck has written with a fine simplicity and delicacy and charm. One would say 'East Wind: West Wind' was an exquisite book, did not the word, in this connection, so often connote preciosity." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 12 '30 120w

"Only one, who like the author, has lived all her life in China, yet being American still holds to western concepts of romantic love, marriage and the scope of filial duty—only a lover of China, but no convert to her code of family and clan supremacy over the individual, could have written this beautiful novel. . . This is Mrs. Buck's first novel, a striking piece of work; indeed, it does not suffer in comparison with the best of Lafcadio Hearn."

BUCK, P. S.—Continued
+ N Y Times p8 Ap 20 '30 500w

BUCK, PERCY CARTER. History of music. (New lib.) 123p 60c Cape [6d Benn]
780.9 Music—History and criticism 30-26630

This brief history of music marks off the stages in the progress of the art, proceeding backward from the known to the unknown, from the music of the present day to the infancy of the art.

N Y Times p18 Jl 27 '30 220w

"Within this limited compass we find a delightful and informative bird's-eye view of the progress of music back through the ages. . . One of the amazing features of this little book is that it does not contain a single date. History without dates! Imagine the boon. And you realize how smoothly this treatment has been accomplished when you never feel the absence of the mileposts which usually block out the compass of the eras. Here one finds the progress of an art falling naturally and concretely into periods of division and development which have relationship to each other rather than relationship to the centuries." B. W.
+ Outlook 155:189 Je 4 '30 200w

BUCK, PHILO MELVIN. Literary criticism; a study of values in literature. 432p $2.50 Harper
801 Literary criticism 30-3218

Based on a course conducted by the author at the University of Wisconsin, this text analyses the qualities and philosophy of literature, with illustrative extracts from the literature of various countries.

"This is an up-to-date textbook in literary criticism. Professor Buck has read all the recent literature on his subject, he quotes from his authors very well, and he is sensible, since he himself is not an original thinker, in choosing the via media through most of the moot questions of critical theory." G. B. M.
+ N Y Evening Post p11m F 15 '30 100w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:52 Je '30

"The book is obviously meant for use in the classroom, but to the majority of students it is likely to prove more confusing than clarifying. In his effort to synthesize the views of so many critics and philosophers, the author has succeeded rather in obscuring the points at issue." C. D. Abbott
— Sat R of Lit 6:950 Ap 19 '30 400w

"It is offered not as a formal textbook but as a discursive treatise on the different types of literature and the problem of values in literature. In a word, it aims to show why great literature is great. It is a book of well-meditated and instructive discussion, presented with no marked originality of thought and no special distinction of style, but helping the student or general reader to develop the faculty of critical judgment."
+ Springf'd Republican p10 F 15 '30 950w

BUCKINGHAM, JOHN. Matter & radiation; with particular reference to the detection & uses of the infra-red rays. 144p il $3 (7s 6d) Oxford
530.1 Radiation. Matter. Spectrum, Infra-red [30-25966]

This small book sets down an outline of the theory of radiation, and, particularly, of the properties and uses of that group of invisible rays which are known as the infra-red.

"Mr. Buckingham's rambling and pedestrian style makes tedious reading, even where the subject matter is interesting. This is regrettable, because in his two concluding chapters, on the detection and uses of infra-red radiation, the author has a fascinating subject, and much that he has to tell will be new not only to the general reader but also possibly to some physicists. In this part of the book he writes, if not with distinction, at least with authority and knowledge, and he quite obviously knows so much more about the subject than he has chosen to tell us that he whets rather than satisfies our appetite for information. We could wish for more details than he allows us."
— + Nature 126:344 S 6 '30 400w
N Y New Tech Bks 15:34 Jl '30

"The author is to be congratulated on a book which few readers will fail to find both exciting and informative."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p763 S 25 '30 280w

BUCKLER, MRS GEORGINA GRENFELL. Anna Comnena. 558p $8.50 (25s) Oxford
B or 92 Comnena, Anna [29-22248]

"Mrs. Buckler's book is an elaborate study of the most distinguished woman writer of whom Byzantine literature can boast. It deals with all aspects of her work, and endeavors to give both a picture of Anna's personality and an analysis of her work as an historian. . . The book is divided into six main sections: Introduction, Anna as a Personality, Anna as a Character, Anna and Education, Anna as Historian, Anna as Writer."—Am Hist R

"The book has been written with great care and is obviously based upon a great amount of minute investigation and of wide reading in the contemporary writers. Modern investigations are liberally adduced, though certain gaps occur in the author's utilization of Russian literature." R. P. Blake
+ — Am Hist R 35:323 Ja '30 700w

"The present book is an exhaustive examination of Anna from every point of view, the whole being based upon a careful study of all the available sources. As regards form, however, it is difficult to read, because the writer, instead of using the footnotes for the legitimate purpose of citing references, has filled them with disquisitions and quotations, which interrupt the flow of the already crowded narrative. The book could with advantage have been curtailed by the omission of long quotations and the removal of several repetitions. A bibliography and a genealogical table of the houses of Comnenus and Ducas complete this very thorough piece of work." William Miller
+ — Eng Hist R 45:294 Ap '30 650w

"No such detailed study of any single Byzantine author has yet appeared in the English language. From the evidence of the Alexiad Mrs. Buckler has been able to build up stroke by stroke a picture of the Byzantine civilization of the eleventh century. The cumulative effect of this mass of detail is remarkable."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p487 Je 20 '29 1150w

BUCKNER, FITZHUGH, pseud. See Houston, F. F. B.

BUDDICOM, JACINTHA LAURA MAY (CINI WILLOUGHBY DERING, pseud.). Compleat workes. ltd ed 78p $5 Brewer
821 30-11758

A volume of mock pastorals and lyrics which take over the manner and spelling of seventeenth century poets such as Robert Herrick. These short poems, read consecutively, form the quaint love story of Colin and Phyllis.

Reviewed by Charles Divine
Books p15 F 23 '30 130w

"We are glad to welcome this delicate bouquet of sentiment and refined reminiscence and limpid dreaming: it is as the breath of spring meadows to the city dweller." J. R. S.
+ Christian Science Monitor p10 My 17 '30 200w

"These crisp lyrics in the manner of Robert Herrick by a modern Englishwoman are both excellent pastiche and good minor poetry. Deliberately artificial and reproduced in the format and typography of the seventeenth century, they derive a certain integrity as expression from the author's clear commitment to seventeenth-century modes of feeling, and from the fact that she has consciously limited herself to the range of content defined by Herrick." V. McH.

+ N Y Evening Post p6s Mr 1 '30 160w

"This is as pleasant a hoax as has been perpetrated in rhyme since Amy Lowell's vigorous denial of 'A Critical Fable.' Possibly 'hoax' is too sharp a word, for at no time does the author deny anything. . . The conscious archaisms, the tongue-in-the-cheek inversions, the rustic quaintnesses are unforced; in fact, the sprightly ingenuousness might well deceive the specialists in spontaneity. This is not only a charming but an intensely personal book. If the style edges on parody, the 'take-off' is conscious and only adds a bit of ginger to the otherwise mild mixture of sugar and spice."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:908 Ap 5 '30 280w

BUELL, RAYMOND LESLIE. International relations. (Am. political science ser.) 2d rev ed 838p $5 Holt

341 International law and relations 29-20702

A revised and enlarged edition of an able and comprehensive work. An analysis of the problems which stand in the way of permanent peace, and a discussion of the problems of imperialism and of the settlement of international disputes are the main subjects covered by the book.

"The revised edition will be no less warmly welcomed by teachers than was the edition which has already established its position. The absence of bias from the discussion of controversial points, the careful attention to accuracy, the presentation of innumerable facts in a readable narrative, together with the full bibliographies accompanying each chapter, are strong points of commendation." C. G. Fenwick

+ Am Pol Sci R 24:210 F '30 700w

"It is the work of a scholar; it bears the earmarks of carefulness and extensive research; and it is written in the spirit of detachment and impartiality." J. W. Garner

+ Ann Am Acad 148:291 Mr '30 300w

"Mr. Buell, who has been research director of the Foreign Policy Association since he left Harvard University, has now brought up to date the very valuable survey of international affairs which he published in 1925. The revised edition now runs to over 800 pages into which is packed a mass of information which might almost be called encyclopaedic."

+ Current Hist 31:827 Ja '30 170w

"Seems to be the most complete, impartial and stimulating book in its field." J. B. Whitton

+ N Y Times p11 N 24 '29 600w

St Louis 28:65 Mr '30

World Tomorrow 13:348 Ag '30 100w

BUGNET, GEORGES. Nipsya; tr. from the French by Constance Davies Woodrow. 286p $2.50 Carrier

30-7100

The story of an Indian half-breed girl of the Peace River country of Canada, half a century ago, and of her awakening to love and womanhood.

"The book is a genre painting. It is too descriptive, for the most part too inactive, to grasp your emotions or kindle the imagination."

— Books p10 D 15 '29 280w

"To watch this naïve maiden fall in love so simply and naturally, in this age of sophistication, is decidedly refreshing. And if she causes us to regret our lost simplicity, we can, with her, recapture it for a time, in the simple and enchanting pages of her story."

+ N Y Times p6 D 22 '29 500w

"M. Bugnet's tale is both romantic and idyllic, but it has the stiffening of a very realistic natural background, which saves it from the amorphous sentimentality of so many authors who have come to love their Indians not wisely but too well. 'Nipsya' has a clear, upstanding beauty of style and description and ruggedness of characterization, and yet the story is so imbued with the faraway and long ago that it gains a sort of radiance as of the legendary."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:972 Ap 19 '30 280w

BUHLER, CHARLOTTE (MALACHOWSKI) (FRAU KARL BUHLER). First year of life; tr. by Pearl Greenberg and Rowena Ripin. 281p il $3.50 Day

136.7 Child study. Infants. Mental tests 30-28686

The author, a leading child psychologist, records and explains the results of many tests on the normal development of children from birth to the age of twelve months.

Reviewed by Stanley Rypins

Books p14 S 21 '30 400w

"'The First Year of Life' introduces Charlotte Buhler to English readers with one of the most fundamental as well as representative works of the distinguished Viennese authority. Dr. Buhler's book is the result of the most exacting kind of research, carried on at the famous Psychological Institute of Vienna." B. M. F.

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 1 '30 500w

BUHLER, KARL. Mental development of the child; a summary of modern psychological theory; [tr. from the fifth German ed. by Oscar Oeser]. (Int. lib. of psychology, philosophy and scientific method) 170p il $3 Harcourt [8s 6d Routledge]

136.7 Psychology. Child study [30-21526]

The author shows in this study of child psychology how progress is made in the various forms of child activity: speech, thinking, play, drawings and social behavior. The book is especially devised for the psychologist, the parent, and the teacher. Karl Bühler is professor of psychology in the University of Vienna.

"Here is matter for all engaged in the study of mind."

+ New Statesman 35:552 Ag 2 '30 150w

"Although there is much in this study of the child's mind for the parent and the teacher, it is to the philosopher, biologist, and the experimental psychologist that it makes its greatest appeal. Professor Bühler in the course of his experiments, which are such that any intelligent person might conduct without danger to the child, has made many interesting and valuable discoveries; but the great worth of the book lies in its formulation of a method of research which promises results far greater and more important than any yet obtained."

+ Sat R 150:610 N 8 '30 280w

Sat R of Lit 7:507 Ja 3 '31 280w

BUKHARIN, NIKOLAI IVANOVICH. Imperialism and world economy; with an introd. by V. I. Lenin. 173p $2; pop ed $1.50 Int. pub. [6s Lawrence]

331 Imperialism. Capitalism. Economics 30-581

Written during the early years of the war, by the foremost theoretician of Soviet Russia, this treatise is a Marxian explanation of the economic and imperialistic causes of the World war.

BUKHARIN, N. I.—Continued

Am Pol Sci R 24:788 Ag '30 280w

Reviewed by H. W. Laidler

Ann Am Acad 150:301 Jl '30 480w

Boston Transcript p3 F 1 '30 480w

"The essay is a well written, closely knit, economic argument, buttressed by numerous citations from a wide range of economic literature and bristling with statistical information. It is the work of a widely read and well-informed scholar. Written in the second year of the Great War, it necessarily appears somewhat out of focus today, but the author would probably feel the need of less revision, were he to re-write the book, than most of the theoretical writers who attempted at the time to interpret the events of fifteen years ago." W. J. Shepard

+ Current Hist 31:1059 Mr '30 1200w

"This book is a thoroughly orthodox and very able Marxist explanation of the causes of the World War. Being thus more than a dozen years old, it makes interesting reading in view of the subsequent development of the events which the author was analyzing." Hiram Motherwell

+ N Y Evening Post p7m Ja 18 '30 600w

St Louis 28:205 S '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p503 Je 19 '30 180w

BULLARD, ARTHUR. Volcano. 284p $2 Macmillan

30-7302

A young American, Charles Benton, is sent to the West Indies to manage an orange plantation, as he supposes. Owing to the duplicity of his employers he incurs the wrath of the president of the republic and his son. All kinds of adventures follow, involving revolutions, hidden treasure and volcanoes, but Charles emerges safely and with him the beautiful Carmen.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p12 Je 29 '30 130w

"'Volcano' is a story of romance and adventure that will carry the interest of the reader to the last word."

+ Boston Transcript p3 My 3 '30 220w

Cleveland Open Shelf p80 My '30

N Y Times p23 My 25 '30 200w

"First class adventure, swift and well written." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:510 Mr 26 '30 100w

Pratt p37 autumn '30

Springf'd Republican p7e S 21 '30 280w

BULLARD, MRS MARION (RORTY). Enchanted button. 124p il $2 Dutton

30-18647

A humorous fairy tale about a beautiful princess who learned thru adversity to be as kind as she was fair. The harmless dragon who lost the tip of his tale, the detective mouse, the mischievous fairy, elephants, and a giant are among the characters.

"'The Enchanted Button' has entertaining passages, but the method used, that of dealing casually with the wonderful, has become too familiar in children's books." Padraic Colum

— + New Repub 65:24 N 19 '30 30w

"The adventures which ensue are lively and amusing. Marion Bullard's own illustrations for her story have much of the directness and most of the crudities of a child's drawings."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:354 N 15 '30 100w

"Has all the ingredients for a good fairy tale, entertainingly put together."

+ Springf'd Republican p5e Ag 3 '30 80w

BULLETT, GERALD WILLIAM. Germany; with a chapter on German tourism and mountaineering by Anthony Bertram. (Black's new ser. of col. bks.) 195p il $2.50 Macmillan [7s 6d Black, A. & C.]

914.3 Germany—Description and travel

[30-16879]

An entertaining account of a zigzag journey thru Germany taken by the author and two companions. The route included the regions of the Rhine, the Neckar, the Black Forest, Bavaria, Berlin, Hamburg and Bremen.

Booklist 27:152 D '30

Boston Transcript p1 My 10 '30 550w

Cleveland Open Shelf p103 Jl '30

New Statesman 34:750 Mr 15 '30 70w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:74 O '30

St Louis 28:216 S '30

"Mr. Bullett is obviously capable of writing a very fine travel book, but the guide book is not his business. His information about the Rhine, the Neckar, the Black Forest, Berlin, Hamburg and the rest, could be obtained in more compact form elsewhere. The charm of his book is its casualness and humour, and the tourist requires a tutor. However, the book cannot be entirely rejected; it fills one with the hope and enthusiasm which inspire departure, and the chapters on the German national sport of walking, by his colleague, Mr. Anthony Bertram, contain invaluable information." V. S. Pritchett

— + Spec 144:750 My 3 '30 180w

Times [London] Lit Sup p329 Ap 17 '30 70w

BUNDY, WALTER ERNEST. Passion week, day by day; a handbook for ministers, laymen and study groups. 235p $2 Willett

232.96 Jesus Christ—Passion 30-10961

In a handbook written for ministers, laymen and study groups, Professor Bundy follows the events of passion week day-by-day, with running commentary and analysis of the parallel accounts in the synoptic gospels.

"This handbook was not prepared for an evening's reading but for weeks of serious study and the reader should have his open Bible before him, or, better still, Burton and Goodspeed's English 'Harmony of the Synoptic Gospels,' and used in this way the manual is worthy of a wide circulation." S. V. McCasland

+ Christian Century 47:753 Je 11 '30 400w

"As a simple interpretation of the parallel accounts given in the synoptics together with the additions that are found in the Fourth Gospel, it could scarcely be better done. Theological interpretation is at a minimum, and the significance of the facts should easily be grasped by any layman." I. G. Matthews

+ Crozer Q 7:395 Jl '30 180w

BUNSEN, MARIE VON. Lost courts of Europe; ^{2} the world I used to know, 1860-1912; ed. and tr. by Oakley Williams. 308p il $4 Harper [18s Butterworth, T.]

B or 92

"The writer has English blood in her veins and was born in London in 1860, the fourth of eleven children. These recollections of her earlier days in Germany and England wander pleasantly on, tales of Royal state and important young personages with whom she played in Germany contrasting with the country simplicity that she enjoyed in England. Games and lessons, travel and social experiences, the education of life in a big family and an immense connexion, and the good fortune of being thrown with people of intellectual as well as political prominence, filled the diarist's early years happily enough. A visit to the United States of America in 1888 fills a chapter; and the author, who is also an accomplished painter, writes pages on art and artists and her experiences as a journalist and reviewer and novelist."—Times [London] Lit Sup

---

Bookm 72:xxiii D '30 80w

"The entire story pulses with life and the love of living. Marie Von Bunsen has indeed been called 'an artist in life.' The reader of these richly-stored memories will vouch for the aptness of this designation." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p1 D 13 '30 1300w

"She has given us a self-revealing and at the same time an extraordinarily interesting book, in which the most notable chapters are those about the Empress Frederick and of Carmen Sylva, both of whom she knew intimately."

+ New Statesman 36:supxxii N 8 '30 480w

"Being half German and half English and unwarped by prejudice, she could view the passing show of pre-war Europe from an objective, cosmopolitan standpoint which few memoir writers can hope to attain. In addition to all this, she is fastidiously selective in what she sets down; and, above all, she has a really extraordinary capacity for self-criticism." T. R. Ybarra

+ N Y Times p11 D 21 '30 1250w

"Perhaps the most intimate friend of the Empress Frederick, who talked to her frequently of her eldest son, she makes a picture of this able, limited, exacting, disappointed, woman and her surroundings so real and arresting as to make the reader feel that he too has stayed in foreign palaces in all the assured intimacy of a dream, and all the homeliness of a commonplace visit."

+ Spec 145:467 O 4 '30 230w

"Frau Marie Von Bunsen's book, like most memoirs, will repay the reader who does not take too much of it at a time."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p827 O 16 '30 300w

BUNTIN, SUE WALCOTT (STEPHEN BRENT, pseud.). Three half moons. 308p $2.50 McBride
30-16241

"The time of this tale is Florence in 1530. Historically, it is the story of the great rivalry, then approaching its end, between the Medici and Strozzi families. The 'three half moons' of the title form a conspicuous part of the Strozzi coat of arms, and it is the members of that family who are the heroes of the story—in particular, a certain fictitious Gian Giulio, supposedly the illegitimate son of Alfonso Strozzi and a noblewoman."—N Y Times

---

Books p21 S 21 '30 120w

Cleveland Open Shelf p111 Jl '30

"In several important essentials this finely told story of Florence under the later Medicis amply justifies the opinion of its sponsors that the book 'is the best historical novel we have ever published.' . . The entire book is pervaded by an atmosphere of authentic history, and in it is revived with a brilliant, profoundly comprehensive art the still barbaric life of that sensual, glamorous and cruel age." E. C. Beckwith

+ N Y Evening Post p10m My 17 '30 280w

"It is a colorful tale, vivid, dramatic, swift-moving—simply and directly told. It preaches no moral and has no axe to grind. One sets it down thankful that the world is still not too complicated or sophisticated to produce an old-fashioned romance."

+ N Y Times p20 Ap 20 '30 450w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:629 Ap 16 '30 30w

"For a concentrated solution of murder, rape, adultery, intrigue, plot, and counterplot, this novel achieves remarkable freedom from melodrama. It is presented with the grasp of a Maurice Hewlett, and is a piece of Florentine realism that, but for its historical verity (roughly speaking), might read like court romance." C. A. Aiken

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1156 Je 28 '30 650w

Springf'd Republican p5e Je 22 '30 200w

BUNZEL, MADELEINE. Picture book of a big city. unp il $1.25 (5s) Knopf
30-11377

Drawings of things seen in a big city, accompanied by a few lines of description, sometimes rhymed. Planned for little children aged from four to seven.

"No doubt the little girl who saw these pictures drawn and who had a personal interest in their making found them appealing, but for little children in general they are too small and too confused to be attractive. More than that they have an adult quality of humor which consists in presenting every thing in the 'big city' in a grotesque fashion." A. T. Eaton

— N Y Times p16 Ap 13 '30 120w

"It is discouraging to find a book like 'A Picture, Book of the Great City.' Simplicity and directness, the prime requisites for books of this kind, are both lacking. The pages are crowded, and the drawing is clumsy and amateurish. Doubtless the crudities are consciously done on the part of the artist, who perhaps mistakes them for the stylizations of modern art."

— Sat R of Lit 6:974 Ap 19 '30 230w

"The book isn't so big itself, but somehow the whole big city has been squeezed into it. To get it all out is a sort of picture puzzle, a hide-and-seek game, and, like all really big cities, it takes more than one trip through. It seems as though there is always something that managed to escape before."

Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 13 '30 180w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Irwin
Survey 65:340 D 15 '30 100w

BURANELLI, PROSPER. Maggie of the suicide fleet; as written from the log of Raymond D. Borden. 278p il $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

940.451 European war, 1914-1918—Humor, caricatures, etc. Margaret (submarine chaser). European war—Naval operations—Submarine
30-9295

The good ship Maggie had in her prime been the pleasure yacht of a Bromo-Seltzer king. Then, during her decrepit old age, she was commandeered to submarine patrol service, and was the worst ship in that nautical rubbish heap nicknamed the Suicide Fleet. Among the members of her strangely assorted crew were Lieutenant Raymond Borden, from whose log Mr Buranelli has written this humorous account of the Maggie's adventures—or rather lack of them—and Herb Roth, coxswain, cartoonist of the New York World, who has drawn the illustrations for the book.

"The narrative of her misfortunes is good for many hearty laughs. As luck would have it, Herb Roth, a member of the crew, illustrated Lieutenant Borden's story in a properly farcical manner. The whole makes for excellent fun."

+ Books p14 My 11 '30 160w

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 23 '30 600w

Cleveland Open Shelf p102 Jl '30

"The Maggie's war adventure makes a tale as amazing as it is amusing, such a tale as never before came out of any war. It is a comic-strip relief from the horrors and terrors of other war books that seems almost as much of a caricature as do her coxswain's illustrations of her war career."

+ N Y Times p23 Mr 30 '30 400w

"The collaborators who have essayed the task of commemorating the naval career of the decrepit Maggie and of the jolly tars that strode

BURANELLI, PROSPER—Continued
her creaking decks have produced a book in spots boisterously funny, in others merely flat and inane." E. C. Beckwith
+ — N Y World p11m My 4 '30 220w

"It is hilariously funny. To any one who has been a sailor, in particular, will it appeal, for he will have in mind constantly the ideal ship—and the contrast of this Maggie to this fictitious vessel will bring not merely quiet smiles of mirth but cackles and roars of laughter."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:905 Ap 5 '30 450w

BURCKHARDT, JAKOB CHRISTOPH. Civilization of the renaissance in Italy; auth. tr. from the fifteenth ed. by S. G. C. Middlemoore. new ed rev 527p il $12.50 Harper [42s Harrap]

945 Renaissance—Italy. Italy—Civilization [30-26611]

A new and admirably illustrated edition of Burckhardt's famous work on the Italian renaissance. It contains an analysis of the art and trend of thought of the renaissance, and its movements as a whole.

Booklist 26:405 Jl '30

"Instead of aiming at a scholarly comprehensiveness in terms of traditional historical subject-matters, he created from his deep love of the Renaissance man new historical themes. He formulated his own chapters and titles, and was inspired to organize his whole work in terms of his conception of the individual. The vigor and richness of his scholarship are recognizable throughout; it is free from academic formalities, and operates not in compliance with official standards of completeness, but as a powerful, independently directed light on the matters expanded. . . His work is unsatisfactory, however, in the discussion of science and philosophy." Meyer Schapiro
+ — Books p15 Ag 24 '30 700w
Boston Transcript p2 Mr 19 '30 450w

"A book that combines the dignity of scholarship with the beauties of art and architecture."
+ Nation and Ath 46:260 N 16 '29 500w

"Many years have elapsed since Burckhardt wrote his famous book; but it is still read, admired and respected enough to warrant this new expensive edition. The illustrations are admirable in every way; yet it is possible that some of Burckhardt's admirers will still prefer him in a form that does not call for the assistance of a reading-desk."
+ — New Statesman 34:90 O 26 '29 950w

"Dr. Burckhardt's account of the great flowering in European civilization is one of those books which by the masterly use of a great scholarship bring mental enrichment to every reader who undertakes its study. Although some of the halftones leave something to be desired, the pictures are on the whole excellent, especially the two large inserted woodcuts giving views of Venice and Florence toward the end of the fifteenth century. The collotype and color plates are of such superior quality that one wishes they were more numerous."
+ N Y Times p16 My 25 '30 150w
St Louis 28:216 S '30

"A great historical critic pronounced Burckhardt's book the most profound and subtle study of civilization in literature. That was a generation ago and it may be doubted whether the judgment is less true to-day than when it was uttered."
+ Sat R 148:784 D 28 '29 380w

"His book still remains the best and most attractive sketch of the wonderful and yet tragic age in which Italy, at great cost to herself, was not merely creating supreme masterpieces of art but was also transforming Europe's whole outlook upon life. The illustrations are admirably chosen."
+ Spec 144:59 Ja 11 '30 130w
Times [London] Lit Sup p784 O 10 '29 1150w

BURGE, MILWARD RODON KENNEDY (MILWARD KENNEDY, pseud.). Corpse guards parade. 314p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Gollancz]

30-2696

John Merriman found the body of a man in pajamas on the outskirts of Horse Guards Parade in London. The man's grey beard led to his identification as Mr Henry Dill, recently returned from South America to visit his nephew, a young artist. But the beard, on closer inspection of the body, was found to be false. Therefore no one could be certain of the identity of the victim. The Scotland Yard inspector does his best; but it remains for a woman, Merriman's wife, Joan, to solve the problem.

Bookm 70:xxvii F '30 60w

"Though the author's double-jointed ingenuity defeats itself in spots, a considerable surprise awaits the reader in the last chapter." Will Cuppy
+ — Books p11 D 29 '29 100w
N Y Times p24 F 9 '30 100w
Times [London] Lit Sup p578 Jl 18 '29 180w

BURGE, MILWARD RODON KENNEDY (MILWARD KENNEDY, pseud.). Half-mast murder. 319p $1 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Gollancz]

30-20591

The flag on the estate of Professor Paley, scholar of international affairs, was lowered to half-mast prior to the discovery of his murdered body. This fact, together with the presence of a narcotic in the professor's lemonade and an undeveloped film in his camera, furnished the main clues for Superintendent Guest.

"This one is generous with clews, credible in spite of some complications and not too loud." Will Cuppy
+ Books p10 Ag 10 '30 80w

Reviewed by Bruce Rae
N Y Times p17 Ag 10 '30 120w

"The remarkable thing about this story is that the characters in it appear to be human beings. This virtue in Mr. Kennedy's writing even humanizes the police."
+ Spec 144:345 Mr 1 '30 100w

"A detective story pure and simple, with no side-interests at all. It is a skillful piece of machinery. The reader who studies the two plans and sketch on the flyleaves, showing the cliff-top summer-house where Professor Paley was murdered, can rely on two or three hours absorption in the problem Superintendent Guest had to solve: 'Who murdered him?' "
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p169 F 27 '30 130w

BURGUM, EDWIN BERRY, ed. New criticism; an anthology of modern æsthetics and literary criticism. 359p $2.50 Prentice-Hall

701 Esthetics. Literary criticism 30-19365

A collection of essays by leading philosophers, psychologists and literary critics which is intended to serve as an introduction to the new theories of aesthetics. Contents: The new criticism, by J. E. Spingarn; Intuition and expression, by Benedetto Croce; Intuition and art, by Benedetto Croce; Nature and the arts, by Bernard Bosanquet; The nature of beauty, by George Santayana; The hedonistic-moral theory, by E. F. Carritt; The poetic experience, by I. A. Richards; Poetry and beliefs, by I. A. Richards; Art and the ivory tower, by Laurence Buermeyer; Science and theology as art forms, by J. B. S. Haldane; Art and reality, by J. W. N. Sullivan; The artist and psycho-analysis, by Roger Fry; Autobiography and the novel, by Ramon Fernandez; On classicism, by Ramon Fernandez; The problem of aesthetic form, by D. H. Parker; Tradition and the individual talent, by T. S. Eliot; The arts of form, by Oswald Spengler; Of civilization, by Elie Faure; James Joyce, by Edwin Muir. Bibliography.

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 27 '30 250w

"Here is an admirable anthology of modern aesthetics and literary criticism, including essays from all the important modern critics of literature. . . Mr. Burgum's selection of essays is excellent: we find all the important modern aestheticians included. . . The editor has, moreover, given in his introduction a very valuable review of the history of criticism and of the methods once employed in contrast with those used at present. Such an anthology as this has been needed for some time to make this material more easy of access." E. L. Walton

+ Nation 131:408 O 15 '30 320w

St Louis 28:265 N '30

BURKE, THOMAS. English inn; [introd. by A. P. Herbert]. (English heritage ser.) 175p $1.40 (3s 6d) Longmans

914.2 Hotels, taverns, etc.—England [30-15930]

The history and development of the English inn thru ten centuries, recounting its various forms of the ordinary, coffee-house, and pub; its reactions to the influence of pilgrimages, stage coach travel, railways, the automobile, and looking forward to the day of the airplane at the inn. There are numerous anecdotes of famous inns and inn murders, the tricks of landlords and a list of quaint inn signs. The final chapter is on the inns of the present and future.

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice
Bookm 72:xiii S '30 220w

"Another volume in the 'English Heritage' series, and as good as the others—which is saying enough. One can scarcely be said to know England, either past or present, who does not know English inns. This author knows them, in gross and in detail. Avoiding the sloppy sentimentality which gushes about their 'quaintness,' he reveals the place of the inn in the history and life of England, and the charm both of that life and of the inns themselves inevitably appears."

+ Christian Century 47:1015 Ag 20 '30 100w

Reviewed by J. B. S. Bennett
Nation and Ath 47:707 S 6 '30 120w

"There is, by some odd chance, more gusto in Mr. Burke's last chapter than in all the rest of his book, and that chapter is devoted to attack; and those readers who are not English to the brisket will find those pages the most congenial and convincing in the book." R. E. Roberts

+ — New Stateman 35:277 Je 7 '30 600w

"Mr. Burke's approach to his subject is neither literary nor sentimental, and whether one expects to eat the next time he is in England or merely to become an innkeeper, he can profit from reading the present book." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 9 '30 80w

"If you should run across a little book called the English Inn by Thomas Burke, seize upon it and make it your own, especially if you have taken pleasure in the writings of Charles Lamb, H. M. Tomlinson, Stephen Graham and others who have talked about English ways. . . Thomas Burke has, in fact, said about the last word on English inns." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p11 Ag 21 '30 1350w

"Mr. Burke knows his inns, and he will make you want to know them too." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 156:30 S 3 '30 120w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:14 S '30 80w

St Louis 28:262 N '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p489 Je 12 '30 300w

BURLINGAME, ANNE ELIZABETH. Condorcet, the torch bearer of the French revolution. 249p $2.50 Stratford

B or 92 Condorcet, Marie Jean Antoine Nicolas Caritat, marquis de 30-12399

A study of the life, ideas and theories of Condorcet, the most significant thinker and educator associated with the French revolution. This is the first volume in English to give an account of the man who believed in religious tolerance, world peace, Negro emancipation, women's freedom and suffrage, and international fraternity.

"She had material enough for an interesting talk before the Literary Society of her college; but, spread over 249 pages, that material seems intolerably thin. A labour of love should be painstaking. . . But there is a distinct aura of vagueness and inaccuracy throughout, and some of the mistakes are of an extreme character." Albert Guerard

— + Books p19 Ag 17 '30 500w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 5 '30 200w

N Y Evening Post p8m Je 28 '30 50w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:14 Jl '30 80w

BURLINGAME, ROGER. The heir. 417p $2.50 Scribner [7s 6d Cassell]

30-10979

The elder John Van Dyle, head of a great chemical works, devotes his life to the task of fitting and shaping his son, John, Jr. to inherit the business. But Johnnie has an artistic rather than a business sense. His father thwarts the boy's ambition to study architecture, and makes it impossible for him to marry the girl he loves; and only at the death of his father does John find release and the opportunity to live his own life.

Booklist 27:27 S '30

"Mr. Burlingame weaves two threads, the one of a business developing through the war and after it, the other of a boy developing beneath his father's regime and after his father's death. The book rides its twofold interest at a steady pace. If there is no moment in which you are inexorably borne away by emotion, there is, at least, no moment in which you loiter behind. 'The Heir' is not a fleet, careening novel. But it has great honesty. It has that soundness which gives you a sense of security." V. P. Ross

+ Books p13 My 18 '30 650w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 25 '30 750w

"Mr. Burlingame has written a painstaking and an interesting study of character in relation to American business, which fails to arouse enthusiasm, but which maintains a considerable high level of style, characterization and workmanship. It is a long book and it is, psychologically, an accurate document. 'The Heir' is the most ambitious and the most successful work of literature which the author has yet accomplished."

+ — N Y Times p9 Ap 27 '30 650w

"A rather long novel, done in considerable detail in the old-fashioned manner, and made thoroughly satisfactory thereby."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:59 Ag 16 '30 300w

Springf'd Republican p7e Je 1 '30 450w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1068 D 11 '30 150w

BURNET, JOHN. Essays and addresses; with a pref. and a memoir by Lord Charnwood. 299p $5 Macmillan [15s Chatto]

824 Philosophy [30-16408]

"Professor John Burnet, of St. Andrews University, Scotland, was one of the best examples of Greek scholarship and of the power of a great teacher. These essays and addresses are fragments of his work. They deal with education in the humanities and with certain problems of Platonic scholarship, the most interesting of which is the Socratic doctrine of the soul."—Int J Ethics

BURNET, JOHN—Continued

"A notable feature is the Memoir by Lord Charnwood. It fills only eighteen pages but it is plainly a labor of love and it is moving in its sincerity and eloquent in its simplicity." F. L. B.
+ Boston Transcript p2 My 28 '30 700w

Reviewed by Paul Shorey
Class Philol 25:390 O '30 1700w

Int J Ethics 40:453 Ap '30 80w

"It would hardly be an exaggeration to say of this memorial volume that if the papers of which it is composed were all that remained to us of John Burnet's lifework we should still know what manner of man he was and what his contribution to the life and thought of his time had been. For apart from Lord Charnwood's agreeable and discriminating memoir which prefaces the book, there is contained in it the gist of all that Burnet thought and preached during his forty years' devotion to the Humanities. Rarely indeed, has a posthumous collection of papers been chosen with such nicety of judgment."
+ New Statesman 34:308 D 7 '29 220w

"It is gratifying to find in these fourteen quite miscellaneous and disconnected essays and papers so large a measure of the essential and individual Burnet."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p994 N 28 '29 1450w

BURNETT, WILLIAM RILEY. Iron man. 312p $2.50 Dial press [7s 6d Heinemann]
30-842

Coke Mason, under Regan's managership, develops into a first-rate middle weight prize fighter. Coke is a roughneck, and dumb, and he has a hopeless, worshipping love for his pretty wife Rose, who is no good—only Coke won't believe that. The story is a progression of Coke's successive victories in the ring, until, as champion, he breaks contract with Regan, who has told him the truth about Rose. Finally, weakened by worry, disillusionment, and lack of training, Coke goes down to defeat before Regan's new hope, O'Keefe.

"This book is not only new, but strong and beautiful. If more men would write like this we should have not only more male novelists (fiction again showing it can deal excitingly with things that are preëminently male), but also more novel readers, male and female." Mary Ross
+ Atlantic Bookshelf p28 Mr '30 180w

Booklist 26:280 Ap '30

"Mr. Burnett's books have a quality rarer than readability (itself a possession rare enough among the 'good' books of the present day): they take such a compelling grip of the reader that he cannot put the story down until he has read it through. That Burnett can cast this spell over his readers—many of whom doubtless pride themselves on being immune to literary hokum—is no accident: he knows his trade. For so comparatively a beginning-author he has a distinctly mature and keen technique." T. S. Matthews
+ Bookm 70:669 F '30 700w

"Undeniably it is an absorbing book that holds the interest to the very end, does not culminate in any placative anti-climax, and does arouse a peculiar if incoherent sympathy in the reader. Yet, I will venture to say, it would be wrong to regard it as creative literature. It is, rather, a calculated effort to which our sentimental and superficial emotions surrender. . . The tragic implications of life are hinted at more than once in 'Iron Man,' and, though the author could not rise to a full—or, rather, impressive—revelation of them that is no reason to ignore the potentiality." Herbert Gorman
+ — Books p4 Ja 5 '30 1100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p61 Ap '30

"Mr. Burnett knows his fighters; he has also studied his Hemingway—possibly too assiduously. Those who like the usual run of prize-fight stories will here find a book that tops the list. But the real prize-fight novel has yet to be written. As a work of art 'Iron Man' is simply not in the running."
+ — Nation 130:224 F 19 '30 220w

New Statesman 35:550 Ag 2 '30 100w

"The book offers an entertaining, safely conducted voyage through rough country."
+ — N Y Times p6 Ja 5 '30 520w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p16 Ja 10 '30 220w

"Burnett tells a rough and tough story well, using a bold poster technique and hard abrupt language. The scenes and characters are full blooded, the dialogue appropriate and realistic. The novel is slight in tone though honest and fresh in conception. It is no more than an expanded short story."
+ Outlook 154:70 Ja 8 '30 250w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:23 Mr '30

"It is less remarkable because it is good, lively, readable, and true than because its author has cared to go outside his real subject in order to bring into the book something more subtle and difficult to do than the portrait of a fighter brought low by his worthless wife after luck and his manager have made him champion. This thing of value is the character of Regan; the champion's manager, whose understanding of his charge is so extraordinary, and whose relation to him is so vital to both that they are ruined by the break which the wife produces between them. Besides this, there are the many fights in the book, magnificently described, if unavoidably a bit repetitious." Theodore Purdy, Jr.
+ Sat R of Lit 6:708 F 8 '30 480w

Springf'd Republican p7e F 23 '30 500w

Times [London] Lit Sup p608 Jl 24 '30 400w

BURNETT, WILLIAM RILEY. Saint Johnson. 305p $2 Dial press
30-24949

Wayt Johnson, ambitious to be sheriff of Tombstone, Arizona, campaigns for law and order in a town of gun-toting bad-men. His younger brother, Jim, gets into trouble, however, and is killed by a Mexican desperado. Wayt goes out for revenge, achieves it, but loses his own fight and, resigning his marshal's badge, leaves for a happier climate. Arizona in the eighties is the setting for the story.

"Despite Mr. Burnett's undeniably veracious data, notwithstanding his masterly use of pathos and suspense, irrespective of his gaunt, iron-jawed he-men, this book is by no means the stirring recital of derring-do it might have been. The formula is too old, too hackneyed. The polychromatic setting and monochromatic characters recall the heyday of the penny dreadful. Mr. Burnett's reach exceeds his grasp. In trying to write an exciting narrative he has sacrificed plausibility to melodrama: we see the strings behind the puppets and the show is spoiled." W. J. Fadiman
— + Bookm 72:175 O '30 480w

"Out where the Western begins. . . You know the rest. Fiction begins; and life leaves off. Not in 'Saint Johnson.' A style arid as the desert? Men without the redeeming love of an Eastern gal? A marshal who enforces law simply from love of order and not from noble motives? Bad men who do nothing worse than get drunk and now and then make off with a cow? All that. Well the real West was like that. . . No heroics. No rhetoric. Not even the author taking sides—except Mr. Burnett's irritating habit of explaining his characters that need no explanation. Men of flesh and blood, and not knights of the movies." Donald Douglas
+ Books p7 O 5 '30 550w

Nation 131:532 N 12 '30 100w

"In its interpretation of characters and motives it does not go very deep, perhaps because it does not need to. But it has these two virtues: it is entertaining and it moves with great rapidity. Few authors write so swiftly."
+ N Y Times p7 O 19 '30 500w

"Though the book presents what seems to be a true picture of frontier life in the early eighties, the same may be said of countless other higher grade 'Westerns,' from which Mr. Burnett's story is in no marked degree distinguished."
— + N Y World p3e O 12 '30 200w
Outlook 156:267 O 15 '30 150w

"In this novel Burnett again shows himself a master of pure narrative. The story makes use of the regular data of western adventure yarns; it differs in its style. The trite phrases are conspicuous, if one may say so, by their delightful absence, and so is the over-use—but not the use—of nicknames and other theatrical wild west machinery. There is a climatic rise of interest based on simple statement and understatement of breath-taking events, relieved by the homely dry humor in the conversation of the characters. 'Saint Johnson' is a convincing story, on the whole, and certainly one of the best in its field." Oakley Johnson
+ Sat R of Lit 7:284 N 1 '30 380w

BURNHAM, BRADFORD. Outboard motor boats and engines; water thrills and sport for everyone. 182p il $3.50 Stokes

797 Motor boats. Boat-building 30-5159

Suggestions to beginners on outboard motors by an authority on motor craft. Mr. Burnham describes the outboard, the principal makes of hulls and engines, materials of construction, method of buying a boat, etc. The latter part of the book contains a number of designs for the amateur builder.

Booklist 26:268 Ap '30
N Y New Tech Bks 15:23 Ap '30

"Mr. Burnham has written this book to give the beginner his expert advice and counsel. And he has assembled also much data that those who are no longer beginners will be glad to have in such convenient form."
+ N Y Times p33 F 10 '30 120w
St Louis 28:100 Ap '30

BURNS, CECIL DELISLE. Democracy; its defects and advantages. 217p $3.25 Macmillan [8s 6d Allen, G.]

321.8 Democracy [30-10583]

"Two points only are intended to be emphasized in this book—first, that a positive contribution of thought and action from every member of the Community is needed, if government, industry and social culture are to develop; and secondly, that the common man has many abilities, hitherto unused, from which such contribution could be made."—Pref.

"Dr. Burns has treated a familiar theme, a theme which would seem to offer little scope for originality, with invigorating freshness. If he has brushed aside too casually some of the criticisms of democracy, he has also introduced new factors and emphasized others that have received too little consideration. He peers below the superficial, momentary failures of democratic striving and rests his hope confidently on the operation of obscure, but dynamic, social forces." E. M. Sait
+ Am Pol Sci R 24:771 Ag '30 500w

"As a potent argument for the continuance of democracy, Mr. Burns's book is interesting, and it is attained solely by a carefully measured reasoning process."
+ Boston Transcript p5 Mr 8 '30 250w

"Replete with concrete governmental and industrial data (largely from Great Britain), this book is singularly free from traces of intellectual snobbery. It is graced by an intimacy of insight and an intuitive appreciation of persons and personal relations that is as reassuring as it is extraordinary. Its tone here and there might strike one as too positive were there not such conclusive evidence throughout that the author speaks of experiences with common men and of kinaesthetic rather than of mere literary appreciations of the values thus disclosed. Though teeming with quotable passages, this is one book on democracy singularly free from oratory and quite devoid of bunk." T. V. Smith
+ Int J Ethics 40:437 Ap '30 950w

"Democracy has so many critics nowadays that it is quite refreshing to find an intelligent defence of it. Mr. Burns is a valiant defender, though sometimes the note of apology can be heard in his voice. . . He says many interesting and salutary things about political ideas, but as the book goes on, a certain haziness spreads over it owing to the fact that what ought to be is not always distinguished from what is." Leonard Woolf
+ — Nation and Ath 46:513 Ja 11 '30 280w
New Statesman 34:368 D 21 '29 620w

Reviewed by E. P. Herring
N Y Times p18 My 25 '30 580w
St Louis 28:204 S '30

"Many who have faith in democracy may not be able to go the whole way with Mr. Burns, but everything he writes is well-informed and intelligent, and some of it, such as his observations on the nature of the majority rule, original."
+ Sat R 149:111 Ja 25 '30 700w

Reviewed by Alfred Zimmern
Spec 143:sup859 D 7 '29 480w
Times [London] Lit Sup p937 N 21 '29 1000w

BURNS, EMILE. Russia's productive system. 288p $4 Dutton [12s 6d Gollancz]

330.947 Russia—Economic policy

"A survey of the result of thirteen years of economic organization in Soviet Russia. Its purpose is to describe in detail the present system of production and distribution of food, raw materials, and finished goods; to review the successive stages of development of the system, beginning with the formal nationalization of the land and the expropriation and tentative nationalization of large-scale industry immediately after the Revolution of October, 1917, and ending with the present phase of achievement under the Five-Year Plan: and to show the system actually at work in the case of the oil industry, textile factories, transport, the collective farms, and so on."—Sat R

"On the purely productive side of Russian industry and agriculture Mr. Burns is well informed and illuminating. It is with regard to distribution and consumption that one would have welcomed fuller information."
+ — Sat R 150:533 O 25 '30 850w

"Mr. Burns does not stay to generalize or to interpret overmuch. He has been content to go to original sources and give us a lucid and complete account—the only thorough account of its kind available—of the way in which Soviet industry and trade are run. . . The whole forms a competent piece of work, invaluable for the reference shelf, and at the same time the readable account which the ordinary man often needs and cannot conveniently find." Maurice Dobb
+ Spec 145:sup683 N 8 '30 300w

BURNS, VINCENT GODFREY, comp. Red harvest; a cry for peace. 433p $3.75 Macmillan

821.08 War—Poetry. Peace—Poetry. European war—Poetry 30-7017

"An anthology of poetry embodying the principle of revolt against war. The poems are arranged under headings consistent with the chronology of the War."—Publishers' Weekly

Booklist 26:386 Jl '30

BURNS, V. G., comp.—Continued

"In the selections there is wide range of subject matter and much of the finest quality; also much third and fourth rate poetry along with the first rate. The reader may be interested in having a full case against war, and some of the poorer poems give us moods and ideas which we should otherwise lose; so doggerel and versified propaganda are mixed with much fine poetry." F. E. Hill

+ — Books p26 Ap 13 '30 550w

Boston Transcript p5 Je 14 '30 250w

Reviewed by W. E. Garrison

Christian Century 47:369 Mr 19 '30 600w

"The volume illustrates the best in editorial work; the assembling reveals the widest reading, the arrangement genuine skill." W. R. McNutt

+ Crozer Q 7:409 Jl '30 130w

"A remarkable book. Not only lovers of peace but lovers of poetry will treasure it." Elizabeth McCracken

+ Living Church 84:343 Ja 3 '31 100w

"It is an interesting volume. Here are gathered together the opinions of many sensitive thinkers on the subject of war. The resulting horror, the insanity are all too evident. Gradually the utter devastation of the human soul takes place, as it were, before our eyes. Any one reading this anthology will turn from the subject of war convinced of its evil. Just so is the editor's vow kept, his purpose accomplished." E. L. Walton

+ N Y Times p17 D 21 '30 200w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks

N Y World p5m Jl 27 '30 100w

"An excellent compilation of the poetry of this subject. It is well done; the author has shown good taste in his selections and the whole has been properly indexed. It fills a real need in the growing movement for peace." E. B. Chaffee

+ Outlook 154:592 Ap 9 '30 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:83 Je '30

Poetry 37:169 D '30 80w

"The collection shows, as a whole, a high average of true poignance. . . [It] would be more effective if less verse lacking force apart from propaganda were included."

Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 24 '30 150w

BURR, WALTER. Small towns; an estimate of their trade and culture. 267p $2.50 (10s 6d) Macmillan

630.1 Farm life. Community life. Cities and towns. Agriculture—Economic aspects

29-22969

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Reviewed by C. L. Fry

Ann Am Acad 147:222 Ja '30 520w

Booklist 26:265 Ap '30

Churchman p16 Ja 11 '30 100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p37 Mr '30

"One of the most informing and useful books of its kind that has appeared in recent years."

+ Hist Outlook 21:140 Mr '30 130w

J Home Econ 22:133 F '30 50w

St Louis 28:37 F '30

Reviewed by L. E. Bowman

Survey 63:725 Mr 15 '30 450w

Wis Lib Bul 26:38 Ja '30

BURROUGHS, HARRY ERNEST. Tale of a vanished land; memories of a childhood in old Russia. 336p il $3.50 Houghton [15s Allen, G.]

B or 92 Jews in Russia 30-15271

"'Tale of a Vanished Land' is a book of reminiscences of the old Jewish ghetto in Kashoffka, a little town lost in the forests of Volhynia, as it was at the close of the nineteenth century. Mr. Harry E. Burroughs, its author, has behind him a biography similar to the biographies of numerous other Jewish immigrants in this country: until the age of thirteen he saw nothing but the squalid streets of his ghetto; then, landing penniless in the United States, he sold newspapers in the streets; today he is a successful lawyer and business man of Boston." —N Y Evening Post

Booklist 27:61 O '30

"A sense of quiet nostalgia pervades this book, a lyrical tenderness reminiscent of A. S. Sachs' and of Shmarya Levin's beautiful pictures of ghetto life, and above all a brooding melancholy, a wistful pain." Joshua Kunitz

+ Books p5 Je 1 '30 450w

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 20 '30 450w

"Better than any other single book I know, excepting the very old and voluminous works of Stepniak and Le Beaulieu, it gives a fair and rounded picture of life in the village—more fair, even, than that given by the great Russian writers themselves." A. R. Williams

+ New Repub 64:80 S 3 '30 500w

"His book impresses one by its detail of observation and by an integrity, felt on almost every page, which is rare in a book of personal memories. Its general effect is sombre and moving."

+ New Statesman 35:480 Jl 19 '30 800w

"Mr. Burroughs describes in this book not only the ghetto; he often speaks also of Russian peasants, officials, customs, etc., and of Russia in general. Unfortunately, these passages often are decidedly unsatisfactory, and they considerably spoil the book. The book would be much better if Mr. Burroughs had confined himself to the ghetto of Kashoffka." A. I. Nazaroff

— + N Y Evening Post p4s Je 7 '30 850w

"It is a prose elegy which moves with quiet dignity; like the life which it chronicles, it is simple and touches the heart. Both in cadence and in mood it has much in common with Maxim Gorki's 'My Childhood.'" Rose Lee

+ N Y Times p5 Je 15 '30 1250w

"His vivid memory and his acceptable narrative style make a book full of curious interest and entertainment." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 155:187 Je 4 '30 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:77 N '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:8 Jl '30 30w

St Louis 28:271 N '30

"In spite of the rather monotonous way in which this voluminous book is written and in spite of its lengthy descriptions and sketches following one another without system, it should be read with interest, especially by persons of Jewish extraction." Nicholas Sergievsky

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1205 Jl 19 '30 1000w

"An impressionable infant plainly, but the book does give a conspectus of the superstitions, the ways of life (including the dirt), the simplicity, the patient submission, and withal, the stubborn racial pride which throughout the ages has preserved the soul of the Jew."

— + Spec 145:467 O 4 '30 220w

Times [London] Lit Sup p595 Jl 17 '30 350w

BURROWS, ELIZABETH. Judy of the Whale gates. (Junior bks.) 296p il $2 Doubleday, Doran

30-10976

The story of Judy Ivanoff, daughter of a Russian exile, living in luxurious solitude on one of the Aleutian islands, and of the excitement caused by her guardian's attempt to have her brought back to civilization.

"'Judy of the Whale Gates' is as unreal as 'Undine,' although far less imaginative. It is as sentimental as a tale of the nineteenth century, although that quality is disguised by brisk conversation, up-to-date slang, motor yachts and an airplane rescue. By way of hot weather reading 'Judy of the Whale Gates' will do no particular harm, but one would want girls from 12 to 16 to read, in order to counterbalance it, other books as well, in which the plot and characters are more plausible and the style less saccharine." A. T. Eaton

— + N Y Times p11 Ag 3 '30 500w

"She evidently knows her north and loves it. I should like to see her some time hang a straightforward account of her own Alaska onto some very simple story, so simple that it becomes merely a matter of human interest. As it is, she gives the impression of having crucified her love and her knowledge on a plot so involved that it defeats its own ends. There is so much excitement in the book that continuity is often lost sight of, and suspense is on several occasions carried beyond the logical breaking point to an anti-climax. But the incidentals are fine." Earl Hanson

— + Sat R of Lit 7:336 N 15 '30 150w

BURTON, BEATRICE PAYNE. Lovejoy. 309p $1 Doubleday, Doran

30-19635

While Lovejoy and Tom were poor they were happy with their tiny house and baby. Then Tom made money. They became members of the cocktail-gambling set of young people, quarrelled, and separated. But neither of them found that they could give up the baby. Reconciliation and the decision to live plainly and honestly, bring the story to its logical conclusion.

Books p12 Ag 31 '30 150w

"This is a wise little tale for discontented wives. They will see their shallow failings exposed to a kindly ridicule—kindly because the author, although never losing sight of her moral, is evidently sympathetic to the yearning for more silk stockings."

+ N Y Times p20 N 2 '30 120w

BURTON, CHARLES W. Cap'n Bailey and the Widder Dyer. 307p $2 Marshall Jones

30-12383

"Further adventures in partnership of Cap'n Bailey and the Widder Dyer, whom radio listeners have already met in various broadcasts." —Boston Transcript

---

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 10 '30 350w

Cleveland Open Shelf p126 S '30

"The book is full of a shrewd, kindly humor and the characterizations are excellent."

+ N Y Times p7 Je 15 '30 230w

BURTT, EDWIN ARTHUR. Religion in an age ^{2} of science. (Religion and the modern age ser.) 153p $1.50 Stokes [5s Williams & Norgate]

215 Religion and science. Science—Philosophy 29-10527

"The purpose of this book is to determine the 'ideal of life' implicit in the scientific attitude and thereby discover a basis of reconciliation between religion and science."—Books

---

Reviewed by John Drummond

Books p13 Ag 4 '29 350w

Reviewed by Shailer Mathews

J Religion 10:424 Jl '30 1250w

"His book has one exceeding great value, above all its other values: it makes unmistakably clear that the reconciliation of science and religion is no easy matter. . . Here is a clear account of one philosopher's prescription for an ailing religion to make it alive and well in a scientific age. The criticisms due from certain quarters are obvious: idealists will not like it, nor fundamentalists, nor the religious liberals who are yet 'hanging on to the hind legs of antiquity.'" Gilbert Loveland

+ Sat R of Lit 6:588 D 21 '29 1050w

Times [London] Lit Sup p916 N 6 '30 100w

BURTT, HAROLD ERNEST. Psychology and industrial efficiency. 395p $3 (10s 6d) Appleton

331.015 Psychology, Applied. Efficiency, Industrial 29-27516

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Reviewed by C. L. Stone

Am Econ R 20:506 S '30 550w

Reviewed by E. R. Hayhurst

Am J Pub Health 20:563 My '30 420w

"The book is well written and is full of interesting suggestions."

+ Am J Soc 35:684 Ja '30 100w

Pratt p10 summer '30

St Louis 28:38 F '30

"Dr. Burtt's work is welcome as a comprehensive study of psychological principles applied to the conduct of industry. It is clearly and simply written and is equally suited to the students of a class and to men of business. The excellent plan of concluding each chapter with a summary of its contents is well carried out."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p51 Ja 23 '30 1100w

BURY, JOHN BAGNELL. History of the papacy ^{2} in the nineteenth century (1864-1878); ed. with a memoir by R. H. Murray. 175p $3.75 (10s) Macmillan

262.13 Papacy. Vatican council, 1869-1870

"In this 'History of the Papacy in the Nineteenth Century,' which is in fact an account of the Vatican Council, Bury sets out with solid precision and the most careful documentary proof the attempt of the Papacy to curtail and limit our intellectual freedom by its dogma of Infallibility. . . The book also contains a short but very sympathetic memoir of Bury, bringing before us the main characteristics of that strangely attractive personality."—Nation and Ath

---

"The work shows scholarship of an unusually high order."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 16 '30 250w

Nation and Ath 47:254 My 24 '30 200w

"It is unfortunate for Bury's reputation as a fair-minded historian that this book should have been published almost simultaneously with Dom Butler's edition of Ullathorne's correspondence. No one but a blind partisan could deny there was much to lament in the conduct of the Vatican Council; but Bury writes with a determined prejudice that almost robs his book of value. The best thing in the volume is Dr. Murray's memoir."

— New Statesman 35:572 Ag 9 '30 250w

"Although well fortified with the documents and literature of the papacy of Pius IX, unlike Abbot Butler, Bury makes little effort to understand the rivalries at the council, but frankly writes as a convinced opponent of Ultramontanism and all its ramifications. His hostile surmises, although many, are not always correct. . . The lectures, however, possess a great personal interest for those who admire the Bury style and scholarship." Walter Littlefield

— + N Y Times p3 Ag 17 '30 300w

St Louis 28:259 N '30

"Dr. Bury's book, which Dr. R. H. Murray edits with a charming memoir, is not a history but his lecture notes on the reign of Pio Nono, not of the other nineteenth-century Popes. The bulk concern the Vatican Council, but though readable and collected scientifically and indiscriminately from all sources, it appears to us a little sketchy and sometimes unfair." Shane Leslie

Sat R 149:823 Je 28 '30 600w

"He over-emphasizes the political side. None the less, his sketch so carefully limned must be read side by side with Butler."

+ — Spec 145:316 S 6 '30 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p403 My 15 '30 200w

BURY, JOHN BAGNELL. Selected essays; ed. by Harold Temperley. 249p $5 Macmillan [12s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

904 History—Addresses, essays, lectures. Byzantine empire—History [31-281]

"More than half the volume is concerned with Byzantine history, in which the author had a European reputation. Of more general interest are Bury's views on the science and method of history. In a witty paper on 'Cleopatra's Nose' he developed his view that historians do well to admit the importance of the individual—Cleopatra or Napoleon or St. Paul, for instance—and that the so-called philosophies of history are usually misleading."—Spec

---

"Students of history and historiography will welcome this publication, of which the varied content is indicated by the headings of its three parts: General Scope and Method of History, Freedom of Thought, etc., Byzantine History. They will find here, for example, the Inaugural Lecture on the Science of History and the Creighton Lecture on the Constitution of the Later Roman Empire, each a masterpiece of clear thinking and lucid presentation, the latter a godsend to teachers of Byzantine history." W. S. Ferguson

+ Am Hist R 36:97 O '30 550w

Reviewed by B. R. Redman

Books p17 O 5 '30 750w

"Everyone who is interested in the purpose and method of history—who wishes to understand what history has become and is becoming—should read these Essays. It is a magnificent theme, and is treated by Bury with a splendid display of eloquence and learning." P. M.

+ Nation and Ath 47:253 My 24 '30 420w

"The present selection from his speeches and public works is sagaciously edited. While Mr. Temperley has devoted the first and third sections of the volume to Professor Bury's theory of history and to his Byzantine studies respectively, he has saved the middle section for two essays on freedom of speech, one of them a singularly acute analysis of the trial of Socrates. These liberal writings, especially the second, which concerns itself with freedom of speech and the censorship during the War, prove, as well as any I have ever read, that it is possible, without raising the voice, to write wisely on an issue which too often enlists thoughtless and violent partisans on both sides." Wallace Brockway

+ New Repub 65:115 D 10 '30 380w

"Dr. Temperley's Introduction could hardly be bettered as a study of one remarkable mind by another. The essays here collected are full of erudition, but are perhaps valuable chiefly as illustrations of Bury's general ideas as they were modified by time and thought."

+ New Statesman 35:572 Ag 9 '30 250w

Spec 144:717 Ap 26 '30 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p521 Je 26 '30 1000w

BUSCH, NIVEN, Jr. Twenty-one Americans;
2 being profiles of some people famous in our time. 332p il $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

920 United States—Biography

Character sketches of twenty-one major and minor celebrities, including Henry Ford, David Belasco, Winthrop Ames, Paul Whiteman, Fanny Brice, Adolph Zukor, Irving Bush, Mr Zero, Earl Sande, and Lou Gehrig.

"While it is easy to catch your attention with one of these character sketches, neatly turned and pointed up, it is no small matter to keep you intent through a whole book of them. This, nevertheless, Mr. Busch accomplishes. Despite the fact that what he calls the 'Great American Fairy Story,' the saga of the self-made man, holds true in almost every one of the lives he has elected to write about, he manages to distil a clear, bright drop of individuality from each, and he manages, with each, to make you believe him."

+ Books p42 D 7 '30 500w

"Sprightly but unofficial biographies. The sketches first appeared as 'Profiles' in the pages of The New Yorker, and are intended to inform readers divertingly of the manners, apologies and achievements of leaders in the building, golfing, theatrical and allied American industries."

+ New Repub 65:200 D 31 '30 60w

"Not all of the profiles are drawn with as much care and depth as Ford's and Belasco's, but each will add something more or less useful to talk that often passes for conversation."

+ — N Y Times p7 D 14 '30 450w

"The Niven Busch sketches make excellent reading. David Belasco has been described many times, but 'The Great Impersonation' may be read to the end with delight, quite forgetting all about representative Americans. The best of the sketches seem to be those devoted to stage or orchestra people—Paul Whiteman, Fannie Brice, Winthrop Ames." Harry Hansen

+ — N Y World p9 D 24 '30 200w

BUSH, CHRISTOPHER. Dead man twice. 309p $1 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Heinemann] 30-32908

Michael France, contender for the heavyweight championship, and Somers the butler are both found dead—the latter with a suicide confession, in France's handwriting, beside him. Detectives Franklin and Travers work together in unravelling the mystery tangle.

Bookm 72:xxvi O '30 80w

"A smoothly written yarn, containing adequate motives and a sufficient number of clews, complete with charts, diagrams and a picture of the fatal mechanism." Will Cuppy

+ Books p23 N 16 '30 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p686 Ag 28 '30 280w

BUSH, CHRISTOPHER. Death of Cosmo Revere. 312p $2 Doubleday, Doran 30-17711

Cosmo Revere, master of Fenwold, meets death while chopping down a tree on his estate. Travers and Franklin, detectives who know something about tree felling (and other matters) are suspicious. Not least among the objects of their suspicion are Revere's fair niece, Leila Fortescue and a benign vicar, Haddowe.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p14 My 25 '30 150w

"At times the tempo seems to drag, at times one's interest flags a little, at times the story becomes a trifle too involved, but if one has a taste for a novel with a mediaeval flavor with a touch of the uncanny, if he has a flair for mysterious damsels, if ancient prophecies and beautiful old houses appeal to him, he will find them all in this tale of the strange circumstances surrounding the tragic death of the last of the Reveres."

+ — Boston Transcript p2 Jl 16 '30 500w

"Another involved, cleverly plotted tale of murder, forgery and other crimes in rural England. . . The book's weaknesses are several unnecessarily tiresome stretches where nothing happens, the dullness of the two detectives—it is almost impossible to tell them apart—and a lack of clarity or vividness in the telling." Dashiell Hammett

+ — N Y Evening Post p8m My 24 '30 130w

BUSHEE, FREDERICK ALEXANDER. Social organization. 356p $3.50; college text ed $2.80 Holt

301 Sociology 30-15505

"A statement of the simpler teachings of social science regarding the outstanding institutions found in the typical community. After the introductory chapters, the subjects dealt with include the economic organization, the family, the state, the administration of justice, the school, the church, recreational organizations, and associations for the promotion of science and art."—Ann Am Acad

"It is not always clear whose standards are being employed in formulating the ideal; the line between the author's wishes and realities is not always clear. Further difficulty in this respect arises since there is scarcely any factual evidence in the book. Many of the statements in the chapters may be true but the student must take them largely on faith. The method employed by the author raises the question concerning the advisability of introducing students to a subject that presumes to be scientific without presentation of scientific data." M. M. Willey

Am J Soc 36:486 N '30 450w

"The point of view from which the book is written is at once liberal and conservative. The emphasis may be said to rest upon the fundamental importance of economic institutions. Sanity and balance pervade the discussions of such topics as economic goods and the gratification of desires and the problem of sexual mating. The clarity of the style and the fundamental character of the topics considered render the book suitable for study by beginning classes in citizenship or social science, as well as by groups of adults who have not hitherto had the advantage of a systematic study of social institutions." E. B. Woods

+ Ann Am Acad 152:421 N '30 270w

St Louis 28:204 S '30

BUSS, KATE. Studies in the Chinese drama. 97p il $2.50 Cape

895.1 Chinese drama—History and criticism. Theater—China 30-10366

A survey of the Chinese theatre—its repertory, music, actors, decoration, costume, symbolic design, etc. Illustrated with several stage photographs of Mei Lan-Fang, the famous Chinese actor. Formerly published by the Four Seas company.

Booklist 26:405 Jl '30

"Miss Buss has her material in a mass which she has not been able to set in order. Her book, short as it is—being but a hundred pages—is hard to read, and much of it is ill-written. It is valuable chiefly because there is no better, and because it is beautifully illustrated with stage portraits of Mei Lan-fang."

— + Nation 131:252 S 3 '30 180w

BUTLER, ALFRED JOSHUA. Sport in classic times. 213p il $5 Dutton [16s Benn]

799 Sports. Greece—Social life and customs. Rome—Social life and customs 30-25284

A treatise on the sports of the Greeks and Romans, and a comparison of these ancient sports with those of today. The author takes up, in successive chapters, the various forms of hunting, fishing and fowling as practiced in classical times.

Boston Transcript p2 N 5 '30 280w

"The arrangement of the material is curious and may be too detailed and wandering for the ordinary reader, too vague and diffused for the student. A certain number of quotations are made directly, in translation, but the greater part is paraphrased, and it is not always easy to distinguish between translation, paraphrase, and the comments and additions of the author. . . The illustrations are not all very well reproduced." Hugh Jacobs

— Nation and Ath 47:448 Jl 5 '30 450w

New Statesman 35:280 Je 7 '30 720w

N Y Times p26 O 19 '30 400w

Sat R 150:378 S 27 '30 650w

"There is not the least trace here of pedantry or superiority; and the hardest-bitten huntingman or dry-fly fisher will not be scared by any bookish pretensions. There is, on the other hand, a slight risk, perhaps, that the serious researcher may think his subjects rather flippantly dealt with at times. He may be shocked to find Mr. Jorrocks referred to more than once or twice."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p455 My 29 '30 1500w

BUTLER, EDWARD CUTHBERT. Vatican council; the story told from inside in Bishop Ullathorne's letters. 2v 300,309p il $10.50 Longmans

262.13 Vatican council, 1869-1870 [30-22961]

The Vatican council, of great importance in the history of the Catholic church, assembled in Rome in 1869. The story of the council is told from the inside in the letters of Mgr. Ullathorne, then bishop of Birmingham, who wrote weekly letters describing and commenting on the course of events and the chief personages.

"This book will be indispensable to all students of ecclesiastical history in the nineteenth century. The various accounts we have in English of the proceedings at the Vatican Council are undoubtedly biassed, and occasionally flagrantly unfair. Dom Butler's careful and scrupulous history is based not only on all previously published sources (including the official account), but also on the letters which Dr. Ullathorne, Roman Catholic Bishop of Birmingham, wrote from Rome to a friend. The temper of these letters is thoroughly honest and fair-minded, and Dom Butler's own summing-up of the historical and theological questions involved is a model of sound historical writing. One cannot say more in praise of this book than that its history is in the great tradition of Lingard."

+ New Statesman 35:160 My 10 '30 120w

"Well-documented, monumental work on the Vatican Council. . . Dom Butler's most academic expositions and conclusions have no taint of the laborious mental process which has afflicted several other writers on the same subject. He has even a fine sense of humor in handling the desperate antagonism of the leaders of the so-called Liberal Catholics, like the Munich historian, Johann Joseph Ignaz von Döllinger, and Lord Acton. The author brings into strong relief, possibly for the first time, the innate seriousness and utter conscientious purpose of the apparently heterogeneous assembly, and he does so with the saving grace of picturesqueness and a lightness of touch that is never flippant." Walter Littlefield

+ N Y Times p3 Ag 17 '30 600w

Reviewed by Shane Leslie

Sat R 149:824 Je 28 '30 480w

Spec 145:316 S 6 '30 150w

"His work is the first one easily accessible to readers in England that gives a really clear and intelligible account of the arrangement of business and the progress of the debates that culminated on July 18, 1870, in the theological definition of Papal Infallibility. This is a high merit, and a higher one still is the rigid impartiality of the narrative."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p403 My 15 '30 1700w

BUTLER, MRS EVA L. Along the shore. 103p il $1.25 Day

591.92 Marine fauna—Juvenile literature. Sea-shore 30-10595

Simple descriptions of the little creatures, flowers and birds found along the shore and in tidepools or on wharf pilings. The author, a former school teacher, works with children in a nature museum at Groton, Connecticut.

Booklist 26:400 Jl '30

"This is a concise and very useful little handbook for the child old enough to prefer his information divorced from story form, or for the amateur naturalist of any age." M. W. Bianco

+ Books p8 My 18 '30 160w

BUTLER, E. L.—Continued
Cleveland Open Shelf p136 N '30

Reviewed by A. T. Eaton
N Y Times p11 Ag 3 '30 120w
St Louis 28:219 S '30

"The text is clear, concise and accurate, and most of the more than fifty drawings are good. . . The book should be in the traveling kit of all the youngsters who are to spend the summer at the beach, and should also prove of value to schools in nature study work."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:906 Ap 5 '30 250w
World Tomorrow 13:348 Ag '30 200w

BUTLER, LORINE LETCHER. My old Kentucky home. 236p il $3 Dorrance
917.69 Kentucky—Description and travel 30-12

Twenty-four articles each having some connection with Kentucky. "Among the articles are chapters about Lincoln, Jefferson Davis, Henry Clay, John Fitch, J. J. Audubon, James Lane Allen, John Fox Jr. Such matters of State interest and pride as the library of Transylvania University at Lexington, with its many treasures of rare books; St. Joseph's Cathedral at Bardstown and its valuable paintings and other objects of art given by Louis Philippe, King of the French. Berea College, its story, its work and influence; the State cemetery at Frankfort, called the 'Westminster Abbey of Kentucky,' and the stories of some of those who are buried there. [There are] chapters which tell about the growing of tobacco, the raising of thoroughbred horses and the cultivation of hemp."—N Y Times

---

"The facts are accurate and everything and everybody are here. The style may not be fashionably lean and sharp, but it is often witty and always human. And who wants a lean, sharp book about Kentucky, anyhow?" Jacqueline Embry
+ Books p16 My 18 '30 320w

"Written in an enviable style of spontaneity, swiftness, and even gaiety—full of picture, full of romance, vitally interesting in content and in personality. There has been careful research behind every fact,—a fascinating personality is this that can so knit these facts together into a complete and beautiful picture as significant as it is beautiful. There are no words but words of praise for this so excellent piece of work." R. C.
+ Boston Transcript p1 My 10 '30 550w
N Y Times p18 F 2 '30 380w

BUTLER, NICHOLAS MURRAY. Path to peace; essays and addresses on peace and its making. 320p $2.50 (10s 6d) Scribner
341.6 Peace. International law and relations. Pact of Paris, 1928 30-28072

The several essays and addresses by the president of Columbia University present his arguments in favor of the Pact of Paris and the renunciation of all war—economic as well as military.

Booklist 27:187 Ja '31

"With the weight of Columbia University and the Carnegie Foundation behind his utterances, which are informed with a vigorous and transparent idealism, winged with learning and with practical experience, his voice has been among the most persuasive of those raised in behalf of active coöperation with other nations in the interests of peace."
+ Bookm 72:330 N '30 450w

"There is nothing new in this philosophy or his identification with it. His book, as a matter of fact, which is dedicated to M. Briand, is not even a fresh exposition of his point of view but a collection of reports and addresses made by him in the last five years and generously publicized on each occasion. But, collected in this manner, they fill out the pattern of his thought and form a coherent unit of distinct value in shaping one's own attitude toward contemporary international developments." W. M. Houghton
+ Books p23 N 9 '30 420w

"Presents in a short form the essential views of a great leader in the field of international peace with their sensitiveness to the contemporary issues over a period of six years."
+ Columbia Law R 30:1084 N '30 200w
Spec 145:730 N 15 '30 200w
Times [London] Lit Sup p1046 D 4 '30 300w

BUTLER, PIERCE, comp. Materials for the life of Shakespeare. 200p $2 Univ. of N.C. press
822.33 Shakespeare, William—Biography—Sources 30-12866

"This volume, which partakes somewhat of the nature of a handbook, is a collection of the most important of the documents and anecdotes, biographies and sketches associated with the great poet and his period. One chapter deals with criticism and his reputation among his contemporaries; another with his personal reputation and social standing; another gives itself over to detailing his property; another discourses on title pages, dedications and records of court performances. At the last there is a summary of church records and inscriptions."—N Y Times

---

"Making accessible in one compact, convenient and inexpensive volume the passages and documents on which our knowledge of Shakespeare's life is based is a work for which much gratitude is due Dr. Butler not only from students but from all intelligent readers. The arrangement, beginning with Rowe's Life and concluding with the church records and inscriptions, is clear and logical."
+ Bookm 71:xxii Ag '30 120w

"The book is one more contribution to the study of Shakespeare, helpful because it is compiled on a plan quite unique, clear and definite."
+ Boston Transcript p3 Je 14 '30 300w

"To readers, teachers and students this little book extends a helping hand and may take the place of a number of source books."
+ N Y Times p28 Je 22 '30 200w
Outlook 155:189 Je 4 '30 80w
St Louis 28:269 N '30

BUTT, ARCHIBALD WILLINGHAM. Taft and Roosevelt; the intimate letters of [the author]. 2v 862p $7.50 Doubleday, Doran
B or 92 Roosevelt, Theodore. Taft, William Howard 30-24328

Letters written by Major Archibald Butt, military aide to both Presidents Roosevelt and Taft, to his sister-in-law, Mrs Lewis F. Butt. His letters written during the Roosevelt administration were published in 1924; the letters here included were written while Taft was president and cover the period from 1909 to 1912, in which year the author was lost in the Titanic disaster.

Booklist 27:100 N '30

"He is honest in his appraisal of character. There is nothing tart in his comments on the weaknesses and contradictions in either Taft or Roosevelt, though he has plenty of sharp things to say about some of many men and women who played lesser roles on the vast stage. Yet he didn't spare the two principals, and one gets a portrait of Mr. Taft in particular that is as intimate and three-dimensional as any ever limned of a President. For this alone these books are worth reading." W. M. Houghton
+ Books p1 S 7 '30 1250w

"No man can ever again attempt to write historically and honestly of the presidential campaign without using these volumes among his sources. But it is well that publication was delayed. From their very affectionate and sometimes unconscious disparagement they would have been better reading for Mr. Taft." S. L. C.

Boston Transcript p2 S 24 '30 600w

Reviewed by W. J. Abbot

Christian Science Monitor p13 S 20 '30 800w

Cleveland Open Shelf p156 D '30

Reviewed by E. F. Brown

Current Hist 33:iv O '30 520w

"Archie Butt's letters are of the first importance. They run from March 7, 1909, to February 27, 1912, and there are 850 pages of them, all of which repay reading. The friends of Taft should be thankful to Major Butt's family for having made them public, for nothing could have served better to convince us of Taft's essentially fine qualities than these letters." L. M. Hacker

+ Nation 131:501 N 5 '30 1600w

"Throughout the tale of this varied performance he shows egotism, pardonable in letters to a relative, but also the personal charm which made him a favorite in Washington. Of the administration he was a caustic critic." R. M. Lovett

New Repub 64:354 N 12 '30 550w

Reviewed by John Bakeless

N Y Evening Post p5s S 6 '30 850w

"Major Butt was not a historian. It would not be difficult to point to instances where he is mistaken in his facts. He was not even a particularly profound observer. But he was honest. He knew that he was living in the midst of events over which historians of the future would deliberate and argue. Peculiarly qualified for his task, since he had served under both Roosevelt and Taft, Archie Butt kept his ears open, made notes of conversations, and reported at length in letters, most of which were written to his sister-in-law." H. F. Pringle

N Y Times p3 S 28 '30 1850w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:78 N '30

R of Rs 82:8 D '30 300w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

St Louis 28:272 N '30

"In Archie Butt's letters, covering the period from the inauguration of Taft in 1909 until the spring of 1912, we get a most human picture of a man out of his element, fighting awkwardly against he knows not what phantoms, battling bravely but foolishly against he knows not what fate. In the Butt letters we see President Taft as he was. And these letters of Major Butt reveal the tragedy backstage so clearly that no enemy of President Taft's could read this story and withhold admiring pity for a man so miscast to play the role which fate assigned to him. Major Butt knew that he was writing a memoir. It was a conscious effort. He says so. He is addressing posterity. He is a Pepys, who knows that he is a messenger boy whose message will be delivered after he is dead. And he has written honestly, as honestly as a man can who has that point of view." W. A. White

+ Sat R of Lit 7:261 O 25 '30 900w

"[The letters] reveal Major Butt as a better Boswell on the more familiar side of his personal relations with President Taft, as earlier with President Roosevelt, than any third president has had in aide or secretary since Lincoln. They also throw much light—the value of which, however, is occasionally open to dispute—on larger questions of presidential policy and particularly on the Taft-Roosevelt break."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e S 14 '30 1550w

"He is revealed in his relation to Taft as a Boswell of distinct ability and sometimes penetrating judgment. But the biographer who eventually undertakes the difficult, yet inviting, task of presenting a full-length portrait of Taft must use Butt's material with care. Although Taft took Butt into his confidence in an extraordinary degree, Butt sometimes professes knowledge he did not possess." Richard Hooker

+ — Yale R n s 20:386 winter '31 850w

BUTTREE, JULIA M. Rhythm of the redman; in song, dance and decoration; introd., art section, by Ernest Thompson Seton. 280p il $5 Barnes, A.S. & co.

970.6 Indians of North America—Dances. Indians of North America—Music. Indians of North America—Art 30-19609

"In her book Miss Buttree lays particular emphasis on the rhythm which the Indian expresses through the mediums of song, dance, and decoration. The book, which is generously illustrated, contains, in addition to a theoretical discussion of the subject, sections devoted to the actual songs and dances of the Indians, giving the songs' words and music and diagrams of the progressions of many of their ritual dances. Another section is devoted to the designs used in Indian decoration showing that the entire theory of their conception is basically rhythmic."—Outlook

Booklist 27:150 D '30

"A book for which camps, schools and collectors of primitive Americana have long waited."

+ Bookm 72:xv O '30 30w

"All who have to do with scoutcraft, Camp Fire Girls, or the organizing of programs for camp life will welcome Miss Buttree's interesting manual of Indian dances."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Jl 30 '30 230w

Reviewed by Bernice Whittemore

Outlook 155:388 Jl 9 '30 120w

St Louis 28:246 O '30

BYRD, RICHARD EVELYN. Little America; aerial exploration in the Antarctic; the flight to the South Pole. 422p il $5 Putnam

919.9 Antarctic regions. Aeronautics—Flights. Byrd Antarctic expedition, 1928-1930. South pole 31-26036

This narrative of the Byrd Antarctic expedition, which takes its title from the base established on the Ross Ice Barrier, is a general account of the expedition, the scientific records of which will be published later. The account of the elaborate preparations, the trip to the Bay of Whales, the building of Little America and its radio towers, the long winter there, the flight to the Pole on Thanksgiving Day—all this is a story of the successful application of radio, aviation and modern engineering to the most difficult voyage of discovery.

Booklist 27:201 Ja '31

"In keeping with the remarkable speed of accomplishment of this latest Antarctic expedition, Admiral Byrd has brought out a 400-page narrative volume within 162 days of his return to New York City. It is essentially, as it should be, a personal narrative in chronological sequence, and the first part presents most vividly the trials and tribulations attending the inception of a great expedition. . . As a zoologist I lament the scant accounts of the animal life. The few paragraphs on penguins, seals and whales are merely tantalizing. But the scientific volumes are promised later and will present the lasting background—the real raison d'être of this glorious adventure." William Beebe

+ Books p1 N 30 '30 950w

Reviewed by W. A. Macdonald

Boston Transcript p1 N 29 '30 2400w

" 'Little America' is one of the most exciting books of our memory, for it records the battle against what has previously been the unconquered almost cosmic force of icy death with the frail forces of man's spirit and his invention. The past always has proved that his spirit was not enough. 'Little America' tells how with the armor of his invention man's spirit has at last conquered the unconquerable." Fanny Butcher

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p13 N 29 '30 650w

Nation 132:22 Ja 7 '31 300w

BYRD, R. E.—Continued

"His account is written in a straightforward, readable style, with only occasional evidence of stuffiness."

New Repub 65:173 D 24 '30 100w

Reviewed by W. B. Hayward

N Y Times p1 N 30 '30 2600w

"Through this admirable tale of a modern, well-equipped, forthright expedition into dangerous lands runs the reticence, the calm, the modesty of its leader, optimistic of results, looking eagerly forward to scientific adventure, and setting down as much about the accomplishments of his men and as little about himself as he consistently could in these pages." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p11 N 28 '30 950w

Outlook 156:667 D 24 '30 80w

"Admiral Byrd has set an excellent example of restraint and simplicity in his book, Little America. . . A record in which the author reveals himself to his fellow-scientists as a trained, skilful and accurate observer and to the general reader as a man possessed by an incurable interest in the works of nature and a genial regard for the more or less fallible human material with which he comes in contact—altogether a thoroughly readable account of worth-while explorations." W. B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 83:8 Ja '31 500w

"Byrd has given us a good book, a record of resourcefulness, initiative, courage, and faith." D. B. MacMillan

+ Sat R of Lit 7:451 D 13 '30 1600w

BYRNE, DONN. Party of baccarat. 212p il $1.25 Century

30-16889

Angela Turnbull, a young American girl, comes to the Riviera with her mother. She loses the entire share of her inheritance at baccarat—and faces the prospect of marrying either the millionaire Greek, Dariano, who can pay her debts, or the poor but honest young American, Morrie, who is in love with her.

Booklist 27:27 S '30

Bookm 71:xi Jl '30 50w

"As in most of Donn Byrne's books, so too in 'A Party of Baccarat,' the description, the picture that he draws, quickens to life, while the spoken action of his characters goes stale. He slashes bright harmonies of color across his pages. A pageantry of people moves before you. Then, when the curtain rings up for a simple act between two people, the picture clouds over, fades away. In place of the tall figures of romance, you see merely a puppet show and the voices you hear come from backstage." V. P. Ross

— + Books p7 Je 1 '30 650w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 18 '30 250w

"'A Party of Baccarat' cannot remotely be classed with Donn Byrne's best work."

— N Y Times p8 Je 8 '30 600w

Outlook 155:270 Je 18 '30 50w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:70 O '30

Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 27 '30 80w

C

CABELL, JAMES BRANCH. Some of us; an essay in epitaphs. ltd autog ed 135p $7.50 McBride

813 American literature—History and criticism. American fiction 30-30201

Critical essays on contemporary authors. Contents: Dizain of the doomed, a note as to amiable agreements; Sanctuary in porcelain, a note as to Elinor Wylie; Shades of purple, a note as to Frances Newman; Remarks in transit, a note as to Willa Cather; Two sides of the shielded, a note as to Ellen Glasgow; Goblins in Winnemac, a note as to Sinclair Lewis; Protégés of the censor, a note as to various writers; About one and another, a note as to Joseph Hergesheimer; Dreams on cosmogony, a note as to H. L. Mencken; Doom of the dizain, a note as to the real trouble.

"I would not come carelessly to the reading of a single line of Mr. Cabell's prose. Rather would I have the house fresh-swept, a fire upon the hearth, the door locked and the choicest cigarettes brought out, before I cut the pages of these delectable examples of the printer's craft (the title-page of 'Some of Us' is particularly harmonious.) But when re-reading has not destroyed that sense of discovery and delight, although it has made more clear the formal limitations, and when I am tempted to discern some measure of wisdom most improbably implied within these pages, I know that I shall never know whether anything of the slightest importance has been said, so beguiled have I been all along by the manner of its saying." Lorine Purette

+ Books p3 N 16 '30 1500w

"It is by the most amusing series of tactical evolutions—retreats, evasions, elaborate flanking movements—that this champion of humane letters has put to rout the enemy and left the beleagured twenties in virtual possession of the field. That in all these operations his progress was lighted with the genial flares of imagination and wit no one could doubt who had seen him at work in 'Beyond Life'—the rare and accomplished critical essay that so auspiciously ushered in the decade of the doomed." J. W. Beach

+ Nation 131:622 D 3 '30 1000w

Reviewed by Louis Kronenberger

N Y Times p2 D 21 '30 1200w

"Mr. Cabell's critical essays on several of his contemporaries are, to this reviewer, far more interesting and readable than most of his recent fiction." F. L. R.

+ Outlook 156:347 O 29 '30 200w

"Despite the perseverance of his twenty volumes, the writing of James Branch Cabell remains unaltered, and is an acquired taste. So also are the pen drawings of Frank C. Papé. If one likes either (and there is some reason to suppose they both command a rapturous public), then one can like both. Something about Eve is a good example of this peculiar combination. Mr. Cabell's prose resembles the turbulent dreams of a precocious adolescent; Mr. Papé's illustrations, notwithstanding their liveliness and furtive wit, remain inadequate in drawing and feeble in design."

— Spec 143:925 D 14 '29 100w

CABOT, ELLA (LYMAN) (MRS RICHARD CLARKE CABOT). Temptations to right-doing. 311p $2.50 Houghton

170 Moral education. Character 30-24478

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:144 Ja '30

J Home Econ 22:220 Mr '30 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:12 F '30

Pratt p8 spring '30

St Louis 28:63 Mr '30

"The book is based essentially upon a positive or constructive point of view, and is therefore in line with the up-to-date principles which tell us to say to the child or young person 'Do' rather than 'Don't.'"

+ Sat R of Lit 6:727 F 8 '30 300w

"Every suggestion of this book is on the constructive side. The teaching of the book is to make the most of opportunity, but no book was ever more fertile in suggestions as to how this can be done." M. P. Follett

+ Survey 63:598 F 15 '30 330w

Wis Lib Bul 26:64 F '30

CADES, HAZEL RAWSON. Jobs for girls. 208p $2 Harcourt

396.5 Woman—Employment. Profession, Choice of. Occupations 30-23809

Practical advice to girls who are prospective job hunters. The author takes up nineteen fields of work in which women have been successful, including tea-room management, dress designing, interior decorating, buying and selling in department stores, professional entertaining, nursing, book selling, secretarial and editorial work.

Booklist 27:138 D '30

"Miss Cades has really provided a volume of advice and counsel on the subject of jobs for girls that is rather outstanding among the many books on this subject. It has more vitality and variety than most of them and it is very up-to-date. Many of the jobs it suggests are standbys in such works, but she considers others that have but recently been evolved out of the necessities of modern business life and she discusses and advises about all of them with an amount of practical knowledge, so many personal instances and such vigor and picturesqueness of style that not only girls seeking jobs but also girls who already have jobs will find her book interesting and filled with values of varied sorts."

+ N Y Times p25 S 14 '30 400w

St Louis 28:290 D '30

CADMAN, SAMUEL PARKES. Answers to everyday questions; introd. by Geoffrey Parsons. 365p $3 Abingdon press [12s 6d Epworth]

170 30-11061

From the questions asked Dr Cadman by his radio audience or by readers of his newspaper forums about five hundred have been selected, and with their answers make up the book. The questions are on a wide variety of subjects: personal problems, family life, religion, theology, science, and literature.

Booklist 27:9 S '30

Books p14 My 18 '30 380w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 14 '30 220w

"Probably nobody since the world began has told so many people about so many things. This volume contains a selection of answers to something like five hundred questions."

Christian Century 47:691 My 28 '30 80w

N Y Times p15 Ag 24 '30 200w

St Louis 28:202 S '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p738 S 18 '30 220w

CADMAN, SAMUEL PARKES. Peace. 71p $1 Dutton

248 Peace 29-21687

Dr Cadman writes of two kinds of peace, material and spiritual. The peace of the soul is his chief concern in this brief inspirational sermon.

Boston Transcript p3 N 16 '29 150w

"A pleasant book for the guest room reading table."

+ Churchman p16 D 28 '29 30w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:14 F '30

Pratt p12 spring '30

Springf'd Republican p10 D 10 '29 80w

CADOUX, CECIL JOHN. Catholicism and Christianity; a vindication of progressive Protestantism; with a foreword by J. Vernon Bartlet. 708p $7.50 Dial press [21s Allen]

284 Protestantism. Roman Catholic church—Doctrinal and controversial works [29-10531]

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"There is no book in English which so thoroughly and so fairly examines Papal Catholicism's claim to be the one and only authentic Christianity." J. L. Adams

+ Bookm 70:682 F '30 330w

"Dr. Cadoux has produced a work which is probably the most important adverse criticism of Catholicism since Salmon's classic treatise on infallibility of forty years ago."

+ Books p19 Ja 26 '30 200w

"This bulky book is intended to achieve the annihilation of Catholicity as a reasonable system. It is, in effect, a valuable exposition of the bankruptcy of Protestantism. It begins with a scrupulously fair statement of the Catholic position. Next, in only a few pages which contain the substance of the book, there is a discussion of the crucial issue—the Ultimate Authority in Religion. The rest, more than half, is a dissuasive of Popery in which every trifling objection that has been raked together by such bigots as Hocking, Horton, Walsh, Coulton, Inge and Bartlet—all of whom are treated as important authorities—is rehearsed ad nauseam." E. H.

— Cath World 130:498 Ja '30 1000w

"Mr. Cadoux has the gift of being frank without being insolent, and writes as one who remonstrates with his friends rather than as one who harries his enemies. The book stands without a rival among recent works in its field, and will probably long continue to engage the attention of those concerned for the outcome of the struggle between reactionary and progressive Christianity." J. T. McNeill

+ J Religion 10:283 Ap '30 780w

CADY, JOHN FRANK. Foreign intervention in the Rio de la Plata, 1838-50; a study of French, British, and American policy in relation to the Dictator Juan Manuel Rosas. 296p $4 Press of the Univ. of Pa. [17s Oxford]

327.82 Argentina—Foreign relations. France—Foreign relations—Argentina. Great Britain—Foreign relations—Argentina. United States—Foreign relations—Argentina. Rosas, Juan Manuel José Domingo Ortiz de 30-5615

An account of the rise and defeat of the two determined efforts on the part of Great Britain and France to interfere in the political affairs of the countries of the Rio de la Plata in the years from 1838 to 1850. The book traces the growth of Argentine independence under Dictator Rosas and explains the position of the United States at that time.

"Dr. Cady has made a notable contribution to our knowledge of an obscure but significant phase of European relations with South America. He has also made a contribution to our knowledge of the international policy of the enigmatical Rosas. This scholarly monograph should be followed by other studies of the intercourse of European nations with the countries of Spanish and Portuguese America." W. S. Robertson

+ Am Hist R 36:211 O '30 550w

Am Pol Sci R 24:520 My '30 200w

"An able and significant study of one of the most complicated series of international episodes in the history of the South American republics, and one till now almost entirely neglected by American historians. The description of the Argentine background is the book's weakest spot, due to dependence upon ill-chosen or antiquated sources of information. And the author seems at times to betray a lack of appreciation of Rosas which may be similarly explained. But the volume constitutes an important contribution, excellently done." C. H. Haring

+ — Ann Am Acad 149:206 My '30 200w

"Mr. Cady's book is obviously a Ph. D. thesis, but it is an important contribution to the history of a confused period. It brings out clearly the crass duplicity of British diplomacy of the period and the recklessness of the French."

+ Books p25 F 9 '30 300w

CADY, J. F.—Continued
Cleveland Open Shelf p102 Jl '30

"The book is not easily read, but it is scholarly and has been carefully prepared; and, in so far as it correlates European and American affairs, and treats South American conditions in the light of European and United States politics, it is a distinct and valuable contribution in the fields of diplomacy and Hispanic-American history." A. C. Wilgus
+ Hist Outlook 21:241 My '30 400w

"As a study of a very curious, complicated and important chapter in diplomatic history Mr. Cady's work is authoritative and final."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p599 Jl 24 '30 1850w

CAESARIUS, of Heisterbach. Dialogue on miracles (1220-1235); tr. by H. von E. Scott and C. C. Swinton Bland; with an introd. by G. G. Coulton. (Broadway medieval lib.) 2v 546;374p $10 Harcourt [36s Routledge]

282 Miracles. Roman Catholic church—Doctrinal and controversial works. Monasticism and religious orders [29-11717]

Caesarius was master of novices in the Cistercian abbey of Heisterbach on the Rhine. His book takes the form of a dialogue between a monk and a novice, wherein the monk relates stories, experiences and miracles intended to strengthen the faith and devotion of the novice. The dialogue takes the neophyte through all the chief phases of his religion, beginning with conversion to the monastic life and ending with the state of the departed.

"Just because he was so perfectly pious and so completely gullible, Caesarius has preserved a body of medieval fable which, intended for the edification of the young, is now both historically instructive and enormously entertaining." W. E. Garrison
+ Christian Century 46:1039 Ag 21 '29 550w

Reviewed by R. A. Newhall
Nation 131:46 Jl 9 '30 600w

New Stateman 32:821 Ap 6 '29 1150w

"His book gives us a picture of his age, the days of the Crusades and of the Coming of the Friars, which bears the stamp of truth; if any of the details are erroneous, the author casts the blame on his informants—and he is scrupulous in giving his sources."
+ Sat R 148:484 O 26 '29 700w

"It is strange that, in spite of the modern interest in mediaeval literature, Caesarius of Heisterbach has waited so long for a translator. He is well known to all mediaevalists, and frequently pilfered for 'good stories' exhibiting either the naïve charm or crass credulity of our fathers in the faith, but there are not many persons who could truthfully say that they have read his book right through. Yet it is a source of the highest importance for an understanding, not only of thirteenth-century monastic life, the habits and main interest of the average monk, but also of the general social history of the period." Evelyn Underhill
+ Spec 142:sup467 Mr 23 '29 900w

Times [London] Lit Sup p564 Jl 10 '30 700w

CAHILL, HOLGER. Max Weber. 45p il $3.50 Downtown gallery, 113 W. 13th st., N.Y.

B or 92 Weber, Max

"A talented American artist, whose art history may be said to epitomize the modernist movement, is given sympathetic presentation in 'Max Weber.' Thirty-two excellent reproductions of paintings, prints and photographs of bits of sculpture accompany the text. The collection gives not only a representative sampling of Weber's work at various periods of his career since he was definitely allied with the modernists but at the same time characteristic specimens of post-impressionism including cubism and the art inspired by study of the naive performances of primitive races."—Springf'd Republican

"From all this excellently organized material there emerges a man and artist almost fictional in the preordained inevitability with which events, ideas, persons appear about and within him at precisely the moment required by the narrative—a rare character with apparently never an error of judgment or taste and always historically on time, so to speak. And we have also a full view of his art." Louis Lozowick
+ Nation 131:251 S 3 '30 420w

"Weber is one of our pioneer modernists. Through all that has been superimposed, as it were, one detects one steadily gleaming inspiration: Russia, the land of Weber's birth. To this even more than to the other sources explored by the artist in his years of study one must turn for an index to whatever may baffle. Mr Cahill furnishes a fascinating picture of the artist's pilgrimage. One who reads this monograph is certain to possess a much clearer understanding than before of the man and his work."
+ N Y Times p25 My 11 '30 220w

Springf'd Republican p5c Jl 27 '30 500w

CAHILL, HOLGER. Yankee adventurer; the story of Ward and the Taiping rebellion. 296p il $3.50 Macaulay

B or 92 Ward, Frederick Townsend. China—History—Taiping rebellion, 1850-1864 30-23928

The picturesque life of Frederick Townsend Ward, who organized the Ever Victorious army afterward led by "Chinese Gordon," furnishes the material for this portrayal. Mr Cahill sketches Ward's Yankee background in Salem and follows him thru his apprenticeship on the sea to the days of the Taiping rebellion in China in 1850. In 1859 Ward organized his famous Chinese army for the defense of the Manchu dynasty, and as reward for his services became a canonized saint in the Confucian calendar.

"It is a book with just the right proportions of novelty, adventure, fact and enthusiasm."
+ Bookm 72:v O '30 80w

Reviewed by F. R. Dulles
Books p13 N 9 '30 750w

Reviewed by E. F. Brown
Current Hist 33:vi D '30 150w

"Holger Cahill's competent and often vivid biography justifies itself by making real and understandable the life of a very brilliant and much-neglected American. . . But the book does another sort of thing and that equally well. It furnishes a much-needed basis for understanding recent Chinese history. The Taiping rebellion was a great upsurging of nationalism and religious fervor. . . Cahill's account of the origin and the nature of the rebel movement is surprisingly lucid and complete. His account of the Salem adventurer is more than merely adequate. He has not woven the two together into a unified book. History and biography interrupt and interfere with each other. But each is here more than ordinarily interesting and valuable for its own sake." Chapin Valentine
+ — Nation 131:586 N 26 '30 650w

Reviewed by John Wheelwright
New Repub 65:78 D 3 '30 850w

Reviewed by Harry Salpeter
N Y World p3e O 5 '30 850w

Springf'd Republican p6 O 6 '30 320w

CAIN, JAMES MALLAHAN. Our government. 241p $2.50 (7s 6d) Knopf

342.73 United States—Politics and government 30-4362

"In a series of dialogues reproducing the thoughts and speech of our ruling gentlemen actually caught in the throes of their Bœotian labors Mr. Cain gives you . . . an objective work of almost sadistic skill. They sit and deliberate, the satraps elected and assigned to the job of governing us and, ostensibly, prescribing our destinies. You seem to be eavesdropping and, though you may not have been actually present, you know the picture is true. . . With Congress Mr. Cain has been brutal. He has lifted bodily a few pages from the Congressional Record, pages devoted to some of the antics of the Hon. James Thomas Heflin of Alabama. . . In other chapters we get similar cruel, satirical photographs of a Governor, a committee of a State Legislature, the capers of eminent counsel, of the bench and the jury at a murder trial, of a school principal, of a county commissioner and some of his subordinates, and so on through various phases of the machinery that governs us." —N Y Evening Post

Reviewed by Louis Sherwin
N Y Evening Post p6s Ja 4 '30 980w
N Y Times p5 Jl 6 '30 340w

"To Cain the processes of government mask a huge joke. These sketches are caricatures, ironic distortions that bring home the inefficiency, the hopelessness, the downright asininity of phases of popular government. And those who might, with some justice, contend that Cain has represented the worst types of public servants are confuted by the chapter labeled 'Congress.' This, perhaps the most ludicrous of all, happens to be an excerpt from the Congressional Record showing Senator Heflin in action. . . The serious framework affects the forcefulness of the book. Presented purely as fiction it would have been much more effective than as a tract." Harry Hansen
+ — N Y World p11 Ja 4 '30 1050w

"Our Government is the truest picture of American politics which has appeared since Frank Kent wrote his scathing analysis last year. It contains just that touch of the Aristophanes which is necessary to act as a preservative and make it as readable and comprehensible five centuries hence as now." John Carter
+ Outlook 154:190 Ja 29 '30 550w
Times [London] Lit Sup p538 Je 26 '30 80w

CALDERWOOD, WILLIAM LEADBETTER. Salmon and sea trout; with chapters on hydro-electric schemes, fish passes, etc. 242p il $5 Longmans [12s 6d Arnold, E. & co.]

639.2 Salmon. Trout 30-17818

Primarily of interest to naturalists and to sportsmen interested in the scientific aspects of the subject, this book on migratory fish deals not only with the life of salmon and trout in river and sea, but suggests what can be done toward the preservation of fisheries from pollution and obstruction.

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:75 O '30

"The book is a very valuable addition to our knowledge of migratory fish, and of the methods, natural and artificial, which have been adopted for their preservation and increase."
+ Sat R 149:426 Ap 5 '30 240w

"Mr Calderwood writes with the temperament of a sportsman who is also an artist. The result is very readable natural history, with practical application to increasing or maintaining the supply of migratory fish."
+ Spec 144:712 Ap 26 '30 250w

"While good books written from the standpoint of the practical angler are as welcome as they are numerous, it is but rarely that readers have an opportunity of gathering the fruits of so wide an experience as that which Mr. Calderwood has enjoyed. His work is therefore exceptionally worthy of attention, while those who desire to go deeper into the matters with which it deals will be assisted by the valuable bibliography of books and papers which is included in the volume."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p245 Mr 20 '30 650w

CALDWELL, FRANCIS CARY. Modern lighting. (Engineering science ser.) 386p il $4.25 (18s) Macmillan

621.32 Lighting. Electric lighting 30-11507

"Presents the theories back of all light sources now in use, discusses various lighting requirements and the application of each type of light to its uses, whether industrial or for home, school, street, display, etc. Standards and codes prepared by the Illuminating Engineering Society are included."—St Louis

Booklist 27:53 O '30
N Y New Tech Bks 15:22 Ap '30
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:72 O '30
Pratt p17 autumn '30
St Louis 28:211 S '30

CALKINS, CLINCH. Some folks won't work. 202p $1.50 Harcourt

331.137 Unemployment 30-30051

The increasing problem of unemployment—lack of work due not to periodic depression but to the inevitable results of machine production—is discussed by Miss Calkins in her sociological survey of New York City and various other industrial centers. The author proves, thru example and illustration, the fallacy of the old statement that "some folks won't work." She takes up the unemployment situation from its human aspect, showing family demoralization and individual breakdown when men willing to work cannot find any job at all.

Booklist 27:188 Ja '31

"'Some Folks Won't Work' is not depressing because it is written with so much verve. The National Federation of Settlements planned and financed this study; the writing was done by Miss Clinch Calkins. Miss Calkins, who is a poet, has none of the graces of the accomplished publicist. But her writing is very much more effective than that of the ordinary publicist because she is vigorous, sincere and brusque. In the very first paragraph of her book she tells her reader that he is probably a smug, naïve old party, with a lot of pet prejudices about the unemployed which she is going to demolish." Winifred Raushenbush
+ Books p25 N 23 '30 1000w
Boston Transcript p3 D 27 '30 300w

"This is a book to make the strong in you want to fight, unceasingly, to put an end to unemployment; but the weakness that is in you will shudder, and fear will whisper many times that perhaps you and yours are not entirely immune." H. H. Allen
+ Christian Century 48:17 Ja 7 '31 500w

"An eloquent polemic against the stupid complacency with which well-placed people regard a phenomenon which threatens the very existence of our civilization: not the phenomenon of unemployment incident to a severe business depression such as the present, but the growing percentage of capable, thrifty, faithful workers who were unable to get jobs during the prosperous period between June, 1928, and March, 1929; the progressive scrapping of human assets incident to the 'progress' of our laissez faire business civilization. Here is a close-up of the widening and deepening labor pool without which our business and industrial diehards say they cannot do business. As a poet, Miss Calkins is well equipped to write a moving appeal to the conscience and good-will of middle-class people who know nothing about unemployment except as a mounting curve on a statistical graph." James Rorty
+ Nation 131:712 D 24 '30 700w

"Because of Miss Calkins' sensitive and skillful treatment of the material, it is possible to know something of the reality behind the term unemployment. What it means in human suffering is so clearly and sharply displayed that it is difficult to believe that anyone who reads this book and is not altogether made of stone can ever again confront unemployment statistics with complacent indifference." M. W. Childs
+ New Repub 64:275 O 22 '30 1150w

CALKINS, CLINCH—Continued

"Not only is Miss Calkins a trained observer, but she knows how to tell her story with excellent effect. Artificial pathos, false sentimentality and meretricious appeal of any sort play no part in her narrative nor in her exposition. Her cases piled on with compelling effect tell the story. That Miss Calkins is known as a poet explains this literary excellence; that she is using the name of the poet to cover a more important one from the standpoint of settlement work is more than a little probable." R. C. Feld

+ N Y Times p1 N 23 '30 1250w

"To cure smugness one should read Some Folks Won't Work. This is a collection of cases of men out of work, real accounts of real people. What do people do as little by little their economic security slips away? What do they sell first? In the order of their self-denials what wants are the last to survive? Painful as these stories are, they are nothing if not revealing." Nels Anderson

+ Outlook 156:429 N 12 '30 120w

"Here are the facts and figures and specific cases which give the lie direct to that old bromide that any man who really wants work can get it. If every thoughtful man and woman in our churches could be persuaded to read it there would be real hope that the remedy for our unemployed millions would be found. We might add that the author knows how to write clear, vigorous English." E. B. Chaffee

+ Outlook 156:709 D 31 '30 250w

"It is the supreme merit of this book that it tells the plain, unvarnished tragedy of unemployment as it works out in the fate of families, in a manner which, while not overstrained, should move the heart of the most complacent Babbitt. . . I am a statistician and I pride myself on being tough-minded, but these stories left me weak with the anguish which always comes from seeing brave souls struggling with impersonal fate. . . If the settlements and Miss Calkins do not cut through the stiff hide of middle-class indifference with these moving chronicles of heroism and human loss, then there is no hope for the improvement of the world by pity. And if large sections of the American public are not stirred to action by this book, then our organized Christianity will have shown itself to be bankrupt of the real qualities of an active compassion. I can only wish that every comfortable family may take the occasion to read this book. If they do and if they have hearts softer than stone, the battle for the reduction of the losses from unemployment will be more than half won." P. H. Douglas

+ Survey 65:166 N 1 '30 500w

"This is one book that deserves the description 'a human document.' There are hungry people here and tired men standing in bread lines and wives at home trying to smile. Miss Calkins has told the story of the unemployed workers as that story was disclosed to the agents of the National Federation of Settlements in a nation-wide survey. She has not burdened the narrative with statistics but she has sandwiched in enough thoughtful generalizations between personal narratives to make her study more than a case record. Her book should be called Six Million People Want Work and Can't Get It." Paul Blanshard

World Tomorrow 14:25 Ja '31 600w

CALKINS, RAYMOND. Jeremiah the prophet; a study in personal religion. 382p $2.50 (10s 6d) Macmillan

224.2 Bible.Old Testament.Jeremiah 30-4593

In his study of Jeremiah Mr Calkins attempts to straighten out the bewildering Bible arrangement of the book by putting the entire material in chronological order. A brief commentary on the text is given and a sketch of the historical background necessary to an interpretation of the spiritual experience of the prophet.

"A thoroughgoing piece of Biblical criticism—and a useful one."

+ Books p10 My 18 '30 380w

"Very carefully the writer has gone through the book of Jeremiah chapter by chapter, verse by verse, and made plain the meaning and their place in the life and experience of the prophet. In the best and most comprehensive sense of the term the result is a readable, informing commentary." T. C. R.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Mr 29 '30 550w

"To the man who desires a working guide to the intricacies of this book of Jeremiah without the impedimenta of distracting details and the annotations of the scholiast, this book will be invaluable. The last chapter on 'The Religion of Jeremiah' is an excellent epitome of the prophet's contribution, and the outline of the book in the appendix enables the wayfaring reader to classify the sections with the successive administrations under which the prophet lived." W. P. Lemon

+ Christian Century 47:431 Ap 2 '30 700w

"The author, who insists on keeping modern technical scholarship at least within hailing distance, has levied heavy tribute on all the important recent writers on this theme. He exercises his right of private judgment as to critical theories and that usually with a prejudice toward the conservative position. No doubt many who do not care to wade through the volumes of Skinner and Smith, will find this book profitable reading." I. G. Matthews

Crozer Q 7:242 Ap '30 200w

"This book shows sound scholarship without being pedantic. It is a very helpful guide to the life of this much misunderstood prophet." E. B. Chaffee

+ Outlook 155:28 My 7 '30 80w

Times [London] Lit Sup p519 Je 19 '30 100w

CALLAGHAN, MORLEY. It's never over. 225p $2.50 Scribner

30-6541

Fred Thompson is hanged for murdering a policeman. The rest of the story shows the effect of his death in disgrace upon his relatives and friends: Isabelle, his sister; Lillian, her best friend; and John Hughes, a friend who before Fred's death had been in love with Isabelle. It is Isabelle who, fancying herself forever degraded, proceeds to indulge in promiscuous love affairs and succeeds, psychologically, in dragging down most of her friends to her own level. When she estranges Lillian and John, and causes the latter to lose his position as a church singer, he wants to kill her, but her sudden death from pneumonia relieves him of the task.

For biographical sketch of the author see Wilson bulletin 3:618 My '29

"The problems involved are very real and are open to significant treatment. But Mr. Callaghan, while sensing the values of his story, fails to resolve them. He fails because there is no modulation of tempo, mood or dramatic inflection. This kills his story. He also fails because he treats his characters—who are rather complex and socially conscious people—exactly as in the past he treated his morons and roughnecks and country louts: as material not for the psychologist but for the behaviorist." Louis Kronenberger

— Bookm 71:219 Ap '30 380w

"If Mr. Callaghan develops as much before his third novel as he has since the flashy 'Strange Fugitive,' he will be one of the most interesting novelists in America. His first novel showed power, a keen reportorial ability and a high sense of drama. 'It's Never Over' adds deep understanding of normal and abnormal human nature, and an unusual technical skill which is so sure that it seems almost instinctive." Thayer Hobson

+ Books p7 Mr 9 '30 850w

"It is not a story for those who want the sugar coatings, nor for bogglers in the literary field. It is a stark, naked tale of purest tragedy, told in terms of truth that leave no question marks in the mind of the reader. It is also not a story for summer, but a drama of the hibernal season, written by a man who feels and senses and is impelled to make a frank and fearless contribution to the literature of these days."

Boston Transcript p10 Ap 26 '30 280w

"In his latest novel Callaghan throws the shadow of a man who died upon the gallows across the life of his protagonist, John Hughes. The story is told in the usual detached, simple, straightforward manner, but the situation that creates the story carries with it a world of complex interrelationships, depending largely upon the fact that the human organism is something more than a given assortment of sexual reflexes. Callaghan never fails to excite your sympathy for his characters; even the minor figures are clearly outlined and convincing. Yet here as always there is a possibility of Callaghan creating something far more important than his self-imposed limitations allow, something well beyond the professional novel patterned in the style of 1930." Horace Gregory
+ Nation 130:399 Ap 2 '30 450w

"All the characters are uninteresting members of the lower middle class. If there were just one character in the story worth remembering it would be a better novel." C. A. C.
— New Repub 62:280 Ap 23 '30 140w

"Mechanically, 'It's Never Over' is an adroit and successful story. Mr. Callaghan proceeds almost mathematically from the simple to the complex, adding and rearranging the factors in his literary equation until the reader attains, in the end, something of the astonished delight which a clever puzzle confers. But his characters never achieve a depth and reality necessary to sustain the subtle and involved motivation. In spite of the stimulating problem which the book proposes, one is completely unconvinced by Mr. Callaghan's treatment, and, by the same token, completely unmoved." Margaret Wallace
+ — N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 15 '30 550w

"It is obvious that such a story, with its tangled, obscure, and often dubious motivation, requires an unusually deft hand. Mr. Callaghan's hand is not deft. He is not sensitive enough, evidently, to pursue successions of states of mind for any stretch of narrative. His prose, too, is singularly leaden."
— N Y Times p9 Mr 9 '30 550w

"The sinister memory of Fred Thompson becomes the real protagonist of a fine psychological study, which, while acknowledging its sombre power, we still believe to be based on an utterly false hypothesis. The manner of Fred Thompson's dying, not the murder he committed, has been made the center of conflict in this novel. We believe this to be a basic error weakening the whole structure of the novel which remains superficial where it might be profound." Mary Shirley
— + Outlook 154:425 Mr 12 '30 320w

"Mr. Callaghan tells this intricate story of neurotics in the same manner as his earlier tales of prize fighters, with an entirely external viewpoint and a studied evenness of tone and lowness of key. . . At first the monotony of sentence structure and careful avoidance of climax have a hypnotic effect, disposing the reader to believe what is related in so matter-of-fact a manner, but before long one grows incredulous in spite of oneself. Mr. Callaghan's style, too, grows positively painful in the longer form. He has apparently imitated the superficial characteristics of Mr. Hemingway's style, the short, simple declarative sentences, generally beginning with the subject, but he has missed the delicate internal modulations (as noteworthy as Milton's variations on the iambic pentameter) with which Mr. Hemingway varies his style. Nevertheless, though one must call 'It's Never Over' a failure, it is the kind of book that shows its author an artist, one who would rather fail at first in a new attempt than repeat an old success." Basil Davenport
— + Sat R of Lit 6:1140 Je 21 '30 500w

CALVERTON, VICTOR FRANCIS. New ground of criticism. (Univ. of Wash. chapbooks) 59p pa 65c Univ. of Wash. bk. store
801 Literary criticism 30-4608

"Mr. Calverton's contention is that literature can never be separated from life, and that the key to the present age is social. The effective critic needs a social and economic background to interpret the writings of his age. . . Literary criticism to-day must be allied with a criticism of civilization"—N Y World

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 29 '30 360w
Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p15 Mr 6 '30 650w

CALVERTON, VICTOR FRANCIS. Three strange lovers; with an introd. by Edward J. O'Brien. 243p $2.50 Macaulay
30-5239

A trilogy of studies, from the psychiatric viewpoint, of the loves of three men. The first of these stories concerns the man who, worshipping beauty and maddened by the transiency of passionate love, kills his young mistress in order to preserve her beauty forever. The second tells of the lover who, wishing to dominate his mistress, drives her away—and then wishes with all his heart to have her back. In the third story a young priest falls in love with a parishioner who comes to confess her adulteries.

"We get from art like Mr. Calverton's a subtle, penetrating, dissolving soul-analysis, which takes the common things of life and its commonest experiences and saturates them with the suggestion of mystery which we all know perfectly well is hovering about us, though for the most part we make desperate efforts to put it behind us and keep it out of sight." Gamaliel Bradford
+ Books p5 F 23 '30 700w

"If Calverton's stories are not wholly satisfactory, the fault lies in their execution rather than their conception—the last story is particularly well planned and dramatically effective. One feels in all of them an acute, highly sensitive intelligence and a fertile imagination at work upon the material. However, one does not feel the pulsing fulness of creation which calls into being rather than describes emotional values. There is, except in the last story, a lack of crystallization in the style, and in all three we stumble upon unintentionally banal expressions."
+ — Nation 130:373 Mr 26 '30 180w
New Repub 63:80 Je 4 '30 480w

"The stories are indeed interesting, moving and of reasonably high quality. Unfortunately I have a suspicion that it is not wise to use one's knowledge of psychiatry as a basis for fiction. Mr. Calverton, fortunately, avoids most of the pitfalls of his method. And all of his stories are good presentations of sexual mania." C. H. Grattan
N Y Evening Post p7s Mr 1 '30 650w
N Y Times p9 Ap 27 '30 450w
Reviewed by Shaemas O'Sheel
N Y World p11m My 11 '30 400w

"The style is characterized by a compact emotional intensity. The author accomplishes the very difficult feat, considering the themes, of maintaining suspense to the end. . . Mr. Calverton is a Poe with a knowledge of twentieth century psychology,—but not quite, as yet, Poe's perfection of style."
+ — Outlook 154:426 Mr 12 '30 200w

CALVERTON, VICTOR FRANCIS, ed. Anthology of American Negro literature. (Modern lib. of the world's best bks.) 535p 95c Modern lib.
810.8 Negro literature—Collections 29-29948

"A collection of fiction, drama, poetry and essays which represents the Negro's achievement in literature. Some material without

CALVERTON, V. F., ed.—Continued
great literary value is included because it is typical and gives the spirit of Negro life. There is an introductory essay, 'The growth of Negro literature.' Brief biographical notes." —Cleveland Open Shelf

Cleveland Open Shelf p38 Mr '30

"This anthology of negro literature in America is interesting for two reasons: it transcends such collections as Countee Cullen's 'Caroling Dusk' in that it is not limited merely to poetry, and it is composed of selections made from a definite and reasoned point of view, the point of view of a critic who sees literature as something very much bound up with social questions."
+ N Y Times p10 Mr 23 '30 500w
St Louis 28:76 Mr '30

"This anthology of Negro writings is the work of a scrupulously sympathetic white man. It is the best of such anthologies and the most diversified, comprising the literature of the folk—spirituals, blues, labor songs—the writings of professionals—short story, novel, drama, poetry—essays by Negroes upon the culture, history, and economics of the American Negro, and lastly autobiography." H. A. Potamkin
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1012 My 3 '30 900w

"On the literary side, the selections are representative: in fiction especially some of the best work of Toomer, Walrond, Rudolph Fisher and Claude McKay is included. But on the sociological side where one would wish the keenest cross-section of Negro thought and opinion, the anthology is not on the whole authoritative. One is not ungrateful for an invaluable handy manual, but the anthology that will finally satisfy must be more of an interpreter and guide." Alain Locke
— + Survey 64:49 Ap 1 '30 550w
World Tomorrow 13:281 Je '30 20w

CALVERTON, VICTOR FRANCIS, and SCHMALHAUSEN, SAMUEL DANIEL, eds. New generation; the intimate problems of modern parents and children; with an introd. by Bertrand Russell. 717p il $5 Macaulay

136.7 Children—Management. Child study. Family 30-12886

Many noted psychologists and educators have contributed to this symposium on the relations between parents and children. The book, in five parts, discusses parents versus children, the child versus civilization, the family romance, potentialities of the child, and education and enlightenment. Among those who contribute to these various aspects of the study are Fritz Wittels, B. Malinowski, Margaret Mead, V. F. Calverton, S. D. Schmalhausen, Sherwood Anderson, Lewis M. Terman, Havelock Ellis, Lorine Pruette, Harry Elmer Barnes and Michael Gold.

Booklist 27:9 S '30
Reviewed by Ruth Benedict
Books p3 Ap 27 '30 1400w
Boston Transcript p4 My 31 '30 750w
Reviewed by J. H. Kendall, Jr.
Current Hist 32:1028 Ag '30 1150w
J Home Econ 22:769 S '30 100w

"The present book, cool, informed, and incisive, has enough dynamite in it to blast the roof from many a home of domesticated stupidity, from many a schoolhouse prison. It is a collection of thirty-two essays by prominent psychologists, educators, and health experts treating the problems of childhood in the light of modern science. It should be kept as a handbook by every earnest parent and every rational emancipated teacher."
+ Nation 131:384 O 8 '30 180w

"I still remain a doubter, unconvinced. The psychopathologist seems to me too cold. I do not think he gives sufficient value to the element of pure emotional friendship in the parent-child relationship. I think, for that reason, it will survive, even when the reading of Œdipus Rex becomes compulsory in every kindergarten. I do not think the evangelists and apostles of Freud will break up our muddled, foolish family life just yet. For besides being cold, they are cumbrous. They have elephantine feet. They will not learn to tread lightly because they tread on our dreams." E. V. Knox
— New Statesman 36:sup x D 6 '30 1300w
Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p13 My 5 '30 680w
Reviewed by F. G. Seabury
Outlook 155:149 My 28 '30 380w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:69 O '30
St Louis 28:201 S '30

"A book, interesting in the main, well written for the most part, but dominated on the whole by rancor against religion, God, Christianity, the home, the family, parents, marriage, monogamy, large families, anti-homo-sexualism, the state, capitalism, civilization, and Theodore Roosevelt. The two papers by Havelock Ellis and Professor Malinowski, on 'Perversion in Childhood and Adolescence,' and 'Parenthood, the Basis of Social Structure,' are noteworthy for many reasons, but particularly because, with the sure touch of genuine scholarship and maturity, they administer considerable reproof to their iconoclastic associates." G. H. Payne
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1093 My 31 '30 1550w
Spec 145:sup890 D 6 '30 1100w
Reviewed by Goodwin Watson
World Tomorrow 13:474 N '30 320w

"'The New Generation' is a collection of more or less conflicting views on the psychology and pathology of childhood. It sketches the child in historical, psychological, and pathological segments, but no attempt is made to put the fragments together to show their relation to a wholesome personality. For those well read in the psychology and pathology of children the essays are highly interesting, but to the untrained layman they show a mutilated picture." E. J. Swift
+ — Yale R n s 20:401 winter '31 620w

CAMBRIDGE history of the British empire; ed. by J. Holland Rose, A. P. Newton and E. A. Benians. v 1. The old empire from the beginnings to 1783. 931p $9.50 Macmillan [35s Cambridge univ. press]

942 Great Britain—History (29-14661)

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"It is probable that in no other single volume is to be found so much that is authoritative on conditions in the first British Empire." G. M. Wrong
+ Am Hist R 35:103 O '29 900w
Am Pol Sci R 24:221 F '30 250w

"The volume is a mine of information about the first British Empire. Never before has it been brought together in so compact and authoritative a form." G. M. Wrong
+ Canadian Hist R 10:259 S '29 1000w
Cath World 130:505 Ja '30 850w

"The work is on a high level, and represents the latest results of historical scholarship. It does not of course escape the inevitable drawbacks of such a system of collaboration in that the contributions are not all of equal value; there is an appreciable amount of repetition, and occasionally inconsistency or contradiction. But the whole presents an extraordinarily interesting picture of the old Empire, as full and detailed as the narrow limits of a single volume permit, and all its more important aspects, naval and military, commercial, constitutional, &c., are reviewed in turn." H. Lambert
+ Eng Hist R 45:129 Ja '30 1700w

"The volume is a mine of information on every aspect of colonization during the period covered. In form and substance it is a credit to both publishers and authors." G. M. Wrong
+ Geog R 20:169 Ja '30 1000w
Hist Outlook 21:180 Ap '30 950w

"The danger to be apprehended from a work of this type is that it may fall between two stools: that it may prove too detailed and not sufficiently inviting for the general readers—or that it may not contribute enough of substantial significance for the specialists. To an appreciable extent, the volume under consideration avoids each extreme of this danger." A. L. Cross

+ Pol Sci Q 45:133 Mr '30 1000w
Pratt p32 winter '30
St Louis 28:79 Mr '30

CAMBRIDGE history of the British empire; v 4, British India, 1497-1858; ed. by H. H. Dodwell. 683p $9 Macmillan [30s Cambridge univ. press]

942 Great Britain—History. anal. India—History (29-14661)

A history of British India from 1497-1858. The author's general purpose has been "to economize as much as possible in the space given to political history in order to provide room for an outline of the development of the administrative system, a subject on which easily accessible information is scanty and inadequate." This volume serves also as volume five of the Cambridge History of India.

"One of the best features of the volume is the vivid and thoroughly human picture which it gives of the outstanding personalities of the period under review. Clive and Hastings, in particular, are revealed in all their greatness and with all their failings. . . The bibliography is very extensive and includes the lists of sources such as manuscripts, printed periodicals, books, and state papers carefully classified and arranged by chapters. There is a useful chronological table, and an index, but it seems very unfortunate that nowhere in the book is there a single map. A series of maps designed to illustrate the separate periods dealt with would have materially improved what is in any case a very valuable book." M. T. Titus

+ Am Hist R 35:851 Jl '30 900w
Booklist 26:196 F '30

"It is a work of scholarship of high order, that weighs evidence carefully, searches motives, seeks a true narrative, deduces conclusions soberly, and passes few moral judgments. It is written to be a standard work of reference, and it succeeds." W. N. Brown

+ Books p1 Jl 6 '30 2050w
Boston Transcript p4 Ja 4 '30 650w
Cath World 131:501 Jl '30 470w

"The volume is probably as exhaustive and authoritative a treatment of politics and administration as will ever be made, but only an experienced student is likely to be able to distil from it its general significances."

+ — Hist Outlook 21:235 My '30 750w

"The book forms a very valuable addition to the available histories of India, and fully maintains the standard of authority of the Cambridge histories."

+ Nation and Ath 46:174 N 2 '29 400w

Reviewed by Charles Johnston
N Y Times p4 F 16 '30 800w

"The volume is suited to those who really wish to inform themselves about the subject, but the style is not popular enough to attract the casual reader. It is, however, most satisfactory to the student of history and of the growing science of world economics."

Sat R of Lit 6:640 Ja 11 '30 250w
Times [London] Lit Sup p909 N 14 '29 1900w

CAMBRIDGE history of the British empire; ed. by J. Holland Rose, and others; v 6, Canada and Newfoundland: ed. by W. P. M. Kennedy. 939p $9.50 Macmillan [35s Cambridge univ. press]

942 Great Britain—History. anal. Canada—History. Newfoundland—History (29-14661)

"Surveys the domestic history of the two Dominions from the time of their discovery. Canada's relations with the Empire and the outer world are mainly reserved for other volumes; but her magnificent share in the War is well and modestly described, and Dr. Rowell contributes a chapter on Canada and the Empire before and after the cataclysm. Much space is devoted to Canada's economic development, and some curious details are given of the immigration into the prairie provinces, which is largely Scandinavian and Eastern European, though the children of the settlers are rapidly Anglicized."—Spec

---

Booklist 27:150 D '30

"The competence of the writers is unquestionable. But, with three or four exceptions, their very success helps to explain why the great public that, half a century ago, read history—Lecky, Macaulay and others—rarely turns now to modern writers. The sense of narrative, of history as good literature, of aspiration and poetry in human motive, is for the time in part suspended. It will come back, and meanwhile such books as this help to create the solid foundation that it will use. This history of Canada and Newfoundland is like a library. It is hard to imagine any one reading it from cover to cover, but many will consult it, and they may do so with confidence." G. M. Wrong

+ — Books p18 O 26 '30 1300w
Current Hist 33:xxiv O '30 220w

"Much in this book will be new and vividly interesting to American readers who are not specialists; we are inclined to think that much will be almost as new to Englishmen, who are as little inclined to study the story of their own colonies as they are to explore the history of the United States. In many ways the appearance of this fine work may be hailed as a literary event." Charles Johnston

+ N Y Times p11 S 14 '30 1650w
Spec 145:194 Ag 9 '30 170w
Times [London] Lit Sup p997 N 27 '30 4200w

CAMBRIDGE medieval history; planned by J. B. Bury; ed. by J. R. Tanner, C. W. Previté-Orton, and Z. N. Brooke; v 6, Victory of the papacy. 1047p $14 Macmillan [50s Cambridge univ. press]

940.1 Middle ages—History

The sixth volume, called the "Victory of the Papacy," deals with the long struggle between the Papacy and the Empire.

"The editorial work is well done. Notes refer, when necessary, to discussions in previous volumes. In this volume the editors have avoided the duplication of events and statements so noticeable in the last volume, where alternate chapters on Germany and Italy covering the same period were entrusted to different hands. There are almost no discrepant statements of fact. Errors in proof reading are few and of too slight importance to deserve mention. As usual there is no uniformity in the matter of footnotes." D. C. Munro

+ Am Hist R 36:105 O '30 1500w
Am Pol Sci R 24:797 Ag '30 150w
Booklist 26:274 Ap '30

"Naturally, in so vast a subject there will appear here and there an inadequacy, a disproportion, a failure of proper emphasis. The significance of both Dante and Aquinas might be more clearly stated, and above all, in our judgment, the chapter on papal and episcopal finance should have been enlarged even if some other chapter had to be shortened. . . Taken all around, however, this volume is a treasure heaped up." W. L. Sullivan

+ Books p10 Ag 24 '30 350w
Boston Transcript p2 Ag 23 '30 480w

"The editors have covered their ground and assembled their team well; they themselves have shown their usual conscientious care; and there probably exists no one volume from which the reader could learn so much concerning the brightest period of that bygone civilization." G. G. Coulton

+ Nation and Ath 46:543 Ja 18 '30 1050w

CAMBRIDGE medieval history—Continued
New Statesman 34:504 Ja 25 '30 900w

"The bibliographies are models of their kind, interminable, meticulously accurate, and neatly arranged. The volume has been skilfully planned."
+ New Statesman 35:626 Ag 23 '30 600w
N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 22 '30 40w

"A volume of the most varied interest—a book which no student of history, however deeply read, can afford to pass over—a book which must take a foremost place in every library of reference, great or small."
+ Sat R 149:330 Mr 15 '30 1050w

"In all, a meaty volume which is in some respects the best of its series. The scholarly level is high, and rarely do we find a perfunctory chapter, like that on chivalry. While the effects of the war still appear in the absence of Germany or Austrian contributors, the editors have been fortunate in drawing upon the best English scholarship and upon some of the leading historians of other countries. There are no American contributors." C. H. Haskins
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1087 My 31 '30 850w
Spec 144:63 Ja 11 '30 230w
Springf'd Republican p12 Mr 12 '30 400w
Times [London] Lit Sup p129 F 20 '30 4650w

CAMERON, JOHN, pseud. See MacDonell, A. G.

CAMI, HENRI. Son of the three musketeers; tr. from the French by Jean Wright Gorman; with an introd. by Herbert Gorman. 293p il $2.50 Farrar
30-23900

A popular French humorist has written this burlesque on Dumas in which the dashing offspring of Athos, Porthos and d'Artagnan (who had all loved the same sprightly widow) with the aid of his valet, Mille-Hommes, and his watch-sheep, Brutus, performs many valiant deeds, and wins the love of beautiful Blanche-Mignone.

Books p13 O 12 '30 280w
Cleveland Open Shelf p139 N '30

"It has a kind of pressureless humor that is based on broadly improbable situations. And it will most amuse those readers who are familiar with 'The Three Musketeers,' so that they can appreciate how skillfully the Dumas formula has been traduced."
+ N Y Times p9 D 28 '30 500w

CAMP, RUTH ORTON. Story of markets. (City and country ser.) 118p $1.25 Harper
380.12 Markets. Marketing 29-22250

Deals with common food products and methods of distribution, from primitive barter to modern stock yards, canning factories, wholesale markets and chain stores. The examples are drawn from many countries. Written for children.

Booklist 26:165 Ja '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p89 Je '30

"Attractive in style, illustrations, and make-up."
+ J Home Econ 22:129 F '30 100w
St Louis 28:115 Ap '30

"Holds considerable information about methods of marketing, which would be of value as a supplement to the school geography."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:659 Ja 18 '30 80w
Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 12 '30 50w
Wis Lib Bul 26:69 F '30

CAMPBELL, MRS ALICE ORMOND. Murder in Paris. 370p $1 Farrar
30-15103

"Catherine West, arriving in Paris to visit her cousin's widow, Mme. Bender, finds that lady a helpless invalid in the care of two servants who have been with her for many years. It is evident from the very beginning that these servants resent the coming of Miss West. She soon discovers that there is something going on under the surface. There is tragedy in the air, and there seems to be no way of averting it. There is nothing that can be presented to the authorities in such a way as to compel them to take action. It is this that constitutes the element of suspense in the book, and not the detection of the murderer."—N Y Times

---

Bookm 71:xviii Jl '30 100w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 Je 22 '30 130w

Reviewed by G. T. Hellman
New Repub 64:81 S 3 '30 60w

"An unusual crime story, skillfully told."
+ N Y Times p15 Je 29 '30 180w

"A good story, well written, and with lots of breathless suspense. We note no errors in grammar, which alone makes it different from the usual run of thrillers." Bernice Whittemore
+ Outlook 155:357 Jl 2 '30 120w

"A good, lively yarn, with plenty of suspense, a mystery that remains baffling until the proper moment, and not more than a plausible amount of implausibilities. The story is interesting, and at times exciting, and provides better entertainment than is usually to be procured for a dollar."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1127 Je 14 '30 250w

CAMPBELL, MRS DOROTHY DE BRISSAC. ² Intriguing duchess, Marie de Rohan, duchesse de Chevreuse. 392p il $3.50 Covici
B or 92 Chevreuse, Marie Aimée (de Rohan) duchesse de. France—Court and courtiers
30-30703

"The biography of a seventeenth century French noblewoman who was influential in three European courts, loved by three kings and the arch enemy of Cardinal Richelieu."—Publishers' Weekly

---

"Miss Campbell, not without occasional daring, but with a love and a familiarity that illuminate, conducts us through a gallery of portraits one could vow were all alive, speaking likenesses. We have not only seen the great ones: we know all the gossip: we shall never feel quite the same about even Louis XIV again." Iris Barry
+ Books p2 N 2 '30 550w

"This is a brisk account of how and why 'men died gladly for her smile,' and how her political intrigues nearly got the better of Cardinal Richelieu himself. Her story is the true stuff of which Dumas made novels, and is here told with Dumasian color and vivacity." F. H. M.
+ N Y Evening Post p4d N 29 '30 100w

CAMPBELL, DUGALD. Wanderings in Central Africa; the experiences & adventures of a lifetime of pioneering & exploration. 284p il $5 Lippincott [21s Seeley]
916.7 Africa, Central—Description and travel
[30-12404]

The author describes his explorations and adventures from the west coast of Africa to the Belgian Congo. He is most interested in the various native tribes and their customs, and the influence of white civilization, as represented by Portuguese colonization and the French conquest of the Chad regions. A large part of the book is concerned with the cannibal tribes and their practices.

"His volume abounds in photographs of spearmen, fishermen, professional dancing men, cannibal warriors, spirit-possessed women of Lubaland, cannibal women of the Batetele tribe, and not one of these camera subjects registers reluctance. . . The accompanying text covers much the same assortment of topics as have other recent African volumes—burial rites, sun worship, folk-lore, big game hunting. Africa, according to Mr. Campbell, is a Pandora's box that ever fascinates, and finally dominates, the European mind."

Books p18 Mr 23 '30 350w

"Mr. Dugald Campbell, as a Scotsman, is the best sort of African traveller; he is heroic, patient, experienced, and sympathetic. After thirty-six African years he is so hard-boiled that the Congo is little more to him than a sort of Kensington High Street. . . His book, provided with index, map, and photographs, is very interesting throughout."

+ Nation and Ath 46:sup232 N 9 '29 230w

"A good if hurriedly written book. Very little escapes Mr. Campbell's eye, and his courage and pertinacity in spite of several attacks of fever are altogether admirable."

+ New Statesman 34:sup x O 12 '29 250w

Reviewed by Gregory Mason

N Y Times p14 Je 1 '30 300w

Times [London] Lit Sup p744 S 26 '29 600w

CAMPBELL, GLADYS, and THOMAS, RUSSELL BROWN. Magazines and newspapers of today. 210p il $1.20 Harcourt

050 Periodicals. Newspapers 29-10780

"A textbook which presents a six weeks' course in the most important uses of periodicals and a study of their types and contents." —Pratt

Booklist 26:221 Mr '30

Pratt p6 winter '30

"The book is not made of fine theory; it deals definitely with fact and practice. In style of writing, it is delightful; its makeup is as attractive as its content. The book meets a recognized need in high-school work." H. E. Wilson

+ School R 38:308 Ap '30 450w

CAMPBELL, JAMES MARSHALL. Greek fathers. (Our debt to Greece and Rome) 167p $1.75 Longmans [5s Harrap]

281.1 Fathers of the church 30-815

Following an introductory chapter on the role of Hellenism in historical Christianity, the author sketches the lives and works of the Greek fathers and outlines their influence upon the Middle ages, the renaissance, and later centuries.

"Seven centuries of Greek patristic literature, and 166 volumes of Migne cannot be compressed into 155 small, Greekless pages. Professor Campbell has done as well as could be expected with his unmanageable subject. He could have made a livelier, but less serviceable book by gathering a garland of the praises of the Fathers and an acanthology of epigrams and denunciations." Paul Shorey

Class Philol 25:215 Ap '30 200w

"The book is written in a manner to attract the lay reader and contains within brief compass much that will interest him, while for the professional student of church history it constitutes a welcome summary of information regarding the intellectual leaders of Christianity in the eastern end of the Mediterranean basin down to the time of John of Damascus in the early part of the eighth century."

+ J Religion 10:461 Jl '30 300w

New Statesman 35:254 My 31 '30 120w

N Y Evening Post p9m Je 14 '30 50w

"Professor Campbell's account, which has passed the Roman Catholic censorship, is a very fair statement of the subject."

+ Sat R 149:335 Mr 15 '30 120w

CAMPBELL, NORMAN ROBERT, and RITCHIE, DOROTHY. Photoelectric cells; their properties, use, and applications. 209p il $4.50 (15s) Pitman

537.53 Photoelectric cells [30-21349]

The photoelectric cell, a device to measure light by electricity, is studied by the authors as a laboratory or workshop tool. The discussion falls into three parts: theory of photoelectric cells, use of photoelectric cells, and applications of photoelectric cells.

Nature 126:90 Jl 19 '30 480w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:8 Ja '30

CAMPBELL, REGINALD JOHN. Livingstone. 295p il $3 Dodd

B or 92 Livingstone, David 30-4500

A new biography of the great explorer and missionary whose life work was consummated in Central Africa. Dr Campbell, in the light of modern times, has attempted to present a new perspective of Livingstone's motives and career.

Booklist 26:310 My '30

Bookm 71:v Jl '30 180w

Reviewed by Louis Colman

Books p7 Ja 26 '30 1300w

"Dr. Campbell tells his story as it should be told—tersely, enthusiastically, uncompromisingly. The main facts of Livingstone's explorations have been told many times. But Dr. Campbell breathes the breath of a new life into them, and indeed through the great amount of new material used, the incidents of his explorations shine in a new rather than in a rekindled light." Frances Bartlett

+ Boston Transcript p3 F 21 '30 2250w

Cath World 131:508 Jl '30 170w

"Dr. Campbell's style is not so flashy as that of other modern biographers, but it is certainly readable and does not in any sense handicap the reader's interest. But maps and style are, after all, secondary to what we learn of the man Livingstone himself. This biography is preferable to that by Blaikie, because the author had access to hitherto unpublished material. Even aside from this obvious advantage, this is a superior portrait. Without destroying our belief in the fundamental apostolic fervor of the great missionary, we are made more fully aware that Livingstone, like the original apostles, was flesh and blood. And this seems to be the great accomplishment of this book." W. W. Wimberly

+ Christian Century 47:304 Mr 5 '30 850w

Cleveland Open Shelf p93 Je '30

"Accuracy and truthfulness are the outstanding qualities of this excellent biography of a great man. The volume is valuable not only as a description and an analysis of a remarkable personality; it is also a revelation of the initial explorations of the last unknown continent of the world." T. J. Jones

+ Current Hist 32:603 Je '30 450w

"Very detailed and rather heavy biography." Leonard Woolf

Nation and Ath 46:141 O 26 '29 200w

"Dr. Campbell's new matter is interesting enough. But all this material, interesting as it is, is of no great importance: it reaffirms what is already pretty well known about his work and character. Whatever attitudes may be adopted to Livingstone's work, the greatness of his character is now unchallenged. That remains even when his obvious faults of ruthlessness, incapacity for leadership and blank obstinacy are admitted, as Dr. Campbell, with commendable impartiality, admits them here. This book is detailed, informative, and moving; but what an amazing psychological study, set against its duly unsentimentalised historical background, remains to be written!"

+ — New Statesman 34:234 N 23 '29 600w

"Seldom does the pulpit produce so easy, so elegant, so enthusiastic a pen as Dr. Campbell's. It is with good sense and good temper that he handles what once were acute controversies. Into the vast accumulation of Livingstonian documents, including the 'locked journal,' he has delved deeply, and it is unlikely that his verdicts, so arrived at, will be upset. We have here what, in the popular sense, is likely to be the standard life of Livingstone, sure of its place in the library of city, college and church." P. W. Wilson

CAMPBELL, R. J.—Continued
+ N Y Times p3 F 9 '30 1500w

"A scholarly, well-rounded work." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 154:269 F 12 '30 80w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:38 My '30
St Louis 28:111 Ap '30

"Although it would seem that the wealth of matter already in print concerning Livingstone should limit the value of further biographical work, Dr. Campbell has had access to many hitherto closed sources, such as the 'Locked Journal,' and a great quantity of letters, and he has provided us with a clearcut and impartial study." Kermit Roosevelt
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1045 My 17 '30 450w

"Dr. Campbell has attempted to portray him as a man with a vocation, to show the slow crystalization of purpose which drove him to his ultimate death with the inevitability of a Greek tragedy. If the author has not entirely succeeded, it is, perhaps, because too much emphasis is laid on the predestined character of Livingstone's choice. Dr. Campbell does show us, however, what sort of a man Livingstone really was, austere and precipitate, endowed with moral and physical courage to an exceptional degree, reputed quarrelsome because he refused to suffer fools gladly, obstinate because he refused to compromise his convictions, presumptuous because he refused to accept the shibboleths of his predecessors."
Spec 143:597 O 26 '29 200w

"No man has done better service to Livingstone's memory and reputation that his latest biographer; and Dr. Campbell's impartial and well-balanced study may become the standard Life."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p863 O 31 '29 2250w

CANDEE, MRS HELEN CHURCHILL (HUNGERFORD). Weaves and draperies; classic and modern. 300p il $5 Stokes
745 Textile industry and fabrics. Weaving. Drapery. Tapestry 30-25719

"The author, by explaining textiles and their designs in relation to history, shows the reader how to choose the best from our new and modern weaves. She covers thoroughly the names and aspects of materials oftenest in hand, the particular value of each, how they may be more successfully combined, and where and how to place them. Through an analysis of the fashions for window draperies and for bed and wall hangings in different countries over different periods, up through our present-day modernistic tendencies, she shows just why there is unity about a change in styles, how it can be understood and anticipated."—Publisher's note

---

Booklist 27:145 D '30

"Notwithstanding its intent to be of aid in a specific way, this volume offers little but historic facts. The author is far more concerned with the known or imagined origins of favorite museum pieces of rare weaves than with the usefulness of these pieces or imitations of them in home settings."
Books p11 D 28 '30 100w
Boston Transcript p2 D 27 '30 420w

"In a charmingly written book Mrs. Candee gives comprehensive treatment to that important section of home decoration, the draperies and other textiles used in various ways. She has made it at once more informing and more fascinating by tracing her theme down through the centuries against a moving panorama of history and showing the constant connection of fabric, design and method with contemporary events and personages. 'Wherever hangs a drapery,' she says, 'there hangs a tale.' "
+ N Y Times p21 O 26 '30 230w
Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 D 22 '30 30w
St Louis 28:295 D '30

CANE, MELVILLE. Behind dark spaces. 80p $2 Harcourt
811 30-7435

Mr Cane's second volume of lyrics, like his first, shows technical originality and a preference for themes that give lyric voice to modern city life.

"His technical proficiency is consummate, whether or not the things he does with it are always worth doing. He can capture the look and feeling of a ship's sway at sea or the feeling and look of mist in a city street and set these things before us with such sure and masterly strokes that our admiration of his skill overcomes the doubt whether he is using it worthily. His magic is entirely that of conscious art; he knows to a nicety the precise effect of every syllable he sets down, so that if he does not write poetry it is not for lack of knowing how." Odell Shepard
+ Bookm 72:188 O '30 300w

"Those who found pleasure in Melville Cane's first volume, 'January Garden,' will be more than pleased with this new collection, not only because the poems here gathered are in themselves lovely but because the volume marks distinct development in one of the most individual poetic talents of our day." John Erskine
+ Books p4 My 4 '30 550w

"Slight in substance and content. When he takes pains, Mr. Cane can etch a very vivid picture in very small space. He is occasionally slipshod, however, as witness the thunder storm poem which is more literary than natural."
— + Boston Transcript p3 My 3 '30 220w
Cleveland Open Shelf p92 Je '30
Reviewed by Vincent McHugh
N Y Evening Post p5s Je 7 '30 100w
N Y Times p16 Mr 30 '30 220w

"Mr. Cane's manipulation of rhythm and rhyme is by no means undistinguished, and he almost always succeeds in producing a clear and vigorous picture. . . On the whole his verse is singularly level in its tone, even to the point of monotony. Constantly he seems about to do something surprisingly good, but the necessary miracle is seldom performed." Granville Hicks
— + N Y World p10m Mr 30 '30 150w

"His work is full of suggested magic. often only half formulated, more like notes. He lets the tiniest lines hurry him too quickly to his rhyme. He pins his impression down so fast and hard that he sometimes tears it. But even so, it is real and delicious sustenance for poets and their readers. The book is full of tantalizing delight." L. T. Nicholl
+ — Outlook 154:549 Ap 2 '30 120w

CANFIELD, CURTIS, ed. Plays of the Irish renaissance, 1880-1930; with an introd. and notes. 436p $3 Washburn
822.08 Irish drama—Collections 29-27595

Thirteen typical plays illustrative of the historical development of Irish drama. Contents: On Baile's strand, by W. B. Yeats; The only jealousy of Emer, by W. B. Yeats; Deirdre, by G. W. Russell (A.E.); Hyacinth Halvey, by Lady Augusta Gregory; The twisting of the rope, by Douglas Hyde, tr. from the Gaelic; The dandy dolls, by George Fitzmaurice; Riders to the sea, by J. M. Synge; The land, by Padraic Colum; Birthright, by T. C. Murray; The singer, by Padraic Pearse; Maeve, by Edward Martyn; Juno and the paycock, by Sean O'Casey; The big house, by Lennox Robinson.

Booklist 26:150 Ja '30
Reviewed by W. P. Eaton
Books p14 F 2 '30 80w

"Mr. Canfield has not attempted an exhaustive study of the movement; he has indicated the high spots of the Irish movement for the benefit of the general reader, yet his choice has been made with such skill that his book may be used as a guide for actual research into his subject." Horace Gregory

+ N Y Evening Post p9m N 30 '29 100w

"The plays are in themselves worth many a rereading, and Mr. Canfield's interpretative and appreciative comments are helpful." Granville Hicks

+ N Y World p10m Ja 12 '30 130w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:11 F '30

Pratt p28 summer '30

St Louis 28:76 Mr '30

CANNAN, JOANNA (MRS H. J. PULLEIN-THOMPSON). Orphan of Mars (Eng title: The simple pass on). 301p $2.50 Bobbs [7s 6d Benn]

30-7796

"Seeks to tell the story of war's later tragedy—the return to peace. It speaks with few emotional stresses, yet with convincing force, of a man who survives one conflict to enter a new one, only to discover himself at the mercy of those who fattened on his sacrifices and who find his protests boredom."—Springf'd Republican

---

"Miss Cannan's theme, assuming its plausibility, is not substantiated by the action of the story."

— Books p17 My 11 '30 200w

"This is a thoroughly readable, well planned, and well executed novel about painfully normal people." L. L. Irvine

+ Nation and Ath 46:143 O 26 '29 80w

"'Orphan of Mars' is not accusing propaganda; Miss Cannan is more subtle; directly, simply, without any attempt to enhance or exaggerate, she narrates the incidents of the life of a typical ex-officer. It is a novel to be judged by artistic standards, but it is not cheerful; there is a starkness, a satirical element insinuated which hurts. The quiet, slow humiliation which forces Laurence to accept his inevitable defeat is poignant in its simplicity. This is certainly a contribution to the novel and to war literature."

+ N Y Times p25 Mr 23 '30 550w

"Miss Cannan has drawn a creature with extraordinary masculine verity and vividness. The book holds the reader's attention from the first to the last page. It has wit, charm, poignancy, solidity, and above all, insight into human passions." C. L. Aiken

+ N Y World p9m My 18 '30 480w

"Though the novel has little distinction beyond a passionate sincerity of purpose, it is sensible and well mannered. It is likely, however, that the specialized thesis and a certain lack of depth in the narrative will put a damper on its popularity in the United States. But even at that, it is always readable and often entertaining."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1195 Jl 12 '30 250w

"There are an efficiency of construction and dexterity of description about Joanna Cannan's 'Orphan of Mars' that demand little of plot and nothing at all of artifice to hold the reader's attention. . . The story is no screaming cry against capital and it borrows nothing from the alarms of communism. It indicts a social condition, but in a manner to repel only the sensitive among the guilty."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 27 '30 250w

"The story is commonplace, but Miss Cannan tells it with amazing competence. The development of the theme proceeds smoothly and inexorably to the tragic conclusion, and there are no loose strands to divert the attention. Miss Cannan's wit attains at times to the dignity of good satire and she is often clever without ever being cheap; but although this novel is well constructed, it deals with people and with emotions which are superficial to the point of unreality."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p876 O 31 '29 300w

CANNON, CORNELIA (JAMES) (MRS WALTER BRADFORD CANNON). Heirs. 309p $2.50 Little [7s 6d Hodder]

30-4846

One of the chief social problems of modern New England life—that of the Americanization of incoming hordes of Europeans—is the concern of Mrs Cannon in this story of a New England school teacher in a New Hampshire mill town. Marilla Lamprey, who comes to Lovell to teach, marries Seth Walton, owner of the mills. She early recognizes the conflict between native, impoverished New England stock and the Polish newcomers who buy up the farms and in addition keep the mills going. Marilla's personal experiences are unfolded thruout against this background.

"In this clear, quiet story, contrasting the old New England and the new, Mrs. Cannon shows some of the fears and limitations of a conventional woman, no less hampered and incomplete than the casual girls of Mr. Dreiser's sketches." Mary Ross

+ Atlantic Bookshelf p28 Ap '30 230w

Booklist 26:280 Ap '30

"Lacks something of the strength and integrity of Red Rust, but in itself is by no means disappointing. Mrs. Cannon has made no attempt to reproduce her original triumph in its own terms. Heirs has a satisfying freshness and richness of conception, and it contains, in addition, a burden of ideas which might have crushed a less ingeniously constructed tale. Mrs. Cannon's notable ability as a dramatist, however, serves to reconcile us to the intensity of her sociological preoccupations."

+ Bookm 71:100 Mr '30 420w

"A strong, vigorous story by a woman who fearlessly unveils the nobilities in the old New England tenacities, reticences and points of view at the same time that she reveals their limitations and restrictive results. . . Here is New Hampshire itself, etched for us in brief strokes of beauty." C. B. Sherman

+ Books p22 Ap 20 '30 650w

"Lack of verbosity, a thorough grasp of her subject and a forthright method of narration make of Mrs. Cannon's second book a story to remember." H. F. McDade

+ Boston Transcript p3 F 8 '30 2050w

"Perhaps the social problem overshadows the human problem in the book. This would be a defect if it were not that the particular social problem in question happens to be a very human problem, too."

+ Christian Science Monitor p7 F 8 '30 800w

Cleveland Open Shelf p77 My '30

"As an honest statement of what is happening to New England and why, 'Heirs' is a sound contribution to sociology. . . Only if 'Heirs' is considered as a novel can it be dismissed as obvious and banal; as argument and proof of the cause and cure for New England's sterility, it is unanswerably accurate."

+ N Y Times p7 F 16 '30 500w

"I keep wondering why no one would dream of calling Marilla Lamprey a 'monstrous egotist' or 'selfish' or 'neurotic' or 'introverted.' I feel the character because I already understand her, not because of Mrs. Cannon's revelation. She understands the woman and feels her deeply but the portrait is never your possession. It seems very impolite to say so but Mrs. Cannon's style is not a thing of beauty or brilliance or permanence. To fully express and reveal the warmth and cold, the light and dark of her heroine she needs a plastic style that can fully express eagerness, the repression and the warmth of the woman." Margery Latimer

N Y World p11m Ap 6 '30 700w

Outlook 154:426 Mr 12 '30 220w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:31 Ap '30

Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 16 '30 450w

Times [London] Lit Sup p893 O 30 '30 220w

Wis Lib Bul 26:67 F '30

CANNON, CORNELIA (JAMES) (MRS WALTER BRADFORD CANNON). Pueblo girl; the story of Coronado on the Rio Grande. 175p il $2 Houghton
29-18879

The background of the story pictures the customs and culture of the Pueblos of New Mexico at the time of the Spanish conquest, and the setting is the pueblo of Sia. Wapoh, a little girl, is one of the characters, but the story chiefly concerns the adventures of Tyami in his contacts with the Spanish leader, Coronado.

Booklist 26:124 D '29
Cleveland Open Shelf p127 S '30
Reviewed by O. M. Fuller
N Y World p11m D 8 '29 20w
St Louis 27:344 D '29

"Mrs. Cannon could not have chosen a more interesting period in which to place her narrative, and she has taken excellent advantage of it. She describes well the daily life of the Pueblo Indians and is thoroughly in sympathy with their culture. No one will make any mistake in putting this book into the hands of children, for it is not only a fascinating story, full of human interest and well written, but at the same time it gives information about a most interesting people. . . It is enhanced by an easily followed and beautiful map and is finely illustrated by Olive Rush, the foremost woman artist in the Southwest." A. B. Applegate
+ Sat R of Lit 6:406 N 16 '29 280w
Wis Lib Bul 26:44 Ja '30

CANNON, WALTER BRADFORD. Bodily changes in pain, hunger, fear and rage; an account of recent researches into the function of emotional excitement. 2d ed rev and enl 404p $3 (12s 6d) Appleton
612.821 Emotions. Mind and body 29-13978
For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"The revisions in this valuable and well known book are particularly interesting to psychologists because four of the five new chapters which have been added in the present edition deal with topics which are largely psychological. . . A good deal of recent material has been added to the other chapters in support of the author's general thesis 'that the bodily changes which attend great excitement are directed toward efficiency in physical struggle,' and the references at the end of the chapters have been brought up to date." J. P.
+ Am J Psychol 42:322 Ap '30 1680w

"To intelligent readers, unfamiliar with the facts—and strangely enough, nearly everyone is unfamiliar with the facts—it would be difficult to recommend a more intellectually thrilling book than Professor Cannon's."
+ Sat R 149:159 F 8 '30 1150w

CANTON, FRANK M. Frontier trails; ed. by Edward Everett Dale. 237p il $3 Houghton
B or 92 Frontier and pioneer life 30-28203

Frank Canton, pioneer, sheriff in the famous Johnson County war, a United States deputy marshal during the Klondike gold rush, and peace officer for many years in Oklahoma, left among his papers five thick notebooks in which he had written the story of his life. The material was arranged and edited to make this autobiography.

Bookm 72:vi N '30 80w

"There was perhaps never a more perfect example of a man of action than Canton. He has no need for reflection and no capacity for it. He neither apologizes nor explains. In parts his book is as bald as a bill of lading, but in other parts it achieves a sort of stark and simple beauty and a genuine suspense. It is an interesting and valuable book both for the information it contains about times and places that have historical importance, and as a revelation of the kind of man Canton was—a perfect extravert, who lived wholly in the moment and in the act, fearing neither life nor death."
+ Books p14 N 23 '30 270w

CAPEK, KAREL. Money, and other stories; [tr. from the Czech by Francis P. Marchant and others]; foreword by John Galsworthy. 279p $2.50 Brentano's [7s 6d Hutchinson]
29-29102

"The first book of short stories by the author of R. U. R. to be translated into English. They are distinctive for their direct simplicity, for their lack of plot, and their introspective, philosophical trend." (Cleveland Open Shelf) Contents: Money; Helena; Three; The shirts; The insult; The tribunal; The bully; Two fathers; At the castle.

Booklist 26:356 Je '30
Books p16 Mr 23 '30 500w
Boston Transcript p2 My 7 '30 220w
Cleveland Open Shelf p62 Ap '30

"An interesting group of tales, noteworthy for their keen insight and for Capek's restrained sympathy for his characters. What one misses in these stories is style (though the stiff and undistinguished prose may be the fault of the translators) and that warmth and depth which fiction has when it is rooted in a recognizable national life. Capek's civilized cosmopolitanism, admirable for a play of ideas such as 'R. U. R.' works against him in this little volume of short stories. They have that curious coldness which results from a conscious desire to make them comprehensible to many different peoples."
+ — Nation 130:686 Je 11 '30 170w

Reviewed by Persis Lane
New Repub 63:188 Jl 2 '30 300w

"Mr. Capek's volume is spun out of moods that are at once reticent and transparent. They leave the reader aware of much actuality that passes, by habit, into dream. They all have point and poignancy, and with the exception of 'Helena,' which seems to have strayed into the collection rather witlessly, they are all worth reading." Eugene Lohrke
+ N Y Evening Post p11m F 15 '30 300w

"The same quality that pervades Capek's dramatic works—a brooding, introspective restlessness lit by flashes of an original and forceful mentality—inhabits these stories and makes them live disturbingly in the mind of the reader long after the book has been laid aside. Such tales as 'Money,' 'The Insult,' 'The Shirts' and 'Three,' especially 'Three,' give Capek as unique a place in this field of literary expression as he already holds in the one of drama." R. C. Feld
+ N Y Times p9 F 2 '30 900w

"In addition to the all-seeing eye of the author there is a fine whimsy that runs through these stories. Any one who is thinking of writing a short story would do well to have a look at this book." Bellamy Partridge
+ N Y World p11m F 2 '30 220w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:39 My '30
Pratt p37 autumn '30

"Some of the stories may be considered slight to a fault; and in one or two his desire to extract all possible value from his material has led M. Capek to labor his points a little, especially where, as in 'The Shirts,' he draws a moral that would have been better left to the reader's perception. But the best of them have a microscopic clearness. Capek's own absence of compassion for his characters may increase or diminish his readers' sympathy for them. Most people, it seems likely, will be repelled but a few will be strongly attracted by the tone of this book, which is cold but very clear."
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:123 S 13 '30 550w

"All of the stories show human beings quite stripped of magnificence, but the lack of lustre is compensated by Mr. Capek's humour. The last story in the book, At the Castle, is especially memorable." Alan Porter

+ Spec 143:344 S 14 '29 70w

"The first thing that strikes one about the volume of Karel Capek's short stories is that the translations, for which four people in all are responsible, are of very unequal merit. They are good stories, all of them—fresh, lively and thoughtful; but some of them appear here in extremely unsatisfactory versions."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p700 S 12 '29 500w

CAPUANA, LUIGI. Golden-feather; tr. by Dorothy Emmrich. 205p il $2.50 Dutton
Fairy tales 30-17631

New and unusual fairy tales translated from the Italian. They are stories of the fairy princess as light as a feather, of the plaster cat with magic powers, the cricket prince, the miller's horns of plenty, and other humorous people and events.

Bookm 72:xxvii S '30 50w

"'Golden Feather' will be joyfully acclaimed by legion of lovers of beautiful stories. The young reader will be especially delighted with this volume, but discriminating elders will love it also. It is happily and profusely illustrated by Margaret Freeman."
+ Boston Transcript p3 Jl 19 '30 180w

"These fairy tales like the preceding volume by the same author, 'Italian Fairy Tales,' have a vigorous quality and plenty of fun. The author's lively fancy provides novel situations and humorous solutions."
+ N Y Times p12 Ag 31 '30 140w

Reviewed by O. M. Fuller
N Y World p3e N 16 '30 30w

"There is no sentiment, but plenty of fun and laughter. Each story is like an apple, round and crisp with a pungent tang. Miss Emmrich's translation is excellent and Margaret Freeman, who also illustrated the earlier volume, 'Italian Fairy Tales,' has caught the spirit well in her drawings."
+ Sat R of Lit 7:333 N 15 '30 100w

CAREY, ARTHUR A., and MCLELLAN, HOWARD. Memoirs of a murder man. 326p il $1 Doubleday, Doran
343 Murder. Detectives. Crime and criminals 30-18032

Deputy Inspector Carey spent thirty-three years with the New York Police department as investigator of suspicious deaths. This book is a record of Inspector Carey's experiences, in particular while chief of the Homicide bureau, known as the Murder clinic. He recalls many famous murder cases, tells of methods used in solving them, and recounts the inside story of some sensational murder trials.

Books p10 Ag 3 '30 100w

"It gives an excellent picture of the American police-detective at work and—by its reticences as well as by its revelations—of what goes on in his mind. Deputy Inspector Carey was actually a much better detective than he appears to have been in his book." Dashiell Hammett
+ N Y Evening Post p8m Je 21 '30 100w

Reviewed by Isaac Anderson
N Y Times p13 Jl 6 '30 880w

"Inspector Carey's comment on probabilities of crime and the ways and habits of criminals makes this a most useful book on sleuthing." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p11 Je 21 '30 330w
St Louis 28:232 O '30

"His memoirs are continuously thrilling, filled with more amazing feats of deduction than a dozen detective fictioneers ever imagined, clearly and modestly written, and dotted with portraits of New York police worthies from the days of Inspector Byrnes of the old Central Office to Arthur Woods and George V. McLaughlin." W. C. Weber
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1163 Je 28 '30 280w

CAREY, NANCY, pseud. Soup to nuts; a sel. of choice recipes. 186p $1.50 Macrae Smith
641.5 Cookery 30-11823

A cookbook containing a selection of unusually successful dishes, beginning with appetizers and including suggestions for bridge parties and informal dinners.

Booklist 26:344 Je '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p122 S '30

"Here is a volume which should fill a useful niche on the kitchen shelf, for it contains a well-assorted and sensibly chosen assortment of recipes. Directions are simple and concise, and the dishes described suitable for the household of moderate means."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:829 Mr 15 '30 80w

CAREY, ROBERT LINCOLN. Daniel Webster as an economist. (Studies in hist., economics, and public law) 220p $3.50 Columbia univ. press
330.1 Webster, Daniel. Economics 29-15020

An analysis of Webster's economic theory and his philosophy of the tariff, gleaned by the author from his speeches and letters.

Reviewed by G. O. Virtue
Am Econ R 20:84 Mr '30 450w

"The author has given evidence of great industriousness; he has examined all of Webster's published works: letters, speeches, diplomatic and legal papers, in search of comments on economic subjects. These he has collected, classified, and summarized, so that the reader finds, all neatly arranged, the great statesman's economic philosophy in general, and in particular his views on such specific subjects as production, labor, money, banking, public finance, and the tariff." R. V. Harlow
+ Am Hist R 35:421 Ja '30 400w

"This is a scholarly piece of research, but put in such readable form that the average man can understand and profit by it."
+ Boston Transcript p5 N 27 '29 300w
Hist Outlook 21:141 Mr '30 270w

CARFRAE, ELIZABETH. Payment in full. 249p $2 Harper [7s 6d Mills & Boon] 30-8604

Orphaned at seventeen by the sudden death of her father and deserted by her childhood sweetheart Elizabeth Alloway married, without love, a wealthy Jamaica planter more than twice her age. Several years later, while on a sea trip, alone, Elizabeth chanced on the lover of her youth and consented to go with him for two weeks to Havana. Then she went home to her husband, and made "payment in full" for her weeks of complete happiness.

"Her creatures move, and move rapidly, but not at all convincingly. They are harried, hurried, inveterate behaviorists. . . Miss Carfrae writes as if she were afraid of missing the next train out."
— Books p19 Je 22 '30 150w

"There is a vitality about the novel which compels one's interest, and there is very skilful character delineation as well. 'Payment in Full' is marred, however, by an inexcusable carelessness of style." A. B. T.
+ — Boston Transcript p4 My 10 '30 550w

"The plot of Elizabeth Carfrae's latest novel hardly fulfills the promise of its gorgeous title. Like many tales of its genre, destiny is more than aided and abetted by the physical disability or death of pivotal characters. For the further delectation of the reader, Miss Carfrae presents a rather far-fetched psychological problem. 'Payment in Full' provides two hours of syrupy sentiment, breezily written and tactfully brief." J. L. G.

CARFRAE, ELIZABETH—Continued
— + N Y Evening Post p5s Je 7 '30 280w

"Miss Carfrae writes easily and pleasantly, and this contributes a good deal towards our enjoyment of this book, which even in its incredible moments is always entertaining."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p929 N 14 '29 200w

CARLISLE, HELEN GRACE. Mothers cry. 267p $2.50 Harper
30-844

Telling the story of her life and the lives of her four children in her own words, Mary Knight narrates the events of her naïve girlhood, her engagement, her marriage in nineteen hundred to Frank Williams, her boss in the New York department store where she was employed. At the age of twenty-four her husband was killed in an accident, leaving her, practically penniless, to bring up her four babies, Danny, Artie, Fanny and Beatty. By every conceivable sacrifice, she succeeds. Artie grows up to be a great architect; Fanny, like her mother, marries and settles down happily; Beatty, with advanced, but impractical ideas of modern woman and free love, is betrayed by her employer; and Danny, the ever incorrigible black sheep of the family, kills his sister in a final quarrel, and dies in the electric chair.

Booklist 26:280 Ap '30

"Miss Carlisle's work is saturated with a sentimentality that is more than a matter of poor taste; it leads to a complete reversal of ethical values. Mothers Cry should be kept away from all growing mothers." G. T. Hellman
— Bookm 71:101 Mr '30 300w

"This story is forceful and moving, not easy to forget." Mary Ross
+ Books p3 Ja 12 '30 750w

"Mary Williams does fail because of the uncritical, all-embracing nature of her love. Curiously, so fundamental is this woman that not even when the startling, scarcely comprehensible tragedy has descended on her house does she realize that it might have been averted could she have used her love more wisely. Yet that same simplicity gives her a directness in dealing with her tragedy which many women might envy. Her story has a startling power to grip one, because very rarely if ever has this maternal type of woman been so vividly realized." D. L. M.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 29 '30 800w
Cleveland Open Shelf p61 Ap '30

"This book, conceived and projected in the approved contemporary manner, is essentially as meretricious as those incredibly popular thrillers. On the surface it appears simple, sincere, utterly realistic; but in truth it is planned and constructed with reasoning care toward a single purpose—not to mirror life but to wring the heart. No single stop is left unpulled; no chance to twang a heart-string is overlooked."
— Nation 130:224 F 19 '30 220w

"Miss Carlisle has made of Mary Williams an arresting and living figure. Her courage and brooding tenderness for her children dominate the book. Her humility before Artie's creative ability is as touching as are her bewilderment and torture at the violence and destruction to which she has given birth in Danny. It is safe to predict that this Manhattan Niobe will remain in the memory long after the book is finished." E. H.
+ New Repub 62:108 Mr 12 '30 250w

"From early reality, the novel slides downhill with increasing speed into a swamp of implausibility. The more of suffering the author piles on her heroine the less it hurts you." F: F. Van de Water
— + N Y Evening Post p6s Ja 4 '30 500w

"The absence of reasonable punctuation and the flood of disordered image association do nothing toward giving the story the 'modern' atmosphere aimed for. The impression remains that good material has been badly misused." K. A. Porter
— N Y Evening Post p6m Ja 18 '30 350w

"Under a title that is rather inadequate, Miss Carlisle has written a book full to the brim with life. . . Only at the very end does Miss Carlisle falter in her sureness of touch. . . Excepting for this, the novel leaves an unbroken spell out of which the reader comes feeling that he has penetrated beneath the surface of something rich and beautiful."
+ — N Y Times p8 Ja 12 '30 700w

"Miss Carlisle writes in a formless stream of memory style, running narrative, reflection and comment together with little punctuation. This reviewer finds that such a style makes ugly writing and confusing reading. But it makes, in this particular volume, for power and a ring of truth."
+ — Outlook 154:70 Ja 8 '30 450w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:29 My '30

"The book might well be placed in the hands of social workers or parent educators—if they are strong-minded enough not to be beguiled by the author's sentimentality. For it gives what is undoubtedly a sure formula for making a criminal, and one that is probably common. As a piece of writing, the book is clever, done entirely from the mother's point of view and in her own vernacular. In spite of its false philosophy, it is a story of absorbing interest." B. K. Scherman
— + Sat R of Lit 6:797 Mr 8 '30 420w
Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 16 '30 230w
Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 4 '31 240w
Wis Lib Bul 26:67 F '30

CARLISLE, HELEN GRACE. Together again. 324p $2 Cape
30-31038

The platonic relationship between an idealistic boy and a girl who frankly loves him is broken when the girl goes to work for a doctor who brutally forces her to become his mistress. Totally disillusioned, the boy returns to the girl in a physical sense only. Later his life ends tragically. She, however, bears his son, altho she becomes the doctor's wife. A psychological novel in the modernistic manner.

"It is unlikely, it seems to me, that generalized patterns and principles will seem to ordinary people the stuff of which living is made. It is the wholeness of a person that becomes a satisfying mystery, the individuality compounded of all that he is and that is his alone. And it is this integrity, in the widest sense of that word, that Miss Carlisle seems to me to have forfeited in playing single lights upon her anonymous characters until they become, though decorative, as monotonous and featureless as the silvered mannikins which display clothes in a Fifth Avenue shop window." Mary Ross
— Books p2 N 23 '30 620w

"The book strikes one as both abnormal and unpleasant. We can only hope that it is not evidence of what the author's future work will be."
— Boston Transcript p2 D 27 '30 250w

"Miss Carlisle has been led by literary ambitiousness into making her story not a fierce human drama but an unworldly, poetic melodrama. She has attempted to be at once simple and involved and to imbue violence with profundity. She has been, in other words, inordinately pretentious. . . These middle chapters of the book are vivid and fascinating. Only genuine talent could have produced them. But almost all the rest of the book is a failure. The first part, whether one regards it as an idyl or as a muted psychological study, is vague and unreal; the boy and the girl live in a world which we can neither recognize nor accept."

— + N Y Times p9 D 7 '30 700w

"A promising young novelist, prone to idiosyncrasies and exaggerations inimical to the serious import of her work, Miss Carlisle here tells a curiously uneven tale, in spots hectically overwritten, in others wistfully compelling, of blighted young passion."
— + N Y World p3e D 21 '30 220w

"This has a thick, hot, animal quality which is neither convincing nor moving."
— Outlook 156:506 N 26 '30 120w

"Affectations like 'fretted with afraid desire,' and 'something of her troubled him,' distract one's attention from an otherwise intense scene. There is something to be said however for the deliberate simplicity of Miss Carlisle's design—the selecting of only a few nameless characters, exhibiting only their boldest characteristics, and cutting out all but the essential details of their background. The result is Rockwell Kent silhouettes, smoothly rounded, large and significant. . . But the effect fails by overdoing. By its very artfulness, the story destroys itself."
— + Sat R of Lit 7:508 Ja 3 '31 380w

CARLTON, WILLIAM NEWNHAM CHATTIN. Pauline, favorite sister of Napoleon. 372p il $3.50 Harper

B or 92 Borghese, Marie Pauline Bonaparte, princeese 30-25495

The first biography in English of Pauline Bonaparte, the favorite sister of Napoleon, whose devotion to her brother was faithful to the end. It is the portrait of a beautiful woman—wife of a prince and sister of an emperor.

Bookm 72:iv O '30 100w

"Dr. Carlton devotes a full quarter of his book to the years following Napoleon's eclipse, and this last quarter is much the best part of the book. Of course, the earlier three-fourths of the book are well done. Everything Professor Carlton does is well done. His training with bibliographies, cyclopedias and the like shows itself here, even when he records the numerous titles of the Prince Borghese or the details of the gown with which the Princess Borghese undertook to outshine and humiliate the Empress Josephine. The book is both scholarly and well written, and errors, though not absent, are unimportant." R. T. House
+ Books p10 N 2 '30 600w

"On the whole it is a completely satisfying portrait, painted sympathetically and done with the artistry of a careful and conscientious biographer." C. G. Bowers
+ N Y World p3e O 5 '30 280w
Outlook 156:388 N 5 '30 250w

"This book affords entertaining and pleasant reading. At times, the style is labored and this slows down the pace of what should be a rapid narrative. Pauline offers a good opportunity for a writer with a little more subtlety than the author of the present volume. These, however, are minor defects. The book has been carefully done and the result is a good and interesting analysis of a romantic princess with whom the American public is very slightly acquainted." J. M. S. Allison
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:483 D 27 '30 380w

CARMAN, MRS DOROTHY (WALWORTH). They thought they could buy it. 312p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Benn]
30-25908

Three social levels in suburban life are contrasted respectively in this novel thru a study of three young married couples: Amelia and Joe Browning, hard-working, virtuous, family-raising; Lydia and Seth Smith, a little higher in the financial scale, who give cocktail parties and imitate the New York intelligentsia in other ways; and Joyce and Clifford Millard, wealthy, and unhappily married. These people, in typical American fashion, measure happiness in terms of money. Joyce alone—when everything that money can buy has failed her—finds something that is much more essential to real living.

"'They Thought They Could Buy It' would perhaps be a better novel if the author had chosen one of the couples as her principals and had thrown the other two into the background. Mrs. Carman handles satire adroitly. Though she is never cruel, she does not permit herself the auctorial privilege of whitewashing human motives, nor does she offer some pat solution for the problems she presents. The book, though not important in itself, is an important chip in the mosaic that may some day give the picture of American life in the twentieth century." E. R. Richardson
+ — Bookm 72:420 D '30 280w

"Types are easier to portray than individuals. Mrs. Carman's latest novel is vivid and entertaining. Its detail is refreshingly real but certain less obvious factors are scamped. The people are types, the town is typical, the novel itself is a type—one of the easier sort to write."
+ — Books p23 N 9 '30 220w

"There are still lapses in Mrs. Carman's psychology. But she has caught the restlessness, the blind groping, the demand to live as well as one's neighbor, the incessant search for happiness of these people, and her observations on suburban life are humorous, intelligent and sane."
+ — N Y Times p18 N 9 '30 500w

"Slick wit is not the only recommendation of this book, the later part of which shows that Mrs. Carman can also write tender understanding of ordinary people's everyday hopes and fears."
+ Sat R 150:598 N 8 '30 300w

CARMER, CARL LAMSON. Deep South; dramatic tales in verse. 83p $2 Farrar 811 30-8629

"These poems all represent a certain section of the State of Alabama, but they are representative of the locale of a great part of what is known as the 'Deep South,' and also kindred in spirit to the folk of all lands and times who must rely for entertainment upon their own scene and neighbors for inventiveness of the legendary."—N Y Evening Post

"Even if the material were not so bound down, it is doubtful if Mr. Carmer's verse could have lifted it. His lines have, on the whole, a clean, terse economy; yet they remain undistinguished and their rhythm, despite its regularity, lean and prosaic. . . Mr. Carmer has reproduced well enough the speech and customs of a picturesque section in the South, but, save for an occasional touch of pity, that is all."
— + Bookm 72:189 O '30 280w

Reviewed by T. H. Ferril
Books p11 Je 8 '30 380w
Boston Transcript p2 Je 7 '30 200w

"Such verse makes interesting reading, but because it in no way expands life or translates experience, it has nothing to do with art." E. L. Walton
New Repub 63:241 Jl 16 '30 150w

"Mr. Carmer has caught and set down the rustic wit of these people, its gentleness and its naive wholesomeness. Altogether, this volume is a real addition to the fine recording of native folk-stories." Ben Wasson
+ N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 22 '30 450w

"Carl Carmer strikes us as being a raconteur considerably above the average. His book as a whole, is however, less a volume of poetry than it is a volume of narratives in verse. There is no objection to this; but it is well to have matters made clear. And narratives in verse are a not unwelcome relief from much that is passed off for lyric poetry."
+ N Y Times p16 Mr 30 '30 550w

CARMER, C. L.—Continued

"He tells his stories well, with a just sense of dramatic values, and with what seems to be an accurate understanding of the minds of his characters. . . . At least Carmer has discovered promising material to work with and is well on his way toward perfecting his methods of employing it." Granville Hicks

+ — N Y World p10m Mr 30 '30 200w

"Mr. Carmer's technique is still rather uncouth. He has not mastered the rhythms of human speech with Frost's amazing precision; and the talk of his people does not convince me, as Miss Roberts' does so marvelously, of the beauty of the southern drawl. Perhaps he writes as an observer, a carpet-bag poet, rather than one born and bred in the region and so attaining unconsciously a perfect intimacy with the lazy tunes of the people's speech. But even so we get from these poems something of the slow moist hot 'deep south' flavor." H. M.

+ — Poetry 36:284 Ag '30 400w

Sat R of Lit 6:1196 Jl 12 '30 400w

CARNEAL, GEORGETTE. Conqueror of space; 2 an auth. biography of the life and work of Lee De Forest. 296p $3 Liveright

B or 92 De Forest, Lee 30-32544

The life story of the famous American inventor, Lee De Forest, who is known as the father of radio. The biographer follows the struggles of the young De Forest against poverty and lack of recognition, and describes the various inventions he made prior to his great success as the creator of phonofilm, the talking picture apparatus.

"The story of Dr. DeForest's life is eminently worth reading because it is well done, because it is interesting, and because it tells the story of a significant era in scientific progress." R. K. M.

+ Boston Transcript p2 D 20 '30 250w

"Anyone versed in the rudiments of electrical science will appreciate the exactitude and authenticity with which the book analyzes the successive epochal inventions and discoveries—begun over thirty years ago and continued still—that have finally enshrined the name of De Forest with the supreme pioneer scientists of the ages. . . No character portrait of De Forest the man, as apart from the mechanical genius, has apparently been attempted in these pages, and their prevalently juvenile tone may render the book dull going for people not keenly interested in the technical processes by which the wizard's inventions were evolved." E. C. Beckwith

+ — N Y World p3e D 28 '30 150w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 156:668 D 24 '30 120w

CAROSSA, HANS. Roumanian diary; tr. from the German by Agnes Neill Scott. 173p $2.50 Knopf [7s 6d Secker]

940.48 European war, 1914-1918—Personal narratives. European war, 1914-1918—Rumania 30-27670

Hans Carossa was the medical officer of a battalion of German infantry which carried on a winter campaign among the mountain snows of Roumania in 1916. Much more than a narrative of events, the book is a record of the reflections of a sensitive and compassionate soul brooding with tender sympathy and imagination, and not without faith in life, upon the horror and suffering around him.

Booklist 27:150 D '30

" 'A Rumanian Diary' is certainly not destined for the brief currency which will be the fate of most of the personal records of the war. Short though it is, it has the perfection of a complete revelation of a man whose spiritual endowments make him important. Such revelations are rare enough in all literature—in war literature they are almost non-existent." Lambert Davis

+ Books p4 Jl 27 '30 630w

Boston Transcript p2 S 17 '30 420w

"His diary offers little to those searching for war's terrors, splendors, or scenic horrors. But as the reaction of one quiet and sensitive soul to events which we suspect have been viewed too much from the outside, it is both beautiful and important."

+ Nation 131:159 Ag 6 '30 220w

"It is a memorable work written by a distinguished German author, who served in the medical corps. Dr. Carossa tells the story of the campaign among the mountain snows of Roumania with a grave and tender sympathy for suffering humanity, whether friend or foe; with a perfectly balanced discrimination, and with an honesty of purpose which no one can doubt after reading a single page. The beauty of his style is apparent even in translation."

+ New Statesman 34:sup xviii D 7 '29 150w

"It is a quiet and unemotional narrative, concerned as it is less with his experiences themselves than with his reflections on them. . . Dream and actuality flow together in this record of a sensitive man's reaction to the great war nightmare. Sometimes they are almost indistinguishable to the reader; the reflections of a mood of unvarying haunted melancholy. . . These are war's undertones, and seldom have they been interpreted more beautifully. For those who can pick and choose their war reading, 'A Roumanian Diary' is a treasure. Agnes Neill Scott's translation of the German prose brings out all the lights and shadows in a quiet book of supreme literary excellence." Eugene Lohrke

N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 12 '30 620w

"It is a work of art. Imagination, understanding, a gift of selection and a quiet sort of genius have gone into it. It does not belong to the boom-boom school of war book. It is far removed from 'The Case of Eric Remarque,' to scramble titles and authors as well as the horrors of war. It may not reach Hollywood. The tabloids will never see it. . . More than craftsmanship has gone into this mystic diary. But craftsmanship of high order was necessary to make it intelligible. A hack translation would have ruined it; but Dr. Carossa's genius is echoed by the skill of Agnes Neill Scott, the translator who has put the book into singing English prose." S. T. Williamson

+ N Y Times p8 Jl 13 '30 750w

"The record reveals a man of highly sensitive and cultivated intelligence with a broad human tenderness and a distinct bent for the mystical. The peculiar horrors of the mountain fighting on the Roumanian front are softened, but not obscured, by the charm of the author's cultivated style, which has been extraordinarily well caught by the English translator."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:184 O 4 '30 100w

"Dr. Carossa's diary, despite some long-winded descriptions of dreams which probably appeal to his own countrymen more than to us, is beautiful and moving. The translator, too, who must have had a difficult task, has served him excellently, and her rendering deserves its own place as fine English prose."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p938 N 21 '29 200w

CARPENTER, FRANCES. Tales of a Basque 2 grandmother. 217p il $3.50 Doubleday, Doran

Tales, Basque 30-26037

Folktales collected in the Basque country and illustrated by a Basque artist.

"The illustrations in this volume are among the most charming and distinctive of the year. They are typically Basque in every detail, they have imagination and humor, and the color reproduction is as fine as any that has been done in children's books. Unfortunately, the stories fall far below the pictures. They are rather lifeless versions of Basque folktales." A. T. Eaton

— + N Y Times p19 D 28 '30 100w

"The 'Tales of a Basque Grandmother,' while simple enough for younger readers, are at the same time of more significance to older ones. Frances Carpenter has gone for her material back to very old sources of folk-lore indeed, perhaps the oldest extant; nor is it material easy to come by, since much of it has been lost in the inaccessible fastnesses of the Basque language. Yet the characters which figure in them are entirely real and understandable, despite the fact that the scene is laid 'when people still believed in the fairy folk, and when wonderful things happened under their very eyes.' " E. M. Kelly

+ Sat R of Lit 7:490 D 27 '30 550w

CARPENTER, FREDERIC IVES. Emerson and Asia. 282p $3 Harvard univ. press [13s 6d Oxford]

814 Emerson, Ralph Waldo. Oriental literature 30-14964

"Frederick Ives Carpenter holds that Emerson is the first truly American thinker, who initiated a new scholarship, a new type of thinking. Emerson, like Petrarch, is the precursor of a new Renaissance, the American Renaissance of Orientalism. This is the purpose and driving force of his book: to show how Emerson blends in his thinking the large and universal inspiration of the Orient with the sharp detail, the passion for the immediate application of knowledge, which are characteristic of the West, and in an especial degree of Emerson's own land."—N Y Times

---

"Done originally as a doctoral dissertation at the University of Chicago, this volume is valuable both for those who seek to understand the mind of Emerson and for those who are interested in ideological migrations. . . Emerson emerges from this study not only more fully understood but also more fully appreciated as a seminal thinker in many fields." T. V. S.

+ Int J Ethics 41:129 O '30 250w

"A book dealing with Emerson and India in a more thorough manner would have been much more useful. . . I insist on the irrelevance of much of the book only because the central part of the study is important, and Mr. Carpenter could have done much greater service still to scholarship by investigating more deeply the relationship between Emerson and oriental thought." Denis Saurat

— + Modern Philol 28:245 N '30 1950w

Reviewed by Charles Johnston
N Y Times p5 Ag 10 '30 750w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:80 N '30

St Louis 28:298 D '30

CARPENTER, WILLIAM SEAL. Development of American political thought. 190p $2 Princeton univ. press [9s Oxford]

320.9 Political science. United States—Politics and government 30-28070

"Political topics such as balance of power, the foundation of democracy, American individualism and the principle of majority rule are discussed. The author is associate professor of politics in Princeton University."—St Louis

---

Reviewed by R. G. Gettell
Am Pol Sci R 24:1045 N '30 380w

Boston Transcript p4 Jl 5 '30 500w

Reviewed by G. E. G. Catlin
N Y World p7m Jl 20 '30 730w

St Louis 28:204 S '30

"This unpretentious treatise reflects the best characteristics of modern American scholarship, its zealous investigation of authorities and its complete freedom from bias."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p579 Jl 10 '30 250w

CARR, JOHN DICKSON. It walks by night. 328p $2 (7s 6d) Harper

30-4494

The decapitated body of a handsome athlete, the Duc de Saligny, is found by Bencolin, French police inspector, and his associates, in the card-room of a Parisian gambling house on the eve of Saligny's marriage to Mme Louise Laurent, whose former husband was known to be criminally insane. The crime had been anticipated by Bencolin, who had taken every precaution to have the entrances of the room guarded; yet in spite of all this the murderer had entered, and escaped. Another murder of the same genre is committed before Bencolin suspects the identity of the criminal, and proves his point.

Bookm 71:xxxi Mr '30 40w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 Mr 2 '30 130w

New Statesman 35:162 My 10 '30 30w

"The story is beautifully told and offers one surprise after another before it reaches its dramatic dénouement."

+ N Y Times p28 F 23 '30 160w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:350 F 26 '30 50w

"This murder and mystery novel has one distinction: it contains one of the most horrible murders in fiction."

Sat R 149:634 My 17 '30 140w

"Mr Carr's story is highly melodramatic and wildly improbable, but it moves easily within the field of its own assumptions and holds the nerves, if not the commonsense, of the reader pliant to its mood and happenings."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:761 F 22 '30 180w

"It is all, in fact, very misleading and delightful. Mr. Carr writes with a proper sense of a detective raconteur's slight thickheadedness. The story may be read either as itself or as a burlesque of itself. In both it is above the average."

Spec 144:582 Ap 5 '30 100w

Reviewed by Margaret Cole
Spec 144:1058 Je 28 '30 30w

Times [London] Lit Sup p354 Ap 24 '30 250w

CARR, PHILIP. French at home, in the country and in town. 210p il $3.50 Dial press [10s 6d Methuen]

914.4 France—Social life and customs

"[A book] concerned not with history or monuments, but with the life, habits and ways of thinking of the present day Frenchman." (Outlook) Partial contents: The family is everything, Good manners, Schools and culture, The defense of property, Sport and le sport; Low wages and saving.

Reviewed by Geoffrey West
Nation and Ath 48:300 N 29 '30 80w

"Mr. Carr knows his France, not merely his Paris, and this introduction to French manners should be useful to those visitors who wish to know something about the country they are staying in. That there should be nothing very new in the book is almost inevitable; there are too many informative books about France, but Mr. Carr has a pleasant style, and looks at problems from a new angle. The book is well illustrated by reproductions from photographs."

+ New Statesman 36:124 N 1 '30 80w

"Readable and informative book. 'The French at home' is remarkable in that it gives us a picture of the life of the intellectual, professional men and women of France. And, just as does the landowning peasant and the independent artisan the French intellectual instinctively seeks the golden mean. This is one of the reasons—but not the only one—that the reader of this very delightful volume will see the French, as the traveler who knows them well has always seen them, as the successors of the ancient Greeks." Katherine Woods

+ N Y Times p13 D 28 '30 1050w

"If the French Government could take cognizance of so apparently trifling a thing as the attitude of the American tourist in France, it would require him to secure, with his carte d'identité, a copy of this book. It is the best popular volume on the Frenchman at home in town and country that this reviewer has seen."

CARR, PHILIP—Continued

+ Outlook 156:549 D 3 '30 220w

"Mr. Carr's book will be of absorbing interest to anyone who cares for French France, for he is not a traveller but a resident, and his book has nothing whatever to do with tourism, or beauty spots, or plages, or Paris-American cocktail bars; but with the real vital life of the French themselves, so often very puzzling to English people when they come in contact with it."

+ Spec 145:500 O 11 '30 800w

"Mr Carr's combination of surface data and interpretative insight makes his book a genuine study of the French nation as well as a spirited picture of French life."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 4 '31 1050w

"There are one or two mistakes and some repetitions, but on the whole it is a very readable and instructive book, showing acquaintance with a France into which few Englishmen penetrate."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p852 O 23 '30 800w

CARR, WILLIAM GUY. By guess and by God; the story of the British submarines in the war; with a pref. by S. S. Hall. 310p il $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

940.451 European war, 1914-1918—Naval operations—Submarine 30-25100

The work of British submarines and their crews during the war is revealed thru the story of the E-11, which destroyed an enemy ship in the harbor of Constantinople; the account of a fight between a submarine and a zeppelin; and the record of the North sea patrol.

Booklist 27:199 Ja '31

Bookm 72:vii O '30 80w

"This book makes no pretensions to literary excellence, and has none, but it is informative and disturbing. . . Lieutenant Carr has produced a straightforward record, which should be read by pacifists and revolutionaries for realistic information, and by cynics and other disillusioned and tired people—for various reasons." Oakley Johnson

+ Books p40 D 7 '30 670w

"The principal merit of 'By Guess and By God' rises out of the book's very defects; it is a true picture of the life of submarine crews through their own eyes. As such it is a potent exhibit in any discussion of the social aspects of warfare. Mr. Carr, a lieutenant in the British submarine service, recipient of commendation and decorations for more than one act of valor, tells his story with obvious simplicity and sincerity." W. M. T.

+ Boston Transcript p3 N 1 '30 500w

CARR, WILLIAM H. Stir of nature; a book for young American naturalists; with a foreword by Clyde Fisher. 208p il $2.50 Oxford

591.5 Zoology—Juvenile literature. Animals—Habits and behavior. Natural history—Juvenile literature 30-16362

"In fifteen brief chapters the author tells of his adventures and discoveries among birds and animals, beavers, polecats, field mice, crows, herons and others; and each chapter arouses interest in and respect for the animal or bird described. Chapter two contains a woodsman's calendar, showing when the various animals come out of hibernation, when they mate, when and where they feed, and when they again go into Winter quarters."—N Y Times

Booklist 27:67 O '30

"This makes it an excellent first book for boys and girls whose interest in wild creatures is awakening and who need a guide to start them in correct methods of observation and collecting. The author has succeeded in putting into the book some of his own enjoyment of the wild life than can be seen close at hand if one knows how to look for it." A. T. Eaton

+ N Y Times p10 Jl 20 '30 500w

St Louis 28:210 S '30

"I am sure that the simply recounted experiences and the expressed love of the author for wild life in 'The Stir of Nature' is bound to stir a new interest in the minds and hearts of those who have the good fortune to read it." G. F. Morse

+ Sat R of Lit 7:438 D 6 '30 170w

CARRE, JEAN MARIE. Frail warrior [a life of Robert Louis Stevenson]; tr. from the French by Eleanor Hard. 297p $3 Coward-McCann [10s 6d Douglas]

B or 92 Stevenson, Robert Louis 30-10004

An interpretative biography of Robert Louis Stevenson, which is concerned mainly with his adult life. The author strikes a middle course between the saint of the Balfour biography and the adventurer of Hellman and Steuart.

Booklist 27:24 S '30

"A readable but unimportant biography of Stevenson. 'The Frail Warrior' will please those readers who desire a work that is more complete than 'The True Stevenson' and less extended than Mr. Steuart's fat biography. The facts (at least, those known and used by the later English-writing biographers) are here and the narrative moves along smoothly." Herbert Gorman

+ Books p22 Ap 13 '30 400w

"Each of the earlier biographers had felt called upon to depict Stevenson either as the chocolate angel or as the inspired demon. This latest biographer, with no thesis to demonstrate and no bias to defend, presents merely the ungarnished facts and leads us inevitably to the conclusion that his subject was a curious combination of the two previous conceptions. Surely this is more like truth. Monsieur Carré's portrait we need not hesitate to accept as the genuine likeness of Robert Louis Stevenson, the frail warrior." E. B. Hall

+ Boston Transcript p3 My 3 '30 1700w

Cleveland Open Shelf p94 Je '30

"Carre's biography of the quixotic Scotchman is colorful, vivid, and makes very good reading. Whatever we say about the 'new biography' theoretically, in the hands of a writer like Carre it achieves results of remarkable condensation and lucidity. Occasionally—perhaps under the influence of his subject—the author becomes a trifle melodramatic, and once he is sententious. But on the whole, Stevenson the man is presented here with grace and, what is much more important with understanding and sympathy." Clinton Simpson

+ N Y World p11m My 4 '30 300w

"A pleasant and thoroughly readable biography. As interpreted by Carré, sympathetically but calmly, Stevenson becomes rather pathetic than heroic. Though it is hard to say why there should be anything pitiful about a life which though not very long was very full and which will be remembered as long as men, fleeing actuality, find refuge in romance between covers."

+ Outlook 154:546 Ap 2 '30 100w

St Louis 28:218 S '30

"Well-meant, inadequate, but thoroughly admiring biography, which tells us nothing new." W. H. Low

— + Sat R of Lit 6:1025 My 10 '30 1450w

2 CARRICK, ALICE VAN LEER (MRS PRESCOTT ORDE SKINNER). Collector's luck in Spain. 202p il $3 Little

749 Collectors and collecting. Art industries and trade—Spain 30-31381

A shopper for antiques tells of the treasures in wrought iron, glass, silver and other media, many of them marvellously inexpensive, that she discovered in the old towns of Spain

Booklist 27:194 Ja '31

"This new [book] about her travels and her 'antiqueing' in Spain is even better than her previous accounts of similar journeys in France and England. For she responded joyously to the varied lures of that interesting land, and her pages reflect the never-flagging zest with which she went about, seeing, doing, experiencing and buying. . . For the benefit of collectors there is a list of shops and addresses with lively and revealing comment on each one."
+ N Y Times p37 N 16 '30 350w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 D 22 '30 50w

CARROLL, MRS GLADYS HASTY. Land spell. 210p il $1.75 Macmillan
30-23895

A mystery story for older girls. Stephanie, a young girl obviously used to every luxury, appears at the door of a Maine farm, asking for shelter. She gives no explanation, nor even her last name. The Shaws receive her kindly and grow very fond of her, never asking about her personal affairs. Things turn out well for Stephanie and she is able to help the Shaws in return.

Bookm 72:xxvii D '30 80w

"Mrs. Carroll has a true gift for character; every member of that Maine family is a person. The plot has suspense, but it is a little far fetched." Lindsay Skinner
+ — N Y Evening Post p7d N 15 '30 40w

"The author writes well and the story is in the main unstrained and natural. The descriptions create for the reader a real sense of New England country. This is a much better book than the author's other story for girls, 'Cockatoo,' and shows promise for the future." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p33 N 30 '30 200w

Reviewed by M. C. Dodd
Sat R of Lit 7:403 N 29 '30 200w

CARROLL, LOREN. Wild onion. 312p $2 Dodd
30-22758

A psychological study of a Chicago gangster and master-bootlegger, Joe Dulac. The story follows his career, from his apprenticeship to his illicit trade to his rise in wealth and power and inevitable end at the hands of rival gangsters. Joe, as a type, is both weak and ruthless, cringing and domineering, shiftily clever and stupidly honest, greedy and generous, daring and yellow. The pathetic story of nineteen-year-old Bill, who "chose the wrong racket," runs secondary to the major interest of the book.

Books p20 S 28 '30 150w

"A straightaway racketeer story. . . It is colorful, exciting, and has the inestimable quality of complete hardness. There is no sentimentalizing about the hero or the hero's mother or the hero's girl or any of the associates of the hero. They are hard-boiled, tough birds and they act like concrete hearted animals." Fanny Butcher
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p8 Ag 30 '30 150w

"The author's good intentions conspire to weaken his book. In his determination to avoid the specious glamour and the romantic nonsense of the usual 'underworld' novel, he makes his leading character, Joe Dulac, such a generally loutish, cowardly and stupid fellow, that one can scarcely believe in him at all." R. C.
— N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 30 '30 220w

"This novel is a child of the front page. A story of Chicago liquor racketeering, it follows those broad, flagrant outlines of character that newspaper accounts of such manifestations of contemporary civilization present, and adds some of the psychological and personal material that newspapers omit. It is in these contributions, naturally enough, that the author is most successful."
N Y Times p14 S 7 '30 350w

CARROLL, MOLLIE RAY. Our wants and how they are satisfied. 72p $1 Barrows

330 Economics. Consumption (economics)
30-12996

A simple statement of the basic principles of economics, written for the information of women voters. The author is professor of economics and sociology at Goucher college.

Booklist 27:49 O '30

"Written for the National League of Women Voters, Mollie Ray Carroll's statement of the principles affecting consumption is as practical as a woman—or man—could wish. The economics of consumption has received more detailed study but not more simplified and poignant than this seventy-page treatment by the author of numerous bulletins issued for the women voters."
+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 21 '30 100w

"A little book likely to prove useful, especially to intelligent women who wish to clarify their ideas as to the economic implications of civic and social questions."
+ J Home Econ 22:769 S '30 150w
St Louis 28:205 S '30

CARROLL, MOLLIE RAY. Unemployment insurance in Germany. (Inst. of economics. Publications) 2d ed rev 140p $2.50 Brookings [8s 6d Williams & N.]

331.25 Insurance, Unemployment. Unemployed
30-20639

"The book is an inquiry into the unemployment insurance scheme that Germany instituted in July, 1927, the conditions that led to the passage of the law and the problems that those charged with its administration are meeting and trying to solve. Miss Carroll devoted a year in Germany, as a fellow of the Guggenheim Foundation, to intensive investigation and study of the organization and administration of this latest of State insurance systems and there had the assistance and cooperation of the technical experts and administrators of the Ministry of Labor and of officials of trade unions and employers' associations."—N Y Times

"This thorough study of unemployment insurance should be of interest to many who are not necessarily specialists in the field of social legislation."
+ Books p19 Je 22 '30 350w

"An authoritative study and presentation of a governmental attempt, of great interest to economists, to solve a grave problem. It is of all the greater value scientifically because it is wholly objective and does not in the least degree inject the author's ideas or feelings—if she has any—about unemployment insurance as a general scheme or about the German system in particular. She is detached all through the book."
+ N Y Times p11 S 29 '29 420w
St Louis 28:205 S '30

"Having been completed in the middle of 1929, this study could not attempt that critical estimate of the German plan upon which sober judgment of its soundness must rest." Leo Wolman
Survey 65:239 N 15 '30 450w
World Tomorrow 13:525 D '30 30w

CARRUTHERS, SIR JOSEPH HECTOR M'NEIL. Captain James Cook, R.N.; one hundred and fifty years after; with forewords by Dudley R. S. de Chair, and W. M. Hughes. 316p il $2.75 Dutton [7s 6d Murray, J.]

B or 92 Cook, James
[30-31566]

A biography of the famous English navigator and explorer, the real founder of Australia,

CARRUTHERS, J. H. M.—Continued
who discovered Hawaii, named the New Hebrides and New Caledonia, and was murdered by natives in the Hawaiian Islands in 1779.

"Sir Joseph analyses all the writings about Cook and weighs them with care and fairness, despite his enthusiasm, and gives his hero a clean bill of health in a careful, reasonable work which is not quite literature, but a piece of honest and effective argumentation." S. L. Cook
+ — Boston Transcript p2 S 20 '30 1500w

"If Sir Joseph Carruthers will admit no fault in his hero, for whose memory he has done more than any man, he has none the less written a trustworthy book, the result of complete investigation, and one that succeeds in its aim of clearing the name of the great navigator. While he makes no pretence at writing a biography, the charm of his style, always absolutely simple and unsensational, brings home suprisingly the romance of Cook's quest and the pathos of his death."
+ New Statesman 35:546 Ag 2 '30 650w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 156:109 S 17 '30 30w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:17 O '30 150w

Spec 145:141 Jl 26 '30 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p549 Jl 3 '30 1050w

CARSE, ROBERT. Siren song. 314p $1 Farrar [7s 6d Hurst]
30-25301

Ensign Barney Lowe was promoted to a lieutenancy for bravery during the World war. After the war he continued to follow the sea and his rise to prominence was meteoric. But always there were women whom he fascinated and who fascinated him. When the last of these had blasted his maritime career forever he returned to Kay, his first love, to find his way to peace.

Books p12 N 2 '30 180w

"The book is rather well written and the action is always interesting, if a little hard to swallow at times."
+ — N Y Times p24 O 12 '30 180w

"There is some first-rate marine descriptive writing in the book, and certain incidents are handled with considerable dramatic skill. But that Barney should hold the rank of a marine commodore at twenty-nine causes one to regard with scepticism, even incredulity, the possibility of his existence."
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:224 O 11 '30 220w

CARSTAIRS, CARROLL. Generation missing. 259p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [5s Heinemann]
940.48 European war—Personal narratives
30-13252

In 1915 Carroll Carstairs, a young American in England, gave his birthplace as Canada and entered the British army as a commissioned officer. His book is a record of four years' service at the front, and ends with the young officer wounded and in hospital at the signing of the Armistice.

Books p10 Ag 24 '30 180w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 18 '30 450w

"After a promising 'Prologue,' the writing drifts into the first person, and in spite of a few fine passages it creates no vivid pictures, and is concentrated too often on unrepresentative or uninteresting facts." J. P.
— Nation and Ath 47:sup192 My 10 '30 80w

"'A Generation Missing' is the sort of sentimental, beautiful, annoying book that one day seems good to you and another day doesn't. . . This is one of the finest, certainly one of the finest-spirited, of America's war-books." L. C. Woodman
+ — N Y Times p9 Je 15 '30 600w

St Louis 28:246 O '30

"His record is not great literature, but it is deft and charming. The delightful atmosphere of the Grenadiers' mess and the junketings at the Crillon bar in Paris make his book unusual. He also shows how the subject of 'wine and women,' so hard-worked in books of this sort, can be treated without offensiveness or brutality. There is a pleasant touch of mingled romance and humour in his description of his relations with various women and girls, English and French, good and not quite so good. It is, indeed, altogether a pleasant book."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p567 Jl 10 '30 500w

CARSTAIRS, CYRIL, pseud. See Kaledin, V. K.

CARSWELL, DONALD. Scott, and his circle; with four portrait studies (Eng title: Sir Walter; a four-part study in biography). 299p $3.50 Doubleday, Doran [15s Murray; J.]
B or 92 Scott, Sir Walter, bart. 31-26038

The first half of the book is a study of Scott, the business man, solicitor, sheriff, politician, and author, his unfortunate business venture in company with James Ballantyne, who was Scott's partner in publishing and bankruptcy, and his heroic liquidation of his debts. The second half of the book is devoted to studies of three of his friends: James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd; John Gibson Lockhart, Scott's son-in-law and biographer; and Joanna Baillie, the little Scottish spinster, whose plays had an extraordinary contemporary vogue.

"Written in a distinguished, a beautiful prose, rich in literary flavor and leavened by a rare ironic wit." F. T. Marsh
+ Bookm 72:427 D '30 550w

Christian Science Monitor p13 N 22 '30 420w

"Mr. Carswell's study of Scott is an accurate and shrewd investigation into the origins of the publishing business as we know it today. He has supplemented this study with authoritative and highly entertaining biographical sketches of James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd, of John Gibson Lockhart and of Joanna Baillie."
+ New Repub 65:227 Ja 7 '31 220w

"Scott the man can never fail to raise admiration. If ever there was a hero, he was one. Curiously enough, Mr. Carswell, his latest biographer, is one of the few to fail to see the heroism. His book is lively, well-written, and occasionally eloquent; but it is marred by a patronising tone, caught doubtless from the bad manner of certain too popular biographies: an assumption of superiority to its subject which is at once ridiculous and exasperating. Scott had some very obvious faults; but the man does not live who can afford to treat him de haut en bas."
— + New Statesman 35:420 Jl 5 '30 750w

"On the whole, a lively picture, displaying a fine appreciation of the many humors, and equally appreciative of the more solemn aspects of the Abbotsford circle."
+ N Y Times p7 D 28 '30 780w

"True lovers of 'Sir Walter'—those we mean who know him intimately through his poetry, his novels or his son-in-law, as friend, magician and hero—should not read Mr. Donald Carswell's [book]. It will give them only pain. But alas! these true lovers are now few and there is a large young public who would like vaguely to be introduced to Scott without the trouble of study. Such as these should all read the book; they will feel that they have met Scott. It is true they will see his least ideal side, for they will know him as a man of business among men of business and of the world, pressed by financial temptations, sometimes yielding to them, autocratic, ill-advised, lavish, fond of show, devoted to hospitality, set upon success, but withal great and irresistibly lovable."
+ — Spec 145:167 Ag 2 '30 230w

"Whether the topic be love or conversation, Burns or Byron, poetry or publishing, Mr. Carswell seizes upon any scrap of evidence which can be twisted into a sneer at the imagined and dramatized pettiness of Scott's thoughts and motives. . . In effect he assumes that the ordinary reader is a blind worshipper of 'the Wizard of the North' and devotes himself almost entirely to emphasizing his real or imaginary faults and failures. To do this he strains the evidence almost beyond belief. . . Scott's life was neither the tragedy which Mr. Carswell calls it nor the sorry masquerade he makes it: it might much more reasonably be called the 'epic which,' in Mr. Carswell's words, 'Lockhart chose to make of it'. . . Mr. Carswell's book is rather for the jaded palate of the literary epicure or for the young person who is afraid of being suspected of having a bump of reverence."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p681 Ag 28 '30 1600w

CARTER, RUSSELL GORDON. King's spurs. 312p il $2 Little 30-23550

Medieval France is the background for this tale concerning the adventures of young Guilbert du Guesclin while in the services of a robber baron, Gaspard the Wolf. For boys and girls.

Chicago Daily Tribune p13 N 15 '30 30w

"Though the characters never really live, the story is told in a pleasant, readable fashion and there is plenty of action. This will be a useful addition to historical stories for boys and girls of 12 to 14." A. T. Eaton
+ — N Y Times p26 O 26 '30 170w

"Real pains have been lavished on the details of daily life, the dress, the food, the amusements, and on the picture of the fair, the economy of the castle, the ceremonies of the tilt-yard, and any boy who reads it will finish with a pretty clear idea of the external life of the nobles in the time of Philippe Auguste, painlessly conveyed." Garrett Mattingly
+ Sat R of Lit 7:333 N 15 '30 230w

CARTWRIGHT, H. MILLS. Photogravure. 142p il $3.50 Am. photographic pub.
777 Photogravure 30-8147

"A textbook on the machine and hand printed processes, giving details of making plates and printing. Has chapters on preparation of materials; photographic operations; retouching negatives and positives; copperplates and cylinders; the carbon resist; etching; machine printing; hand printed photogravure. Illustrated."—Pratt

Booklist 27:56 O '30
N Y New Tech Bks 15:24 Ap '30
Pratt p25 autumn '30
St Louis 28:294 D '30

CARUS, MRS HELENA (PROUDFOOT). Metten of Tyre. (Junior bks.) 171p il $2 Doubleday, Doran 30-25377

"Metten, a twelve-year-old boy, sails with his father, a Phoenician merchant, to Egypt and Britain. He meets with pirates while sailing down the Nile; learns how papyrus is grown, cut and made ready for use; visits his grandfather's vineyard and is the honored treader of the wine press; watches the mining of tin in Cornwall and travels with a pack train carrying tin to Solomon for his temple."—Cleveland Open Shelf

"The author, who, by the way, is a Chicago woman, has told a very interesting story of the days of the Phoenician traders and has given us a realistic picture of a period and a people about whom there is little in this form." A. L. Shea
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p11 S 20 '30 130w
Cleveland Open Shelf p134 N '30

"A very pleasant book, delightfully illustrated. . . There is, unfortunately, very little effort at characterization. Metten's mother and sister are very shadowy figures. Ethbaal has but one outstanding characteristic—his pedagogical love of imparting facts to his son in season and out. On one occasion, for example, after a lively skirmish between his ship and a pirate ship on the Nile, he feels constrained to explain to his son just how the Egyptian people make paper from the papyrus plant." H. C. Crew
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:333 N 15 '30 300w

CARVALHO, CLAIRE, and SPARKES, BOYDEN. Crime in ink. 296p il $2.50 (10s 6d) Scribner
343 Crime and criminals. Carvalho, David Nunes. Writing—Identification. Forgery
29-24607

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:341 Je '30
Bookm 70:xxvi Ja '30 70w
Christian Century 46:1579 D 18 '29 60w

"Though quite abominably written, the book has interest for its novel approach to the detection of crime."
— + New Statesman 34:448 Ja 11 '30 180w
N Y World p11m Mr 30 '30 250w
St Louis 28:67 Mr '30
Springf'd Republican p10 S 3 '30 200w
Times [London] Lit Sup p1096 D 26 '29 420w

CARY, LUCIAN. One lovely moron. 293p $2 Doubleday, Doran
30-3542

She was the daughter of the president of the University of Minnewaska and they said she was a moron. He was Professor Michael Torr, psychologist on the university staff. They met by accident and kept up the friendship by design until it was discovered that the moron theory was all wrong, and that professors of psychology do sometimes fall in love.

Booklist 27:106 N '30

"It is all good, clean fun. Among the frothy novels of the season, 'One Lovely Moron' is perhaps first and foam-most."
+ Books p22 F 16 '30 100w
Boston Transcript p2 F 5 '30 350w

"The story is sadly in need of polish and embellishment, and for the moment at least. Mr. Cary seems to have lost sight of the fact that the movies have found their tongue. His book has all the earmarks of success in the old silent films, but its present dialogue would never stand the test of sound apparatus."
+ — N Y Times p8 Ja 19 '30 320w

CARY, MAX, and WARMINGTON, ERIC HERBERT. Ancient explorers. 270p $4 Dodd [12s 6d Methuen]
910.9 Discoveries (in geography) 30-7091

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"It would be a careless reader who could read this book and not be impressed. There are so many things; the enlargement of horizon that must come to any but the highly specialized student; the pleasure of emptying the mind of so much that is not so, and refilling with the worthwhile; the delight of the familiar conversational essay, for such is the style, very unpretentious yet lucid." C. J. Finger
+ Books p18 Mr 2 '30 800w
Boston Transcript p1 F 8 '30 580w
N Y Times p18 Je 29 '30 200w
Pratt p29 autumn '30
St Louis 28:78 Mr '30

"The authors have achieved remarkable success in making what is primarily a scientific treatise for the most part readable, and often fascinating. Not that it always reads easily. There are stretches as arid as can be found in 'Das Rheingold,' or even in 'Siegfried.' Sometimes the mass of information crowded into a single sentence, and that, too, wielding names staggering to the average citizen, wilts the reader's power of concentration. . . If the more scientific part of the book irks any reader, let him turn for divertissement to the Munchausen-like tales of the last chapter, and note the literary traditions of these early writers as revealed in Swift, Rabelais, Jules Verne, and Cyrano de Bergerac."

CARY, M., and WARMINGTON, E. H.—Cont.

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:657 Ja 18 '30 700w

"The authors of this book, one of whom has already written an excellent treatise on the commerce between the Roman Empire and India, have packed an immense amount of information into the compass of some 270 pages, and have supplied the necessary references for those who desire a fuller treatment of the questions raised. . . The authors are conservative in their treatment of ancient tradition (which is as it should be), and their knowledge of the modern literature of the subject seems to be exhaustive."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p677 Ag 28 '30 650w

CASE, ROBERT ORMOND. Yukon drive. 359p $2 Doubleday, Doran
30-6548

In the midst of the gold rush days of '98 in the Klondike, the hero, Rondo, undertakes to deliver beef on the hoof in Dawson. He and his companions meet Molly O'Mara, a dark-haired Irish girl, on her way to the Klondike to find a missing brother. Molly joins Rondo and his party, and after a trip beset with many dangers they arrive safely in Dawson, sell the cattle for an enormous price, and find the missing brother and their own happiness.

Booklist 26:396 Jl '30

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 Mr 2 '30 80w

Cleveland Open Shelf p80 My '30

N Y Times p20 Ap 20 '30 230w

CASE, SHIRLEY JACKSON. Experience with the supernatural in early Christian times. 341p $3 Century

231.73 Church history—Primitive and early church. Supernatural. Miracles 29-24029

"Professor Case describes first the ancient Jewish, Greek, and Roman beliefs concerning the relative positions and the forces of heaven and hell; then belief in apparitions, contact with the supernatural through portents, sacred books, and inspired persons; then heroic redeemers, Jewish and Gentile, endowed with supernatural powers; then the conceptions underlying sacrifice and ritual; then the protection sought for society in the union of church and state. The book concludes with three chapters dealing with Christianity's popularization of individualistic religion, the extension of supernatural help to the life beyond the grave, and the subjection of knowledge to faith."—Yale R n s

"The book is a useful synopsis of the beliefs and rites of the peoples that Christianity was to convert. It helps to fill out our knowledge of a momentous time." W. L. Sullivan

+ Books p14 F 23 '30 550w

"This is a fine piece of scholarly work. Professor Case's grasp of the history, dogma, and life of early Christianity is uncanny. These two he has brought together in an understanding way. His combination of these two fields of study helps one to understand the supernaturalism of the early Christian writers. . . Some people will see in the book an attempt to rationalize early Christianity, but liberal scholarship will see in it an explanation and exposition of why early Christian advocates concerned themselves so extensively with the imagery of supernaturalism." T. C. R.

+ Boston Transcript p3 D 28 '29 800w

"Without a word of argument touching the validity of the general concept of the supernatural as sharply distinguished from the natural, Professor Case gives those who base their belief in Christianity upon its supernatural elements a great deal to think about. . . The author's handling of the immense array of facts which he adduces in illustration of the religious concepts of the period is thoroughly objective." W. E. Garrison

+ Christian Century 47:147 Ja 29 '30 600w

Cleveland Open Shelf p21 F '30

Reviewed by Lawrence Rose
Living Church 83:411 Jl 19 '30 450w

"The case is clearly set forth and the facts presented are so fascinating in themselves, that recreation and information go hand in hand." E. B. Chaffee

+ Outlook 154:270 F 12 '30 120w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:14 Ap '30 80w

Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 22 '30 250w

World Tomorrow 13:379 S '30 100w

"Few books contribute more in such brief compass to the sympathetic understanding of the New Testament." B. W. Bacon

+ Yale R n s 19:856 summer '30 320w

CASEY, ROBERT JOSEPH. Secret of the bungalow. 304p $2 Bobbs
30-22019

"Cletus Howard's body is found pretty well incinerated in the ruins of a house which he sometimes occupies. Cletus was rather a bad egg, and what with vengeful rival racketeers and jealous lady friends, it was no wonder he was bumped off. But was he? Sands, free lance assistant to the police, does some investigating and begins to think not, even before the dentist was murdered."—Outlook

Bookm 72:xxi S '30 100w

"This volume is recommended for its pace, its multiplicity of interesting entanglements and its light, airy manner." Will Cuppy

+ Books p10 Ag 10 '30 150w

"The complications are many and nicely timed. The sleuths—a chief of detectives and his unofficial assistant, Jim Sands—are altogether delightful." Dashiell Hammett

+ N Y Evening Post 5s S 6 '30 200w

"The author has mastered the language of the underworld and his policemen are true to type, but the book leaves much to be desired." Bruce Rae

N Y Times p26 S 21 '30 80w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 156:69 S 10 '30 100w

"The severest critic of mystery yarns will find it hard to pick a flaw in 'The Secret of the Bungalow.' Clever guessers will spot the criminal early in the tale, but Mr. Casey is so adept in drawing herrings across the murderer's trail that the exciting dénoûement comes as a real surprise. Here is a yarn that the mystery addict must not miss." W. C. Weber

+ Sat R of Lit 7:232 O 11 '30 100w

CASEY, ROBERT JOSEPH. Voice of the lobster. 306p $2 Bobbs
30-6728

"About Freddy Patter, gorgeously uniformed first-class private in the usher corps at Station 25 on the mezzanine, and what happened when he was confused by practically every one in New York with Gen. Gonzalez, who had fled Pandorra with a million dollars' worth of stolen property. An uproarious extravaganza."—Outlook

"It is excellent Robert J. Casey, which is to say highly entertaining and full of comedy of a fast and frisky nature."

+ Books p10 My 4 '30 180w

N Y Times p9 Je 22 '30 250w

"A splendid piece of foolishness." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:510 Mr 26 '30 100w

"'The Voice of the Lobster' is boisterously funny. The author piles ridiculous situations on ridiculous situations in almost dizzying succession."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 16 '30 120w

CASSERLEY, ANNE THOMASINE. Roseen. 152p il $1.50 Harper

29-21677

Stories for children, all of which have an Irish flavor. They narrate the adventures of Roseen, the fat, good-natured black pig, and her friends Girry Lee the Hare, Brock the Badger, the Kerry Calf, Coppal Ru and others, as well as the fairies and the clogmaker's wife.

Booklist 26:165 Ja '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p128 S '30

"Miss Casserley knows how to take full advantage of the rich mine of Irish folk-legend which is the source of her work. Her illustrations, however, are not up to her story telling and add very little to the effect."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:640 Ja 11 '30 230w

CASSON, STANLEY. xxth century sculptors. 130p pl $3.50 (9s) Oxford

735 Sculpture. Sculptors [30-23881]

"Writing to meet arguments arising over his Some modern sculptors, the author attempts to answer contentions as well as to discuss the work of Carl Milles, Paul Manship, George Kolbe, Archipenko, Zadkine, Herzog, and Frank Dobson."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Booklist 27:146 D '30

"His opinions are well stated, very readable, and highly controversial. On almost every page a reader itches to answer back. The thirty-three illustrations, mostly full-page, are finely reproduced, and the book itself is handsome and well printed." John Piper

+ Nation and Ath 47:740 S 13 '30 150w

Reviewed by Margaret Breuning

N Y Evening Post p4d D 27 '30 800w

Reviewed by E. A. Jewell

N Y Times p11 N 9 '30 500w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:90 D '30

"The excellence of the illustrations deserves special mention. The chapters on these artists are just and interesting appreciations by a critic with well-considered standards to apply to their work."

+ Spec 145:58 Jl 12 '30 250w

CATLIN, GEORGE EDWARD GORDON. Study of the principles of politics; being an essay towards political rationalization. 469p $6 Macmillan [18s Allen, G.]

320.1 Political science. Civilization 30-13969

"It is the fundamental proposition of this large and learned volume that out of the study of political science may be evolved real laws which will enable the subject to become, in the words of Mr. Shaw, 'the science by which alone civilization can be saved.'. . . The axioms with which Professor Catlin starts are that men desire to have their own way and that they cannot avoid living together, and on this basis he examines the essentials of society in the second part of his volume."—Sat R

"A discussion that will admit of much controversy, but which is so logical and straightforward in treatment that it will stand as the product of advanced thought." F. P. H.

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 7 '30 500w

"The book is generally lucid and incisive. Professor Catlin, too, possesses the fatal gift to challenge and provoke."

+ Nation 130:711 Je 18 '30 230w

Reviewed by R. G. Randall

Nation and Ath 48:270 N 22 '30 850w

"Professor Catlin has many illuminating observations to make, and some of his general conclusions are useful as correctives in the consideration of policy or plans for action. He has also the ability to pierce through the controversy of the schools to the real issues with which we are faced; and therefore his book will be found valuable by all who are concerned with social problems. But it is only a beginning, not a conclusion, in the search for a science of social life."

+ — New Statesman 34:782 Mr 22 '30 900w

Reviewed by John Carter

Outlook 155:108 My 21 '30 230w

"I feel sure that anyone who peruses this considerable volume in the hope of unfolding the secrets of success in statecraft will be completely disappointed. He will find many judicious and worthwhile comments and reflections on the larger question of political philosophy, but that is a wholly different affair from the neutral calculations of the political engineer . . . The chief merit of Professor Catlin's standpoint is that it enables him to deal with these topics in the light of our present sociological knowledge and with a fine catholicity of spirit. The author draws aptly from many sources and shrewdly sums up many controversies ancient and modern. He is at once critical and constructive—though it might be claimed that he is constructive only because he does not cling too rigidly to his initial tenet regarding the neutrality of politics toward the ends of life. The chief defect is that, abandoning the relation of social activity to specific social structures, he misses a certain concentration or focus." R. M. MacIver

+ — Pol Sci Q 45:607 D '30 650w

"It cannot be denied that a very good case is made out for a really scientific political science, and Professor Catlin's book, if a little difficult for the uninitiated, marks an epoch in the history of a most important modern study."

+ Sat R 149:368 Mr 22 '30 350w

"Professor Catlin's book may best be described as a monumental work which seeks to delimit and define a positive science of politics . . . The book's abstractness will make it of little value to anyone but the specialist. Nevertheless, the author's final definition of political science as 'the study of the control relationship between willing beings' can hardly be bettered, and there is a good deal of reasoned common sense which helps to bring our notions of the State and the nation, &c., up to date."

+ Spec 144:395 Mr 8 '30 420w

Reviewed by A. G. Dewey

Springf'd Republican p7e S 28 '30 850w

CAUFFMAN, STANLEY HART. Adventures of Polydore. 339p $2 Penn

30-7292

"A romantic story of Colonial days in which an amiable old bachelor becomes enmeshed in the love affairs of his impetuous niece." —Bookm

"Mr. Cauffman combines a real knowledge and feeling for a period with the ability to write most charmingly about it. . . The reader is lured to settle back and enjoy abductions, elopements, high words, and courtly philosophy with no shame. It is as exquisite as a pavane played on a spinet."

+ Bookm 71:xxvi Ap '30 80w

Books p10 My 11 '30 100w

"The story of Polydore and the lovely Prudence is wholly enjoyable, often amusing, sometimes exciting, but never sordid and always full of the good old English spirit, of adventure, of good cheer and of true romance." G. B.

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 24 '30 500w

"Taken as a whole, the book has a robust and hearty quality. Its success in recreating the atmosphere of the past is the result of a very proficient handling of the idiom of the period."

+ N Y Times p20 Ap 13 '30 350w

CAZAMIAN, LOUIS FRANCOIS. Development ^{2} of English humour; pt. 1, From the early times to the renascence. 160p $2 Macmillan

827 Humor. English literature—History and criticism (30-27958)

Professor Cazamian surveys English humor from early times to the renaissance. Contents: Humour and the English temperament: the old English period; Mediaeval French humour; Humour in middle English literature before Chaucer; Chaucer's humour; English and Scottish humour after Chaucer. The author is professor of English Literature and civilization in the University of Paris.

"The book is assuredly worth careful study, especially since it is the first attempt to cover this subject thoroughly and competently." J. B. Allin

+ Bookm 72:328 N '30 650w

"The growth of English humor from the beginnings to the Renaissance is a popular subject which Professor Cazamian redeems for scholarship by a treatment altogether profound. He does not offer us the usual perfunctory remarks followed by a list of side-splitting illustrations. Readers will be disappointed if they come to laugh, though they may remain to reflect." G. F. Whicher

+ Books p25 D 14 '30 850w

"What is the thing called humor? Don't ask too boldly, for the subject is plastered all over with signs reading Fragile. Handle with Care. It has taken all of this intrepid scholar's native tact and fluency of style to avoid breaking it, but he at least has succeeded in that respect. A casual reader might ask whether he had not avoided the error of crushing it at the expense of an exact and understanding analysis. But a little reflection will reward him with a growing realization of the scope and importance of the domain he has staked out." Leslie Ault

+ N Y Evening Post p4d D 27 '30 480w

N Y Times p16 D 21 '30 420w

"One closes Prof Cazamian's book with a feeling that it is all too short. Fortunately this is only the beginning. One anticipates equally stimulating and entertaining discussion in the two parts which are to follow." C. D'E

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 4 '31 750w

CECIL, LORD EDWARD CHRISTIAN DAVID. Stricken deer; or, The life of Cowper. 341p $5 Bobbs [15s Constable]

B or 92 Cowper, William 30-10369

Lord David Cecil tells with straightforward simplicity the story of the weak but lovable poet whose otherwise serene life was cursed by recurring fits of madness. Between these periods of darkness the poet lived as a gentle recluse, with his faithful Mrs Unwin and other ministering women,—happy in his friends, his poetry, his animals and his garden.

Booklist 26:392 Jl '30

"The Stricken Deer has something of the remote charm of a drama which proceeds among a group of Dresden China figures under bell-shaped glass; the drama is undoubtedly important to the enacting figures, but the observer must focus his attention too sharply for comfort to catch the miniature movements and the minor tragedy." Harry Salpeter

+ — Bookm 71:333 Je '30 450w

"Lord David Cecil has painted an ineradicable panorama of the eighteenth century, and although he may not lead us to read Cowper overmuch, he has introduced us to a character that should not have been neglected so long. And this introduction is close to literature itself." Karl Schriftglesser

+ Boston Transcript p8 My 3 '30 950w

Cath World 132:121 O '30 280w

"Here is a critic, well equipped with scholarship and judgment, who is young enough to have escaped the personal ordeal of the war years; and, though that exemption may have nothing to do with his outlook, it is a fact that this life of one of the strangest and most unhappy English poets is notable for the equanimity and easy strength of its style and judgments."

+ Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 15 '30 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p94 Je '30

"Lord Cecil has written a biography after my own heart. He has taken advantage of modern methods of organizing a great mass of material into a readable narrative, without subjecting that material to a falsifying simplification. When facts fail him he refrains from the dubious virtue of invention, and he displays a quite unusual knowledge of and sympathy with the chaotic processes of human nature. My only discontent is with the rapidity with which he passes over Cowper's boyhood and early manhood. I wish more letters and concrete incidents had been introduced here. Failing them, one feels a little as if Cowper first came on the stage in his proper person, instead of as someone talked about, after his first attack of madness." A. B. Parsons

+ Nation 130:708 Je 18 '30 850w

"Humour, sympathy, insight, and knowledge have all gone to the making of what is probably the best life of Cowper yet written." D. M. Stuart

+ Nation and Ath 46:461 D 28 '29 1000w

"We should be grateful to Lord Cecil that he has not, like Fausset in his book on Cowper, resorted to psychoanalysis and nerves; that he has preferred to be lucid, preferring history, sympathy and native insight into character to the ramifications of psychology without data and without materials. . . The style is mostly gracious and easy, dropping only occasionally into sentimental fancy or the ecstasies of what is called interpretation." R. P. Blackmur

+ New Repub 64:105 S 10 '30 600w

New Statesman 34:371 D 21 '29 800w

"The author is at his worst in imitating certain of the Strachey mannerisms; his universal observations, which appear to have been fitted to the situation rather than applied to it, are fortunately infrequent. His irony, unlike Strachey's, is urbanely kind, quite fittingly an irony of 'sensibility'; and it picks out unfailingly from the Cowper of Romney's portrait the reality of a fussy and tender charming little man who believed he had seven times seven devils in his head and died of them." Vincent McHugh

+ — N Y Evening Post p10m My 10 '30 550w

"Lord David Cecil has written one of the finest biographies of recent years." Percy Hutchison

+ N Y Times p6 Ap 6 '30 1350w

"Lord David Cecil, whose sole fault as a writer is occasional indulgence in empty speculations, the posing of rhetorical questions to which there can be no answer, is to be congratulated on a very promising beginning as an artist in biography. He has studied his subject closely, but does not make a show of his research, and he has been at great pains to keep the balance between Cowper and the poet's circle." T. E. Welby

+ — Sat R 148:727 D 14 '29 1150w

"The book is uneven; it descends in spots to such lapses in usage as 'Where was she to go to?' The proof-reading is negligent, sometimes ludicrous in effect. But the book is interesting and readable, and refreshingly keeps clear of the Strachey school. Now and again it rises to a point of high attainment, especially in its brief portraits of Cowper's friends, who usually arrive in the nick of time, and sometimes withdraw with strange convenience when their service is no longer needed." C. G. Osgood

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1026 My 10 '30 1450w

"This, we have no hesitation in saying, is the best biography of Cowper yet written. It adds nothing new to our knowledge; but it arranges the familiar facts in such a way as to help our understanding. In one respect it does not challenge comparison with Mr. Hugh Fausset's recent study. As a literary interpreter, Mr. Fausset is left in undisputed possession of the field. Lord David concentrates his attention upon Cowper the man, and has attempted to present a balanced portrait of him against the background of his age." Gilbert Thomas

+ Spec 143:981 D 28 '29 900w

"The tone of his work is exactly right because he mingles sensibility with historical sense and vivacity with intellectual sobriety. It is a thing of no small merit for an interpretative biographer to declare 'History is only interesting as long as it is strictly true.' "

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 6 '30 1000w

"Lord David Cecil, though very unlike most of those writers who turn history and biography into pathological treatises, has unhappily felt enough of their influence to have chosen the wrong part of Cowper as his subject. The second title of his book is 'The Life of Cowper,' and certainly he does go through the life. But for one page given to the poems or the letters—that is, to the only Cowper who matters—he gives twenty to the victim of religious madness whom healthy people find a painful subject and one which except for alienists, is now quite unimportant."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p1077 D 19 '29 1700w

"It is by no means faultless. The author has made a few careless slips in dates, perhaps at times in other matters. His style, though usually good, suffers at times from over-writing, and occasionally bursts into Swinburnean floods of alliteration. There is occasional laxness about the reference of pronouns. Yet this biography held me as few books have held me in a long time. It did not tell a great deal that was previously unknown; it had some obvious faults of detail; but it had a compelling power." F. E. Pierce

+ — Yale R n s 20:404 winter '31 680w

CESTRE, CHARLES. Introduction to Edwin Arlington Robinson. 230p $1.75 Macmillan

811 Robinson, Edwin Arlington 30-21925

A critical appreciation of the poetry of Edwin Arlington Robinson by the professor of American literature and civilization at the University of Paris.

Booklist 27:148 D '30

"For those thousands of readers to whom Robinson 'needs no introduction', the most valuable part of this book will be the chapter on the poet's treatment of the Arthurian legend. Here Professor Cestre stands stoutly against much expert opinion, and he has said things in praise of Merlin, Lancelot, and Tristram that will have to be carefully considered by every serious student of Robinson's work. As a whole, however, the book will be most helpful to those who have little knowledge of the subject and who are beginning to wonder, somewhat late in the day, whether it is not worth their attention." Odell Shepard

+ — Bookm 72:192 O '30 750w

Books p10 S 14 '30 70w

"Whatever the reasons may be, he has given up a rich and explicit, rather than a simplifying guide."

+ Christian Science Monitor p5 S 6 '30 420w

"Professor Cestre's comments almost always seem incomplete and his critical principles inadequate. In particular, his belief that the function of figures of speech is to be decorative is unfortunate, for it leads him to praise indiscriminately passages of uncommon imaginative force and passages of merely superficial prettiness. When it has been further pointed out that the book is rather repetitious and its style often unidiomatic, it becomes obvious that Professor Cestre's study, though by no means wholly useless and certainly not wholly unintelligent, is for the most part disappointing." Granville Hicks

— + Nation 131:382 O 8 '30 350w

"One cannot gainsay the penetration and sound judgment of this brilliant study in most of the particulars. . . The critic then dilates on the wealth of vision and felicity of technique in Robinson's poetry, and comes back to the classic idea by finding also 'subordination of sensation to sensibility and of sensationalism to sense, propriety and reserve.' In all of which there is so much cogency that it may be well not to quarrel with Professor Cestre for pouring ancient wine into new bottles but instead to commend him for blending the qualities of two vintages (or finding them so well blended) that the definition will stand as important, whether labled modern classicism or something else." Percy Hutchison

+ — N Y Times p5 S 14 '30 1350w

"An illuminating and well balanced study of the poetry of Edwin Arlington Robinson . . . and a clear exposition of the elements that enter into the poetry, the relation of temperament and scholarship to treatment, and the importance of the poems as interpretation and observation of human conduct." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p9 Ag 19 '30 900w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:90 D '30

St Louis 28:268 N '30

"Dr. Cestre writes clearly and out of profound admiration for the poetry of Edwin Arlington Robinson. Yet, to do him justice, his book is by no means an unrelieved eulogy, though decidedly upon the appreciative side, and it is frankly meant as an introduction to the poetry for those who wish to learn from the ground up. . . We would fain prune his explanations, but it is entirely apparent that he has made a close and intelligent study of every printed word of the poet's work. . . There is far too much rhetoric in Dr. Cestre's appreciation. It springs, certainly, from rapt enthusiasm for its subject and—from the Gallic temperament." W. R. Benét

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:88 Ag 30 '30 1100w

CHADWICK, WILLIAM SYDNEY. Giants of the forest; African hunting adventures. 326p $5 Bobbs

799.2 Hunting—Africa. Zoology—Africa. Animals—Habits and behavior 29-27785

"The giants, not only of the forest but of the river and plain as well, are the elephant, hippopotamus, rhinoceros, buffalo and lion, with all of which Mr. Chadwick has been on the most close and unfriendly terms for twenty-five years. He has slain them by the score, and some of them have come within an ace of killing him. His adventures among them, told with the simplicity of one who is by profession a hunter and not a litterateur, afford exciting reading." (N Y Evening Post) "Some parts of this book are published in England and ad interim copyright has been established under the title Man-killers and marauders."

Booklist 26:384 Jl '30

"There is no apparent attempt to make any of the anecdotes in this book dramatic. The stories are told simply, and the drama is more in the restraint of the narrative where a less sincere writer would have been at least seriously tempted to overwrite or melodramatize." Louis Colman

+ Books p21 Mr 2 '30 600w

Boston Transcript p1 Mr 8 '30 470w

"Mr. Chadwick is out to kill, and has been so for a good many years. In [this book] he provides short accounts of the killing of large numbers of many varieties of African big, and lesser, game; but there is nothing to mark out his book from a score of others of the type. He is a regular habitant, and not a hurried tourist, in the African wilds, which gives his book more authority and a sharper flavour of matter-of-factness than some."

— New Statesman 33:sup xii My 4 '29 250w

"He has hunted practically every animal worth hunting for sport, for food or for by-products with a market value. Most varieties of peril in the wilds are familiar to him, and if he has experienced any dull days in Africa he forgets to mention them." R. C. B. B.

+ N Y Evening Post p8s F 22 '30 150w

CHADWICK, W. S.—Continued

"Since hunting big game is a means of his livelihood, Mr. Chadwick has had to take greater chances, meet worse perils, do more shooting and so see these 'giants of the forest' in greater numbers and more savage rôles than do those who hunt for pleasure. That, doubtless, is why his book is so remarkably full of thrilling moments and terrific episodes and wastes so little space on insignificant matters."

+ N Y Times p23 F 16 '30 180w

"The best African big game book we have read in several years. . . The man who knows, unfortunately, cannot always transmit his knowledge. But Mr. Chadwick can. And in these pages you'll find the cream of his twenty-five years' experience as hunter, policeman and ox-driver in jungle and veld." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:319 F 19 '30 200w

"He has a very remarkable gift for narration, and his accounts of encounters with dangerous game are packed with thrilling incidents." Kermit Roosevelt

Sat R of Lit 6:1045 My 17 '30 180w

"We only quarrel with him when he says that native ways of hunting are more destructive than the rifle, and that natives should therefore be prohibited from killing wild animals. This is an extremely good book. It is not a hunting book in the accepted sense, but shows the most detailed observation and a penetrating analysis of animal behaviour such as could only be acquired by one of the author's long 'bush' experience. His stories are introduced, not to glorify his own achievements (for he is the most modest of author-hunters), but as illustrations of animal psychology and conduct."

+ — Spec 143:102 Jl 20 '29 330w

"These chapters reveal the author as a capital story teller. He has had some remarkable experiences even in the category of thrillers; and one would scarcely covet the chance to duplicate his encounters with a hippopotamus on the Quando river, or with a wounded buffalo which craftily lies in ambush waiting a chance for vengeance."

+ Springf'd Republican p12 My 1 '30 380w

Times [London] Lit Sup p350 My 2 '29 800w

CHALMERS, HELENA. Modern acting. 151p il $2 (6s) Appleton

792 Acting 30-9779

A handbook for the amateur whose ambition is a professional dramatic career. The author offers practical advice on things an untrained beginner should know, as well as on the physical requirements for acting, and gives directions for make-up, costume, etc. There is a chapter also on radio broadcasting.

Booklist 26:384 Jl '30

"To any one wanting to know the working inside of a theatre I know of no better book to suggest. Other books there may be and are on the vague art of the theatre, or the inspiration of acting, and the lure of the footlights. But for the stranger or the beginner, awed by the strangeness of his surroundings, this little book is the safest and surest guide I know." W. D. Blake

+ N Y World p11m My 11 '30 300w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:74 O '30

St Louis 28:214 S '30

"This is a fair example of the sort of handbook on acting and stage manners which seems to be growing more and more popular. It contains much that is sound and useful, though the general point of view has its limitations."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p459 My 29 '30 150w

CHAMBERLAIN, GEORGE AGNEW. When beggars ride. 344p $2 (7s 6d) Putnam

30-12134

Molly Brent, with her daughter Nona, came to Paris, invested some of her husband's millions and succeeded in reaching international society's inner circle. Her name became famous when she bounced Prince Melancours from a dinner party, instructing Nona to run outside and bring in the first ragamuffin she encountered to take his place. It was the mysterious Mr Herring whom Nona brought back, followed later on horseback thru the Bois de Boulogne, and with whom she fell ruthlessly in love. It was hard on Mr Herring and certain matters of political intrigue, but Nona, like her mother, had a disconcerningly direct way with her.

"'When Beggars Ride' goes kiting along, blown by the breezes of a whimsical, impractical imagination. If you do not look too closely at its mechanical contrivance, or venture to question the source of its flight, you will find that you are enjoying it."

+ — Books p16 Je 22 '30 300w

"One of Mr. Chamberlain's best novels. It is well written, there is extremely good character drawing in the socially ambitious Mrs. Brent and her daughter, Nona, and there is much clearer dialogue, albeit at times it is such as to recall the quip that 'real conversation is found only in novels'." A. B. T.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 21 '30 450w

"Beginning with a promising situation, 'When Beggars Ride' goes steadily down hill. If ever a popularly pitched novel began auspiciously, this does, and again, if ever a novel petered out like the stick coming down from a sky-rocket, this is it."

— + N Y Times p9 My 18 '30 500w

"Amusing, written by an excellent craftsman, but in our opinion no great shakes." W. R. Brooks

— + Outlook 155:68 My 14 '30 100w

Times [London] Lit Sup p577 Jl 10 '30 220w

CHAMBERLIN, ETHEL CLERE. Amazing adventures of Kermit, the hermit crab. 122p il $1.50 Sully

30-17105

Kermit, a little hermit crab, son of Mrs Jerusha Hermit Crab, wanders away from his mother and brothers and sisters, and has a gay time with the sand dollars, sea urchins, and barnacles and the other inhabitants of the ocean floor, in this book for children from eight to ten.

"It seems hardly worth a child's time and attention. There is not sufficient fancy or humor for the child who cares for the imaginative type of story, nor enough information for the child who is interested in ocean life. The style is rather too sprightly and colloquial." A. T. Eaton

— N Y Times p30 S 28 '30 150w

"It is a capital fairy tale of the sea, with little violation of the facts of natural history other than the 'bugs' supposed to live in salt water, the clams that 'hop,' and the father sea horse who swims with his youngsters."

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:443 D 6 '30 230w

CHAMBERLIN, JOSEPH EDGAR. Boston Transcript; a history of its first hundred years. 241p il $3.50 Houghton

071 Boston Evening Transcript 30-14830

A history of Boston's most famous newspaper from its founding a hundred years ago. While the background story of the Transcript mirrors also the life of Boston and of the nation since 1830, the author traces, as his main interest, the personnel and policies of the paper itself.

Booklist 27:7 S '30

Reviewed by W. D. Orcutt

Boston Transcript p3 My 31 '30 5000w

N Y Times p4 Ag 31 '30 850w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:21 O '30 220w

St Louis 28:229 O '30

Springf'd Republican p10 Je 14 '30 950w

CHAMBERLIN, WILLIAM HENRY. Soviet Russia; a living record and a history. 453p il $5 Little [25s Duckworth]

914.7 Russia—Politics and government. Russia—Social conditions. Bolshevism—Russia 30-10021

Mr Chamberlin is the Russian correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor and has been for the last seven years a resident of Russia. He combines an impartial interpretation of what has happened there during the transition from tsarism to communism with an open-minded curiosity as to future developments. The author sketches the historical background of the Revolution and its personalities, and discusses the social leveling, cultural and religious questions and the woman movement.

Am Pol Sci R 24:1061 N '30 150w

"Mr. Chamberlin, with eight years of residence in Russia, and a Russian wife to aid his observations, has written a thoroughly objective study of the Bolshevist state. He has treated it as a tremendous experiment, the ultimate of which it is too early to foresee. You will search his pages in vain for expressions of righteous condemnation of the heavy-handed and often inhuman methods by which the Bolsheviki have imposed their will upon the people, but on the other hand he is equally free from imputing to their programme any certainty of success, or ascribing to their economic theories any superiority over those of capitalistic states." W. J. Abbot

Atlantic Bookshelf p24 My '30 600w

Booklist 26:390 Jl '30

"Mr. Chamberlin answers the hows and whys of Soviet Russia more completely, more accurately and more entertainingly than has ever been done before. . . He has compiled his chronicle over the years, recording the daily event and the surface effect of deep-rooted cause. . . The result is an erudite, human book of comprehensive excellence, documented from official evidence and from life itself." Bruce Hopper

+ Books p5 Ap 6 '30 1650w

Boston Transcript p3 My 10 '30 750w

Cleveland Open Shelf p74 My '30

Reviewed by V. F. Calverton
Current Hist 32:634 Jl '30 350w

"One of the best accounts of Soviet Russia, written in a spirit of detachment."

+ Foreign Affairs 8:677 Jl '30 30w

"Mr. Chamberlin's desire to be non-partisan is obvious on every page; his objective is to furnish an intelligent, balanced understanding of what is going on, supported by the historical background of the Revolution and the Communist movement. He has as a result achieved a volume which will be for some time to come one of the best reference books on the achievements of the Soviets, especially from the historical point of view. His volume is crowded with facts that every visitor to Russia should know to enable him to understand what he sees on his travels." O. G. Villard

+ Nation 130:492 Ap 23 '30 450w

Reviewed by R. G. Randall
Nation and Ath 47:534 Jl 26 '30 230w

"Mr. Chamberlin's book not only ranks among the best of the all-too-few serious, scientific analyses of life under the first proletarian dictatorship, but may even lay claim to being the most comprehensive, penetrating and informative account of Soviet Russia which has yet appeared in English. For the uninitiated foreign observer, desiring a dispassionate record and an intelligible interpretation of the fascinating drama unrolling itself on the vast Eurasian steppes, no other single volume is likely to prove so instructive as this." F. L. Schuman

+ New Repub 63:51 My 28 '30 950w

"On the whole his book is free from prejudices, and his conclusions are as interesting as his observations. The real value of his book lies in the fact that he has spared no pains in carrying out his investigations at first hand. He has seen much and, without losing his sense of proportion, he has absorbed more of the atmosphere of present-day Russia than perhaps any other foreign writer. The result is a book of absorbing interest and authoritative value."

+ New Statesman 35:314 Je 14 '30 800w

"The most accurate, comprehensive and impartial description of the Soviet Union that has yet appeared in English. It should take its place as the authoritative work until its inevitable displacement by a historian equipped with the perspective which only time can give." H. R. Knickerbocker

+ N Y Evening Post p10m My 10 '30 650w

"Beyond question the best account we have of the Bolshevist régime." Simeon Strunsky

+ N Y Times p3 My 11 '30 1150w

"Mr. Chamberlin's is the finest study of life under the Soviets that has yet been published in this country. In one respect, of course, this is by no means high praise, since most of the many books we have had are less than worthless. But in view of the enormous reputations of their authors (Theodore Dreiser, René Fülöp-Miller et al.), it is something of a feat for a young, comparatively unknown journalist to appear with a book which is much more sober and tolerant, much less opinionated, than those of his predecessors." Bernard Smith

+ N Y World p10m Ap 13 '30 340w

Reviewed by John Carter
Outlook 155:108 My 21 '30 180w

Pratt p30 autumn '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:12 My '30 250w

"It isn't one of those 'Me and Russia' affairs. It represents the study and observation of an American who has had the great privilege of sitting down and regularly living in Russia, summer and winter, year in and year out, through practically all the tremendous period from the days of the 'NEP' down to today. The result is not, of course, a definite history—several generations more, at least, will be needed for that—but what is probably the soundest and most useful presentation yet made of the Bolshevik revolution's flood of disturbing and many-sided facts." Arthur Ruhl

+ Sat R of Lit 6:988 Ap 26 '30 1150w

"A very fair, unemotional, and instructive book."

+ Spec 145:314 S 6 '30 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p703 S 4 '30 280w

World Tomorrow 13:278 Je '30 80w

Reviewed by G. Vernadsky
Yale R n s 20:203 autumn '30 200w

CHAMBERS, SIR EDWARD KERCHEVER. William Shakespeare; a study of facts and problems. 2v 594;463p il $15 (42) Oxford

822.33 Shakespeare, William

"A generation ago, as a preliminary to a little book on Shakespeare, Sir Edmund Chambers wrote The Medieval Stage; twenty years later followed The Elizabethan Stage. Now the little book itself, a matter of a thousand pages or so, has appeared to crown the work of a lifetime. The method of William Shakespeare follows that of The Elizabethan Stage. In the first volume Sir Edmund comments on the facts, as he sees them, of Shakespeare's biography, his connexions with the stage and his company; thence he proceeds to discuss the making of the plays, their writing and printing, the transmission and authenticity of the texts, and the various editions, each section and subsection being prefaced by a full bibliographical note. In the second volume are reprinted records, allusions, legends, notes of performances, together with a list of forgeries, and metrical tables for those who like such things. There are thirty excellent illustrations, but the index is 'selective and not exhaustive.' "—Spec

---

Reviewed by S. C. Chew
Books p4 N 30 '30 1700w

CHAMBERS, E. K.—Continued

"Sir Edmund Chambers writes with a kind of towering common sense, not to speak of an almost unsurpassable dryness. . . I have called him dry; I must hasten to say that his dryness is usually delightful, and his best weapon against the folly which most men commit when they deal with Shakespeare. It is a mountain of documents, a vast work of reference. As such, and as a contribution to controversy too, it seems to me the one indispensable book on Shakespeare at the present moment." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 132:19 Ja 7 '31 850w

"The great value of this book, which is a monument of the most lasting stone, lies not in the opinions it expresses—for opinions fluctuate, and every man is to some extent the slave of his time—but in its facts. Everything that can be known or solidly inferred about Shakespeare is recorded: we are given photographs of the important documents. It is an enduring foundation for all Shakespearian comment and criticism." Bonamy Dobrée

+ Nation and Ath 48:269 N 22 '30 1000w

"Sir Edmund's volumes are extremely refreshing. He does not shirk anything; neither does he invent difficulties for the pleasure of solving them; the subtitle of his work is 'a study of facts and problems,' and he considers no problems which have not an origin in the facts of his story, a course that may well be recommended to all who intend to add to the library more books on Shakespeare. He begins with an invaluable sketch of Shakespeare's origin and life. Particularly good is his firm if quiet reproval of those who insist on the lack of sanitation and comfort, of civilisation and modern conveniences generally, in Shakespeare's Stratford." Richard Sunne

+ New Statesman 36:361 D 27 '30 1350w

"Dr. Chambers covers in quite an exhaustive sense the whole field of Shakespeare criticism and in a spirit of cautious judgment calculated to impress the seeker after Shakespeare truth. What helps to make the work invaluable to students is the completeness of authority citation." Uffington Valentine

+ N Y Times p2 D 7 '30 2000w

"For the modern scholar it is the most essential book since the First Folio; but it is a book for scholars and tough meat even for them." G. B. Harrison

Spec 145:sup541 O 18 '30 1100w

"A book packed tight with learning, documented and annotated to an extent which in previous parts of the whole has appeared to the author (and to the author alone) 'intolerable'; closely and lucidly reasoned, tested at every step by sound common sense, enlivened by certain flashes of a demure sort of irony and warmed by occasional revelations of feeling."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p859 O 23 '30 1800w

^{2} CHAMBERS, MRS MARY DAVOREN (MOLONY). Table etiquette, menus and much besides. 263p il $1.75 Boston cooking school magazine co., 221 Columbus av. Boston

642 Table etiquet. Menus. Etiquet. Entertaining 29-20529

Etiquette in the serving and eating of food, the planning of luncheons and dinners, paying of calls or visits, sending of invitations, making introductions, table-talk, general conversation, etc. The book, written especially for the hostess of moderate means and few, if any, servants, is a practical guide to all matters pertaining to good usage.

Cleveland Open Shelf p122 S '30

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:33 Ap '30

Pratt p13 autumn '30

CHAMBERS, ROBERT WILLIAM. Painted minx. 307p $2.50 (7s 6d) Appleton 30-10984

A tale of the British occupation of New York during the Revolution. Marie Guest, the painted minx, was a Tory actress in the John Street theatre, but faithful thru six years of war and waiting to her lover, a captain in Washington's army.

Booklist 26:396 Jl '30

Bookm 71:x Jl '30 100w

Books p10 S 7 '30 180w

Boston Transcript p1 Je 28 '30 480w

"Gives an interesting, lively picture of a phase of the American Revolution which has seldom appeared in fiction, and from a point of view scrupulously unbiased."

+ N Y Times p22 My 11 '30 700w

"Very weak wash. . . The only interest in the book is the background, which Mr. Chambers knows very well indeed. But there is none of the romantic action which he handles at times so vividly, and very little of the accustomed sparkle in the conversation." W. R. Brooks

— + Outlook 155:69 My 14 '30 100w

"The fictional plot is negligible, serving only as the framework upon which is erected a glowing, authentic, spirited picture of the metropolis and its hectic life from 1777 to 1781."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1034 My 10 '30 180w

Times [London] Lit Sup p536 Je 26 '30 200w

CHAMBERS, ROBERT WILLIAM. The rake and the hussy. 441p $2.50 (7s 6d) Appleton 30-20597

The War of 1812 furnishes the background for this story of adventure and romance. The rake—a gallant young fellow named Joshua Brooke—is actively engaged in aiding Andrew Jackson defend New Orleans; and the hussy—a charming and fearless little patriot, Naia—helps her lover.

Bookm 72:x S '30 100w

Books p14 O 5 '30 200w

Boston Transcript p3 S 20 '30 230w

"If the fictional part of his narrative, especially in so far as it concerns his remarkable, not to say preposterous, heroine, leaves a good deal to be desired, he presents some vivid and worthwhile sketches of historical characters and events, drawing persons and incidents with swift, clever strokes. The tale offers plenty of variety."

+ — N Y Times p22 S 14 '30 600w

"Though the book is too long, and written in Mr. C.'s later rather unrestrained manner, we liked it better than any other stories of his that we have read in the last decade." W. R. Brooks

+ — Outlook 156:69 S 10 '30 100w

Times [London] Lit Sup p812 O 9 '30 220w

CHAMBERS, WHITMAN. Navy wives. 312p $2 Henkle 30-7797

"Kipling's stories of the army outposts in India, with their life of flirtation and petty intrigue, are innocent beside Mr. Chambers's account of the navy outposts in Panama. 'Navy Wives' is the story of the lives of naval officers who have their families with them in this tropical climate, where there is little to do but drink, a limited circle of acquaintances in which to move, and a torrid atmosphere that demoralizes the strongest wills and the most sincere love."—N Y Times

"'Navy Wives' might have been a mere rehash of the prevalent popular novel largely given over to sex entanglements, but its grasp of human weaknesses and of the restlessness which a certain type of official life brings to the surface makes it much more than that. And it is written in a style which—though not distinguished—is quick-paced and forceful."

+ Books p23 Ap 13 '30 220w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 11 '30 220w

"The swift narrative style of 'Navy Wives,' in spite of the fact that it is punctuated at times with clichés of melodramatic utterance, makes the book easy reading."
+ — N Y Times p9 Je 8 '30 500w
Springf'd Republican p7c Ag 31 '30 80w

CHAMOT, EMILE MONNIN, and MASON, CLYDE WALTER. Handbook of chemical microscopy. v 1 474p il $4.50 Wiley

578 Microscope and microscopy. Microchemistry (30-1910)

"This is a new edition of Chamot's well-known textbook, 'Elementary Chemical Microscopy,' 1915. The second volume, which is in preparation, is entitled 'Chemical Methods and Inorganic Qualitative Analysis.' . . In addition to the new chapters on photomicrography, microtomy, microcolorimetry, and nephelometry, each chapter in this volume has been considerably enlarged by the addition of new material, mathematical derivations, and numerous illustrations. The chapters on microscopical measurements and quantitative analysis of heterogeneous mixtures are almost four times their original size and will meet a long-felt need for a compilation of these useful data scattered in the literature."—Ind & Eng Chem

"In recent years many books on microscopes and microscopy have been published, so Chamot's work challenges comparison. And it proves to be an advance: it is thorough in text and illustrations and covers the optical and mechanical features of a microscope just as well as its manifold applications to chemistry." Johannes Kaulke
+ Chem & Met Eng 37:174 Mr '30 320w
Reviewed by W. H. Gesell
Ind & Eng Chem 22:303 Mr '30 420w
N Y New Tech Bks 15:23 Ap '30
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:69 O '30
St Louis 28:99 Ap '30

CHAMSON, ANDRE. Crime of the just; tr. by Van Wyck Brooks. 238p $2 Scribner
30-8259

The Arnal family, in south-eastern France, had held the most influential and respected position in its province for generations. Their own pride was turned to shame at the birth of an illegitimate child, incestuously conceived, which was killed by the patriarchal head of the family shortly after its birth. Burdened with shame and the family secret, the younger members scatter. The disintegration culminates in the discovery of the infanticide, and the arrest of Councilor Arnal.

"M. Chamson has written in The Crime of the Just a short novel in the finest French tradition, where simplicity and clarity are prime virtues, and purpose something definite and unswerving."
+ Bookm 71:322 Je '30 320w

"André Chamson masterfully depicts these isolated, stony souls. . . The drama in Chamson's book is so intense that the dog-digging contrivance actually becomes, contrary to the author's intentions, a frightfully humorous thing. It smacks of cheap melodrama and makes one smile at the 'eternal values' that Mr. Ernest Boyd discovered in this novel."
Books p16 Ap 20 '30 300w
Boston Transcript p4 My 31 '30 320w

"The power and simplicity with which this tragedy is linked to its native background is reminiscent of 'Ethan Frome.' Perhaps it has not the poignancy and compactness of the latter work, but it is only by comparing it with Mrs. Wharton's great story that an idea of its true worth can be conveyed."
+ New Repub 63:215 Jl 9 '30 180w

"This is M. Chamson's third novel to find its way into English translation. His first, 'Roux the Bandit,' promised him an important position among the younger French writers of to-day. 'The Crime of the Just' bears out that expectation fully." Eugene Lohrke
+ N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 5 '30 400w

"M. Chamson's story is only a novelette, but the young French writer has compressed within a limited frame a somber tragedy. The narrative never becomes morbid, unfolding simply the story of an unusual family and the unusual fate which overcame it."
+ N Y Evening Post p7e My 11 '30 350w

"While the values of M. Chamson's moral world are vindicated by the relentless workings of destiny, the deepening and purging grace of human values is missing. On the one side there is a purely material, on the other side a purely moral universe—there is nothing between. The true effects of tragedy, in the old Greek sense, are but half achieved; terror is here, but pity is absent." Louis Kronenberger
+ N Y Times p7 Ap 13 '30 600w
Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith
N Y World p9m My 18 '30 300w

"Mr. Chamson's work is sincere and powerful. It is also somewhat cold and inhuman in its treatment of a character once presented, but sentiment plays little part in Gallic letters, and, presumably, equally little in Gallic life, whether it be in the Cevennes or in the more complicated world of Paris. Mr. Van Wyck Brooks has provided his book with a suitably austere and correct, if also somewhat dry, translation."
+ Sat R of Lit 7:23 Ag 2 '30 450w

CHANCELLOR, EDWIN BERESFORD. London's old Latin quarter; being an account of Tottenham Court road and its immediate surroundings. 299p il $4.50 Houghton [15s Cape, J.]

914.21 London—Streets. London—Historic houses, etc. [30-16710]

Rambling and anecdotal account of the old Tottenham Court road neighborhood, and its famous judges, musicians, artists and pugilists of the late eighteenth and early nineteenth century.

Bookm 72:xiv S '30 280w

"The author makes no claim for startling originality; he has simply delved into the existing records and sources of information and dressed his researches in a pleasant restatement. The work is a welcome addition to the library of London topography."
+ Books p16 O 12 '30 100w
Boston Transcript p1 S 20 '30 550w

"An admirable piece of local history of the minute and painstaking sort."
+ Christian Century 47:1454 N 26 '30 300w

"This book ought to have been called simply 'The History of Tottenham Court Road.' . . At present the value of the book remains in the simple account of the various stages through which Tottenham Court Road passed in its painful transition from green fields to what it is to-day. . . There are no personalities in Mr. Chancellor's book, and for this reason it is disappointing." James Thornton
Nation and Ath 47:sup196 My 10 '30 500w

"All who love books about London esteem Mr. Chancellor's name, and this new book of his will enhance a reputation already high. Few of the 'decayed' quarters of London are readier for recovery than the district by the Tottenham Court Road. Before the war, artists and authors had discovered the charm of Percy Street, Charlotte Street, Fitzroy Street and Fitzroy Square—the last-named indeed never quite lost its ancient splendour. It is this district whose past and present associations Mr. Chancellor discusses in this admirable volume."
+ New Statesman 35:62 Ap 19 '30 100w
N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 30 '30 50w
N Y Times p34 D 14 '30 220w
Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:14 S '30 30w

CHANCELLOR, E. B.—Continued

"Altogether this is a book which gives even the dreariest little streets of the Quarter a new interest, and one to delight those who have any love for the London of the past."

+ Sat R 149:489 Ap 19 '30 450w

"Tottenham Court Road is on the whole a comely thoroughfare, and out of its growth and associations Mr. Chancellor has made, in page after page of delightful gossip, a very good book."

+ Spec 144:743 My 3 '30 280w

"A handsome volume, with a number of charming maps and illustrations. Any one who wishes to steep himself in the composite history and changing atmosphere of a particular part of London, and see how it has figured for some centuries, in manners, social life, literature, art, trade and religion, will be glad to make the acquaintance of Mr Chancellor as a guide."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 O 11 '30 700w

Times [London] Lit Sup p331 Ap 17 '30 800w

CHANNON, ETHEL MARY (MRS FRANCIS CHANNON). Chimney murder. 274p $2 Little [7s 6d Benn]

30-1258

Jabez Harbottle Binns had a terrible temper. This fact, together with his threats regarding his neighbor, Mr Marley, did not stand in his favor when the body of the latter was found dismembered and distributed in various hiding places in Binns' house. The progress of the story demonstrates that Marley was a pernicious man and deserved to be murdered; but it is not until the timely arrival of a letter that the mystery is solved.

"A clever characterization of an English suburban group and their inquisitive, small-town pettiness."

+ Bookm 70:xxv F '30 80w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p18 Ja 19 '30 100w

N Y Times p24 Ja 26 '30 130w

"Overdoing the so-called human interest seriously impairs the not very robust merits of 'The Chimney Murder,' a lachrymose, sentimental tale. The mystery underlying the crime has a measure of freshness and surprise, but its denouement is sprung so tamely that the force of the kick is reduced to the minimum." E. C. Beckwith

— N Y World p11m Ja 12 '30 160w

"Mrs. Channon adorns her dramatic story with some clever characterization."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p726 S 19 '29 230w

CHAPIN, ELSA, and THOMAS, RUSSELL BROWN. New approach to poetry. 189p $2 Univ. of Chicago press [9s Cambridge univ. press]

808.1 Poetry. English poetry—Collections. American poetry—Collections 29-18353

"A practical book for teachers who hope to show young readers how to get pleasure out of poetry. 'It attempts to show what principles to look for and to illustrate the infinite charm and variety of the manifestations' of these principles. Part 1 considers imagery, rhythm, and sound; Part 2 is a collection of poems chosen to illustrate Part 1; Part 3 gives two problems for classes. On page 165 there is an excellent definition of the four duties of a teacher of poetic appreciation."—Cleveland Open Shelf

Booklist 26:150 Ja '30

"If this is the new approach to poetry one may be content with older ways, and with more reliance upon the grace of God." Douglas Bush

— Bookm 70:457 D '29 220w

Cleveland Open Shelf p21 F '30

Pratt p27 autumn '30

"Their method is to break up, before their readers, the unity of the impression in virtue of which poetry is itself, and by means of charts, graphs and other scientific apparatus to follow the various threads of influence which have been combined in the composition of a poem one by one. . . All this, it will be said, is external, irrelevant to poetry; an attempt to discover life by killing the animal and pulling it to pieces. . . Do what you will and for as long as you will with the body of poetry, and it will one day dawn upon you that the flight and song of the bird are better than its wings and beak."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p1077 D 19 '29 550w

CHAPIN, HENRY. Adventures of Johnny Appleseed. 244p il $2.50 Coward-McCann

B or 92 Chapman, John 30-10474

The almost legendary story of Jonathan Chapman, who through a long life distributed apple seeds and planted apple orchards until he earned the name of Johnny Appleseed, has been amplified and made into a book for older boys and girls. Chapman began his pilgrimages shortly after the Revolution, and travelled from his home in Connecticut out to Pennsylvania and beyond. He was over seventy when he died at Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Cleveland Open Shelf p135 N '30

Reviewed by A. T. Eaton

N Y Times p16 Ap 13 '30 340w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:67 O '30

"With great charm of description, ready invention of incident, and sound historical knowledge of the trails across the Alleghanies into the West and of the land and the typical people of the uneasy Ohio Valley in settlement days, Mr. Chapin accompanies Johnny upon his ten thousand miles of journeying to and fro, in heat and cold, sunshine and storm, a boy and man never too poor to be happy, sometimes alone, but frequently in strange and varied company, afoot, by wagon, and by flat-boat." E. L. Sabin

+ Sat R of Lit 6:964 Ap 19 '30 300w

"With a courage similar to that of Thornton Wilder, Mr Chapin has dared wholly to depart from the usual field of romance and with deft and careful writing which at times attains sheer beauty, to piece together a mosaic which tells the story of the strange life of John Chapman."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 27 '30 1050w

CHAPIN, KATHERINE GARRISON (MRS FRANCIS X. BIDDLE). Outside of the world. 94p $2 Duffield

811 30-29021

A first volume of lyrics quietly contemplative in tone, concerned largely with the varying aspects of nature. A number of the poems appeared originally in magazines.

"For the most part these lyrics neither prod the mind nor rouse the feelings. On the other hand, there is something of limpidity in the easily meandering lines, and nowhere is the sense obscure."

— + N Y Times p16 N 2 '30 120w

"Miss Chapin is in no sense a brilliant poet, she is a quietly meditative one, but she gives evidence of much observation of life. She never startles and waylays with a phrase, but she relates actual experience and becomes, as we read her, a definite and interesting person, with a sound understanding of metrics." W. R. Benét

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:249 O 18 '30 100w

CHAPMAN, FRANK MICHLER. My tropical air castle; nature studies in Panama. 417p il $5 (21s) Appleton

591.986 Natural history—Panama. Zoology—Panama. Barro Colorado island 29-25749

Dr Chapman, American ornithologist, describes the tropical wild life on Barro Colorado, an island in the Panama Canal zone. He has built a cabin there, and makes use of the island laboratory for his bird and animal studies. The book is illustrated with a number of interesting photographs made from the setting of flash-light camera traps across the trails of the animals.

Booklist 26:191 F '30

"A book which will be prized by every bird lover, not only for the information which it imparts, but for the zest with which it is written. The island is supervised for the purpose of maintaining the primeval conditions so essential to the work of the naturalist, and Dr. Chapman has found it a fruitful outpost. His book is rich in illustrations."

+ Books p14 Ja 19 '30 180w

Nation 131:253 S 3 '30 150w

"Dr. Chapman presents an entrancing picture of the joys of tropical research." Joe Gould

+ N Y Evening Post p13m D 21 '29 150w

"One of the best of those pleasant and serene adventure tales in which a naturalist, as detective, unravels some of the endless mysteries of the jungle." F. F. Van de Water

+ N Y Evening Post p11m D 28 '29 170w

"There are pages in 'My Tropical Air Castle' so vivid, so richly colored, so full of fine emotion, written in close-knit, rhythmical prose, that are a revelation to those who thought they knew Frank Chapman well. They take rank in that restricted and precious group of writings which are at once masterpieces of natural history and admirable literature: books of which W. H. Hudson is the outstanding example. There is, indeed, much likeness between this book and Hudson's 'Birds of La Plata.'" Charles Johnston

+ N Y Times p4 D 15 '29 1200w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:35 Ap '30

St Louis 28:69 Mr '30

"Through all the color and texture of words that make for happy reading, this book never leaves the thread of truth; it is a faithful, and hence truly illuminating, picture of the world it describes." R. C. Murphy

+ Sat R of Lit 6:872 Mr 29 '30 1100w

Times [London] Lit Sup p205 Mr 13 '30 500w

CHAPMAN, JOHN. Saint Benedict and the sixth century. 239p $4 Longmans [10s 6d Sheed]

271.1 Benedictus, Saint, abbot of Monte Cassino. Benedictines. Monasticism and religious orders 30-15816

A study of Benedictinism in the sixth century, in which the author presents the result of his inquiries on the date of Benedict, and on the relation to the Benedictine rule of the Emperor Justinian, Caesarius of Arles, Cassiodorus and the Dionysian collection of canons. Other chapters deal with lands, serfs and slaves and the social conditions of the monks.

Am Hist R 35:830 Jl '30 800w

"The new Abbot of Downside has written a valuable and very careful study of the early years of Benedictinism. Its minuteness, even scrupulousness, will have been expected by all those who know his work; and perhaps also the rather combative criticism which marks certain parts of the volume. Those who take it up—and all who wish seriously to study medieval monastic history should do so—must be prepared for a book written by a scholar for scholars, minutely, sometimes even for minuteness' sake. Perhaps half the book, almost half every page, is in Latin. Continuity of style is not aimed at. Attractiveness is far from the writer's thought. Solidity and exactitude are his ideas."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p54 Ja 23 '30 1350w

CHAPMAN, OLIVE MURRAY. Across Iceland, the land of frost and fire. 193p il $5 Dodd [15s Lane]

914.91 Iceland—Description and travel [30-25261]

An account of the author's trip across Iceland, which took her to places in little known sections of the country. The journey was undertaken mostly on ponies, since there are few roads. The book is an attempt to show something of the modern conditions in Iceland.

Booklist 27:152 D '30

Books p13 O 19 '30 100w

Reviewed by Sylva Norman

Nation and Ath 47:800 S 27 '30 200w

New Statesman 35:386 Je 28 '30 80w

St Louis 28:271 N '30

Reviewed by J. S. Coltart

Sat R 150:872 D 27 '30 100w

"Across Iceland has its value in showing what can be done by a woman alone and unacquainted with the language."

+ Spec 145:23 Jl 5 '30 150w

"Mrs. Chapman's account of her recent visit to Iceland is worthy of attention for the pluck with which she adventured by herself into the unknown, and for the sociability which put her at once on terms of intimacy with the people. Her itinerary is clearly set out, and to assist those whom she may tempt to follow her example she has appended 'Hints for the Traveller' and a sketch map. The appeal of the book is wider in that she is interested in art as well as in travel."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p526 Je 26 '30 850w

CHAPPELL, GEORGE SHEPARD (WALTER ^{2} E. TRAPROCK, pseud.). Through the alimentary canal with gun and camera; a fascinating trip to the interior; with an introd. by Robert Benchley. 231p il $2 Stokes

817 30-31910

Dr Chappell, that intrepid explorer, takes his faithful camera-man, botanist and ornithologist on a trip to the Interior via the Alimentary canal. After some preliminary dallying on the facial plain and gold-digging in the Molar mountains, the party enter the oesophagus, and fish for phagocytes en route. Some thrilling adventures are encountered in the Nerve forests of the Lumbar region, infested by heeby-geebies. An upset in the Interior, due to a congestion of river traffic and an uprising of the Reds, ends the explorer's endeavors to get beyond a peaceful sojourn at Lovely Livermore on the River Bile.

"The illustrations add to the hilarity produced by this remarkable expedition."

+ Bookm 72:xiv D '30 80w

"For pure, or rather sustained, adventure no expedition of recent time approaches Mr. Chappell's exploration of the alimentary canal. . . Now that psychologists are studying laughter in a big way, they need seek no further for a 'stimulus' than this exploration burlesque." S. T. Williamson

+ N Y Times p4 D 14 '30 750w

Reviewed by Lawton Mackall

Sat R of Lit 7:470 D 20 '30 450w

CHARACTERS and observations; an 18th century manuscript; with a foreword by Lord Gorell. 296p $3.50 Stokes [10s 6d Murray, J.]

828 Maxims. Aphorisms and apothegms [28-27696]

An enghteenth-century manuscript filled with maxims and reflections was found by a dealer, tucked away in an old piece of furniture in the neighborhood of Twickenham or Teddington and inscribed on the title-page: A. Pope. Twikeam. The handwriting shows resemblances to that of Alexander Pope, but Lord Gorell in his sensible foreword, makes no claim that Pope is the author. The manuscript is at least contemporary with the poet.

CHARACTERS and observations—Continued

"The anonymous author was a man of Horatian serenity of outlook, shrewd, sufficiently kindly, content with his station in life, quite widely experienced, a man probably of the upper middle class. Many of his jottings are of thoughts common to most worldly people, worldly in a good sense as opposed to 'other worldly,' for there is no trace of mysticism in him. But these commonplaces are crisply expressed, and a good deal of wit and wisdom is to be found in his pages. Decidedly, this long-lost manuscript was worth publishing." Samuel Chew

+ Books p21 N 2 '30 350w

"Whether it is a veritable Pope item or not has not been decided by experts, but facsimiles of an authenticated letter in his handwriting and of a page of the manuscript are given and the reader can make his own conclusions. Anyway, the book has wit and wisdom and the real flavor of the 18th century."

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p13 O 4 '30 150w

"The characters, and no less the observations, are ineffably flat reading, though they derive interest and even some slight value from the circumstance of their being apparently eighteenth-century, with some curious modernities in matter and style. They will be allowed not to have much in common with Rochefoucauld."

— New Statesman 35:220 My 24 '30 750w

St Louis 28:298 D '30

Spec 144:866 My 24 '30 220w

Springf'd Republican p7e My 4 '30 950w

"The personality of the author is never deliberately obtruded, but it is pervasive. He was not precisely a wit, for his object is not to startle with the dexterity of a partial truth, though he knows that what he is saying is often opposite to the usual view. He simply reports on life, and if the report enables him to smile or laugh so much the better."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p349 Ap 24 '30 600w

CHARLES, ROBERT HENRY. Resurrection of man, and other sermons preached in Westminster Abbey. (Scholar as preacher) 264p $2.50 Scribner [7s Clark, T.]

252 Resurrection. Future life 30-13689

"Consists of twenty-two sermons preached in Westminster Abbey by the Venerable R. H. Charles, well known authority on Eschatology. The first nine sermons bear on the subject of the title, and are of great interest and value. They present first the teaching of Judaism and lead up to the teaching of the Apostle Paul and of our Lord Himself. There follow four sermons stating 'the arguments against and for a blessed future life.' In his later argument he cites as firm believers in immortality, Zoroaster and Plato, Cicero and Plutarch, Tennyson and Browning, Kant and Emerson."—Living Church

J Religion 10:467 Jl '30 420w

"Scholarly and arresting." F. L. Palmer

+ Living Church 83:90 My 17 '30 550w

Times [London] Lit Sup p154 F 27 '30 800w

CHARLES, ROBERT HENRY. Roundabout turn; with drawings by L. Leslie Brooke. unp il $1.50 (3s 6d) Warne

30-26974

A toad who lived on Albury Heath decided to go out and discover whether the world was really round. He found a circus and rode the merry-go-round for one whole afternoon. At the end of that experience he knew the world was round. For young children.

Booklist 27:107 N '30

"The story-verse is such winning foolery that the author, Robert Charles, must be a particularly pleasant adult. . . Mr. Brooke designed the cover, and is said to be most exigent about the reproductions of his work. When we saw a few of the original water-colors, we were surprised at the excellence of the published prints. The delicate tints have been faithfully duplicated; only a shade of difference exists here and there. Of course, children will care nothing for these technicalities. They will like the fact that there are lots and lots of pictures of Toad, his wife and friends, a merry-go-round with galloping steeds, and all of the fun and amusing details that characterize Leslie Brooke's work for children." K. G. Landon

+ Bookm 72:243 N '30 320w

"After looking over a score or more of this season's picture books and finding literally only one or two of any distinction it was a joy to come upon a new picture book by Leslie Brooke. Anything from this hand is an event, partly because it occurs so seldom. . . A real artist is able to fashion a book that will entertain grown-ups as well as children for years to come, if its history is anything like that of its predecessors." Marcia Dalphin

+ Books p7 S 7 '30 1700w

Reviewed by Ernestine Evans

Nation 131:555 N 19 '30 150w

"The most delightful picture book of the year. Leslie Brooke's inimitable drawings and Robert H. Charles's entertaining verses together present, with an altogether convincing charm and humor, the 'toad that lived on Albury Heath.'" A. T. Eaton

+ N Y Times p5 N 16 '30 180w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1016 N 27 '30 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1091 D 18 '30 180w

CHARNWOOD, DOROTHEA MARY ROBY (THORPE) BENSON, baroness. Autograph collection, and the making of it. 318p il $5 Holt [15s Benn]

091.5 Autographs. Letters 30-31359

Letters, not merely signatures, have been the object of Lady Charnwood's autograph collection, on account of the two personalities involved in the writing of a letter. The author shows the fun that can be got out of such a collection. The first part of her book deals with the ways and means of collecting and will help other collectors. The second part reprints some 150 of the more important letters in her collection. The last chapter, A habitation's memories, tells of the author's own house at Lichfield with its memories of Dr Johnson, Thomas Day and the Edgeworths.

Chicago Daily Tribune p13 N 29 '30 120w

"In an account of her own methods, from the securing of specimens to the preserving and cataloguing of them, Lady Charnwood argues powerfully the fascinations and benefits of her life-long hobby."

+ New Statesman 34:716 Mr 8 '30 250w

"Lady Charnwood's book is full of delightful and characteristic letters, amusing, graceful, humble, vain and tragic."

+ Spec 144:633 Ap 12 '30 320w

"Ingenuity and art have gone into the making of a volume which might well have been a collection of brilliant but unrelated scraps, but which is instead a continuous whole. One personage links on to another, one age lives on into the next, but to trace these links is by no means always a simple task. It is Lady Charnwood's special faculty to do this supremely well."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p139 F 20 '30 1050w

CHARPENTIER, JOHN. Coleridge, the sublime somnambulist; tr. by M. V. Nugent. 332p $3.50 Dodd [15s Constable]

B or 92 Coleridge, Samuel Taylor 29-18653

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"Mr. Charpentier gives a fascinating reconstruction of an enigmatical and contradictory personality."
+ Christian Century 46:1512 D 4 '29 250w
Cleveland Open Shelf p60 Ap '30

"M. Charpentier establishes no original point of view in interpreting Coleridge's life, and his subtitle shows it. A biographer does not gain much in lucidity when he tries to solve the problems of an erratic genius by conferring somnambulism upon him. The historical facts are not enhanced in the process, and the interpretation of the poet's work is clouded by a smoke screen of psychological assumptions. . . There is meager stylistic charm in this biography, but it will be found smoothly readable in its present translation." M. D. Zabel
— + Nation 130:426 Ap 9 '30 650w

"This is certainly a beautiful and inspiring book, in spite of a certain heaviness of style due partly to excessive faithfulness in the translation. It is remarkable how many English worthies are finding their best interpreters in Frenchmen. M. Charpentier does not compete with the vivacity of M. André Maurois in his lives of Shelley, Disraeli, and Byron, but he is a much more profound and sympathetic student." F. S. M.
+ Nature 126:164 Ag 2 '30 200w
St Louis 27:342 D '29

"The happy combination of psychological insight and critical acumen constitutes the value and the charm of this new biography. Scholars will not find in it any sensational discovery of documents. But those who read it will be rewarded with a penetrating analysis of a very elusive personality. This is a beautiful book, powerfully conceived, harmoniously developed, and written, besides, in a colorful style." Albert Feuillerat
+ Sat R of Lit 6:693 F 1 '30 1000w

"There can be little doubt that in its own language and for its original audience M. Charpentier's study of Coleridge is a valuable book. Translated into English, its efficacy is less certain. It has to face comparisons with two recent books upon Coleridge by English critics, each of great merit: Mr. Livingston Lowes's 'The Road to Xanadu' and Mr. L'A. Fausset's 'Coleridge.' It is not so good as either of these. It has not the analytical subtlety of the former, nor the psychological surety of the latter."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p957 N 21 '29 1250w

CHARTERIS, LESLIE. The bandit. 326p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Ward, Lock] 30-549

Ramon Manrique, the bandit, opened his London adventures by an encounter with a gangster, Bull Harrigan, who for once almost proved Manrique's equal. It is Louise Race, however, whose admiration for the versatile bandit and whose timely rescue of him from the desperado's hands lends the story added pique. The recovery of stolen jewels, and the annihilation of Harrigan's gang, follows as a matter of course.

Bookm 70:xxvi F '30 50w
Books p11 D 29 '29 140w
Boston Transcript p8 F 1 '30 350w

"Mr. Charteris is to be congratulated on having written a fine whirling story in which he happily reverses the procedure, which has by now become almost habitual in this type of fiction, by introducing his corpses not on the first page but in the last chapter."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p626 Ag 8 '29 240w

CHARTERIS, LESLIE. Last hero. 311p $1 ² Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Hodder] 30-31194

The Saint, who is really Simon Templar, takes the law into his own hands when Scotland Yard fails, and rids the London underworld of some of its most despicable trouble-makers. But the battle against Dr Marius, the greatest villain of them all, taxes to the utmost the Saint's ingenuity and resources.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p10 Ja 4 '31 100w
Times [London] Lit Sup p517 Je 19 '30 180w

CHARTERIS, LESLIE. White rider. 309p $1 Doubleday, Doran [3s 6d Ward, Lock]
30-24516

Who was the White Rider, seen often at night in the little village of Sancreed, and what did he want? A million pounds, left to Marion Fenton by her father, is the reason for so much intrigue, mystery and sudden death.

Bookm 72:xxv O '30 50w
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p10 Ag 31 '30 100w

"This is a clever yarn, with more kinks and twists to the plot than any mystery story recently turned out. . . It is all well worked out, with a corking rapier duel toward the end."
+ N Y Times p10 O 5 '30 120w

CHARTERS, JESSIE BLOUNT (ALLEN) (MRS WERRETT WALLACE CHARTERS). College student thinking it through. (Abingdon religious educ. monographs) 166p $1.50 Abingdon press

371.8 Students. Conduct of life. Psychology, Religious 30-14479

"Mrs Charters, the wife of a university professor, is herself on the faculty of the Ohio State university and in the state department of education. Out of friendly contact with many hundred students at Columbus and elsewhere, listening to their questions about religion and life, helping them in their honest endeavors to think through to a solution of their social and religious problems, Mrs Charters has compiled this little volume."—Springf'd Republican

---

Booklist 27:11 S '30

"The book is well adapted either for individual reading and study or for use in discussion groups."
+ Christian Century 47:787 Je 18 '30 80w
St Louis 28:202 S '30

"Students who are conscious of a need of religious readjustment will find much to help them in the book. But not less valuable is it for teachers and pastors and even parents who are interested in their children's development. Perhaps there isn't a 'pious' line in the book, but it is full of vital religion and sound psychology."
+ Springf'd Republican p10 Je 17 '30 280w

CHARTIER, EMILE (ALAIN, pseud.). Mars; or, The truth about war; tr. from the French by Doris Mudie and Elizabeth Hill; introd. by André Maurois; foreword by Denis Saurat. 318p $2.50 (7s 6d) Cape

172.4 War [30-30929]

Essays on war by a French philosopher and pacifist who volunteered as a private and served in the artillery for four years during the war. He maintains that "courage is the real cause of wars"; not conflict of interests, but passions which are often noble.

Books p14 D 14 '30 400w

"These essays, in the manner of Montaigne or Pascal, were written in the first year or two after the war. They represent, in the opinion of the present reviewer, the best of all the war books, and it is extraordinary that they were never translated before. The present translation of 'Mars, où la guerre jugée' is hardly adequate." W. H. Carter
+ Christian Science Monitor p13 S 20 '30 400w

CHARTIER, EMILE—Continued

"Though the essays were written to stand together, there is no attempt to relate the various ideas to each other. The best bits in the book are discussions of the minutiae of war: the psychology of commanding officers, of civilians, of army doctors. This gives us a hint as to what is wrong with the book. Alain is, perhaps, attempting nothing more than to tell us how he feels about war, but he has selected the form most unadapted to this. A narrative, interspersed with reflections, should have been its style, not this highly abstract and obscure prose. The result of this war between a narrational motive and an ideational form has been that neither emotion nor idea has come through. We shall have to read something of his much more successful in form and impressive in content before we can understand the awe and admiration with which André Maurois and Denis Saurat write the foreword and introduction." Felix Morrow

— Nation 131:500 N 5 '30 750w

"Alain's thought is sufficiently original to penetrate an indifferent translation. The pieces in this collection all have some bearing upon the psychology of war, and they might serve as an admirable antidote to much that has been said and written about war books. Not that Alain seems to us by any means to have uttered grand final truths about the war. We are glad of that. He is intent on certain aspects, and strictly logical in his pursuit of them. His theses are too extreme to contain the whole truth, but they illuminate it because they put sides of the case which are seldom in danger of being over-stated, if stated at all."

+ New Statesman 35:248 My 31 '30 850w

Spec 144:986 Je 14 '30 250w

"Not all men will agree with his reasoning or his conclusions; but all must respect and admire the nobility of his attitude, the serenity and generosity of his methods of presenting his very strong indictment, and the pungency and force of his little discourses, for the most part only two pages long."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p485 Je 12 '30 1250w

CHASE, JOSEPH CUMMINGS. An artist talks about color. 70p $1.50 Wiley [7s 6d Chapman]

752 Color. Colors. Pigments. Painting—Technique 30-1291

The head of the art department of Hunter College writes this elementary text on colors, their mixture, and how to use them. Includes lists of the colors used on the palettes of some well-known artists.

Booklist 26:268 Ap '30

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:41 My '30

Pratt p24 summer '30

St Louis 28:104 Ap '30

"Simplicity in an elementary book is a virtue, but to sweep aside all the old masters including Titian as 'pathetically limited as to choice of colours' is a bold gesture. After that there is little to talk about, and this explains the very small size of the book."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p593 Jl 17 '30 100w

CHASE, MARY ELLEN. Golden asse, and other essays. 148p $2 Holt

814 29-25324

Familiar essays reflecting for the most part memories of a New England childhood, reprinted from the Atlantic monthly, the North American review and the Commonweal. The author is professor of English at Smith college.

Booklist 26:229 Mr '30

"These essays are in no way elaborate, they are not scholarly, they point no moral, but they will furnish a pleasant evening to anyone who wants a few hours' quiet thought."

Boston Transcript p2 D 31 '29 320w

Cath World 131:122 Ap '30 100w

"'The Golden Asse and other essays' are unusual in their lucidity, their delicacy of sentiment and especially in their contrast of the practical, shrewd, stern New England tradition with the author's devotion to Socrates's prayer for 'Beauty in the inward soul.'" Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p14m N 23 '29 50w

CHASE, MARY ELLEN. Silver shell. 208p il $1.75 Holt

30-21327

A story for girls of ten or over about Judith Crane, who lived a rather solitary life on Great Horned Island off the coast of Maine, and about the joy which a beautiful sea shell brought into her life

Booklist 27:107 N '30

Bookm 72:xxvii D '30 50w

"Full of the beauty of sea, sky and rocks but a little slow for girls who like a story with plenty of action."

+ — Cleveland Open Shelf p132 N '30

"There is a good deal of charm in the book, but, being quiet and simple, it will probably be popular only with a rather thoughtful type of child. It would be much more successful if the author had omitted a great many long words and over-polished phrases for which simple and unaffected substitutes would have been better suited to the age in view."

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:442 D 6 '30 120w

CHASE, STUART. Men and machines. 354p il $2.50; college $1.75 Macmillan [10s 6d Cape]

338.4 Machinery in industry. Machinery—History. Inventions 29-14725

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Reviewed by R. G. Tugwell

Ann Am Acad 152:417 N '30 320w

"This is certainly a book to make the self-sufficient think. It is a book to make us take stock of our human values and disregard the machine for a while." Raymond Kresensky

+ Christian Century 47:1251 O 15 '30 320w

"On the whole the book makes interesting and provocative reading. The question remains, however, whether or not Mr. Chase has succeeded in totally avoiding the error of his philosophical confrères. There is no question that he has accumulated a number of interesting facts on his statistical jaunt. But perhaps he might have scrutinized more carefully the questions which he wished his statistics to illuminate. The book resembles too much the elementary philosophical student's attempt to determine whether or not the universe is teleological or mechanistic by 'facts.'" F. J. Roethlisberger

+ — Harvard Business R 9:124 O '30 700w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 34:70 O '29

Pratt p11 winter '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p617 Jl 31 '30 900w

CHASE, STUART. Prosperity: fact or myth. (Bonibooks) 188p pa 50c Boni, C.

330.973 United States—Economic conditions. United States—Social conditions 30-3192

"This writer tells us that business is not yet below the prosperity level, that investors, instead of gamblers, will probably control the stock market in the immediate future, and that the two pressing problems are what they were before the October crash—technological unemployment and the farmers' plight. In his analysis Mr. Chase uses the statistics collected by the National Bureau of Economic Research."—R of Rs

"A book of 188 vividly written pages. Stuart Chase has provided a lens which enables us to see prosperity with little of the distortion of foreshortening. . . This vivid interpretation is popularization without vulgarization." George Soule

+ Books p3 Ja 19 '30 1300w

"His biggest contribution consists of four clear-cut definitions of prosperity and the juxtaposition of each definition against the facts which stick out from these two great surveys. In the main, it seems to this reviewer, he shows that this much-touted prosperity of ours is missing regularly on at least two cylinders and not running as it might on at least one of the others. He is not wholly convincing at every point, but that is not important. All told it is an admirable book." C. W. Wood
+ New Repub 62:133 Mr 19 '30 750w

"Mr. Chase must not be dismissed as a dogmatist who scurries about sorting out the facts he needs to prop up his theories and discarding those he does not need. He has a scientific and inquiring mind. He marshals his pros and cons with an obvious desire to be scrupulously fair." R. L. Duffus
+ N Y Times p1 Ja 12 '30 1500w

"Stuart Chase's work in debunking prosperity has long been welcome and important. Prosperity, Fact or Myth is a rapid-fire barrage of economic invective which leaves little standing." John Carter
+ Outlook 154:190 Ja 29 '30 230w

"His little book is a helpful approach to a calm consideration of the actual elements in American prosperity." W. B. Shaw
+ R of Rs 81:16 F '30 200w
St Louis 28:130 My '30

Reviewed by C. E. Warne
Sat R of Lit 7:22 Ag 2 '30 1000w
Springf'd Republican p10 Ja 29 '30 260w

CHATTERTON, EDWARD KEBLE. Adventurers of the air. 256p il $1.75 Lippincott
30-19632

In a gigantic plane lighter-than-air, Capt. Harwood and his two young companions, Bob Crane and Wilmer Loring, chart a new route across the Arctic, China and the Himalayas; and over the African desert engage in a fight to the death with a rival airship manned by a gang of international crooks.

"Throughout the book the author's magnificent disregard of human life is only equaled by his magnificent disregard of probability." A. T. Eaton
— N Y Times p11 Ag 3 '30 250w
Springf'd Republican p5e Je 22 '30 120w

CHATTERTON, EDWARD KEBLE. Seed of liberty; the story of the American colonies. 356p il $5 Bobbs
973.2 America—Discovery and exploration. United States—History—Colonial period. Great Britain—Colonies—North America
29-24017

"A popular, easily read account of the colonizing of America—'one long drama of ships and exploration, plantations and policies, plots and rebellions, follies and fatalities.' There are numerous excellent illustrations reproduced from old prints and portraits."—Cleveland Open Shelf

"His presentation is more straightforward, more honest, than many accounts of America's birth and coming of age written by other Englishmen. Little that is new has been added to the story, but many of the figures prominent in episodes of significance in the founding and growth of the colonies take on a new life in Mr. Chatterton's book."
+ Bookm 71:iv Je '30 150w

"Mr. Chatterton devotes about half of his book to the story of the Virginia colony, which he tells effectively. His account of the settlement of New England is sketchy and less satisfactory." Arthur Warner
+ — Books p16 F 16 '30 750w
Boston Transcript p7 D 4 '29 700w
Cleveland Open Shelf p7 Ja '30

"It is far from being what the subtitle implies and as a survey of the causes of the Revolution it falls considerably short of the demands of modern historical scholarship. There is nothing new in the work, nothing which is not easily available and more accurately handled elsewhere."
— Nation 131:48 Jl 9 '30 150w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:25 Mr '30
Pratt p34 summer '30
St Louis 28:114 Ap '30

CHAUCER, GEOFFREY. Canterbury tales; the 2 prologue and four tales with The book of the duchess and six lyrics; tr. into modern English verse by Frank Ernest Hill; illus. by Hermann Rosse. 190p il $3.50 (17s 6d) Longmans
821 30-26612

A rendering of Chaucer into modern English which preserves as nearly as possible the meter and flavor of the original, even retaining in places the same rhyme words.

Booklist 26:386 Jl '30

"The reader who would know something of Chaucer and feels that he has no time to master Middle English will enjoy this modernization of a few of the Canterbury Tales." L. E. S.
+ Boston Transcript p3 N 1 '30 350w
Cleveland Open Shelf p153 D '30

"Mr. Hill has done all that can be done to translate Chaucer faithfully. But this, one fears, is not enough. Dryden produced something better with his modernizations, which, being free, were free also to achieve some sort of poetry of their own—as it happens, a very fine sort. All that Mr. Hill gives us is the sense. He is to be thanked for that; but one wonders whether he is right in insisting upon the difficulties of the original for any except a scholarly reader. The reviewer believes that a modern person, without any linguistic training whatsoever, can get the most pleasure out of Chaucer by being thrown into his text as it stands."
— + Nation 130:711 Je 18 '30 280w

"Mr. Hill's rendition is as scholarly and musical as Tennyson's adaptation of Malory's 'Morte d'Arthur' in the 'Idylls of the King.' Mr. Hill possesses practically all of Tennyson's well-known merits and defects. These may be shown by comparing Mr. Hill's version of 'The Knight's Tale' with his rendition of 'The Prioress's Tale.' He has given us the best that modern English affords in recreating the story told by 'a verray parfit gentil knight,' a little masterpiece of translation." Horace Gregory
+ N Y Evening Post p11m My 3 '30 800w

Reviewed by Percy Hutchison
N Y Times p2 My 18 '30 1450w

"The lovely Canterbury Tales put into smooth living language without the charming stumbling-blocks of Middle English to the modern mind."
+ Outlook 155:345 Jl 2 '30 50w

"Not until I had read Mr. Hill's version of 'The Book of the Duchess' were my eyes opened to the subtle charm and exquisite loveliness of that singularly moving tale. In fact, Mr. Hill's rendition of 'The Prologue' and the several 'Canterbury Tales' he has selected—together with the six lyrics—is so well done, and he has so consistently followed the purpose of his translation, as set forth in his preface to the volume, that it seemed to me the book was absolutely above criticism." R. G. Deacon
+ Sat R of Lit 7:58 Ag 16 '30 480w
Springf'd Republican p5e Je 29 '30 550w

"That Mr. Hill's versions are absolutely better than those of his predecessors (among whom have been Dryden, Wordsworth and Leigh Hunt) we are not prepared to say: but they are certainly more likely to win readers of the present day, more especially as they are accompanied by attractive illustrations by Mr. Hermann Rosse."
Times [London] Lit Sup p610 Jl 24 '30 750w

CHAUVIRE, ROGER. Sword in the soul; tr. and foreword by Ernest Boyd; with a pref. by James Stephens. 291p $2.50 Longmans
29-19517

"An inherent love of justice and an increasing respect and liking for the Irish people, draw young Sir Francis Hackville away from his own class, the gentry. Torturing him, dragging him from friends and the girl he loves, a mysterious force within urges him on against his will, until he finds peace at last only after losing all that had meant life to him."—Wis Lib Bul

"The melodrama is skilfully handled. A new artist has joined the ranks of France's great writers."
+ Bookm 70:xxii O '29 230w

"It takes a subtle imagination indeed to portray truly the Irish spirit. This M. Chauvire has attempted to do. He was present during the uprisings after the World War and he sympathizes heartily with the Irish fighters for freedom, in the religious as well as the political field. But his Irish people are all French. They are called O'Rourke, Fitzgerald, O'Donoghue, but they might just as well have been christened Pierre. Perhaps the translation, by Ernest Boyd, has something to do with it, for he has rendered the story into precise and formal language, with dialect conspicuously absent." G. K.
— Boston Transcript p5 O 5 '29 450w

"This Frenchman's version of the events in Ireland during the early days of the war is far superior to the usual novel written by foreigners about other people and their crises. . . Not one of the characters has any real existence; and one closes the book with the feeling that he has been reading a discursive exposition of the seething forces behind the Irish outbreak, not a rounded and developed story. From the standpoint of analysis, on the other hand, the book is sound, and it shows without partisanship the various elements caught up in the struggle during its most critical and moving moments."
+ — Nation 130:199 F 12 '30 180w

"This is a beautiful novel, challenging cheap cynicism, and with something of that intangible quality of righteousness which stirred the souls of men when they more commonly believed that men had souls."
+ N Y Times p6 N 24 '29 550w

"'The Sword in the Soul' is largely of social and psychological interest. It is an acute study and deserves to be read by any who feel curiosity about its period. As pure fiction it is less good. Not even the expert and excellent translation by Ernest Boyd can hide the rather naïve writing of M. Chauviré. However, there is to be found here the work of a sensitive and perceptive mind. The book is as near to the truth as any that will be written about Irish reactions to the rebellion in 1916."
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:971 Ap 9 '30 300w
Wis Lib Bul 26:42 Ja '30

CHEKHOV, ANTON PAVLOVICH. That worthless fellow Platonov; tr. from the Russian by John Cournos. 279p $2.50 Dutton [6s Dent]
891.72 30-5740

This hitherto unpublished play by Chekhov was written in 1880 when he was a twenty-year-old student at the University of Moscow. In motif, atmosphere and character, it may be recorded as a kind of embryo "Cherry Orchard." The play itself is concerned with Platonov's simultaneous romances with three women, but chiefly it is a character study of an amorous weakling who knows his own futility but has not the brains or will to keep him out of tragic trouble.

"'That Worthless Fellow Platonov' was an early and probably to Chekhov unsatisfactory attempt by the great naturalist to apply his literary methods to the stage. Obviously, this story has never been pulled into stage compass and given that unerring direction which so subtly marks the later dramas. In a sense this play is a peep into a great artist's workshop and plainly indicates the enormous amount of labor which produced the artlessness of 'The Sea Gull' and 'The Cherry Orchard.'" W. P. Eaton
Books p13 Mr 9 '30 170w
Cleveland Open Shelf p73 My '30

Reviewed by Lyle Donaghy
Nation and Ath 47:sup192 My 10 '30 400w

"As a whole, 'That Worthless Fellow Platonov' seems needlessly complicated, unsurely constructed. Too many of the characters threaten to run away with the performance. Obvious as its weaknesses are, however, and creaky as are some of its virtues, the play has flashes of the genuine Chekhov." T. S. Matthews
— + New Repub 62:198 Ap 2 '30 900w

"Although radiant in many of its passages with Chekhov's genius, it stands, on its merits, far below the summits of his dramatic creation. If, however, its artistic value is not equal to one's expectations, its documentary value is great; it sheds a new and interesting light on a page of Chekhov's literary biography of which so far we have known but little." Alexander Nazaroff
+ N Y Times p1 F 2 '30 1250w

Reviewed by Pierre Loving
N Y World p9m My 18 '30 550w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:49 Je '30

"This, in its mixture of profligacy, limpness, and whimsicality, in its abjectness that is half effrontery, in its self-deriding, yet not insincere, pathos, seems to me a portraiture of an original and high validity. Chekhov himself does not know how good it is, and half spoils it by overplus and dilution, and by not remembering steadily that its virtue is purely comic. He is misguided enough to let a vindictive woman shoot his hero in the end,—as if murder had any relevance to Platonov. This play is close enough to the normal Chekhov to attract, if not to satisfy, his admirers; it is far enough away from him to interest, and perhaps to propitiate, his critics." O. W. Firkins
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1104 Je 7 '30 750w

"The extreme skill and delicacy of Chekhov's technique are the salt which preserves his art from decay. In the hands of imitators his method rapidly degenerates into vulgarity: and That Worthless Fellow Platonov, in which he had not yet acquired full control over his medium, does not escape the same fate. These drab amours straggle on through four acts; the maturer Chekhov would have reduced them to manageable dimensions and plumbed the depth of their futility in one unforgettable scene. The outbursts of drunken emotionalism are not relieved, as they would have been later, by the touch of universal tragedy. The play suffers from an inconsistency of mood fatal to its artistic unity; and it was perhaps this failure which taught Chekhov the cunning deftness of an art which seasons tragedy with mocking laughter and tempers comedy with tears. We are indebted to Mr. Cournos for the excellent translation."
— + Spec 144:sup627 Ap 12 '30 550w

Times [London] Lit Sup p185 Mr 6 '30 1000w

"Though the author left it in a state of preparation, the shaping master mind is evident in the tremendous assurance with which the characters have been created. Nevertheless, it probably will receive much criticism for its structural faults, however futile it may seem to condemn an unfinished work on the basis of form in its experimental stage. The apparent faults are in the long bracketed speeches, the manipulation of the unimportant scenes, and the multiplicity of parts. But there is nothing undeveloped about Chekhov's conception of his people—even the lesser ones are amazingly alive." Grace Anshutz
+ — Yale R n s 19:860 summer '30 500w

CHEKHOV, ANTON PAVLOVICH. Uncle Vanya; tr. and adapted from the Russian by Rose Caylor. 92p $2 Covici

891.72 30-14688

A new translation of Chekhov's famous play, which enjoyed a successful run at the Cort theater in New York during the winter season of 1930.

Reviewed by W. P. Eaton
Books p11 Jl 6 '30 120w

" 'Uncle Vanya' exists in order that full-length portraits may be drawn of certain delightful but absurd eccentrics such as only Chekhov's tolerant but unrelenting analysis could make real. . . Such company is neither brilliant nor exciting, but when seen through the keen, gentle, and almost passionless eyes of Chekhov it is as interesting as any company could be. He neither admires, nor lectures, nor despises them. He is neither sentimentalist, nor satirist nor cynic. And yet there is something which inspires in him both a profound interest and a complete understanding." J. W. Krutch
+ Nation 130:554 My 7 '30 800w

"It is in many ways Chekhov's best play, and Miss Caylor has done a fine job with it." Edwin Seaver
+ N Y Evening Post p8m My 31 '30 50w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p9 My 19 '30 750w

Reviewed by Bernice Whittemore
Outlook 155:270 Je 18 '30 50w

CHENEY, DAVID MACGREGOR. Son of Minos; [foreword by Burton Rascoe]. 238p $2 McBride

30-29557

A heroic romance which has for its background the wonderful Minoan civilization of ancient Crete, island of the sea-kings.

"However sound the author's archeology may be, he has not allowed it to freight his story too heavily, and he has let himself go. The effect is as if statuary in polychrome, in a modern restoration of antiquity, had come alive and fallen to fighting tooth and nail. Accept the author's illusion and mood, both sincere and well sustained, and the speed of the narrative will do the rest."
+ Books p14 N 30 '30 200w

"As a whole the tale has been exceptionally well managed; it is perfectly free from pedantry, entertaining and dramatic."
+ — N Y Times p34 N 16 '30 580w

"The novel is more interesting as archeology than as fiction, for the author, in spite of much knowledge and a soaring imagination, cannot bring his world to life. His style, however, is admirably suited to this sort of work, for he does not make the stupid mistake of telling a story out of the age of myth in colloquialisms of today. If we must read of Ariadne and the Minotaur and of battles on the Trojan plain, at least we are permitted to read poetic and dignified language." W. R. Brooks
+ — Outlook 156:312 O 22 '30 130w

CHENEY, SHELDON WARREN. New world architecture. 404p il $10 Longmans

724 Architecture [30-32130]

A survey of modern architecture as it has developed during the past forty years from machine-age materials and methods of structure, in response to modern needs and modern living. Mr Cheney shows how the ornate period known as Eclecticism in architecture, (1870-1920) has given way to the new simplicity of sky-scraper architecture. He also describes the new building activity in Sweden, Germany, Holland and France. Modern architecture for shops, factories, public buildings, churches and homes is discussed. The volume is illustrated with 300 striking photographs of architectural developments and projects.

Reviewed by Catherine Bauer
Bookm 72:xx D '30 600w

"With the same engaging freshness of his previous books on modern art and the theater, Sheldon Cheney now gives us the first thoroughgoing account of modern architecture available in English. The approach which Lewis Mumford employed so successfully in 'Sticks and Stones' of relating architecture to the broader scene of living, is here applied intensively to contemporary architecture, with hundreds of photographs to emphasize the meaning of the text. It is frankly partisan and non-technical; like a good lecturer Mr. Cheney presents his case for modernism with winning familiarity and sound sense, thus creating a most stimulating and attractive book." W. R. Agard
+ Books p7 N 30 '30 1100w

"From the standpoint of its illustrations, which number nearly four hundred, this is by far the most satisfactory book on the new world architecture that has so far appeared in America. It is, moreover, a fine campaign document for 'modernism.' For though Mr. Cheney's book lacks the erudition and sometimes the insight of Henry-Russell Hitchcock's recent 'Modern Architecture,' though its vocabulary is romantic and occasionally even a trifle effervescent, it is written none the less with admirable clarity and straightforwardness." Henry Hazlitt
+ Nation 131:652 D 10 '30 1500w

"It is hardly possible to overstate the lucidity, the incisiveness or the tolerance of Mr. Cheney's writing. He is, in his own person, as evidenced in this book, the best argument for the opinions he advocates. One should not forget, either, the 389 admirably chosen and carefully placed illustrations. No one who wishes to understand modern architecture and to get at the same time a wise insight into our changing civilization should miss this book." R. L. Duffus
+ N Y Times p3 N 30 '30 1400w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 156:509 N 26 '30 180w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:14 D '30 160w

"I wish it were in a thin paper pocket edition so that several architects and a few clients I could name might carry it on subway and train rides and in this way read it. . . Passing dull time away is a lost art, yet Sheldon Cheney has made a contribution to architectural progress which every busy man should read and read carefully." H. W. Corbett
+ Sat R of Lit 7:499 Ja 3 '31 1050w

CHERRIE, GEORGE KRUCK. Dark trails; adventures of a naturalist. 322p il $5 (15s) Putnam

B or 92 Natural history. South America—Description and travel 30-23668

" 'Dark Trails' is the autobiography of a man who has spent forty years wandering about the world as an explorer, a guide and a naturalist. He was with Theodore Roosevelt on the famous trip down the River of Doubt (and he tells of that trip at length). He also accompanied the younger Roosevelts in their successful search for the ovis poli which now resides in the Field museum. Most of Mr. Cherrie's years were spent in the wilds of South America, and he writes not only of the places but of the peoples whom he has come to know more intimately than most explorers."—Chicago Daily Tribune

Booklist 27:155 D '30

"There is a chapter on 'Narrow Escapes from Death' which has a thrill a minute, but the author apparently never felt them—they were just routine business."
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p13 O 4 '30 120w

"Much is provided for the lover of biography and adventure. For the lover of Nature there are stories of the jungle, of great armies of ants, of strange and colorful birds, of hosts of insects. For the lover of travel the book brings pictures of strange places and peoples. Generous in text and illustration, it is an agreeable book for many moods."
+ Springf'd Republican p12 O 8 '30 450w

CHERRY-GARRARD, APSLEY GEORGE BENET. Worst journey in the world; Antarctic, 1910-1913. 585p il $5 Dial press

919.9 Antarctic regions 30-11358

A narrative of Scott's last expedition to the Antarctic, by one of its members, reproduced in this country for the first time from the second English edition. Cherry-Garrard, a young man just out of Oxford in 1910, tells the story of the expedition with remarkable descriptive power, including in his pages letters and a diary written by other members of the expedition. With illustrations in color and halftone and maps.

Booklist 27:36 S '30

"Told without literary device or any affectation by a man who is a scientist, an explorer, perhaps a good deal of a hero, but never by any chance a littérateur, this book succeeds in being one of the most thrilling and absorbing narratives in modern literature, and makes Byrd's journey by airplane to the pole seem no more harassing than a train trip from Albany to Troy." R. L. Roe

+ Bookm 71:568 Ag '30 280w

"Cherry-Garrard's work is packed with useful information for future polar explorers, yet there is hardly a paragraph which is not entirely palatable to the lay reader." Ralph Sadler

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 24 '30 1650w

"It would be impertinent for anyone I know to praise the bravery of this book, as it would be ridiculous for him to attempt even to suggest the richness of its content. I shall do neither, though the temptation is great. I shall simply say that it is the first American edition of a work which eight years ago gave the English public a more or less complete account of Scott's last expedition to the South Pole; and that it is one of the most interesting books I ever have read or expect to read." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 131:44 Jl 9 '30 700w

"It is not a cheerful book, but it is a gripping, straightforward account of ice-bound suffering that sends a chill down the spine." F. H. M.

+ N Y Evening Post p11m My 10 '30 50w

"'The Worst Journey in the World' will always rank as a great book of Antarctic exploration. There is a temptation to call it a classic—certainly it has passages that deserve to live—but it is overlong and too discursive to be regarded in that light." H. E. Armstrong

+ N Y Times p15 My 11 '30 2200w

"It is a thrilling recital of sufferings undergone and hardships endured in the name of science. There are no literary pretenses about this book. It is a traveler's tale pure and simple. And it is convincing so long as the author goes on with his story. It is only when he goes out of his way to prove that Scott cared nothing about being first at the Pole that he gets into deep water." Bellamy Partridge

+ — N Y World p10m My 11 '30 750w

Pratt p32 summer '30

St Louis 28:217 S '30

"As a literary record 'The Worst Journey in the World' is a fine, thrilling job. As a handbook on exploration I cannot subscribe to its greatness." Earl Hanson

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1141 Je 21 '30 670w

CHESNUT, MARY BOYKIN (MILLER) (MRS JAMES CHESNUT, Jr.). Diary from Dixie; ed. by Isabella D. Martin and Myrta Lockett Avary. reprint 423p il $5 P. Smith, 347 Fifth Av., N.Y.

973.78 United States—History—Civil war—Personal narratives. Confederate States of America A30-1158

"Mrs. Chesnut's diary [first published in 1905 and for some time out of print] has always held a place of its own in the literature of the Confederacy. She was in the very midst of the struggle, acquainted with some of its greatest figures. She was in Montgomery when the Confederacy was organized, sat on sofas with Davis and Stephens, and chatted in parlors with Toombs, Cobb, and Hunter; she was in Charleston when war began, watching the bombardment of Fort Sumter from a housetop; and during the grimmest years of the struggle she was in Richmond."—Sat R of Lit

Booklist 26:322 My '30

"No reprint in the field of Americana could be more welcome than this new edition of 'A Diary from Dixie.' No personal record of the Civil War years written from the Southern point of view surpasses it in interest."

+ N Y Times p16 My 25 '30 220w

"Her information varies from measures of state to the love affairs of General Hood, from talk with General Lee or General Joe Johnston to the price of groceries. It is an invaluable work, especially for those interested in social conditions and public opinion."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:931 Ap 12 '30 250w

CHESTERTON, GILBERT KEITH. Four faultless felons. 298p $2.50 Dodd [7s 6d Cassell] 30-24048

Four humorous mystery stories, in the first of which, The Moderate Murderer, the governor of Polybia, is protected from murder by an almost-murderer. The Honest Quack is the story of a mysterious tree that holds a secret at its root; The Ecstatic Thief is a witty story of a supposed thief; and The Loyal Traitor is all about an extraordinary event in the kingdom of Pavonia.

For biographical sketches of the author see Boston Transcript p1 O 11 '30; and, N Y World p3e N 30 '30

Booklist 27:165 D '30

Bookm 72:xxv O '30 30w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p14 O 19 '30 180w

"Never has the paradoxical and inimitable Chesterton been more delightful than in the four long stories that make up this book. Every story is a gem in itself, rare, gleaming and highly finished, flaw and all." J. W. M.

+ Boston Transcript p1 O 11 '30 450w

"If these stories lack the excitement of familiarity provided by those in which Father Brown figures, they have at least as much detective interest as any of Mr. Chesterton's old work; and the story of the Moderate Murderer has in it a generous allowance of that sane human philosophy which enlightens his most frivolous fiction."

+ New Statesman 35:660 Ag 30 '30 80w

"The book makes dazzling reading from cover to cover. Mr. Chesterton's criminals are intellectual sinners and his methods of deduction would find little favor with Scotland Yard, but for good entertainment—try 'Four Faultless Felons.'" Bruce Rae

+ N Y Times p10 O 5 '30 200w

"In this further pursuit of the paradox, Mr. Chesterton becomes sometimes a little breathless. The puns which he makes with words are occasionally as silly as the puns he makes of events. Still, the four stories of criminals who committed no crimes are amusing and interesting if only because the reader must discover how Mr. Chesterton will make an apparent 'banker's clerk descending from a bus' on second glance a hippopotamus. For this species of parlor trickery certainly owes something to Lewis Carroll."

— + N Y World p3e N 23 '30 100w

Sat R of Lit 7:511 Ja 3 '31 50w

"The stories, as such, are capital fun, and should delight even those readers who may not care about the fundamentally serious criticism of modern life which underlies them, and who may not appreciate at their full worth the passages of fine poetic symbolism which Mr. Chesterton—the most careless and prodigal dispenser of jewels—scatters among his pages."

+ Spec 145:856 N 29 '30 180w

Times [London] Lit Sup p666 Ag 21 '30 500w

CHESTERTON, GILBERT KEITH. Resurrection of Rome. 294p $3 Dodd [12s 6d Hodder]

914.56 Rome (city) 30-28208

An interpretation of modern Rome which deals with it as a city risen from the dead and once more showing a tendency to assume its high place at the head of the world. Mr Chesterton describes the rise to power of the Fascists, and the creation of the Vatican State, and points out that in order to understand present day Rome a knowledge of her past is essential.

Bookm 72:436 D '30 400w

"We had always taken Mr. Chesterton to be the playboy of his group. Alas! In 'The Resurrection of Rome' he has proved himself as belligerent a Catholic as Mr. Belloc, as prodigal of simple home remedies as Mr. Shaw, while in this one volume he unites all the most tedious characteristics of Galsworthy, Bennett and Wells.' Eileen Hall

— Books p39 D 7 '30 500w

"He writes as a Catholic, but as one so recently converted that he feels it necessary to convince his audience of his orthodoxy; consequently he stresses points that one born to the faith would never notice or would else take for granted. He goes to Rome with his opinions fixed and pedetermined. He will admire Rome whether or no, and so eager is he to convince his reader of his admiration that he wears himself out answering criticisms, many of which no one would dream of making." G. R. B. Richards

Boston Transcript p1 D 3 '30 1600w

"To anti-mystics, Mr. Chesterton will remain an enigma, partly explained—but impossible to dismiss—as a clowning epigrammatist and paradoxer, an expert journalistic drum-beater. He will not state facts coldly lest truth be frozen underneath. Rather, with sparks of truth he kindles fireworks. In the mind of this congenital crusader, every fact becomes a sword. Beauty, exulting, enters each fray, and often the battle is won gloriously almost before it is begun, for the truth of a battle cry outlives even defeated armies." C. M.

Cath World 132:501 Ja '31 350w

"This is probably, from a merely literary point of view, Mr. Chesterton's worst book; and yet no one can afford not to read it, or at least portions of it. The first twenty-six pages, in which he states his general thesis, are as pungent, forceful, arresting as anything he has done, and the forty pages which he devotes directly to the Duce and 'the return of the Romans' are simply not to be missed; but in between the going is rather dreadful in spots; or rather, only tolerable in spots." B. I. Bell

— + Sat R of Lit 7:205 O 11 '30 800w

"It is essentially Mr. Chesterton's function in life to tell us what it all means. When the subject that was offered to him was Rome, we can imagine a gleam in his eye as of one who at last saw a theme large enough for his pen. Others had written excellent guide books to Rome based on its history, for example Marion Crawford's Ave Roma Immortalis. He would write a guide to Rome based on a philosophy, a view of life. That is what we might have expected, and it has happened. Those who do not like Mr. Chesterton's philosophy will not like his book. But those who find that even when they do not agree with him—which is pretty often—their own thought is somehow more stimulated by Mr. Chesterton than by most people, will find in The Resurrection of Rome a bracing draught." A. S. Duncan-Jones

+ Spec 145:499 O 11 '30 950w

"We may rank the services of the Papacy to Western civilization as high as Mr. Chesterton or as low as the Dean of St. Paul's: we may judge Mr. Chesterton's critique of Fascism wrong-headed or uncommonly shrewd . . . but we cannot resist the nutty flavour of the Chestertonian ale at its best. We must admire a book so fertile in ideas, so dazzling in fancy; a book sustained by such virile intelligence."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p799 O 9 '30 1650w

CHESTERTON, GILBERT KEITH. The thing; why I am a Catholic. 255p $2.50 Dodd [7s 6d Sheed]

282 Roman Catholic church—Doctrinal and controversial works 30-5728

The Roman Catholic church is "the thing" Mr Chesterton discusses, and his volume is made up of a number of essays in which he gives his reasons for being a Catholic.

Booklist 26:297 My '30

"Such a writer is not to be judged by the scruples of scholarship. He can be enjoyed only after those severe proprieties have been laid aside, just as a learned professor lays them aside when he dresses as Santa Claus on Christmas Eve for the hilarity of the youngsters. The most magnificent middle-aged youngster and Santa Claus, all in one, now living, is Mr. Chesterton. And the world dreams of immortal youthfulness as he acts the part. This is not at all to say that he achieves nothing serious. Very distinctly he does. The scalp of many a pompous imposture hangs at his reeking belt." W. L. Sullivan

+ — Books p10 Mr 23 '30 600w

"Mr. Chesterton is militantly in defense of the Catholic Church and he does not hesitate to launch his attack boldly against his antagonists, but he does possess the facility of expression which makes his arguments leave one with a sense of stimulation rather than of anger. His skill in debate is one of his most valuable assets. In this book he finds plenty of antagonists, and he makes many a shrewd hit, but he does not arouse animosity. The result is a book which is stimulating to anyone interested in the religious views of the present day."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 19 '30 280w

Christian Century 48:28 Ja 7 '31 180w

"The Thing will mostly interest Catholics; it is not one of Mr. Chesterton's best books, the arguments are woolly and either crawl at a snail's pace or jump about like frogs, paradox seems often to be merely a trick, and there only remains Mr. Chesterton's geniality and loyalty."

— + New Statesman 34:200 N 16 '29 80w

Reviewed by G. N. Shuster

N Y Times p9 Ag 31 '30 500w

"The amazing thing is not that Chesterton is so absurdly childish but that people can be found to take him seriously as a great thinker. That he has a crackling and sometimes dazzling style (though it is wearing) may be admitted, but as a thinker he is a total failure." C. H. Grattan

— N Y World p11m Mr 9 '30 550w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:73 O '30

St Louis 28:64 Mr '30

"Mr. Chesterton makes, as always, a gallant attempt to prove what some people believe to be wisdom by what everyone acknowledges to be wit. Even those in agreement with his conclusions often doubt the cogency of their defence. Yet if we regard this volume not as ammunition, wherewith to annihilate the sceptic, but as the bright plaything of the believer, how delightful it is! Why should the sceptics have all the good satire?"

+ — Spec 143:787 N 23 '29 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p908 N 14 '29 1350w

CHEVALIER, JACQUES. Pascal [tr. from the French by Lilian Clare]. 336p $5 Longmans [15s Sheed & W.]

B or 92 Pascal, Blaise [30-31241]

In this biographical study of Pascal, the great French scientist and philosopher, the author discusses his works, scientific and mathematical, and his religious beliefs as expressed in the Pensées.

"It is not a life or a portrait of Pascal: it is a study of his thought. But it is a study with a definite bias. Jacques Chevalier is a Catholic of the strictest orthodoxy. He makes, we believe, as good a case as could be made; still, we are never allowed to forget that he is presenting a case. His work belongs neither to history, philosophy nor literature, but entirely to the realm of apologetics. . . The book seems to us thoroughly un-Pascalian because it offers us a theologian instead of a man." Albert Guerard

CHEVALIER, JACQUES—Continued

Books p10 N 23 '30 950w

Boston Transcript p2 S 10 '30 650w

Nation 131:505 N 5 '30 200w

"Competent and comprehensive introduction to Pascal." L. L. Irvine

+ Nation and Ath 47:623 Ag 16 '30 1250w

"To the study of Pascal M. Chevalier brings the indispensable gift of sympathy, without which no estimate of a genius so rare and baffling can be more than a formal report."

+ New Statesman 35:681 S 6 '30 1000w

"M. Chevalier not only makes the man, but the time and the famous Port Royal controversy live again, and it remains to be said that the translation reads as if it were not a translation, while the book itself, though long, is light and easy to hold and read. An admirable piece of work." A. W. Tilby

+ Sat R 149:730 Je 7 '30 850w

"In general it may be said that the author has brought to his work a fund of scholarship that has not been equaled by any previous biographer of Pascal, that he has supported his arguments relating to the latter's opinions and achievements in a spirit of apparent sincerity and judicial fairness, and that he has presented his material in the lucid style which French writers have acquired through more centuries than have been given to most other peoples. . . To the Christian the book will be an inspiration to religious contemplation: to the philosopher, a stimulus to simplicity in the stating of profound truths; to the mathematician, an illustration of the results of the play of imagination in both analysis and geometry; and to the physicist, an impulse to scientific observation of the simple phenomena of daily life." D. E. Smith

+ Sat R of Lit 7:198 O 11 '30 950w

"Professor Chevalier's temper of mind, at once scientific and spiritual, gives him special qualifications for the interpretation of Pascal. He helps us to understand why the Pensées are still a living force in French thought, and educated French converts to Catholicism nearly always follow the Pascalian path, and interpret their faith in his terms." Evelyn Underhill

+ Spec 145:103 Jl 19 '30 500w

Times [London] Lit Sup p854 O 23 '30 1350w

CHI-CHAO, LIANG. See Liang Chi-Chao.

CHIDSEY, DONALD BARR. Marlborough; the portrait of a conqueror. 308p il $3.50 Day [15s Murray, J.]

B or 92 Marlborough, John Churchill, 1st duke of 29-20140

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Cleveland Open Shelf p58 Ap '30

"Mr. Chidsey's 'Marlborough' is a powerful argument in favour of the theory that all biographies and all national history should be written by foreigners. Until Mr. Winston Churchill's great work on his illustrious ancestor is completed, it is likely to hold its own among biographies of the Great Duke."

+ Sat R 149:529 Ap 26 '30 700w

"We cordially agree with Mr. Chidsey's own estimate of his book that it is 'a parasite's job, resting on the labor of other men, worthier students,' and are only sorry that he has not paid more attention to the facts with which those others could have provided him. But it is, however, fair to say that the book has a certain smartness about it, as indeed is to be expected from a practised journalist."

— + Spec 144:669 Ap 19 '30 300w

"Some English readers may not approve of Mr. Chidsey's style; it is quaint, humorous and sometimes a little colloquial, but always graphic. Some of the chapter headings are, perhaps, more striking than appropriate: 'Battlefield and Bedroom,' 'Beauty and the Beast,' 'Caliban's Protégé' and 'Buttered Side Up' suggest Yellow Press headlines, and are quite unworthy of the text. Mr. Chidsey certainly writes without the dignity which is usually associated with historical works; but the lightness and humour of his pen are well suited to the period with which he deals."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p265 Mr 27 '30 1350w

CHIDSEY, DONALD BARR. Pistols in the morning. 282p $2 Day

30-7785

A river gambler and a Creole beauty are the romantic personages in this story of the old Mississippi steamboatin' days. Felix St Vincent Blake's career rose to its height when he shot a rival gambler in a duel; but for love of pretty Eugenie he performs even greater exploits in a charmingly romantic fashion.

Reviewed by Guy Holt

Bookm 71:351 Je '30 100w

"It is not the great American novel. Still, it is a good romantic adventure, well told by a rather young author. . . There are few if any dull pages. It has its faults, but 'Pistols in the Morning' is an entertaining book. And for what other reason, I ask you, are novels written than to entertain?" G. L. Eskew

+ Books p21 Ap 6 '30 500w

"It is a high-powered romance, rapidly moving, at times a trifle melodramatic—but, it has a very live charm, it is evocative and its characters are flesh and blood. The author gives us a glowing, richly colored vista of a picturesque bygone day and, for once, one can agree with a jacket phrase—it achieves 'glamor,' the verisimilitude in romance that no deliberate intention can create." F. H. M.

+ N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 26 '30 160w

"This is romance in the full elegant flower of the grand manner. . . And with its thin, golden, perhaps spurious, enchantment, it is a very entertaining book. For Mr. Chidsey has in a distinguished degree the ability to select the brightest surfaces and the most appropriately glamourous emotions from an age that made these their own contribution to the biography of America."

+ N Y Times p17 Mr 9 '30 400w

Outlook 154:426 Mr 12 '30 140w

CHILD, RICHARD WASHBURN. Pitcher of romance. 300p $2 Sears

30-7194

A collection of 13 short stories, all with a love interest. Contents: The pitcher of romance; No knowing why; Written on the sky; He who reached the top; Belief; The feminist; Her two men; For the woman; The glimmer; The unburnt; God's laugh; No luck; Love is love.

"These short stories run pleasantly through the mind, leaving but slight trace of their passage. This is not entirely a defect; it is simply indicative of the sort of popular magazine category to which they frankly belong. The author has a quick eye for the surfaces of life and a lively sense of drama. For purposes of entertainment, 'The Pitcher of Romance' is marked by diversity rather than depth."

+ — Books p15 Ag 31 '30 80w

"Seldom do we find the pen of a single author yielding so many stories of genuine human interest and literary worth."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 11 '30 150w

N Y Times p23 Ap 27 '30 400w

"The former ambassador of the United States to Italy is a clever, entertaining yarn spinner, and his talents are at his best in this group, which takes its name from the first, an account of an elderly man's search for romance in distant places."

+ — Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 13 '30 130w

CHILDE, VERE GORDON. Bronze age. 258p il $3.50 Macmillan [8s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

571.3 Bronze age [30-32920]

Professor Childe is chiefly concerned with the Bronze age in central and western Europe. He discusses the incentive to trade and industry which came from the developing use of bronze and copper, and the types of tools, weapons, vessels and ornaments which the Bronze age man had at his disposal. The last half of the book is a brief account of the culture of the principal communities living north of the Alps between 2000 and 500 B. C.

New Statesman 36:216 N 22 '30 180w

"The book, with its many really useful illustrations, is the best introduction so far available to a fascinating and important study."

+ Spec 145:954 D 13 '30 180w

"In this well-written book, whose clear arrangement makes it also manageable for the layman, Professor Childe deals with the material culture of this epoch as it appeared in North-West and Central Europe; and from the remains he deduces certain hypotheses as to the general history of this area during the period."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p940 N 13 '30 1400w

CHILDERS, JAMES SAXON. Bookshop mystery. 245p $2 (7s 6d) Appleton

30-3348

Gordon Parker, a young American commissioned to buy rare books in Europe for Alfred Leighton-Smith, meets on his voyage over a most fascinating Belgian girl, Marie Saval, who also confesses to an interest in book-collecting. Their friendship established, Marie sees a good deal of Gordon—and his books—in London, until the untimely arrival of Gordon's fiancée from America. It is Barbara who sees thru Marie's pose, and who aids Gordon in keeping a valuable manuscript by an eighteenth century poetess, containing an inserted code message, from the hands of a gang of international thieves.

Bookm 71:xxix Mr '30 50w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p22 F 9 '30 100w

"This theme of secret agents on the trail of valuable documents or information is very old and overworked, and this story offers few fresh variations. There are no high points of suspense or bewilderment, and the development of the story is rather slow and drab. . . Nor does the author reveal an understanding of the under surface of clever and complex international intrigue."

— Boston Transcript p2 Mr 5 '30 350w

"There is a certain amount of amusement to be had from most bad work, poems, plays, even detective stories, if they are bad enough. The Bookshop Mystery comes well within this necessary degree of badness and is amusingly naive as well."

— New Statesman 34:750 Mr 15 '30 150w

N Y Times p20 Ap 6 '30 130w

Times [London] Lit Sup p277 Mr 27 '30 220w

CHILDS, HARWOOD LAWRENCE. Labor and capital in national politics. 286p il $3 Ohio state univ. press

331.88 American federation of labor. Chamber of commerce of the United States of America 30-3670

Dr Childs, who is professor of political economy at Bucknell university, has examined carefully the practical workings of the American federation of labor and the Chamber of commerce as they approach and influence the formal government.

Reviewed by E. A. Beecroft
Am J Soc 36:480 N '30 750w

Reviewed by E. P. Herring
Am Pol Sci R 24:762 Ag '30 300w

"To the rapidly swelling literature about unofficial government which has resulted from the new realism in political science, Dr. Childs has made an important addition. The American Federation of Labor has been the object of much careful study before that of Dr. Childs, but new significance is given to the material by putting it in close juxtaposition to the story of the Chamber of Commerce. It is a well-deserved tribute to the objectivity of the author's attitude that his monograph comes highly recommended by spokesmen of both organizations." H. D. Lasswell

+ Ann Am Acad 150:307 Jl '30 350w

"The author is not able to rid himself of certain encumbrances of style, but his approach to his problem is devoid of cant and pleasingly matter-of-fact. The tone throughout the volume is dispassionate, and the diction is so cautious that no offense is offered to any cast of opinion." J. P. Nichols

+ Hist Outlook 21:296 O '30 1050w

"Labor's rôle in American politics has been discussed in recent years in a half-dozen books and numerous articles. This book differs from all these in dealing with labor and capital in parallel columns. . . Still more it differs in its concept of what constitutes politics, its predecessors treating politics as being synonymous with elections, while Childs develops the subject as embracing the entire influence upon public affairs of the two dominant national organizations of labor and capital. . . As a novel and suggestive approach to the controversial question of labor in politics it is worthy of attention from all students of labor problems." E. E. Witte

J Pol Econ 38:483 Ag '30 650w

"This book is a thorough, dispassionate and fearless discussion of a subject, which not so long ago would have cast fear into the heart of the author anxious to present it. Primarily it is a courageous attempt to bring out the full significance of the growing interrelation of politics and economics, as exemplified by the aims, activities and expectations of the two most inclusive subdivisions of modern society." Louis Rich

+ — N Y Times p3 Ap 6 '30 1200w

St Louis 28:133 My '30

CHILVERS, HEDLEY A. Johannesburg (Out of the crucible); being the romantic story of the Witwatersrand goldfields and of the great city which arose in their midst. 273p il $3.50 Stokes [7s 6d Cassell]

968.22 Johannesburg, Transvaal. South Africa—History A30-1193

This history of the development of Johannesburg, South Africa, is concerned with the discovery in 1884-86 of a great gold field by Fred Struben and George Walker. Mr Chilvers tells of the rush of prospectors and speculators to the Rand, as the mining region was called, tracing the beginnings of the struggle between the contented peasant farmers and the incoming expansionists, up to the Boer war.

"He has laid his finger on the true meaning of the beginnings of South Africa, and what is more, he tells the story in so entertaining a manner that, for all its accumulation of facts, it is a first-rate yarn."

+ Christian Science Monitor p5 My 31 '30 450w

"Mr. Chilvers has made his book a vivid panorama of strikingly colorful and thrilling events. . . Another reason for its vital and entertaining quality is that it is replete with anecdote, thousands of little tales which he has collected from friends and acquaintances and people among whom he went in search of them which are pithy of the life of the early days, illustra-

CHILVERS, H. A.—Continued
tive of the characters whose names will forever be associated with the development of the Rand, and convey to the reader a clearer and more graphic understanding of the time and place than would any amount of description."
+ N Y Times p21 Mr 2 '30 350w
St Louis 28:219 S '30
Times [London] Lit Sup p1019 D 5 '29 500w

CHINARD, GILBERT. Thomas Jefferson, the apostle of Americanism. 548p il $5 Little
B or 92 Jefferson, Thomas 29-19875
For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Reviewed by B. F. Wright, Jr.
Am Pol Sci R 24:489 My '30 550w
Reviewed by R. P. Warren
New Repub 62:196 Ap 2 '30 1850w
Reviewed by Shaemas O'Sheel
N Y World p10m Ja 19 '30 1200w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:21 Mr '30

"Professor Chinard's work ought to become a companion and guide for all those who love and honor the doctrine which should have been Americanism, but never was, and who equally love and reverence the memory of the great man who formulated it." A. J. Nock
+ Sat R of Lit 6:631 Ja 11 '30 1800w
Wis Lib Bul 25:411 D '29

"Mr. Chinard's 'Jefferson' is filled with new material of the greatest value. It is the most original life of Jefferson published in a long time; it is likely to remain so. The author has a thorough knowledge of all Jefferson books and manuscripts. He knows Jefferson well enough to understand his complex greatness, and he is detached enough to distinguish at once his tricks. His whole treatment is respectful but clear-sighted." Bernard Faÿ
+ Yale R n s 19:630 spring '30 500w

CHINARD, GILBERT, ed. Houdon in America; a coll. of documents in the Jefferson papers in the Library of Congress; with an introd. by Francis Henry Taylor. (Hist. documents. Institut français de Washington) 51p il $3.50 Johns Hopkins [16s Oxford]
B or 92 Houdon, Jean Antoine. Jefferson, Thomas 30-15551

"The papers collected in this slim book deal with the voyage of Jean Antoine Houdon to America, with the statue he made of George Washington, with the project of another possibility, an equestrian statue of the General; and with Lafayette's bust, ordered by the Commonwealth of Virginia. The last part of the record deals with 'Houdon's distress after the Revolution and the belated settlement of his claim on Virginia for the statue of Washington.' "—N Y Times

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 16 '30 250w
N Y Times p24 Je 22 '30 200w
St Louis 28:272 N '30
Spec 145:173 Ag 2 '30 120w

CHISHOLM, ARTHUR MURRAY. Red Bill. 308p $2 Stokes [7s 6d Hodder]
30-24237

William Hand, better known to his comrades as "Red Hand" was a civil engineer of very fine abilities. He was opposed in every contract bid he made by a certain McGarry. When it looked as if ruin was his ultimate goal "Red" met Alicia Burdette, and from thence on the victory was to the better man.

"The plot is well worked out [in] . . . this interesting but rather exaggerated story."
+ — N Y Times p24 S 14 '30 170w

"The material of this tale is by no means novel, but Mr. Chisholm has an attractively resilient style."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p718 S 11 '30 100w

CHORLEY, EDWARD CLOWES. New American prayer book; its history and contents. 137p $1.50 (6s 6d) Macmillan
264.03 Book of common prayer 30-2333

The historiographer of the Protestant Episcopal church outlines the evolution of the American Book of common prayer and analyzes the changes and enrichment of the latest revision completed in 1928.

Booklist 27:137 D '30
Boston Transcript p5 F 19 '30 500w

"The chapters recounting its history narrate its antecedents in outline and also fill this in with as much detail as any one not making an intensive study of the subject is likely to desire."
+ N Y Times p4 F 2 '30 280w
Pratt p8 summer '30
St Louis 28:129 My '30

CHOTZINOFF, SAMUEL. Eroica; a novel based on the life of Ludwig van Beethoven. 312p $2.50 Simon & Schuster
Beethoven, Ludwig van—Fiction 30-6433

"In a series of episodes, treated with remarkable fidelity to facts, Mr. Chotzinoff develops the intimate personality of the pock-marked, recalcitrant youth of Bonn without resorting to any of the sentimental rot which inevitably attaches itself to the life of a hero. Against a background of well-known characters, whose personalities flash out in deft strokes, stalks the uncouth figure of Beethoven in true perspective, his own life furnishing the raison d'être of his works."—Sat R of Lit

Booklist 26:356 Je '30

"A few remarkable incidents in Beethoven's life have been omitted, but for the most part the novelist-biographer has shown excellent taste in the arrangement, has not overstepped the bounds of credulity in arranging situations which are built upon exceedingly slight documents, and has managed to round out a full-bodied, convincing life of a titan. It is not surprising to find, therefore, that the book is less of a novel than of a biography, but a biography more deeply probing than Ludwig's recent brilliant portrait." R. P. Harriss
+ Bookm 72:77 S '30 420w

"In a story of moderate length the author has contrived a well-balanced, vivid and sympathetic picture of a surpassing genius. The book is never mawkish, neither does it resort to the superlatives that weaken. Because of the dignity and moderation with which it is conceived and carried out, it is all the more persuasive and illuminating. Quite apart from its appeal as a novel pure and simple, it can be cordially recommended for the instruction of all who are ignorant of Beethoven's life." Peter Bowdoin
+ Books p6 Mr 9 '30 950w

"Mr. Chotzinoff has contributed nothing to our understanding of Beethoven, which in view of the enormous literature on the man is not surprising. Yet the style alone of this spiritless novel would dampen any enthusiasm one might otherwise bring to it. Few indeed are the cliches, the stilted adjectives, and the periphrastic expressions that Mr. Chotzinoff has overlooked." R. C. B. Brown
— Nation 130:575 My 14 '30 450w

"The important episodes are all there, his interminable quarrels, his successes, his sufferings, his friends and family. But the touch of inspiration that would make the whole picture come to life and for which one could readily put up with a novel twice as long, that, alas, is not." Louis Sherwin
— N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 29 '30 900w

"The book is interesting in its presentation of a complex and often apparently contradictory personality. Mr. Chotzinoff has not allowed his love for the great musician to blind him to the man's defects."
+ N Y Times p9 Ap 13 '30 400w

"While calling itself a novel, 'Eroica' impresses one with having been written with careful attention to accuracy of detail; even in the purely imaginary passages, events, personages, conversations, even, have their right historic setting. . . But we opened the book hoping somehow to find in its pages the miracle of a fresh approach to Beethoven. If this was present it eluded us." Grace Overmyer

+ — N Y World p10m Mr 16 '30 600w

"Mr. Chotzinoff's feeling for the significance of Beethoven's works as the direct outpouring of his subjective experience and philosophy is keen, and his interpretations reasonable. That portion of the book devoted to the 'Eroica' is more than a mere consideration of this symphony as a dedication to a great hero. It is an exceedingly skilful exposition of the growth of a philosophy to be expressed in music. The moderation and restraint of this picture of Beethoven's strength—and weakness—betoken a convincing sincerity. For those who know Beethoven thoroughly from the historical point of view. Mr. Chotzinoff's novel will prove to be delightfully humanizing; and those to whom Beethoven is only the composer of the Fifth Symphony may enjoy this story of his life with no fear of dangerous distortion of fact or personality which will need to be corrected later on." H. L. Smith

+ Sat R of Lit 6:891 Ap 5 '30 750w

Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 30 '30 750w

CHRISTIE, AGATHA (MILLER) (MRS MAX E. L. MALLOWAN). Murder at the vicarage. 319p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Collins]

30-29830

Colonel Protheroe, the heartily disliked squire of St Mary Mead, is the victim. The fact that his wife is desperately in love with another man seems to have supplied motive for murder on the part of two people at least. But shrewd Miss Marple points out several other possibilites.

Booklist 27:210 Ja '31

Bookm 72:xxii N '30 40w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p14 N 2 '30 380w

"As a 'hider' the author is decidedly clever, keeping the secret to the end." K. C. Tomlinson

+ Nation and Ath 48:140 O 25 '30 150w

"The talented Miss Christie is far from being at her best in her latest mystery story. It will add little to her eminence in the field of detective fiction." Bruce Rae

— N Y Times p32 N 30 '30 130w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 156:348 O 29 '30 80w

"Any book by Agatha Christie attracts attention but when she really hits her stride in a full length detective story, as she does in 'The Murder at the Vicarage,' she is hard to surpass. Without a doubt this is the best detective story Agatha Christie has written since 'The Murder of Roger Ackroyd.'" R. I. Center

+ Sat R of Lit 7:379 N 22 '30 160w

Times [London] Lit Sup p921 N 6 '30 250w

CHRISTIE, AGATHA (MILLER) (MRS MAX E. L. MALLOWAN). Mysterious Mr. Quin. 290p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Collins]

30-11715

A series of clever mystery stories, many of which take place in England or on the Continent. The mysteries are solved by that strange couple, Mr Harley Quin and Mr Satterthwaite.

Booklist 26:399 Jl '30

Bookm 71:xvii Jl '30 80w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p14 My 11 '30 150w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 2 '30 300w

"The book offers a rare treat for the discriminating reader."

+ N Y Times p25 My 1 '30 180w

Reviewed by G. E. G. Catlin

N Y World p7m Jl 20 '30 120w

"Mr. Quin adds a fantastic touch to these ingenious stories, which are, however, complete without him." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 155:27 My 7 '30 80w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:50 Je '30

"The book will give you many problems to solve and a chuckle over Mrs. Christie's entertaining and subtle humor." R. I. Center

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1077 My 24 '30 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p461 My 29 '30 70w

CHRISTIE, ARCHIBALD H. Traditional methods of pattern designing; an introd. to the study of formal ornament. 2d ed 313p il $3.50 (10s) Oxford

745 Design, Decorative [30-26399]

"In this second edition—practically a new book, so considerably has it been rewritten—a change in the subtitle defines more precisely the scope of the work. Some redundant illustrations have been suppressed, and some new ones added. With few exceptions, mostly diagrammatic in nature, the examples reproduce historic designs."—Pref.

Booklist 26:322 My '30

"It is good to see a revised edition of this excellent and widely authoritative work appear here in America. Both for students and all craft workers in design it fulfills a very useful purpose. As background to professional work in the graphic arts it appears to be well-nigh indispensable. The illustrations are many and of good character. The drawings by the author explain in great detail the many ramifications of design in all the ages."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 12 '30 180w

CHRISTY, FRANCIS TAGGART. Transfer of stock. 1071p $15 Baker, Voorhis

332.63 Stock transfer 29-30418

"Mr. Christy's own wide experience in the field of stock transfers led him to compile a handy manual of the material needed by transfer agents, corporations, and lawyers who must deal with stock transfer problems. The work does not purport to analyze theory to any considerable extent; instead it collects the authorities on creation of stock, issuance of certificates, formal requisites, transfers on the books, the right to transfer stock, and the rules governing such transfer and its assignment. An interesting chapter is that on 'The Transferee,' which indicates the settled rules covering the duties of a corporation or its transfer agent where the transferee of stock is of such a nature as to raise some question. The remaining two-thirds of the volume include not merely the general case rules, but also an extremely useful compilation of the relevant statutes, inheritance and other tax rulings, and regulations of the federal government and the various states."—Columbia Law R

Reviewed by A. A. Berle, Jr.

Columbia Law R 30:1079 N '30 480w

"To transfer agents, corporate trust departments, and their legal advisers the book will be of great practical value, enhanced by its clear, straightforward style, an abundance of analysis, an adequate and satisfactory reference system, and voluminous appendices. While it is not a scholarly development of the law of stock transfers nor a general treatise on the whole subject, it is admirably adapted to accomplish the hopes of its author, that the transfer of stock may be made easier and more widely understood." W. C. Waring, Jr.

+ Harvard Law R 43:680 F '30 480w

"It is indeed amazing that the volume under review is the first comprehensive treatise on transfers of shares to have been published in the forty-five years following President Lowell's work on the subject. The need for such a book is great, for there is perhaps no

CHRISTY, F. T.—Continued
corporate activity which involves so much risk and so little advantage to a corporation as the recordation of transfers of its shares. Mr. Christy has filled this need admirably: his work is a clear, complete and unique exposition of the mechanics of such transfers and of the approved procedure of stock transfer agents as well as a presentation of the multitudinous legal problems involved therein. If the volume has any major weakness it is to be found in its treatment of the legal rather than the 'practical' aspects of the subject." A. H. Frey
+ — Yale Law J 39:1227 Je '30 950w

CHUBB, THOMAS CALDECOT. Life of Giovanni Boccaccio. 354p $3 Boni
B or 92 Boccaccio, Giovanni

"A biography of Giovanni Boccaccio, the great precursor of the Italian Renaissance. . . Boccaccio, the illegitimate son of an upstart financier from the rustic environs of Certaldo, stubbornly resisted his father's efforts to turn him into a banker. He became instead a gay Neapolitan blade. The downfall of his father's fortunes exiled Giovanni from the roistering life which he loved, and precipitated him into the competition for public office. He gravitated from one noble protector to another, fighting poverty, disappointment and disease, until the years turned him from the laughing and pornographic romancer into a moral philosopher, from a gay sceptic into a sage."—Bookm

---

"Much of the interest of Boccaccio's all too slender story is due to the quality of Mr. Chubb's style, which, if far from faultless according to conventional standards, has nevertheless a swift and vigorous and highly individual character." Margaret Wallace
+ — Bookm 71:221 Ap '30 350w

"Mr. Chubb has read Boccaccio's books, which is an achievement, even for the Decameron. He has traversed a large bibliography, warily, interestedly, and with notable intuition and skill of discernment. Here, for once in a dozen times, is a book of history, written as it were on assignment, which one can read without encountering on every page an error of fact or of comprehension that destroys the comfort of a reader self-conscious historically. Mr. Chubb has thought of his book, also, as a work of literary art." Arthur Livingston
+ Books p9 Ap 13 '30 500w

"Thomas Caldecot Chubb, with all the good intention in the world, has attempted a life of the illustrious Florentine. We must set the effort down as just another book to be added to the long, long shelf of biographical material which has flooded the market in the past few years." S. H.
— Boston Transcript p1 My 3 '30 500w

"In spite of his efforts to eke out a chronicle by supplementing scant facts with reasonable hypotheses, he seldom succeeds in endowing his protagonist with the degree of personality that is necessary to successful biography. On the other hand, his able analyses of Boccaccio's numerous writings and his picture of the turbulent industrial civilization of the Florence of Boccaccio's day reveal an exceptional knowledge and appreciation of his subject." Ramon Guthrie
+ — New Repub 63:378 Ag 13 '30 420w
New Statesman 36:120 N 1 '30 480w

"Mr. Chubb's research is admirable; his presentation is admirable; he has perhaps come as near to a full-length portrait of Boccaccio as is humanly possible, but far short of what we are led to hope for. By the nature of his material he was foreordained to fail to write the biography he promises in his introduction. Withal, he has failed with distinction." Raymond Weaver
+ — N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 12 '30 900w

"It will take its place, undoubtedly, as the best account of the author of the 'Decameron' available to present-day readers. In content, and as an interpretation, to be sure, it adds little, if anything, to Edward Hutton's study, written some twenty years ago, but nobody reads Hutton's book any more, and here is a more entertaining work, sound in its scholarship, sincerely and freshly written." H. L. Matthews
+ N Y Times p6 Ap 13 '30 1350w

"Mr. Chubb has, I think, planned his book excellently and treated his character sympathetically and well, especially in view of the paucity of materials. The book has, however, one surprising defect. The style is irregular and ragged and the work on the whole is not easy to read." T. G. Bergin
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:86 Ag 30 '30 650w

CHURCHILL, WINSTON LEONARD SPENCER. Roving commission; my early life. 377p il $3.50 Scribner [21s Butterworth, T.]
B or 92 30-29271

The present volume of Winston Churchill's autobiography carries him thru his school days at Harrow and Sandhurst, military adventures in India, Egypt and the South African war and into the House of Commons as member for Oldham.

"However fascinated we may be with what Churchill did, the impression cannot be avoided that he was a singularly pushing and cock-sure young man. But his story is told with such frankness and charm that its appeal, especially to those with any spirit of adventure, cannot be resisted." F. R. Dulles
+ Bookm 72:424 D '30 500w

" 'A Roving Commission' sparkles with interest and excitement. It is the portrait of an exceedingly—perhaps enviably—clever young officer doing just about as he pleased in a way which would be simply impossible today—and in a way which makes one wonder how the British Army of those days could possibly have hung together as a serious institution." H. C. Lodge
+ Books p4 N 23 '30 800w

Reviewed by Leonard Woolf
Nation and Ath 48:197 N 8 '30 550w

"To those who know Mr. Churchill's former books I need not say that this volume is written with extraordinary vivacity and power. Mr. Churchill may or may not be a model politician; he was certainly a model war-correspondent, and all will read him with delight." H. W. Nevinson
+ New Statesman 36:85 O 25 '30 1400w

"In this latest book of his Mr. Churchill describes excellently his years of adventure. Besides being a playboy and a politician, he is a born writer. His book, though written recently, long after his period of adventuring, nevertheless preserves the zest of youth. Winston Churchill, the mature man, has played fair with Winston Churchill, the callow youth; the Winston Churchill now living in this post-war age of disillusionment and skepticism resuscitates for himself and his reader a Winston Churchill of a day that was brighter and happier, more real and more solid." T. R. Ybarra
+ N Y Times p5 N 30 '30 1250w

"A brilliant book, with a notable style and a graphic tale to tell." C. G. Bowers
+ N Y World p3e D 7 '30 200w

"Many men have done things, many others have written about things; but few have been given the gift to write well and vividly about their own achievements." Lewis Melville
+ Sat R 150:528 O 25 '30 900w

Reviewed by J. W. T. Mason
Sat R of Lit 7:469 D 20 '30 600w

"For the task of writing autobiography Mr. Winston Churchill is wonderfully well equipped. In the first place he is an artist in letters, in the second place he is an artist in life. Words are for him the precious material of a delicate craft; days are the still more precious, because more strictly limited, material out of which to construct a fabric of romance, adventure and achievement. . . Its magnificence is mainly due to the fact that the author has enjoyed writing it as much as he enjoyed living it, and that he is able to convey his enjoyment to the reader who shares it with him to the full. Into an age of introspection, Freudian complexes, doubt and despair, Mr. Churchill comes like a great wind blowing through a little window into a musty, over-furnished room." Duff Cooper

+ Spec 145:599 O 25 '30 1100w

"Mr. Churchill's record of his youth and young manhood is his finest literary achievement. This book is as regards style—or, one may say, styles—better than anything which has gone before. Its variation and development in this matter of style are the greatest of its charms. One fancies one hears the small boy, the youth at Sandhurst, the young soldier, the slightly older politician each telling his story in his own way. Of course no gentleman cadet, still less a small boy, could write like that; that Mr. Churchill should contrive to bewitch his readers into the momentary impression that they can is proof that he has at his command the art of the autobiographer."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p851 O 23 '30 1550w

CINELLI, DELFINO. The trap; [tr. into English by the author; introd. by Carl Van Doren]. 247p $2.50 Day

30-22433

Crab, an Italian hillman, had married a pretty girl from Florence. Knowing that Crab has a very jealous nature, Stefano, a gamekeeper who bears him an ancient grudge, plans vengeance upon him thru his wife—using Paolo, a kind nobleman, as the bait for the trap he sets. The trap is sprung, and tragedy is the result.

Booklist 27:159 D '30

"A new version of a story that belongs to the best Italian traditions cannot be condemned, and this is a novelette with a rather cleverly renovated plot. The emphasis on situations is undue, almost absurd, and the story is rendered as unsuccessful as a muscle-bound lover. For the rest, there is no memorable creation of character, no sudden speech to rouse us from the repose that a vaguely familiar story induces." C. A. Pearce

— + Bookm 72:77 S '30 230w

Reviewed by Arthur Livingston

Books p6 Ag 24 '30 500w

Boston Transcript p3 N 5 '30 250w

"The setting is Italian; and the mood, the baldness of outline, the blunt formulization of character all combine to evoke an atmosphere that is more medieval than contemporary. Not enough richness of insight has been expended on the development of the few characters to enable them to rise above the essential melodrama of the pattern. Something of the mechanical stiffness of the plot has crept into the psychology of the characters until they have hardly more reality than an abstraction of the mind."

— N Y Times p6 S 21 '30 320w

"The tale is written in a style of hard, compact simplicity, with an economy of detail and a command of the single, dominating motive which are masterly, but so utterly remote and alien are the characters and their elemental emotions that the full power of the story is considerably minimized for non-Latin readers. In the opinion of this reviewer the book more nearly resembles a transcript from dark, medieval romance than a novel of this age." E. C. Beckwith

+ — N Y World p5m Ag 24 '30 300w

Reviewed by V. P. Ross

Outlook 155:666 Ag 27 '30 200w

"Though some fault may be found with the execution of the novel, none can be with the conception. Its interplay of forces, and their fury, are memorable. And even the slight meagreness of the telling may be, after all, but part of the book's secret, by which it avoids both the pathetic and the melodramatic, and attains the truly tragic." Basil Davenport

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:100 S 6 '30 800w

CIVIS ROMANUS, pseud. The pope is king. 323p il $3.50 Putnam

322 Roman question. Roman Catholic church. Concordat of 1929 29-20534

A chronicle of the events of the reconciliation between Italy and the Pope, with their remote and immediate antecedents, giving the text of the treaty and the concordat in full.

Cath World 130:636 F '30 260w

Reviewed by Walter Littlefield

N Y Times p3 N 24 '29 250w

St Louis 28:65 Mr '30

Sat R 148:192 Ag 17 '29 270w

"The reconciliation between Italy and the Papacy is one of the great events of our time—as memorable as it was unexpected. How it came about and what it implies are clearly explained in an excellent book, The Pope is King, by an unnamed Italian writing in good English."

+ Spec 143:229 Ag 17 '29 180w

"Civis Romanus provides a brief biography of the present Pope, and gives exceedingly interesting details about the long-drawn negotiations which began in August, 1926, between Professor Barone and Professor Pacelli, and ended with the signature of the Treaty of the Lateran on February 11 of this year."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p563 Jl 11 '29 480w

CLARK, AUSTIN HOBART. New evolution;
2 zoogenesis. 297p il $3 Williams & Wilkins [2s Bailliere]

575 Evolution 30-13344

"An original interpretation of the evolutionary process is offered in this book, and the author has ventured on it as the result of his study of living forms in many parts of the world for the past quarter of a century. At the outset, and as the basis of his theory, he rejects the notion that organisms as a whole gave rise to the forms of them which we know today, holding that 'all the major groups of animals at the very first held just about the same relation to each other as they do now.' In other words, 'we may assume without the possibility of successful contradiction that all of the major groups of animals were formed at the same time as the result of following different developmental paths from the primitive cell.'"—Boston Transcript

"No special field of biology has a monopoly on knowledge of evolution, and as Dr Clark's contributions have been in many corners of the biological world he cannot be charged with being a narrow specialist. From this broad touch he has brought a multitude of facts portrayed in such manner as to be easily understood by the average reader. . . Although this book is crowded with interesting facts, we suggest, for the lay reader, that it be preceded by some book written more from the standpoint of an introduction to the subject of evolution in its various forms." C. F. Adams.

+ — Am J Pub Health 20:1262 N '30 600w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 9 '30 450w

"For general reading, the book is of great value as an introduction to modern biology. The first sixteen chapters especially present in a most admirable way the modern conceptions of the general features of animal life, written from the functional and ecological viewpoint characteristic of the present. In this respect, although the two are very different, it deserves mention along with Haldane and Huxley's Animal Biology. The only caution necessary for the general reader is that the view as to the detailed course of evolution is not that which most biologists hold. In summary, the book is clear, well written, and very readable." W. C. Woods

+ — Living Church 83:703 S 20 '30 1150w

"Dr. Clark has done a striking thing. He has brought forward what certainly seems, at first glance, a novel theory, but he has written it for the general public. The general public, obviously,

CLARK, A. H.—Continued
cannot make up its mind about so profound a thing as a new theory about evolution from the reading of a single book, even though that book is written in an easy and understandable style. . . But it can be said definitely, without waiting for a final verdict, that Dr. Clark is a well-informed and highly entertaining writer. He even has a skill which carries him past some highly controversial corners so smoothly that the reader hardly notices that the argument is running with some of its wheels off the ground. He is, moreover, a biologist of standing, who has been a member of the staff of the Smithsonian Institution in Washington since 1908." R. L. Duffus
+ — N Y Times p4 Ag 17 '30 900w
St Louis 28:210 S '30

"This book interested the reviewer more as a study in human psychology than as a contribution to evolution. It abounds in statements that to the layman will seem to be statements of fact, but which are nothing more than beliefs on the part of the author. There is a rather pedantic display of miscellaneous information about all sorts of animals that bears no more relation to the thesis than do the rather numerous and uniformly poor illustrations. As a tour de force of unrelated bits of natural history it is impressive, but it calls to mind the old wisecrack about 'information outrunning intelligence.' " E. H. Berry
— Sat R of Lit 7:52 Ag 16 '30 2250w

CLARK, BARRETT HARPER. Hour of American drama. (One hour ser.) 159p $1 (4s 6d) Lippincott

812.09 American drama—History and criticism 30-10045

This essay in the One hour series, by a critic of drama and an authority on plays and playwrights, takes up the development of American drama during the past ten years. The author discusses the prominent American playwrights and criticises their most significant plays.

"It is something of a first-hand account of the coming-of-age of drama in America, beginning with the origin of the Little Theatre Movement, which not only created the Provincetown group in the East but became a national phenomenon. It is first-hand because Mr. Clark has in one way or another been a participant. . . Some of Mr. Clark's comments are critical; other passages are purely journalistic. He writes with a mind of his own, but is inclined to allot equal independence to those who here become subjects of analysis."
+ Bookm 71:xlii Ap '30 220w

"Provocative, like all of Mr. Clark's writings on the drama; and like them, too, it is provoking. American drama of the present owes nothing to the drama of the past, he declares. It has its roots in current life. In the first place, he means by present drama only the work of O'Neill, Paul Green, Lynn Riggs and a few more whose work he approves. And in the second place, he cannot prove his statement, even of them." W. P. Eaton
— + Books p16 Ap 27 '30 200w
Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p8m My 31 '30 150w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:78 N '30

CLARK, BARRETT HARPER, and NICHOLSON, KENYON, eds. American scene. 694p il $5 (21s) Appleton

812.08 American drama—Collections 30-22977

The plays in this collection have been selected to represent the American scene dramatically and as a unified whole—the country and the people from New England to California, from Canada to Mexico. Contents: Greasy luck, by Rachel Field; Bound East for Cardiff, by Eugene O'Neill; Chuck, by Percy MacKaye; The quarry, by J. A. Clark; Blood o' kings, by Jane Dransfield; The last straw, by Bosworth Crocker; Money, by Michael Gold; No cause for complaint, by G. S. Brooks; Wanderlust, by Paul Halvey; The girl in the coffin, by Theodore Dreiser; Town, by Marie Baumer; The no 'count boy, by Paul Green; 'Lijah, by E. V. Smith; The tie that binds, by O. F. Cornelius; Bumblepuppy, by J. W. Rogers; The medicine show, by Stuart Walker; The cow with wings, by E. E. Levinger; The trysting place, by Booth Tarkington; The eldest, by Edna Ferber; The feast of the holy innocents, by S. M. Ilsley; The barbarians, by L. B. Pride; Bread, by Fred Eastman; Trifles, by Susan Glaspell; Minnie Field, by E. P. Conkle; The cajun, by A. J. Carver; Addio, by Stark Young; The resignation of Bill Snyder, by J. D. Shaver; Reckless, by Lynn Riggs; Across the border, by Colin Clements; The organ, by G. E. Pendray; Last day for grouse, by Orin Mack; The end of the trail, by E. H. Culbertson; Day's end, by Alice Pieratt; Good vintage, by Dan Totheroh.

Booklist 27:98 N '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p151 D '30
Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p12 S 20 '30 180w
St Louis 28:298 D '30
Times [London] Lit Sup p784 O 2 '30 80w

CLARK, DORA MAE. British opinion and the American revolution. (Yale hist. publications) 308p $3 Yale univ. press [13s 6d Oxford]

973.32 United States—History—Revolution—Foreign public opinion. United States—History—Revolution—Causes. Great Britain—Colonies 30-9714

Dr Clark, professor of American history and political science at Wilson college, studies the mixed motives affecting public opinion among the merchant class, gentry and radicals in Great Britain just before and during the Revolutionary war.

"This is a scholarly book with a story well told. The exposition is a little drawn out but is never tedious. The mass of evidence is convincing, but the items are rarely pursued to the point of complete satisfaction." N. S. B. Gras
+ — Am Econ R 20:713 D '30 650w

"The chapter on the Radicals has special interest, the author asserting that it would be difficult to measure the debt of that group to America or vice versa. As far as style and orderly arrangement are concerned, the author's work is admirable, as indeed it appears to be in other respects." A. C. McL.
+ Am Hist R 36:167 O '30 450w
Am Pol Sci R 24:1072 N '30 120w

"Dr. Clark has made a highly enlightening study of the motives which were dictating the opinions of the British governing classes during the blundering years which led up to the War for Independence. . . To prove her assumptions she has used an enormous amount of magazines, memoirs, letters, public material—pamphlets, newspapers, records in bewildering variety she has searched and meticulously sifted." M. E. Lombard
+ N Y Times p5 Je 8 '30 780w
St Louis 28:219 S '30

"Professor Clark has made a useful contribution to our knowledge, if she is too content to enumerate forces rather than to gauge them. Her work is not profound in the manner of Schlesinger or Namier, and the great work of the last-named does not seem to have been utilized, but this book is sound and surprisingly agreeably written."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p613 Jl 24 '30 300w
World Tomorrow 13:524 D '30 150w

CLARK, EDWARD BRAYTON. William L. Sibert, the army engineer, major general, retired; builder Gatun locks and dam, Panama canal. 206p il $2.50 Dorrance

B or 92 Sibert, William Luther 30-25483

"General Sibert graduated from West Point in 1884; like so many of his brother officers in the corps, he spent years in river and harbor work and then found new horizons opened by the Spanish War. He rebuilt the Manila & Dagupan Railroad in the wake of our army as it civilized the Filipinos, then returned to Pittsburgh to lay the foundation for the nine-foot channel in the Ohio River which Mr. Hoover has now taken into his scheme for Western river transport routes. His great work was the Gatun dam and locks at Panama; after that came the military interlude of the World War and then honors and retirement." —Books

"Colonel Clark's biography is as simple and unassuming as the subject and perhaps hardly does justice to him, but through its pages one catches a pleasant glimpse of a useful life."
+ Books p18 O 5 '30 350w

Boston Transcript p3 S 27 '30 750w

"General Sibert's high achievements as an army engineer have ranked him among the greatest engineers of the time and Colonel Clark here tells the story of them and of his life in interesting style. Of the many important works that have filled General Sibert's life, as well as of its more intimate side, his character and the reputation he has won, Colonel Clark writes with authority, marshaling his material in logical order and presenting it with skill and enthusiasm."
+ N Y Times p32 N 9 '30 200w

CLARK, GEORGE NORMAN. Seventeenth century. 384p $5 (15s) Oxford

940.22 Europe—Civilization. Seventeenth century [30-8941]

The author gives a summary account of western civilization in the seventeenth century, not only in its political and economic aspects, but also in relation to the history of thought and the arts. Each chapter may be read by itself, but the whole forms a connected survey. Contents: Population; Economic policy and ideas; Commerce, finance, and communications; Industries; Comparative constitutional history; Armies; Navies; International law and diplomacy; Frontiers; Interests of the states; Relations of Asia by land; Colonies; Political thought; Mathematics and science; Philosophy; Classical and historical studies; Education; Religion; Literature; Painting and architecture; Races and languages.

Reviewed by Violet Barbour
Am Hist R 35:848 Jl '30 750w

"Throughout the book there seems to be a certain lack of appreciation of the tremendous pioneer work accomplished by the highly developed city states in all matters pertaining to the technique of statecraft. This leads the author into erroneous assertions. . . But, on the whole, the book shows penetrating insight. It is a pleasing feature that the author succeeds well in giving a view of the European development in its entirety. There is no overemphasis of any one country. By and large, his value judgments are well-founded and express the prevailing opinion of those best informed." C. J. F.
+ — Am Pol Sci R 24:791 Ag '30 600w

"An excellent general survey. Like all such surveys, it will be called plethoric and confusing by the uninitiated, and superficial by the specialists; but as an introduction it is extremely valuable."
+ Books p19 My 11 '30 150w

"Only the most erudite and self-sufficient student of the seventeenth century could fail to profit by this book. High seriousness and wide outlook, obvious but never obtrusive learning, stern rejection of the unproved, and clear and pithy prose, all these make every page a contribution." W. F. Reddaway
+ Eng Hist R 45:311 Ap '30 700w

"Perhaps the best way to define Mr. Clark's achievement is to say that the time in his book is constant—that whether he is writing about Economic Policy and Ideas, or Frontiers, or Literature, or Armies, he is also writing about the seventeenth century. We gain from each separate essay an idea of the contemporary world, until we finish by understanding that these kings, soldiers, priests, poets, and diplomats really were living in the same period, and know what the collection of circumstances and ideas was which bound them all more closely together than they can be bound, soldiers with soldiers, poets with poets, of other ages. We have, in fact, acquired a clearer conception of that vague ghost, the spirit of a past age."
+ Nation and Ath 46:463 D 28 '29 550w

"Mutilated quotations do scant justice to this masterly and delightful book. It is the work of a scholar of sound judgment, wide sympathies and solid learning, and it is also a piece of literature." K. B.
+ New Statesman 34:418 Ja 4 '30 1250w

N Y Evening Post p7s Mr 1 '30 180w

Sat R of Lit 6:1077 My 24 '30 230w

"Mr. Clark is not merely a learned historian; he has an alert mind and brings out the true significance of the facts. His comparisons between the several nations—as, for example, England, Holland, and France in respect of finance, commerce and colonies—are most illuminating and valuable."
+ Spec 144:63 Ja 11 '30 320w

"One of the merits of this remarkable little book is that it is more like a map than a portrait. Like a really good map, it at once satisfies and tantalizes, spreads out before one the lie of the land and gives one a desire for exploration. Unlike a portrait, it does not impose an individual interpretation of its subject. . . Mr. Clark does not waste words; breathlessness is not a condition of his speed and he can dive without splashing. He has made up his mind what is important, and has been at some pains to bring together and arrange neatly what he wants to introduce as significant."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p21 Ja 9 '30 1650w

CLARK, HENRY W. History of Alaska. 208p il $2.50 (10s 6d) Macmillan

979.8 Alaska—History 30-9232

The author's chief purpose in writing this history is to correct the fallacies that for the past few decades have grown up concerning the climate and resources of Alaska. Mr Clark, who was born in Alaska and has been a resident there for several years, speaks with authority and with a balanced viewpoint on the natural features of his country, besides showing its development from the time of discovery and exploration to the present.

"The author is forced to limit his treatment to that of a brief sketch in general terms. . . An impression of inexactitude can scarcely be avoided under such a handicap of brevity. Its recurrence in the volume under consideration is not infrequent." J. P. Nichols
Am Hist R 35:929 Jl '30 500w

"It is suggestive rather than exhaustive, but shows the result of much careful search, especially in material covering this century and the last decade of the nineteenth. A survey of present economic conditions is also given, but the features most useful to political scientists are Alaska and its frequent appearance in international affairs, and the account of its territorial government. The fact that Mr. Clark came from Alaska gives an added weight to his opinions and lends interest to his work."
+ Am Pol Sci R 24:782 Ag '30 180w

Booklist 26:351 Je '30

Boston Transcript p2 My 24 '30 300w

CLARK, H. W.—Continued

"This book does not measure up to the author's claim that it 'is a history of Alaska and not an attempt at the history.' Were it not for the errors that mar many pages, it might, possibly, pass muster as a guide book. It lacks perspective, completeness, accuracy, and impartiality. No effort has been made towards accuracy, either in names or dates. The story of the Alaskan purchase and the charges of bribery in connection therewith is well told The volume is well printed and contains some twenty fine illustrations and six maps. There is also a good working index." F. W. Howay

— + Canadian Hist R 11:354 D '30 950w

"Mr. Clark's book covers authoritatively, but necessarily not in detail, the political, economic and social history of Alaska and describes its present condition in all these respects in judicial temper. It is packed full of information upon all phases of its theme."

+ N Y Times p23 Ap 6 '30 380w

"An informative and authentic study of the geography and history of the territory, written in easy, readable fashion."

+ Outlook 154:545 Ap 2 '30 40w

Pratt p35 summer '30

Springf'd Republican p6 S 2 '30 600w

Times [London] Lit Sup p737 S 18 '30 320w

CLARK, JUDITH. Arrows of desire. 337p $2.50 Minton

30-7193

Pinckney Wellford had lost a leg in the Argonne, and therefore thought he ought not to marry Barrie Chamberlain. Barrie, who was very much in love with Pinckney, thought differently. When Pinckney deliberately set out to wound Barrie, he succeeded rather well; but the years did not change Barrie's love for him, and her persistence conquered.

Books p14 Ap 20 '30 180w

Boston Transcript p2 My 7 '30 280w

"All in all, 'Arrows of Desire' illustrates the difficulty of building a novel around a single situation, and by the time the reader is through he is inclined to sympathize with Pinckney's efforts to escape matrimony with Barrie Chamberlain. As a novel of Washington, it is a distinct failure, for it conveys little or nothing of the 'feel' of a political city."

— N Y Times p8 Mr 2 '30 420w

"Aside from this one-dimensional portrait of the female in pursuit of the American male the book holds little interest. The whole is characterized by a humorless sweetness which disarms the critic of what is, presumably, in large part a 'human document.' "

— Sat R of Lit 6:904 Ap 5 '30 200w

CLARK, MABEL MARGARET (COWIE) (MRS DORAN CLARK) (LESLEY STORM, pseud.). They loved too young (Eng title: Small rain). 353p $2 Harper [7s 6d Cassell]

30-9731

Hester Kerris was sixteen when John Dawnay came to visit his grandfather in the little Cornwall village where she lived. They fell passionately in love; but John had his future career as a doctor to think of, and believed they were too young to marry. He went away, and in a few years married Joyce, a pampered girl who made life miserable for him. Finally she eloped with another man, and John was free. Hester Kerris, true to her first and only love, had not married. And John came back to her.

" 'They Loved Too Young' filters its emotions, thins them, robs them, somehow, of a necessary honesty. They are too undiluted and too purely bookish. Yet the story, if you are looking for sea foam and high hearts, will beckon you away from stark, daily problems and fold a pleasant cloak of sentiment around you. It will soothe you in untroubled revery."

— + Books p13 Je 29 '30 380w

"Leslie Storm has an easy style which does not impede the reader with constructional difficulties. Her character delineation and her country scenes are excellent. The most irritating point in the book is her tendency to suggest and then supersede inference with bold description, an unconscious reflection upon the reader's intelligence."

+ — Boston Transcript p3 My 21 '30 200w

"The novel is, on the whole, a competent and entertaining piece of work. But Miss Storm is a very unequal writer. At her best, she has force and originality; at her worst, she is merely trite."

+ — Nation and Ath 46:491 Ja 4 '30 200w

"In spite of her tedious plot, Miss Storm, fortunately, has not the sugary style that usually accompanies similar novels. She writes straightforwardly and develops her characters moderately well."

+ — N Y Times p25 Je 1 '30 180w

Times [London] Lit Sup p14 Ja 2 '30 220w

CLARK, THOMAS CURTIS, comp. Poems of justice. 306p $2.50 Willett

821.08 English poetry—Collections. Justice—Poetry. Labor and laboring classes—Poetry

29-24872

"Taking as a framework four categories, 'The Panorama of the Poor,' 'The March of Revolt,' 'Brothers All,' and 'Dreams and Goals,' the compiler arranges his material in a crescendo of aspiration, mingling both contemporary and older poets to show that the passion for justice is no ephemeral mood but an undying desire. The old standbys are here—Blake, the Brownings, W. C. Bryant, Burns, Arthur Hugh Clough, Cowper, John Davidson, George Eliot, Emerson, Euripides, the Bible, Plato, Goldsmith, Thomas Hood, W. D. Howells, Victor Hugo, Lanier, J. R. Lowell, William Morris, Shelley, Swinburne, Tennyson, Tolstoy, Wagner, Whitman—and in addition present-day prophets crying in the wilderness, such as Sandburg, Lindsay, Angela Morgan, Lola Ridge, Margaret Widdemer, Edwin Markham, Langston Hughes, Countee Cullen, James Oppenheim, George Sterling."—Springf'd Republican

Booklist 26:229 Mr '30

"Here are three hundred pages of some of the most passionate and moving poetry of our time, selected by a genuine poet, a man at once sensitive to lyrical beauty and the social passion and vision of Christian faith. The book is a necessity if for no other reason than that it brings together poems which simply cannot be found readily any place else." H. E. Luccock

+ Christian Century 46:1578 D 18 '29 700w

"Thomas Curtis Clark has neglected neither the poets of the present nor those of the past in compiling 'Poems of Justice.' It is for its purposes as good a piece of editing as one could ask for. But one cannot also say that, judged purely as poetry, its contents are on an unusually high level. Occasionally the passion for social justice has flamed into a perfectly conceived poem, but more often such a passion produces mere eloquence."

+ — N Y World p10m Ja 19 '30 60w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:26 Mr '30

Springf'd Republican p7e D 29 '29 220w

Reviewed by Paul Hutchinson

Survey 64:239 Je 1 '30 380w

Wis Lib Bul 25:409 D '29

Reviewed by Jeannette Marks

World Tomorrow 13:183 Ap '30 350w

CLARK, VICTOR SELDEN, and others. Porto Rico and its problems. (Inst. of economics. Publications) 707p il $5 Brookings [21s Williams & Norgate]

330.9729 Porto Rico—Economic conditions. Porto Rico—Social conditions. Finance—Porto Rico

30-14519

"This volume is a result of a study indorsed by the Social Science Research Council and, on their recommendation, undertaken and financed by the Brookings Institution. Mr. Clark, the director of the study, was formerly commissioner of education in Porto Rico. Chief among the topics considered are rural and town workers, public health, education, government, public expenditure and revenue, taxation, public personnel administration, banking, external trade and financial relations, commercial organization, manufactures, agriculture, and economic betterment. A history of the Porto Rican peasant is given in the Appendix."—Am J Soc

Am J Soc 36:342 S '30 150w

Reviewed by Ralston Hayden
Am Pol Sci R 24:1040 N '30 650w

"The book is of value perhaps mainly because it represents something never before undertaken in quite this form. More limited surveys have been made of small areas, and conclusions and recommendations have been based upon them; but there has probably not been previously any such complete and thorough investigation of all of the economic and other social conditions of a country as a whole. Even though the book is a compilation of facts and despite some lack of unity in its organization, it cannot be looked upon as a mere compendium or handbook, since it is written with a sympathetic familiarity with the life of this little country, and since it involves both a critical and an appraising analysis and a large number of incisive recommendations for the solution of the problems which brought about the investigation." John Donaldson
+ — Ann Am Acad 152:414 N '30 700w
Booklist 27:50 O '30
Boston Transcript p2 Je 18 '30 800w

"This report is fundamentally defective because of its failure to see the political and social problems of Porto Rico in all of their ramifications—as a unified whole. The Brookings commission included an imposing array of experts—authorities on agriculture, commercial organization, fiscal administration, credit and banking facilities. But, judging by the report, it contained no members who understood the general problem of colonial government or who had any very deep understanding of (not to mention sympathy for) the aspiration of the Porto Rican people." R. L. Buell
— New Repub 63:185 Jl 2 '30 750w

"So long as the Brookings investigators confine themselves to being sociologists and statisticians their work is comprehensive, their presentation of facts as close to the truth as is humanly possible. When they attempt to be statesmen, when they undertake to make deductions from the observed facts, and when they venture to make recommendations based on their deductions, the results are so questionable, so transparently inept, that it would be the gravest pity if the men who in the United States are responsible for the shaping of a Porto Rican policy should in the pressure of more intimate concerns be induced to accept at face value the conclusions of this scientifically distinguished but politically shortsighted group of men." L. M. Marin
— + N Y Times p18 S 28 '30 1050w

Reviewed by Paul Monroe
Pol Sci Q 45:621 D '30 950w

"The findings of this survey by the Brookings Institution is the most thorough and complete study of Porto Rico available." Laurence Duggan
+ Survey 65:169 N 1 '30 450w
Times [London] Lit Sup p944 N 13 '30 180w

CLARKE, DONALD HENDERSON. Millie. 300p $2 Vanguard press
30-23888

"Mr. Clarke's heroine is a red-headed, pink-cheeked, green-eyed, self-willed youngster from the Berkshire Hills, who marries money, bears a daughter, leaves an unfaithful husband, takes unto herself a record breaking number of lovers, forages about on the fringe of the underworld, finally murders the Bad Bold Man who probably seduced her daughter and is at once acquitted by a weeping jury as she returns in triumph to the Main Stem and new conquests." —N Y Times

"The story is swift and true. Most of the action takes place in drinking joints around New York and in bedrooms of all descriptions. It will offend the delicate and those who prefer subtlety in the treatment of sex, but for those who like realism it is here in good measure."
Bookm 72:viii S '30 100w

"Millie Blake, with her talent for wrecking men by too many left hooks or too many tousling nights, is the wild-eyed figment of Mr. Clarke's imagination. She is a riotous dervish, twirling to the tune of tabloid morality, tabloid orgies and tabloid taste. Mr. Clarke uncorked his heroine without deliberation, without artistry. See exploded; she fizzles out."
— Books p19 S 14 '30 450w

"Mr. Clarke's book is a glib, raucous narrative which will scarcely appeal to conservative tastes. But in spite of its impossible heroine and some cheaply conceived situations, its vulgarity is honest, its conversations are accurate and its sharp delineation of an increasingly widespread sphere of disorganized activity and shadowy social lines is deft, thorough and convincing."
+ — N Y Times p7 S 21 '30 500w

"The novel is skilful and deft. Mr. Clarke used his head to good advantage, planned well, judged wisely. . . The writing is sharp, smart, and bold, always economical and imaginative. And above all, 'Millie' is splendid entertainment for adults, perfectly proper entertainment for those who have got considerably beyond Santa Claus and the stork."
+ Sat R of Lit 7:251 O 18 '30 450w

CLARKE, EDWIN LEAVITT. Art of straight thinking; a primer of scientific method for social inquiry. 470p $3 (15s) Appleton

153 Thought and thinking. Science—Methodology. Propaganda. Antipathies and prejudices 29-19202

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Reviewed by M. M. Willey
Am J Soc 35:847 Mr '30 420w

"Clarke's style is fresh and lively. Philosophy sometimes dons the cap and bells, makes wise-cracks, tells jokes, and chortles over propaganda-howlers. It must be a pleasure to think straight at Oberlin." H. D. Lasswell
+ Am Pol Sci R 24:475 My '30 330w
Cleveland Open Shelf p5 Ja '30

"Refreshing in its freedom from the customary academic methods which far too often run to rigidity and dullness."
+ Current Hist 31:232 N '29 120w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:14 F '30
Pratt p7 spring '30
St Louis 28:35 F '30

"The Art of Straight Thinking presents as does no other single book a convincing analysis of those attitudes and habits which most befuddle our thought, of those influences and 'interests' which make capital of our befuddlement, and of the methods thus far found effective in clarifying our mental processes. It is a challenging and an enlightening book." A. L. Swift, Jr.
+ Survey 63:170 N 1 '29 700w
Times [London] Lit Sup p1039 D 5 '29 70w
World Tomorrow 13:91 F '30 70w

CLARKE, ISABEL CONSTANCE. Stepsisters. 303p $2.50 Longmans [7s 6d Hutchinson]
[30-7574]

Dion acquires a stepsister upon her father's remarriage, following the death of her adored mother. Father seems to like his stepdaughter better and neglects Dion; whereupon Dion turns to religion as a compensatory measure. In the end, however, she triumphs over the ills of her environment and wins the man she loves.

CLARKE, I. C.—Continued

Books p10 O 19 '30 130w

"Even so conventional a plot might be pardoned in a psychological—or sociological—novel of a girl's emotional reactions to the situations a second marriage sometimes creates. But the story is not written with sufficient insight. In Miss Clarke's hands the framework is glaringly evident; the stick-like characters creak along their destined paths and deliver their speeches, and the style is overwhelmingly 'literary' and polysyllabic."
— N Y Times p24 O 12 '30 180w

CLAUDEL, PAUL. Book of Christopher Columbus; a lyrical drama in two parts. 57p il $5 Yale univ. press [23s Oxford]
842 Columbus, Christopher—Drama 30-8461

The English text of the opera Christoph Kolumbus, which was produced recently in Berlin. It is a lyrical interpretation of Christopher Columbus, written by the French ambassador to the United States.

"To his Book of Christopher Columbus Paul Claudel brings creative imagination and the symbolism of a significant orchestral setting." Charles Johnston
+ Atlantic Bookshelf p26 My '30 120w
Booklist 27:20 S '30
Reviewed by R. S. Josephy
Bookm 71:xvii Ag '30 150w

"Claudel's 'The Book of Christopher Columbus' is so pregnant with beauty that it has inspired the composer, Darius Milhaud, and the painter, Jean Charlot, to produce perhaps their best work. . . Charlot's color drawings illustrating 'The Book of Christopher Columbus' give a more compact and eloquent sample of a vision that had previously wandered among too abstract myths. The Claudel-Charlot association, added to the exquisite typography of the Yale University Press, have made of 'The Book of Christopher Columbus' a marvelous and unforgettable volume." Angel Flores
+ Books p7 Ag 3 '30 300w

"Paul Claudel's genius is so profoundly mystical that he touches no theme without stretching its horizons, probing its psychological implications and linking it unexpectedly—generally through suffering—with the rest of the universe. The opportunities for such treatment in the epic of Columbus are, of course, almost limitless—as they would be in that other epic of Jeanne d'Arc which so many of us have wished him to interpret. But in the present instance his treatment is intentionally fragmentary and not a little cryptic. . . None the less, this first of his works translated into English by the versatile hand of the French ambassador remains one which no book-lover and no book collector will want to miss." K. B.
+ Cath World 131:503 Jl '30 750w
Reviewed by A. C. Wilgus
Hist Outlook 21:392 D '30 200w

"If you like the other works of his Excellency Paul Claudel you will probably like 'The Book of Christopher Columbus.' To me it is a poisonous jumble of unutterable tosh. Described as a lyrical drama, it reads like a libretto in the worst tradition of Russian opera. It suggests, indeed, a scenario for as bad, pretentious and tiresome a talking picture as you ever saw and heard. The decorations, however, by Jean Charlot, are worth the price of the book. They are graphic, powerful, unlike anything of the sort I have ever seen." Lewis Sherwin
— + N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 15 '30 100w

"A spiritual lyricism is the distinguishing quality of this strangely fascinating book. On the other hand, not a few of the decorations are engagingly comic. So that there is a contrast between text and illustrations. And, finally, the work is markedly Gallic."
N Y Times p22 S 28 '30 320w
Reviewed by Granville Hicks
N Y World p5m Jl 27 '30 150w
St Louis 28:142 My '30

"Whatever else is thought of this book, nobody who buys it is likely to complain that he has not got his money's worth. He may not know what is is all about, but there are so many excuses for distraction that the hunt for sequence may easily fill many leisure hours Text, decorations, stage directions, have been handled by the printer with kaleidoscopic skill producing an ensemble that has a fair chance of becoming more famous even than the author's drama as the first genuinely original American modernistic piece of printing. Whether it was the inspiration of genius or the result of frantic despair in the attempt to interpret the drama typographically, does not greatly matter. The result has originality, effectiveness, and it is like nothing that ever happened before, in this reviewer's experience, on this side of the Atlantic." G. P. Winship
+ Sat R of Lit 7:136 S 20 '30 1700w

"The distinguished French author has created a lyrical drama that is more than a presentation of various elements in the life of the great discoverer. With an imaginative faculty at once bold and tender, M Claudel draws in vivid word pictures the outlines of a universal battle of the human spirit against disbelief and the might of natural forces. The book, carrying more than 100 clever drawings and decorations by Jean Charlot, is printed with stage directions on the margin in most delightful script."
+ Springf'd Republican p6 My 12 '30 500w
Times [London] Lit Sup p570 Jl 10 '30 300w

"It is all ingenious, inventive, richly imaginative, a tempting challenge to any ambitious, really artistic producer. However, it raises a very serious question for anyone trained in the theatre: namely, whether many of these modern expressionists do not write completely unto themselves, quite forgetful of the usual conditions of stage presentation." G. P. Baker
+ Yale R n s 19:821 summer '30 1560w

CLAUDY, CARL HARRY. Girl reporter. 295p il $2 Little 30-10085

Pat Prentiss, a millionaire's daughter, finding herself suddenly penniless, becomes a newspaper sob sister. This is the story of her experiences, perils, and scoops while serving her beloved paper, the Times-Star.

Books p15 Jl 20 '30 200w

"Thrill follows thrill in this modern Alger-book for girls, grown-up as well as adolescent. The crowning triumph of the story is the fact that instead of being snatched off in matrimony, the young and beautiful heroine keeps her job and gets a raise."
+ Boston Transcript p3 My 17 '30 320w

CLAUSEN, CARL. Gloyne murder. 266p $2 Dodd
30-10256

"A realistic mystery story in which a detective slowly eliminates all but one of the many who are suspected of murdering Doris Gloyne in her New York apartment."—Publishers' Weekly

"The method of the murderer, which is decidedly original, and the investigation of Ames make this book a worth-while addition to any fiction library."
+ Bookm 71:xxi Je '30 80w
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p20 Ap 20 '30 100w

"The story is a puzzler, and it offers a method of murder which, so far as we remember, is entirely new."
+ N Y Times p24 Je 1 '30 140w

CLAYTON, MURIEL. Print collector. (Collector's ser.) 282p il $4 Dodd [10s 6d Jenkins]

760 Engraving—History. Engravings—Collectors and collecting [30-3772]

A book for the amateur collector of prints, which discusses practically all the processes of print making in the order of their antiquity.

Booklist 26:303 My '30

"The writing of this book must have been a labor of love; the high enthusiasm of the author leaps from every page. Reading it is bound to inspire interest in the subject."
+ Bookm 72:xxii D '30 80w

Reviewed by E. A. Jewell
N Y Times p11 N 9 '30 180w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:47 Je '30

"This is an admirable little book, fresh and lively in style, not without humour, and composed with a good regard to proportion. . . A short, but careful bibliography, an excellent index, and illustrations of unusually fine quality complete the attractions of a book which may well tempt readers who have never yet bought a print to start on a career of collecting." Campbell Dodgson
+ Sat R 149:142 F 1 '30 650w

"Miss Clayton does not appear to overlook any artist of note in any branch of engraving."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p237 Mr 20 '30 1000w

CLEAR, GWENDOLINE FRANCES. Years that crown. 267p $2.50 (7s 6d) Longmans [30-20459]

The story of Alice Farnham whose gallant spirit is unspoiled by a loveless marriage and whose last years are the "years that crown." Set against a London background.

Books p40 D 7 '30 250w

"This is an exceptionally beautiful first novel. It is a study of development of character written con amore and with fine perception of hidden loveliness. Miss Clear has an exquisite and subtle style and a Chinese use of metaphors."
+ N Y Times p8 N 30 '30 450w

"One lays down Miss Gwen Clear's first novel with a sense of disappointment. Here is a subject possessing certain possibilities, one on which the writer has bestowed time and trouble; yet the result is a story marred by sentimental treatment, and whenever opportunity permits, by a pretentious and not very original semi-'poetic' style. . . Certainly there are occasions in the early part of the book which make one feel that Miss Clear is capable of better things than 'The Years that Crown.'"
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p737 S 18 '30 180w

CLELAND, HERDMAN FITZGERALD. Why be an evolutionist? 73p $1.50 Coward-McCann

575 Evolution 30-8455

The author, professor of geology in Williams College, presents in this little book a few of the proofs of evolution and also shows the consequences which must inevitably follow the rejection of this principle.

"The question which gives the book its title is ostensibly addressed to believers in God who have no faith in evolution. I am frank to say that if I were such a person I should not find the answer Mr. Cleland offers to the question, 'Why Be An Evolutionist?' either persuasive or convincing. . . You can't save the moral character of God by ascribing evolution to Him as His way of doing things. If one accepts evolution one does so without regard to how it affects the character of God; one accepts it because it is a fruitful and satisfactory instrument of analysis and interpretation of the nature and experience of man and his world." H. M. Kallen
— Current Hist 32:221 My '30 300w

"The two chief chapters of the little book make such a complete answer to the question asked by its title and present so fully and simply and interestingly the story of man's evolution that the work can be recommended cordially to any one who wants a brief, simple and easily understood statement of the facts and arguments by which it is proved."
+ N Y Times p26 Mr 16 '30 360w

St Louis 28:210 S '30

CLEM, JANE E. Technique of teaching typewriting. 363p il $2.60 Gregg

652 Typewriting 29-15461

"Undertakes to deal in a concrete and practical way with the underlying principles of typewriting instruction. It is intended as a textbook for students training to become teachers of typewriting, and for private study by teachers already in the teaching field."—Pref.

Booklist 26:265 Ap '30

St Louis 28:101 Ap '30

Reviewed by W. W. Meyer
School R 38:311 Ap '30 400w

CLEMENCEAU, GEORGES EUGENE BENJAMIN. Claude Monet; the water lilies; tr. by George Boas. 190p $3 Doubleday, Doran

B or 92 Monet, Claude 30-6836

In this monograph on his friend, the great French artist, M. Clemenceau has reflected Monet's personality as well as certain aspects of his painting. The author's own word-picture of the artist at work, and his emphasis upon Monet's love of water and water-lilies, is in a larger sense a human portrait of Clemenceau himself.

Booklist 26:347 Je '30

Bookm 71:xxiii Je '30 80w

"The book swells and bursts with gusty adulation and with eloquence that runs into bombastic repetition, but it also contains a surprising knowledge of the rather intricate methods of the Impressionists. The origins of impressionism and its significance as a historical movement escape him entirely, but his explanation of the fascinating technical instrument, despite the florid style, is more readable and more trustworthy than most of the so-called scientific analyses of the specialists." Thomas Craven
+ — Books p7 F 16 '30 750w

"Partly because of Clemenceau's tendency to high flown rhetoric, partly because of the informal arrangement of his discussion, his tribute to Claude Monet is not altogether easy reading. His enthusiasm for his subject, however, is communicated to the reader." M. L. S.
+ — Boston Transcript p7 Mr 15 '30 550w

"This book reads like poetry; it has passages of touching lyrical beauty. The writer, captivated by those curious impressions of passing states in nature depicted by Monet, was stirred to ecstacy. His pen is not that of a statesman or politician, his thought does not try to pierce the reality of a welter of plain facts; no, this time he lets fancy soar, he lets the imagination be enveloped in the sheerest web of fantasy, he exults, he sings of the joyous experience of nature he has received from pictures." D. A.
+ Christian Science Monitor p5 Jl 19 '30 200w

Nation 130:577 My 14 '30 180w

"It must be said at the outset that those who are looking for new biographical material on the founder of Impressionism are going to be disappointed. . . That is not to say that the book is a wasted effort—far from it. It is only that one has to admit, in setting it down, that a portrait emerges not so much of Claude Monet, as of Georges Clemenceau. The old Tiger storms through its pages, chip on shoulder, aggressive, vituperative, unrestrained. . . It is a splendid tribute of friendship, and

CLEMENCEAU, G. E. B.—Continued
looked upon as such, and for its revelation of the character of Clemenceau himself, it is a valuable document." H. L. Matthews
+ — N Y Times p5 Mr 23 '30 900w

"The doughty old Tiger has here given his own interpretation of that genius in a rhapsodic prose that is sometimes difficult to follow, but which leaves no doubt as to the writer's passionate fervor." Pierre Loving
+ N Y World p10m Mr 9 '30 450w

St Louis 28:147 My '30

Sat R of Lit 6:1075 My 24 '30 500w

CLEMENCEAU, GEORGES EUGENE BENJAMIN. Grandeur and misery of victory; [tr. from the French by F. M. Atkinson]. 432p il $5 Harcourt [21s Harrap]

940.3 European war, 1914-1918. Versailles, Treaty of, 1919. Foch, Ferdinand 30-10802

Clemenceau's work, completed but a few hours before his death, contains the uncompromising opinions of a powerful personality upon certain phases of the War and some of its leaders. The first part of the book contains Clemenceau's controversy with Foch and his charge of insubordination against the general; the second part treats of the Peace conference; and the third part with the breaking down of the Treaty of Versailles, in which the French premier blames Woodrow Wilson, as well as other national leaders, for not accepting the treaty intact as, he, Clemenceau, approved it. The book concludes with a discussion of the future of France and of America, and world politics in general.

"A mere war of words between a chief of state and chief of an army over matters now fast fading into the emotional nullity of history might hold little interest for any but a specialist, but Clemenceau's book is far more than a mere self-justifying pamphlet. . . If the tone of the book is at times bitter, praise as well as blame is distributed with an even hand, even to Foch, the unexpected enemy whose attack called it into being. Apart from the brilliant qualities of his mind and style, the joy of Clemenceau was that he was a clear-sighted realist who was never deceived by high-sounding phrases or befogged by sentiment. In this age of sentimental slush, when so-called statesmen pander to the mob as shamelessly as movie kings, it is well to read a man who would pander to nothing." J. T. Adams
+ Atlantic Bookshelf p18 My '30 1050w

Booklist 26:351 Je '30

"The Clemenceau of 1918, the Clemenceau of 1870, live again in these tense, fiery pages. Beyond Foch, he attacks Poincaré, Caillaux, Briand, Germany, England, America: Clemenceau contra mundum. It is war, but it is magnificent. . . The book is intensely alive, very brilliant in parts. The portraits of the peace delegates are etched by a master." Albert Guerard
+ Books p1 Ap 13 '30 2200w

Reviewed by Edmund Noble
Boston Transcript p4 Ap 12 '30 1000w

"To the American reader the book will be a disappointment. We expected something of the grandeur and the misery which its title implied. The disappointment of finding it, in essence, a weapon of self-justification rather than a flaming sword of the noble patriotism of its author who was preëminently during his long life devoted passionately to his country, makes the reader feel that the tiger has taken on the form of a creature neither master of the forest nor of himself." Fanny Butcher
— + Chicago Daily Tribune p13 Ap 12 '30 1000w

"I began to read with prejudice, and, as attack after attack on Foch was thrust home, my prejudices increased. The spectacle was lamentable; and, though Foch began it, Clemenceau might have ignored it. Yet, when I put the book down, I realized that once more Clemenceau had shown his greatness. He had not spared Foch, but he had, in the end, risen above these personalities, and he had adopted a more philosophical tone. I cannot help but think that, had he had the time to revise his book, he would have eliminated many of the personalities, and have discussed events and not men. There are many things which shock, but there are many things which soar far above these petty revelations of human foibles." Sisley Huddleston
+ — Christian Science Monitor p8 My 3 '30 1200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p102 Jl '30

Reviewed by Francis Snow
Current Hist 32:212 My '30 350w

"The book may not enhance his reputation, but it is a true reflection of the man, with all his greatness and all his narrow bigotry. He may not have been a good subject for hero worship, but he was a personality."
Foreign Affairs 8:673 Jl '30 200w

"Clemenceau's last book reveals the soul of the Tiger of France, but it adds nothing to his stature. It is a prolonged snarl of hate—hate of Foch, of Poincaré, of Haig, of Pershing, of the Germans, of Briand and the League of Nations. There is in it surprisingly little hate of President Wilson, and just one admiration —for Clemenceau himself. . . One turns the last page of this sometimes eloquent, often pungent, almost always petty book with a sense of relief that France so soon relieved Europe of the incubus of such a man of hate." L. S. Gannett
— Nation 130:494 Ap 23 '30 750w

"It is a dreary book, and if one were not so accustomed to the littleness and stupidity of great men, it would be surprising. Something should, perhaps, be attributed to old age which sometimes gives a man new wisdom, but more often increases his natural stupidity, for it is hardly possible to believe that even a great statesman could always have been as stupid as Clemenceau shows himself in this book." Leonard Woolf
— Nation and Ath 47:85 Ap 19 '30 1050w

Reviewed by Régis Michaud
New Repub 63:130 Je 18 '30 250w

"Though the circumstances of the publication of this book are regrettable, it may be said at once that the record of the history of the war and post-war years would be infinitely the poorer without it. Poorer, too, would be our recollection of the personality of Georges Clemenceau. In its own way, given the character of the man, the gesture is fitting. Here, writing against death, looking up from his manuscript to the sea of Vendée beyond his rose-trees as he pens his last and most controversial political testament, we have the complete Clemenceau—the old but indomitable 'Tiger,' making his last spring."
New Statesmen 35:51 Ap 19 '30 950w

"One rises from a first reading with a sense of distinct disappointment at a great opportunity missed. Of all that Clemenceau might have told if he had wished, he has actually told so little. Of the 400-odd pages at his disposal he has wasted most in recriminations, chiefly against Marshal Foch." John Bakeless
— N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 12 '30 1050w

Reviewed by T. R. Ybarra
N Y Times p1 Ap 13 '30 2000w

"A valiant piece of polemical writing, done by an expert journalist, who fought every political opponent to a standstill by sheer forcefulness, who, to a very great extent, actually forced the French to win the war. This book is a text book of practical nationalism, and as such it will be condemned and exalted, according to the bias of the reader." Harry Hansen
N Y World p9 Ap 11 '30 1050w

"The style of the book is superb, sparkling, self-contained, a pleasure to read and a stupidity to have written. A great journalist, who was for a short time a great statesman, turns journalist again in his last moments, wicked, witty, crushing, a miracle of malice." John Carter
Outlook 154:669 Ap 23 '30 230w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:51 Je '30

"The feeling produced by this book is one of mingled weariness and disgust. Weariness at the succession of mole-hills that during the course of it are magnified into mountains, and disgust with the littleness of mind so often displayed in their dealings with one another by the two men who won the war. Clemenceau and Foch will ever be associated in the public mind as the joint organizers of victory, and it is a thousand pities that they should have thought fit to wash their dirty linen in public before they died, more particularly when no useful purpose whatever is served by so doing. This book contributes nothing to our knowledge of the events with which it deals, however much fuel it may add to the fire of contemporary French politics." Charles Petrie

— Sat R 149:491 Ap 19 '30 600w

"More important historically than the single flashes Clemenceau throws upon the personalities and events, is the steady light illuminating the political position of France as understood by Frenchmen and consistently misunderstood by foreigners whether friends or enemies. The book, however, stands as a grand document, revealing perfectly the soul of the man and of the France he represents." Charles Seymour

+ Sat R of Lit 6:939 Ap 19 '30 1650w

"Curious and stimulating book."

Spec 144:672 Ap 19 '30 850w

Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 20 '30 2550w

Times [London] Lit Sup p328 Ap 17 '30 1000w

World Tomorrow 13:379 S '30 50w

Reviewed by S. B. Fay

Yale R n s 19:819 summer '30 750w

CLEUGH, DENNIS. Wanderer's End; the Odyssey of Don Paradise; with a foreword by Christopher Morley. 411p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Murray, J.]

30-9727

Wanderer's End was a tiny township on the outer fringes of London. Here at the end of every caravan season the Pollens of Pollen's popular players rested from their labors of keeping "the flag of Shakespeare flying in places where the Swan of Avon would not otherwise float." One night during a blizzard a nameless young man collapsed at their gate. The plot is concerned with the success of the lovable Pollens in making their guest once more into a useful member of society.

Booklist 26:396 Jl '30

"It is skilful stage direction, no more; but it is such stage direction as Mr. Cleugh's models, the great Victorians, employed. And unreal and a trifle absurd as the whole of it is, it is excellent story telling." Guy Holt

+ Bookm 71:350 Je '30 180w

Boston Transcript p8 Mr 22 '30 800w

Cleveland Open Shelf p112 Jl '30

"Here is a book of real charm, a thing of laughter and sympathy and tears. Not flawless by any means; containing moments when the author allows whimsicality too free a rein, other moments when his very affection for his characters betrays him; but so unpretentious, so generally delightful, that one regards its weaknesses as one does the little flaws in the character of a dear friend which only serve to make that friend more lovable. . . Dennis Cleugh left behind him only this one novel; but it is a novel worth a whole shelf full of the ordinary run of fiction."

+ N Y Times p6 Mr 16 '30 800w

"This is real writing, a story to remember with affection. The author trouped up and down England in just such a company and his pictures are etched with a loving understanding of the foibles and virtues of the troupers." O. M. Fuller

+ N Y World p11m F 23 '30 400w

"A disarming air of pleasant Bohemianism characterizes this posthumous novel. Mr. Cleugh writes with gusto and with a large-hearted human sympathy of the eccentricities found in the household of Mr. and Mrs. Pollen, old-line strolling actors. The virtues of the novel are its charming local color and its warm tolerance for eccentric humanity."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:848 Mr 22 '30 280w

CLEUGH, SOPHIA (MRS DENNIS CLEUGH). Song-bird. 302p $2.50 Houghton [7s 6d Hodder]

30-8788

Nina, a Spanish circus waif, and Esteban, heir to the Duque de Ventura, met, loved, were married gypsy fashion, and after the birth of their son, parted. Nina slowly found her way into opera and became one of the singers of her day. Esteban married an heiress and took his place in the diplomatic and social life for which he had been trained. Many years later, after the death of Esteban's wife, there was another meeting and a readjustment.

For biographical sketches of the author see Boston Transcript p1 Mr 22 '30; and Wilson bulletin 4:360 Ap '30

Booklist 26:356 Je '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p112 Jl '30

"A frothy, inconsequential romance, with an all-too dramatic plot, written with dexterity, sufficient humor and a nicety of expression, which make for enjoyable reading. Its weakness lies in a feebly conventional rendering of the characters, in a lack of subtlety, in too many episodes, and in the saccharine, old-fashioned sentimentality expressed by a supposedly modern group of people."

— + N Y Times p21 Mr 30 '30 330w

Outlook 155:26 My 7 '30 20w

"This novel might easily have been written in the nineteenth century and gained much applause; but today more is needed than a carefully arranged plot, in which, despite its improbability, the villain is successful in all his nefarious plans, and the heroine, after much suffering, attains miraculous happiness. [Has] a highly-colored, exaggerated style, and an over-fondness for inversion of the verb."

— + Sat R of Lit 6:880 Mr 29 '30 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p252 Mr 20 '30 300w

CLINE, ERWIN CURTIS. Your language. 256p il $1.20 (4s 6d) Appleton

401 Language and languages 30-15309

A textbook on the rise and development of language, written in a manner which makes it available for use in upper grades of the elementary school or in the junior high school.

Booklist 27:211 Ja '31

"An introductory course on the history and structure of language which is unique. . . Mr. Cline has drawn on the history of writing, the physiology of the speech organs, the history of migrations, and the psychology of thought and expression. The result of his extended use of this large body of informing material is a course which will be infinitely more useful than the ordinary course in which a pupil studies some foreign language for a year or two and acquires only a very meager knowledge of the language itself and of the civilization to which the language belongs. The book is a distinct contribution to school literature. It is attractive in its physical makeup and copiously illustrated." C. H. Judd

+ El School J 31:67 S '30 250w

"A well-conceived textbook. The child's interest in his own tongue and its probable development from a prehistoric scale of grants is aroused by the posing of introductory questions to be answered in the course of study. Throughout the eighteen chapters of the book the author never becomes too technical, although he deals with the emergence of intelligent speech from mere animal noises, the use of gesticulation, the beginning of writing and records, the formation of language families, and the changes brought about in word-meanings."

CLINE, E. C.—Continued
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p685 Ag 28 '30 250w

CLINE, LEONARD LANSON. After-walker. 105p $2 Viking press
811 30-18445

Fantasy, an eerie and delicate humor, and the haunting reminiscence of romance distinguish this posthumous volume of Leonard Cline's poetry.

"The poems range in excellence all the way from creditable magazine verse up to an almost perfect poem of mystic vision called 'Mass in the Valley' which hardly any one now living, unless it be Ralph Hodgson, could have written. Cline's strange audacious fancy, so evident in all his novels, plays like heat lightning throughout the book—always prodigal and unrestrained but always flashing out images that shine in memory. The book's positive merit is that it is alive."
+ Bookm 72:187 O '30 650w

"It seems, indeed, from this collection of verse, that Mr. Cline's imagination had never been pushed to its actual possible power, that his mind was beginning to hover over greater conceptions of life when he came to die. He might have been able to say more and to write more significant poetry had he continued living, for he was beginning to probe. His earlier poetry had been largely surface poetry; the later is much more profound." E. L. Walton
Books p5 Jl 6 '30 600w
Boston Transcript p2 Ag 9 '30 250w

"Now and then the emphasis on the universal significance of the poem is lost because lines are allowed to flow a little too easily, and sometimes too much mass for perfect structure is granted a single image. Mr. Cline could write excellent ballads, and he had always a command of rhythm. Intensity is sometimes lacking in his work, and his talent is not always directed in the best way, but that he had talent there can be no doubt." E. L. Walton
+ — Nation 131:130 Jl 30 '30 400w

"It is a strange genius that these posthumous poems adumbrate, but it is clearly genius. Vibrant as are some of them with human tenderness and sensitiveness and longing, we are listening to a singer who had a vision of unearthly beauty." Hazelton Spencer
+ New Repub 64:133 S 17 '30 220w

"This little book containing all of the known verse of Leonard Cline is to be placed with one's collection of American poetry as something not likely to be duplicated very soon. In this poet's death something significant was lost."
+ N Y Times p17 Je 22 '30 400w

"They are the record of a man quick-hearted and adoring. It is one of those books which pulse and tremble like a heart in your hands. It is living tissue, almost too terribly exposed—to adoration, quick response, and bleak despair. It is a sad pity that there will be no more poems from this man. Even so, he can be spoken of with poets."
+ Outlook 156:146 S 24 '30 150w
Poetry 37:161 D '30 380w

CLOUGH, SHEPARD BANCROFT. History of the Flemish movement in Belgium; a study in nationalism. 316p $3 Smith, R.R.
949.3 Flemish movement. Belgium—Nationality 30-18575

A study of the growth of national sentiment among the Flemish-speaking people of Belgium that led to plans for cooperation with the Germans, at the outbreak of the war, to free Flanders from Belgium.

"Throughout his work Mr. Clough traces all the lines of development that have been taken by the Flemish movement, linguistic, political, literary, economic, and continues his study of them through his clear and detailed account of the present situation. His narrative is brought as closely to date as a year ago."
+ N Y Times p18 Ag 10 '30 350w
Reviewed by John Carter
Outlook 155:631 Ag 20 '30 250w

CLYDE, LEONARD WORSWICK (PETER BARON, pseud.). Opium murders. 305p $2 Macaulay

Scotland Yard is called upon to clear up a murder mystery involving the members of an international opium ring.

"A good tale if you like your mysteries steeped in blood and cunning."
Bookm 72:xxii S '30 80w
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p13 Ag 17 '30 100w

"The connoisseur of good detective fiction will see at once that many of the best features in this type of story are used here, without much originality or departure from the familiar rules of this form of writing. Yet there is an atmosphere, a coloring, and a freshness which make the story in some ways distinctive. The story gives one a distinct sense of sinister affairs and of unlovely surroundings."
+ — Boston Transcript p3 O 18 '30 250w
Reviewed by Dashiell Hammett
N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 23 '30 40w

"The book ends surprisingly and is first-rate mystery fare all the way through." Bruce Rae
+ N Y Times p18 Ag 24 '30 180w

COAD, ORAL SUMNER, and MIMS, EDWIN. American stage. (Pageant of America) Liberty bell ed 362p il subs only Yale univ. press
792 Theater—United States. Actors and actresses 29-22306

An account of the development of dramatic art in America from the eighteenth century to the present, augmented with many illustrations of actors, theatres, cartoons and play bills.

Reviewed by M. W. Jernegan
Am Hist R 35:880 Jl '30 150w
Booklist 26:197 F '30

"Hundreds of illustrations give this volume a special value to all persons interested in the theater. Best of all, its information is presented briefly and to the point, with no element of dryness, despite the compression of facts. The result is a readable book of 362 pages, with a complete index, printed throughout on a fine quality of paper that shows off to advantage the two to five pictures that decorate every page."
+ Christian Science Monitor p11 F 21 '30 350w

"No one who opens it is likely to drop it until he has lost all count of the minutes. There is one almost inexplicable omission in a volume that comes down to 1929—not even a half page is given to the motion picture. But for the period from 1845 to 1905 the book is a mine of riches." Allan Nevins
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1011 My 3 '30 300w

COATES, ROBERT M. Outlaw years; the history of the land pirates of the Natchez trace. 307p il $3 Macaulay
976 Outlaws. Frontier and pioneer life. Crime and criminals. Southwest 30-20441

The story of some famous outlaws who operated from about 1800 to 1835 along the Natchez Trace, an overland trade route running thru Kentucky, Tennessee and Mississippi.

Among these land pirates are the terrible Harpes, homicidal maniacs and the terror of the West; Joseph Hare, a bandit who levied regularly on the Trace; and John Murrell, murderer, slave-stealer, and arch conspirator.

Booklist 27:98 N '30

Reviewed by George Dangerfield
Bookm 71:567 Ag '30 280w

"Mr. Coates writes exceedingly well. His brief summary of the time is excellently done and his short accounts of Natchez-Under-the-Hill and the red-light districts of other Southern towns are full of color and movement. And these localities and the wilderness along the old Natchez Trace are the settings for the Land Pirates . . . 'The Outlaw Years' is a real contribution to Americana and, surely, it is exciting enough to take its place immediately in the libraries of those who enjoy murder and mystery stories." Lyle Saxon
+ Books p3 Ag 3 '30 750w

"The story of Kentucky, Tennessee and the lower Mississippi valley from 1800-1835 is pictured vividly and graphically. A phase of American history seldom told is sketched true to life. Not all the story is related, but some strong, striking sketches are made. The hand that draws them and the brain that fashions them shows skill and finesse." T. C. R.
+ Boston Transcript p1 O 11 '30 500w

"Mr. Coates handles all of his explosive material with the utmost calmness and poise." Fanny Butcher
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p10 Ag 9 '30 800w

"Well told, in warm and romantic color, with a good eye for pattern and atmosphere. An occasional mannerism or a too heavy loading of atmosphere are minor flaws in a style well fitted to its subject." Holger Cahill
+ Nation 131:380 O 8 '30 500w

"If there is fine writing in the book—and there is plenty of it—it is strictly instrumental to the severe and ruthless quest of the imaginative truth back of these amazing human actions. Mr. Coates has limited his work intelligently and worked brilliantly within these limitations. He has left much to be done by himself or others. But a reading of the present volume should in itself be an excellent cure for many of our civilized naïvetés." James Rorty
+ New Repub 64:132 S 17 '30 550w

"It is possible that Mr. Coates's picture is not perfectly balanced. Carried away by the story of these strange lusts, he has forgotten the quieter side of life along the Natchez Trace and a slightly one-sided impression is produced. But, within the scope he has purposely limited, he has written a book that boils over with excitement, and he has written it with life and speed and skill. Not only is it packed with the most thrilling of tales but it is packed, too, with the meat of fine history." J. H. Preston
+ — N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 2 '30 1000w

Reviewed by John Chamberlain
N Y Times p4 Ag 3 '30 1500w

"A dramatic story, bloody, and in its marshaling of facts about frontier communities informing—likewise a phase of history that recent writers have left untouched." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p11 Ag 1 '30 1000w

"It is doubtful if there is in all criminology a more dramatic episode than the pursuit and capture of Big Harpe and the manner whereby he met his death. It is rather magnificent. And how extremely well the author of this history has caught the spirit of the thing—no preaching, no long-winded conjectures, only a straightforward and vital account of the chase, the snaring and the final revenge rendered in the woods." Ben Wasson
+ Outlook 155:546 Ag 6 '30 900w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:83 N '30

St Louis 28:275 N '30

"Mr. Coates is always formally picturing only somehow there rarely is a picture. He attempts to create movement by the shifting of tenses and the animation of nature, but it is always on the outside and there is no more inner reality than in a dime novel. He uses Beer's trick of getting at a principal through a contemporary witness. It is a good trick if you can do it. The Natchez Trace, however, remains indistinct, away, untraceable." Ferdinand Reyher
— Sat R of Lit 7:39 Ag 9 '30 1200w

COATSWORTH, ELIZABETH JANE (MRS HENRY BESTON SHEAHAN). Boy with the parrot; a story of Guatemala. 102p il $1.75 Macmillan

30-10708

Sebastian is a small Indian boy living in Guatemala. This is the story of his travels with a peddler's pack and a parrot and of his many adventures while he seeks his fortune.

Booklist 26:400 Jl '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p132 N '30

"Miss Coatsworth writes with her usual charm, and not only is Sebastian a real boy but the book gives the atmosphere of the country and the reader shares something of Sebastian's feeling for the ancient and mysterious civilizations—Indian and Spanish—of which he finds traces in his travels. The title is well chosen and the illustrations by Wilfred S. Bronson are excellent." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p15 Jl 6 '30 250w

Outlook 155:346 Jl 2 '30 50w

St Louis 28:220 S '30

"Miss Coatsworth knows better than to write down to her audience, or to soften overmuch what is in reality a hard life. Furthermore, she knows her upland Guatemala. As a result of her knowledge of the country, Sebastian is a convincing character, or, if that is overloading his already burdened shoulders, as convincing as he needs to be. The touches of sentimentality that occur here and there, not overdone, are rather pleasant than otherwise, and to the young reader will add to the pleasure of the book." Gerald Chittenden
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1212 Jl 19 '30 620w

COATSWORTH, ELIZABETH JANE (MRS HENRY BESTON SHEAHAN). The cat who went to heaven; pictures by Lynd Ward. 57p $2 Macmillan

30-21929

The story of a little white cat that belonged to a poor Japanese artist. When the artist was engaged to paint the picture of the dying Buddha, with the animals coming to say farewell, he could not resist painting at the end his little white cat. Now the cat, of all the animals, was the only one not present at the death of Buddha, so the priests were furious with the artist and repudiated his picture. Next morning when they entered the temple they found that a miracle had occurred and the little cat had disappeared from his place in the picture and had reappeared under the outstretched hand of the Buddha. So the little cat went to heaven.

"A very poetic and unusual story. Lynd Ward's portrait drawings are interesting, but by no means as satisfying as the legend itself. It is, we think, the best thing Miss Coatsworth has done in prose." A. C. Moore
+ Atlantic Bookshelf p40 D '30 40w

Booklist 27:107 N '30

"Simple—but entrancing."
+ Bookm 72:xxvi N '30 60w

"The book belongs to all readers with well-burnished imaginations." K. G. Landon
+ Bookm 72:246 N '30 270w

"It is the gift of Miss Coatsworth's story, as it is of Mr. Ward's noble representations of the elephant, the horse, the bull and the deer, to stir the spirit of beauty and tenderness toward all living things." A. C. Moore
+ Books p1 N 16 '30 1100w

COATSWORTH, E. J.—Continued

"It is a story beautiful in conception and telling, which has a place among the best literary productions of the year for young people." A. L. Shea
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p14 N 22 '30 100w

"This is one of those rare books whose claim upon both children and adults is undeniable, and in which the unflagging interest of the narrative is successfully interwoven with the beauty of fantasy and allegory."
+ Nation 131:556 N 19 '30 100w

"A story that has real imagination in it, but has, probably, from the child-reader's point of view, the defect of being too tragic in its ending, too solemn in its conduct." Padriac Colum
+ — New Repub 65:23 N 19 '30 180w

"There is a sort of piety about this tender tale, and children will understand Lynd Ward's pictures, so like the animals the cat watched appear under her master's brush. Authentic Japanese legends are the basis for everything in the book, even to the cat and the picture." N. E.
+ N Y Evening Post p7d N 15 '30 280w

"Into this lovely and imaginative story the author has put something of the serenity and beauty of the East and of the gentleness of a religion that has a place even for the humblest of living creatures. . . The illustrations have so much beauty in themselves and are so in the spirit of the text that we have the feeling that we are looking at the picture made by the artist in the story." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p11 N 9 '30 420w

Reviewed by O. M. Fuller
N Y World p3e N 23 '30 200w

"I think if this cat had not gone to heaven in the end, there would have been rioting among the children of America. As for the wash drawings of Lynd Ward, they are the very spirits of the animals that come in one by one, for this is a series of legends worked into a moving plot." M. L. Becker
+ Outlook 156:586 D 10 '30 170w

St Louis 28:275 N '30

"To the discriminating the name of Elizabeth Coatsworth signed to a piece of writing brings always a premonitory thrill of pure delight. They know that they may confidently expect from her delicacy and sureness of touch combined with deep feeling, and an originality and freshness all too seldom found. She is, moreover, one of the rare persons who really understands—not cats, but—the Cat." Marcia Dalphin
+ Sat R of Lit 7:324 N 15 '30 550w

COATSWORTH, ELIZABETH JANE (MRS HENRY BESTON SHEAHAN). Toutou in bondage. 56p il $2 Macmillan
29-18666

The adventures of a very small and very fat fox-terrier with his master and mistress in Morocco.

"Little ones will like its unusual setting, so ably etched by Thomas Handforth who went to Morocco to do these pictures."
Cath World 130:380 D '29 130w

Cleveland Open Shelf p48 Mr '30

"Mr. Handforth's illustrations are very interesting, though quite sophisticated and unchildlike, as in Miss Coatsworth's story of a naughty fox terrier adventuring in Morocco." Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p14m N 16 '29 40w

"A good enough story, given style by dropping into verse." Ernestine Evans
N Y Times p37 O 27 '29 30w

St Louis 28:220 S '30

"Achieves almost perfectly a delightful combination of story with imaginative entertainment, and with a by-product of an informative background. . . Miss Coatsworth's poetic insight has led her to a vivid appreciation of this highly-colored Moroccan land. . . The illustrations fling themselves delightfully into the spirit of the story, with much fantastic and suggestive detail." M. C. Dodd
+ Sat R of Lit 6:404 N 16 '29 160w

COBB, MRS BERTHA BROWNING (BARNES), and COBB, ERNEST. André. 274p il $1.75 Putnam; 80c Arlo pub. co., 28 Richardson rd, Newton Upper Falls, Mass.
30-9461

André, an orphaned French boy of Rouen, wins a foot race, and makes a powerful enemy of Count Duclair. He escapes from his country and joins Champlain on his third expedition to the New World, has many adventures with Indians and returns in safety to France, but in the end decides to live in America.

"There is a well-laid plot in the tale, which comes out right at the end, and there is quite a little history. The picture-maps drawn by Champlain himself add a lot to the value of the book which tells a thrilling story that might have been better written."
+ — Boston Transcript p5 N 26 '30 230w

"The story is well written, romantic and adventurous enough to please most young people, and at the same time happens to give a good deal of historical information, painlessly." F. B. Bird
+ Sat R of Lit 7:348 N 15 '30 170w

COBB, IRVIN SHREWSBURY. Both sides of the street. 317p $2 Cosmopolitan bk.

918 South America—Description and travel. Europe—Description and travel. United States—Social conditions 30-24113

In which Mr Cobb records his impressions of the Main Streets of South America, Europe, and good old U. S. A. South America, as a country of the future, he surveys with genial admiration. Europe is appreciated from the American viewpoint; and in the section of the book entitled The Folks at Home Mr Cobb remarks upon our own activities.

"For the moment, Mr. Cobb is South America's best booster. After you have read his book you are in a mood to make immediate reservations for a South American cruise. You are caught in the contagion of his enthusiasm." A. B. Maurice
+ Bookm 72:xvii O '30 230w

"Although he has something to say, Mr. Cobb is always amusing. Conversely, in spite of his being funny, he always has something to say." I. W. L.
+ Boston Transcript p1 S 27 '30 550w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p5s S 6 '30 100w

"He found it all so alive, so interesting, so marvelous that he is eager to pass on his impressions and hopes only that he can incite other travelers to follow in his footsteps and all his fellow-countrymen to try to make themselves better acquainted with their southern neighbors. . . He found on many occasions habits and customs and mental attitudes that he did not enjoy, but since he writes of them always with the greatest good humor and makes the reader feel them to have been highly entertaining, they bear no relation to that well-known 'traveler's grouch' than which there is nothing surer to alienate both readers and friends."
+ N Y Times p38 N 30 '30 450w

St Louis 28:299 D '30

COBB, IRVIN SHREWSBURY. To be taken before sailing. 45p il $1 Cosmopolitan bk.
817 30-11291

In this booklet Mr Cobb prescribes a new way of seeing Europe: stay away from what the guide books say you ought to see, thus saving time to observe the peoples of a strange land (from some convenient café) and their habits and customs.

Bookm 71:xvii Je '30 140w

Books p19 My 25 '30 200w

"Part of the book is funny, but most of it is not, although its intentions are all humorous."
— + Chicago Daily Tribune p8 My 10 '30 70w

Cleveland Open Shelf p141 N '30

"There's a lot to what Mr. Cobb says. The only trouble is that Mark Twain said it long ago and that Mr. Cobb repeats it in a prose evidently dictated but not read." Edwin Seaver
— N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 12 '30 230w

"Mr. Cobb gives personal point to his argument by telling some of his own experiences and reactions while he traveled under guide-book leading strings and then comparing these with the interesting and revealing views of people and their ways of living he got by ignoring the guide-books and doing what he liked."
+ N Y Times p26 My 25 '30 220w

COBBAN, ALFRED. Edmund Burke, and the revolt against the eighteenth century; study of the political and social thinking of Burke, Wordsworth, Coleridge and Southey. 280p $3 Macmillan [8s 6d Allen, G.]

320.1 Burke, Edmund. Political science. Eighteenth century 30-12175

The first part of the book is devoted to Burke and his political theory; this is followed by chapters on Wordsworth and nationality, the political philosophy of Coleridge, the Lake poets and social reform, the state and religion, and the revolt against the eighteenth century.

Reviewed by R. G. Trotter
Am Hist R 35:664 Ap '30 420w

Books p19 My 11 '30 350w

Christian Science Monitor p5 Mr 8 '30 230w

"His book is not very good. It is more or less a defence of the 'conservatism' of Burke, Wordsworth, Coleridge, and Southey. Mr. Cobban can make something of a case for Burke, but there are some dogs so lame that no one can possibly help them over any stile, and Coleridge as a political thinker is one of them. In the end Mr. Cobban's arguments and conclusions are almost lamer than the poor dog." Leonard Woolf
— Nation and Ath 46:513 Ja 11 '30 100w

"It would be hard to find a book which provides a better compendium of the political thought of the authors named for such students, teachers, undergraduate students and general readers as have already a sound knowledge of eighteenth and nineteenth century history and desire to know more of the philosophy of that history without having the time, or perhaps the inclination, for a detailed study of the sources."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p1052 D 12 '29 950w

COBBETT, WALTER WILLSON, comp. and ed. Cyclopedic survey of chamber music; with a pref. by W. H. Hadow. 2v 585;641p il set $36 (£5 5s) Oxford

785.7 Chamber music (29-14486)

The editor of this unique cyclopedia has been for many years an appreciator and patron of music, and quartet playing has been the chief recreation of his long life. The survey, which numbers some 140 contributors, includes the name of every composer known to have published a work of chamber music. The articles vary in length from a few lines to thirty pages and view the musicians solely as chamber music composers.

"The publication of the second volume of Mr. Cobbett's Cyclopedia completes a remarkable undertaking. It is the most exhaustive work of its kind in existence, and as a book of reference it takes its place with Grove's Dictionary. With these two compilations the English student of music is as adequately equipped as any French or German scholar, and all future musical encyclopædias will have to take account of Mr. Cobbett's. . . The Cyclopedia is distinguished by many erudite and stimulating essays. We would single out the fine article of fifty-five columns on Mozart's chamber-music by Dr. Hermann Abert as one of the most illuminating pieces of musical criticism that has been written in recent times; for this article alone the Cyclopedia is worth buying."
+ New Statesman 35:sup xiv My 10 '30 1000w

"It is a work long awaited by students, scholars, musical historians and many music-lovers of the art world. 'It is,' remarks Sir Henry Hadow in his introduction, 'the first systematic attempt to collect in orderly arrangement all the relevant facts which bear upon its theme; it has drawn upon a wide range of expert knowledge and opinion; it has every prospect of being a definitive and permanent contribution to the literature of music.' "
+ N Y Times p5 O 27 '29 300w (Review of v 1)

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 34:89 D '29

Times [London] Lit Sup p603 Ag 1 '29 1550w (Review of v 1)

Times [London] Lit Sup p346 Ap 24 '30 1350w (Review of v 2)

COBHAM, SIR ALAN JOHN. Twenty thousand miles in a flying-boat; my flight round Africa. 250p il $2.50 McKay [10s 6d Harrap]

629.13 Aeronautics—Flights. Africa—Description and travel 30-22229

In the seaplane Singapore Sir Alan Cobham, accompanied by Lady Cobham and a small crew, encircled the African continent for the first time by air. Sir Alan describes the adventures, delights, and perils of the flight. The trip was financed by Sir Charles Wakefield, and undertaken in the interests of British air transport.

Sat R 149:272 Mr 1 '30 620w

"Well told and illustrated by many full-page photographs, this record of a pioneer is worthy of the deed that inspired it."
+ Spec 144:799 My 10 '30 100w

"Sir Alan Cobham knows how to tell a good story; and as he always has plenty of incident and variety to recall, the story of his 20,000 mile flight through and round Africa proceeds easily and smoothly. . . This book, entirely untechnical and eminently readable, is a lesson in Imperial geography and should fascinate every schoolboy, as well as adult minds."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p132 F 20 '30 570w

COBURN, WALT. Mavericks. 317p $2 Century 29-18262

Lance Mansfield, who is fighting a losing battle against a ring of Montana cattle rustlers and land crooks, finds himself in jail on the charge of stealing cattle. The neighborhood opinion is against him because his father is supposed to have committed suicide after becoming involved with the rustlers. Mansfield kisses his sweetheart goodbye, and escapes with the help of an outlaw. They join up with the A. E. F., Mansfield wins military honors abroad, makes friends with the captain of his company, finds his mother and returns to win the range war and his sweetheart.

"Mr. Coburn swings an agreeable line of cow lingo." Will Cuppy
+ Books p20 D 15 '29 80w

"There is a dash and rush to the story that keeps one's interest continually. Rough talk and rougher men do not conceal, however, the better side of human nature. Courage of the finest type is exemplified and the rascals and villains get becoming results."
+ Boston Transcript p2 O 11 '29 200w

"It is a complicated tale, all compact of scenes and situations that hold the suspense taut, and it is told in a rushing, careless style that is intent only on keeping the reader on edge for the next happening. The author is familiar with all the slang of ranch and battlefield, cowboy and soldier, and his dialogue is a treasure house of such riches."

COBURN, Walt—Continued

+ N Y Times p7 D 29 '29 400w

COCHRANE, CHARLES NORRIS. Thucydides and the science of history. 180p $3.50 (10s) Oxford

938.05 Thucydides. History—Methodology. Greece—History [30-8938]

"Mr. Cochrane has written an interesting and stimulating little book in support of his thesis that Thucydides was a truly scientific historian. He questions the judgments of Cornford and Bury that, judged by modern standards, Thucydides lacked the scientific character and argues that Thucydides was all the more scientific because his affiliations were with the Hippocratic school of biology and medicine and not with the mathematicians." —Sat R

"The service of this well-written, closely-reasoned book will be greatest to those who do not read German. The author's judgment of Thucydides and his conception of history as a science correspond closely with those of Eduard Meyer. . . Mr. Cochrane's work reflects great credit on the Toronto school of classical studies." W. S. Ferguson

+ Am Hist R 35:584 Ap '30 600w

"Professor Cochrane has produced an interesting and well-written book. He shows familiarity not only with Greek literature, but with a wide range of studies and commentaries in several languages. His volume, even if in part unconvincing, is vivid, interesting, fresh, and provocative of thought. It shows careful reading of his authorities, and shrewd observation, and reflects credit alike on himself and on the two universities in which he was trained." W. L. Grant

+ Canadian Hist R 10:343 D '29 1250w

Reviewed by Paul Shorey

Class Philol 25:290 Jl '30 900w

"It is an interesting and not unreasonable theory, but Mr. Cochrane presses it ruthlessly. . . Whatever we may think of his theories, it is plain that his book is the result of careful thought and much hard study."

+ — New Statesman 34:166 N 9 '29 200w

Sat R 148:518 N 2 '29 600w

"Weighty and close-reasoned essay."

+ Spec 143:280 Ag 31 '29 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p706 S 12 '29 100w

COCTEAU, JEAN. Enfants terribles; tr. by Samuel Putnam. 176p $2.50 Brewer 30-14876

After their mother's death, Paul and Elizabeth live in a room which is to them like an island in the midst of Paris. They are wild, poetic, original children, with a deep-rooted attachment to each other, whose destiny is to live and die together. Each draws a single friend into the circle of their life, a friend more normal, more worldly, than themselves, and soon overwhelmed with the hopelessness of love for such precocious beings. The spiritual flow between brother and sister is an active and dangerous force. When Elizabeth steps outside the circle to take a husband, the husband is immediately killed in an accident. When her friend, Agatha, confesses her love for Paul, Elizabeth treacherously prevents their union. Her insane stratagems to preserve the ideal world of their childhood end with the suicides of both Paul and herself.

Reviewed by Justin O'Brien

Bookm 71:444 Jl '30 500w

" 'Enfants Terribles' is a lucid novel, simple in design, graceful, sincere, humorous, bringing into the stagnant realm of contemporary letters a new sort of shudder, a new kind of acidulous and dangerous bliss." Angel Flores

+ Books p3 Je 1 '30 1150w

Boston Transcript p3 Ag 2 '30 250w

Nation 131:48 Jl 9 '30 280w

"The contradictions riddling the novel keep it from beng more than interesting. The account is hurried, not rapid. One feels that Cocteau knows a vast deal about the elaborately serious antics of children, their deceptions of themselves and others, the amazing meanings events take on in their minds; yet this knowledge never strikes one as having anything in particular to do with the actual characters of Paul and Elizabeth or Gerard. . . Again, there is the contradiction of economies: meanings are telescoped into one another when it would have been better to keep them diffused; and events are wasted when they might have been used to tighten up the story." Kenneth White

New Repub 64:25 Ag 20 '30 600w

"In translating his other world theme into this world's language M. Cocteau has scorned the ordinary devices of narration and has trusted the innate power of his story to rise through a shuddering suspense to the death chant of its climax. The beautiful economy of his writing has been so ably brought over into English by Samuel Putnam that, except for the Gallic preciseness of the diction, one would hardly recognize it as a translation." Ruth Seinfel

+ N Y Evening Post p5s Je 7 '30 850w

"In 'Enfants Terribles' he has written something which for the first time suggests that Cocteau may, if he so desires, have a career as a serious artist ahead of him. For if the dilettante and the sophisticate predominate in this bizarre study of adolescence, the imaginative artist is not entirely absent. The book is original as well as clever; and not without power of a studied and artificial sort." Louis Kronenberger

+ N Y Times p9 Je 22 '30 730w

" 'Enfants Terribles' is exceedingly well written, with a graphic presentation of the psychology of a pair of nervous, solitary, over-intelligent children which can only be founded on the author's own experience. The many eccentricities, both actual and attached to him by reputation, which Cocteau will no doubt one day outgrow, have little or no part in this remarkable book. Those who have condemned him as a poseur will find pose and personality indistinguishable this time, and must recognize a Cocteau less diverting but surely better equipped for the future." Theodore Purdy, Jr.

+ Sat R of Lit 7:53 Ag 16 '30 550w

Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 27 '30 100w

CODEL, MARTIN, ed. Radio and its future. 349p il $4 Harper

621.384 Radio 30-13857

"A survey of the whole field of radio, written by twenty-nine authorities in their respective branches of the field, and including aeronautical radio. The papers are grouped under five headings: broadcasting, communications, industry, regulation, and some scientific and other considerations."—Pratt

Booklist 27:14 S '30

" 'Radio and Its Future' is scarcely a book you will want to sit down to for continuous reading, but there is scarcely a page which does not carry a significant fact."

Books p14 Ag 24 '30 150w

Pratt p17 autumn '30

St Louis 28:211 S '30

COE, CHARLES FRANCIS. Other half. 309p $1.50 Cosmopolitan bk. 30-21173

A lively story of the bootlegging racket. Antonio Scarvak is a prince among bootleggers, and Angelo, his right hand man, is a criminal lawyer. Antonio builds himself a bullet-proof house, which is the scene of a battle between rival gangs. Eventually the United States secret service is called in and things calm down.

"Mr. Coe has done a good job, his story holds one's interest to the end. At the same time one is left with an uncomfortable feeling that he has put enough stuff and incident into his story for the careers of two or three gangsters and the showing up of several American cities."
+ — Books p10 O 5 '30 480w

"Mr Coe has told a solidly readable story in his latest version of the racketeer nuisance, grounding it firmly on incidents, characters and conditions which have their counterparts in the life of any metropolitan city of today. But the trouble with these gangster novels is that if you have read one of them the rest will have an effect of sameness and repetition due to the inherent narrowness of the subject and the unavoidable similarity of materials dealt with in all of them."
+ — N Y World p4m Ag 31 '30 120w

COE, GEORGE ALBERT. What is Christian education? 300p $2.50 (10s 6d) Scribner
377 Religious education 29-21376

"Critical examination of present Christian practice and of the better practice that would ensue if Christian principles were more fully to control the teaching work of the churches."

Boston Transcript p7 N 20 '29 220w

"Professor Coe has written an honest book. It faces realities, and is likely to make its readers face them. Certain readers may resent the author's attitude and heartily wish that the professor might be a pastor faced with the hard task of putting his own theories to work. But, in my own impulse to resentment, I am reminded of Paul's words, 'Am I therefore become your enemy because I tell you the truth?' "
+ Christian Century 46:1504 D 4 '29 1000w

"He who does not desire to have his religious thinking and conduct disturbed is advised to pursue a devious course from What is Christian Education? On the other hand, the courageous pilgrim seeking wider spiritual horizons will discover a place for optimism and obligation in this book." S. G. Cole
+ Crozer Q 8:134 Ja '31 650w

Reviewed by W. C. Bower
J Religion 10:297 Ap '30 1100w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 34:75 N '29
Pratt p12 autumn '30
St Louis 28:208 S '30

COFFIN, ROBERT PETER TRISTRAM. Laud, storm center of Stuart England. 331p il $3.50 Brentano's
B or 92 Laud, William, abp. of Canterbury 30-9294

The life of Archbishop Laud, upholder of church authority in the time of Charles I, who tried to repress the Puritans and did more than any other man to force them to come to America.

"The figure of Laud somehow fails to fill up or to dominate the broad canvas. The issues are big, but the acts of this leading personage seem trivial; even in his most tragic moments there is more of the ludicrous than the majestic. Not all the devices of heightening at the command of the most fashionable biographical technique can avail to raise William Laud to the level of the heroic. . . The truth is that it is impossible to get a coherent and consistent view of Laud's character from Mr. Coffin's presentation." Jacob Zeitlin
— Books p10 My 4 '30 830w
Boston Transcript p2 Ap 26 '30 730w

Reviewed by D. A. Roberts
Nation 131:156 Ag 6 '30 300w

"Mr. Coffin is straightforward, disdainful of the inventions and dramatics of those who swim in the wake of Strachey. But he spoils his biography by being too 'literary.' Laud, he tells us, was distinctly not a literary man, but we are never allowed to forget that Mr. Coffin knows the full history of English literature. Thus, in a history of the man who plunged England into civil war, we get only casual references to Pym, to Cromwell, to the rise of the Puritan middle classes who snuffed out the bright light of Elizabeth's era, while, on the other hand, there is never an opportunity lost to get in a good literary allusion. Mr. Coffin's 'Laud' is patently the sort of book an anthologist would write about a man who belongs, after all, more to English history than to English literature. It is this distortion of emphasis which throws an otherwise interesting book out of focus." John Chamberlain
— + New Repub 63:241 Jl 16 '30 350w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson
N Y Times p5 Ag 24 '30 1500w
Outlook 154:628 Ap 16 '30 100w
St Louis 28:218 S '30

"Two things Mr. Coffin has done unusually well in this book. He has succeeded in dealing dispassionately with one of the most controversial figures in English history, a figure about whom Englishmen naturally divide today; he has assumed neither a high Anglican nor a Puritan point of view. And he has given us a portrait of Laud that is, I believe, a likeness." Wallace Notestein
+ Sat R of Lit 7:67 Ag 23 '30 600w

COFFMAN, RAMON. Our America. 296p il $3.50 Dodd
973 United States—History, Juvenile 30-7111

A brief history of America which begins by describing prehistoric days, touches on most of the important events in the subsequent development of the country, and ends with a brief survey of present day life. Written for boys and girls.

Booklist 26:360 Je '30

"Books on American history simple enough for the younger children to read, abreast with modern teaching, interesting in style and well illustrated, are few and far between. This volume will be a useful addition in this field. . . In 'Our America' the author successfully selects material which will appeal to the nine and ten year old, and the style is simple and direct. Long sentences are avoided. The illustrations are an important and valuable part of the book, for whenever possible contemporary prints have been used."
+ N Y Times p8 Mr 16 '30 180w
Outlook 155:347 Jl 2 '30 80w

"Its most striking feature is that it deals very much more fully with the early part of American history than with the later part. . . This fact gives the whole volume an old-fashioned air which the old cuts and plates with which it is liberally illustrated harmonize . . . The book is of course in no sense a history, being simply a series of historical sketches. But these sketches are written with vigor and color, while some of them are conspicuous for their honesty."
+ Sat R of Lit 7:12 Jl 26 '30 250w

Reviewed by Beulah Amidon
Survey 65:341 D 15 '30 100w

COHEN, HYMAN, and COHEN, LESTER. Aaron Traum. 413p $2.50 Liveright 30-8776

" 'Aaron Traum' sets out to chart the soul of an immigrant boy who 'started in the gutter and ended with the stars.' [It follows] the tidal wave of Jews from the Slavic lands to the fabulous western world with streets of gold; the disillusionment in the midst of grinding poverty; [and] the torment of the elders deracinated and confronted with the spectacle of the precious Talmudic beliefs ebbing in the hearts of their sons."—Sat R of Lit

COHEN, H. and L.—Continued

"A stark and truthful novel filled with the blood, sweat and breath of humanity. With the exception of the rather disconcerting last chapter, it is a moving piece of realism and a sad commentary on the manner in which America welcomes foster children."

+ Bookm 71:326 Je '30 320w

"Hyman and Lester Cohen have written a moving story of conflict and attainment. They load it with clusters of characters, with pictures and with detail which, being a labor of love, carries conviction. This rich detail has been handled in shapeliness and proportion; the crossing of lives, the return to old tragic stories and the racial pride to survive bind the novel strongly. The authors do not dig over the ugliness of Bowery life; they neither ignore nor exploit the sexual degeneracy of slums; they deal simply with human beings. It is their very resistance to abnormal ugliness that leads to the one weakness of the book: its idyllic and too easy happy ending, with Aaron's ideal marriage and his mystical liberation in art." A. L. Basinger

+ — Books p10 Je 22 '30 700w

"A novel pretty much like its name: literary and sentimental." Edwin Seaver

— N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 5 '30 200w

" 'Aaron Traum' is a book that is written from the heart. Hyman and Lester Cohen have written of people they know, lovingly, with a great compassion."

+ N Y Times p9 Ap 13 '30 350w

"There is pathos in the place of feeling, a ramble of form rather than spaciousness, plethoric detail where selection is a crying need. The style is a lush, cliché-burdened jumble, striving toward profundity and arriving at sheer macaronics."

— Sat R of Lit 6:1127 Je 14 '30 750w

COHEN, OCTAVUS ROY. Backstage mystery. 315p $2 (7s 6d) Appleton

30-20632

Wylie Thornton, leading man of the Edwin Booth resident players, tho a hero on the stage, is quite a villain in private life. He carries his villainy too far when he plans to elope with the fiancée of a young Southern gentleman—in spite of the warnings of her rich but proud father. Jim Hanvey, a nice fat detective, and Terry Mooney, live-wire reporter, solve the mystery of Wylie Thornton's murder backstage.

Booklist 27:210 Ja '31

Bookm 72:xxi S '30 100w

"Fast, exciting, flavored with fun and certainly the best opus by Mr. Cohen in some time." Will Cuppy

+ Books p12 S 21 '30 200w

"It is altogether too bad that the fat detective, who possesses almost unbelievable powers of deduction, philosophy and human observation, is not able to use the English language as well as a boy in the grammar school. . . He is a different kind of sleuth, but if Mr. Cohen could only send him to night school for a few weeks, between cases, he might develop into another Sherlock Holmes, and in a Southern setting would do well."

— + Boston Transcript p3 O 18 '30 380w

"This is a clumsily managed mystery, full of repetitions and bad writing, with an ending that is amazing in several ways." Dashiell Hammett

— N Y Evening Post p12 S 20 '30 100w

Times [London] Lit Sup p761 S 25 '30 220w

COHEN, OCTAVUS ROY. Epic Peters, Pullman porter. 299p $2 (7s 6d) Appleton

30-1700

Eight short stories in which are retailed as many adventures of Epic Peters, also known as Hop Sure, Pullman porter on the thru train from Birmingham to New York. Epic's fondness for tips and the lengths he would go to win them more than once almost accomplished his downfall.

"Hilariously funny short stories. Mr. Cohen has again given his dusky character all the humorous traits of his race, and his adventures will prove a delight to those who have travelled on a sleeper."

+ Bookm 71:xxiv Mr '30 50w

Books p12 My 11 '30 100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p47 Mr '30

N Y Times p24 Mr 9 '30 200w

"Mr. Cohen describes his exploits dexterously and deliberately, recalling at times, in method though not in finish, a faint suggestion of O. Henry. It is the dialogue which becomes cumulatively irritating, through too free an abundance of malapropisms, and too many reversed arrangements of words."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p192 Mr 6 '30 200w

COHN, MRS CLARA (VIEBIG). Golden hills; tr. by Graham Rawson. 312p $2.50 Vanguard press

30-26952

" 'The Golden Hills' deals with the Moselle country in the period of postwar readjustment. Clara Viebig's theme is the fierce, almost passionate loyalty that bound the peasants to their vineyards year after year when wine prices were too low to make anything but a naked struggle against starvation. The story centers around the Bremm family in the village of Porten, between Trier and Bernkastel. Two of the sons have been killed in the war; the third son has joined the insurrectionists agitating for a Rhineland republic. Faced by starvation and the seizure of their lands, the Bremm family toils through the three desperate years. What emerges at the end is a gleam of hope—distant and vague, but enough, in that lean, bleak period to justify their energy and courage."—Books

Booklist 27:103 N '30

" 'The Golden Hills' is a quiet story, told with a tranquil grace that carries the reader smoothly and securely over its obscure and pathetic happenings. Some of the sad beauty of old lands, lands that have been loved and toiled over and fought for, rises like a distillation of the long summer twilight from its pages. It is a quiet and beautiful book for all who have the time to read it."

+ Books p12 O 5 '30 550w

Boston Transcript p3 N 1 '30 380w

COHN, MRS CLARA (VIEBIG). Woman with a thousand children; tr. by Brian Lunn. 292p $2.50 (7s 6d) Appleton

30-9245

A Berlin school-teacher, Marie-Luise, is forced to make a decision between teaching as a career, which she loves, and marriage with a young doctor whose salary is not yet adequate. The need for love and guidance among the girl pupils in the public school where she teaches, and her feeling that marriage plus an endeavor to keep on teaching would be a failure, leads her to give up her lover and devote herself to her chosen work.

Booklist 27:64 O '30

"Clara Viebig's book, rambles somewhat from one view point to another. It is too obviously and uneasily translated. Yet it has a pull on your emotions. As a story, 'The Woman With a Thousand Children' is not solid, but it has sharp edged reality."

— + Books p9 Jl 13 '30 320w

"A study almost ugly in its complete realism of the problems confronted by a devoted and utterly sincere young woman teacher in in the slums of Berlin. No teacher, no matter how carefully selected her classes, could be wholly ignorant of such problems and the novel should arouse as wide interest in America as it has in Germany." M. L. S.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 18 '30 450w

Cleveland Open Shelf p95 Je '30

Reviewed by K. C. Tomlinson
Nation and Ath 47:326 Je 7 '30 100w

New Repub 63:325 Jl 30 '30 220w

"'The Woman With a Thousand Children' is a good novel, but it would have been substantially better if Clara Viebig had been less keenly interested in the social aspects of her theme, and had devoted more of her really fine artistic energies to the delineation of the personal drama of Marie-Luise Büchner's life."
+ — N Y Times p9 My 4 '30 480w

"A plausible narrative, a style whose directness is not lost in Mr. Lunn's translation, and a theme that Ibsen might have vitalized, do not compensate for a uniform weakness in character delineation."
— + Sat R of Lit 6:972 Ap 19 '30 280w

Reviewed by V. S. Pritchett
Spec 144:948 Je 7 '30 60w

"The story contains some effective sentimental passages and a few sketches of character which are not without pathos, but the central situation is too slight to stand the heavy and lavish sentiment which is this author's worst failing."
— Times [London] Lit Sup p497 Je 12 '30 200w

COHN, WILLIAM. Chinese art. (Great periods in art ser.) 75p il $4 Boni [10s 6d Studio]
709.51 Art, Chinese 30-27063

A concise history of Chinese art which covers architecture, ceramics, sculpture and paintings. Illustrated with photographs of Chinese art treasures owned in Germany. The book was written after the Chinese art exhibit held in Berlin in 1929. Bibliography.

Booklist 27:146 D '30

"Dr. Cohn contributes a brief but well-written and comprehensive survey of the subject. The illustrations are generally well reproduced, but there are several which need more space than is given them."
+ — Nation 131:505 N 5 '30 150w

St Louis 28:265 N '30

"Mr. Cohn's little book will prove extremely useful to anyone who wishes for information, and little but information, compressed into a small space. It makes very stiff reading, and perhaps Mr. Cohn need not have mentioned so many Chinese painters whose names are recorded in history but who have left no works. Mr. Cohn does express some critical opinions, but he scarcely attempts any real analysis of Chinese art. The illustrations are well chosen."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p827 O 16 '30 100w

COIT, DOROTHY. Ivory throne of Persia. 241p il $3 Stokes
891.5 Firdausi 29-18205

The stories, with the exception of the last, have been retold from the Shah-Nameh of Firdausi, translated into English verse by the brothers Arthur George and Edmund Warner. The illustrations are the work of children in the classes of Edith King, in the Children's school of acting and design, New York City.

Booklist 26:236 Mr '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p90 Je '30

"What Dorothy Coit has done in the present book is to retell the tales from the Persian epic, the Shah-Nameh or 'Book of Kings' in her own amused and truly inimitable way." Edwin Seaver
+ N Y Evening Post p7s Ja 4 '30 200w

St Louis 27:344 D '29

"The stories are adapted for story telling, dramatically, brightly. They move quickly, trippingly, in child-fashion. They are very pleasing wonder tales." F. J. Olcott
+ Sat R of Lit 6:401 N 16 '29 500w

COLE, GEORGE DOUGLAS HOWARD. Politics and literature. (Hogarth lectures on literature) 160p $1.25 Harcourt [3s 6d Hogarth]
820.9 English literature—History and criticism. Political science—Literary history
30-966

A review of political literature beginning with the seventeenth century and ending with the middle of the nineteenth. The ideas of English political writers such as Hobbes, Dryden and Swift are studied in relation to their literary form.

Books p10 Mr 2 '30 200w

Christian Science Monitor p10 Ja 11 '30 260w

"The book, though hardly more than a pamphlet is full of agreeable matter for both the politician and the man of letters. . . Were we disposed to find any fault with Mr. Cole we should feel inclined to say that he is so enamoured with the style of the great writers of the seventeenth century in England as to be over-indulgent to the weakness of most of their premises." Augustine Birrell
+ — Nation and Ath 46:sup223 N 9 '29 1200w

"In Mr. Cole's writing there is no collusion at divorce between political writing and literature; his style is simple, readable, clear—if he errs at all, it is in the direction of abbreviation. The book lacks an index. One hopes that the author will complete the sequel which, in his concluding chapter, he partly promises, and that he may in some more leisurely future deal more luxuriously with the full measure of his material." Rolfe Humphries
+ — New Repub 62:225 Ap 9 '30 400w

"So far as he has gone, Mr. Cole has written a profitable little book. The vigor, clarity and brilliance of what he has done make one regret that he has done nothing more. He has also fallen into the very British blunder of regarding the terms 'political thought' and 'British political thought' as identical. This is a slight error. There was a man called Plato and a man called Aristotle, and even a man called Montesquieu." John Bakeless
+ — N Y Evening Post p7s Ja 4 '30 900w

St Louis 28:107 Ap '30

"Within its limits the survey is deep and compact. Mr. Cole observes his own rules of good political writing: his style is clear, appropriate and expressive."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p8 Ja 2 '30 1000w

COLE, GEORGE DOUGLAS HOWARD, and COLE, MARGARET ISABEL (POSTGATE) (MRS G. D. H. COLE). Berkshire mystery. 288p $2 Brewer
30-11858

Employing a chronological method which presents the evidence as it turns up, in the form of letters, conversations, telegrams and other sources of information as received directly by Scotland Yard interests, the authors of this detective story feature again their super-sleuth, Superintendent Wilson, who solved the mystery of Poison in a Garden Suburb. The Berkshire robbery starts off with a parlor séance, in which the medium's personal spook, a poltergeist, performs—after which the famous Pallant emeralds disappear. The effort to discover the thief and restore the missing jewels motivates the story.

Bookm 71:xxi Je '30 80w

"The collaborators have accomplished one of those juggling feats beyond the skill of the ordinary detective writer." Will Cuppy
+ Books p17 Ap 27 '30 300w

"As a mystery yarn it leaves much to be desired both in substance and in narrative manner."
— N Y Times p24 My 18 '30 120w

"The Coles have tried a rather unhappy technical experiment in their latest thriller which, viewed from any angle, is not a

COLE, G. D. H. and M. I.—Continued
mystery story calculated to win new admirers. . . This seems to be the first Cole product on record which does not fulfil a high standard of detective fiction." E. C. Beckwith
— N Y World p11m Ap 27 '30 150w

"The story is told chronologically, a method which allows every reader to do his own sleuthing, and makes for clarity and conciseness, with no sacrifice of readability." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 154:621 Ap 16 '30 80w

"The story is unusual in style and ingenious in the handling of a complicated and original plot." Eugene Reynal
+ Sat R of Lit 6:997 Ap 26 '30 100w
Springf'd Republican p7e Je 15 '30 250w

COLE, HARRY ELLSWORTH. Stage coach and tavern tales of the Old Northwest; ed. by Louise Phelps Kellogg. 376p pl $6 Clark, A.H.

917.7 Coaching. Hotels, taverns, etc. Frontier and pioneer life. United States—Social life and customs 30-13438

"The book was written by a former president of the State Historical Society of Wisconsin and editor of the Baraboo News. It recalls the days of rivermen and lumbermen, circuit riders, itinerant horse-traders and peddlers, bandits and holdup men, and gives first-hand pictures of conditions which obtained on our frontiers as the pioneer movement spread westward."—N Y Evening Post

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 9 '30 380w
Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p9m Je 14 '30 150w

"Mr. Cole took many years to gather the material, which is duplicated in no other work. It is a chapter of frontier lore." W. B. Shaw
+ R of Rs 82:16 S '30 100w

COLEMAN, MRS EMILY (HOLMES). Shutter of snow. 245p $2.50 Viking press [6s Routledge] 30-27771

A study (from actual experience) of a young woman, Marthe, a sufferer from exhaustive psychosis following the birth of her child, in a state hospital for the insane. The patient's distorted mental state and delusions are recorded in a broken, vivid and modernistic style. Mrs Coleman has become identified with the transition group of writers in Paris.

"Though of course we must take on faith the author's recollection of her now remote experiences, the story carries an impression of authenticity. It will be of special interest to students of the sicknesses of the mind, as well as to those interested in the processes of mysticism in literature or art; while to those who are concerned with the care of mental illness, it provides a most comforting assurance of the kindness and understanding to be found within state hospital walls—in this a most startling contrast to the conditions of twenty-five years ago which Mr. Beers's book recorded, and even those of which Jane Hillyer wrote only a few years ago."
+ Books p3 Ag 17 '30 380w

"Seldom does one of Mrs. Coleman's background become a victim of psychosis and come back to tell the tale. Certainly there has never been a book containing such vivid experience in the field of mental shadow as she remembers in her simple, direct exposition of her hazy experience. . . The effect of insanity is increased in the reader by a mechanical means which many will find unwelcome, the exclusion of all punctuation expect the period, an occasional comma—or a question or exclamation point, as the occasion requires."
+ — Boston Transcript p2 Ag 27 '30 250w

"The book is no less graphic than it is authentic, an extremely rare achievement in the 'firsthand document' school of letters, for usually we have drama at the expense of truth, or bald facts that unwittingly falsify the picture. 'The Shutter of Snow' is a profoundly moving book, supplying as it does a glimpse of what a temporary derangement and its consequences may mean to the sufferer."
+ Nation 131:684 D 17 '30 150w

"Mrs. Coleman has succeeded in conveying the pity and terror of the condition in a remarkable manner, without exaggeration and without self-pity or sentimentality. It is a success very rarely achieved in any kind of literature. That Mrs. Coleman has succeeded so well is testimony both to her courage and her literary skill. The first quality may escape the notice of some readers of this book, but it requires an extraordinary degree of psychological courage and mental firmness to face and and recall the past, as Mrs. Coleman does, to re-create the details of one's own insanity, and at the same time, while doing so, to maintain an even poise of sanity."
+ Nation and Ath 48:332 D 6 '30 620w

"As an interlude in a long novel, with something to catch onto, before and after, 'The Shutter of Snow' could have been excellent. As it stands now, it is more than the case history of a woman in an insane asylum, but less than a novel about a woman who spends two months of her life in an insane asylum. The book is neither hay nor grass. Yet it does not represent a complete waste of Mrs. Coleman's talent. Aside from the fact that the author has handled original material with objectivity and delicacy, she has made the most of an opportunity to exceed the dry, drab bounds of a flatly realistic style." K. W.
+ — New Repub 64:27 Ag 20 '30 180w

"In spite of the conviction which the narrative carries, one may question the wisdom of Mrs. Coleman's presentation. It seems likely that her study might have attained greater force from a more general and more objective treatment. Certainly the last chapters are relatively more effective than the first."
+ — N Y Times p7 Ag 31 '30 500w

"The crisp wit which delighted Mrs. Coleman's examiners even when she was psychopathic saves her book from being too utterly depressing. The story of daily life in a ward for the insane is not likely to be merry reading, nor does Mrs. Coleman desire it to be; her intent has an obvious depth beyond that, but there are abysses into which it is hardly fair to lead a reader under the guise of the novel. 'The Shutter of Snow' avoids these without being false to its essential tragedy."
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:224 O 11 '30 250w

COLEMAN, MCALISTER. Eugene V. Debs, a man unafraid. 345p il $3.50 Greenberg

B or 92 Debs, Eugene Victor 30-12348

Life of the labor leader and Socialist who was five times the candidate of his party for president of the United States. The greater part of the book is taken up with Debs's industrial fights, including the Pullman strike, and his rise to political leadership.

Booklist 27:24 S '30

"Mr. Coleman has written a thoroughly partisan and uncritical study. He has done it as a labor of love and with evidence of great personal admiration for his subject. And while the book will help even more to deify Debs among the socialists, the unprejudiced reader will wonder repeatedly how any man could have been so good, so long suffering, and so politically wise as Mr. Coleman's Debs is represented to be." A. B. Clarke
Bookm 71:555 Ag '30 350w

"McAlister Coleman has not chosen to write an exhaustive biography or to deal with some of the controversies suggested by Debs's long life and his relation to the labor and socialist movements. He knows the arts of a modern biographer, but has wisely avoided smartness and the easy cliches of the amateur psychoanalyst. The result is an objective and swiftly moving narrative of the man Gene Debs, set into an adequate picture of his times, in adequate relationship to his times and to the leaders of the crowded days from Cleveland to Harding." Norman Thomas

+ Books p2 Je 8 '30 900w

"Whether Debs gets the literary, almost poetic, treatment which he deserves in Mr. Coleman's clearly stated and workman-like volume is perhaps a question. He shows us that even people of opposing views came to love Debs, but he has not drawn a portrait with enough spiritual intention to make the reader love the character he sees upon these pages." S. L. Cook
+ — Boston Transcript p4 My 17 '30 1750w

"I question whether any biographer can do justice to his subject without a large measure of sympathy, but I am quite convinced that the life of Debs can be told adequately only by one who senses that his 'warm heart' was the key to his life and work. And therein lies the excellence of McAlister Coleman's book." Morris Hillquit
+ Current Hist 32:842 Ag '30 900w

Reviewed by H. R. Mussey
Nation 131:206 Ag 20 '30 650w

Reviewed by M. P. Levy
New Repub 63:351 Ag 6 '30 1000w

"To many readers Coleman's book will open the door to an interesting period in American labor history and to a highly interesting personality. Yet Coleman hurts his work by making it too obviously a labor of love and veneration. He lacks detachment and gives, perhaps erroneously, the impression that his judgment is highly prejudiced. Throughout the book he speaks of Debs as 'Gene' and the friendly appellation, doubtless usual in Socialist ranks, serves to discredit the author as an unbiased critic of the man whose life he is writing." R. C. Feld
+ — N Y Times p6 My 25 '30 1550w
St Louis 28:218 S '30

"McAlister Coleman's book follows a conventional biographical pattern, but it is never dull, and out of it the subject emerges with friendly reality, a credible figure of 'old agitator,' the burning orator." Marjorie McFarland
+ Survey 64:478 S 1 '30 550w

"A readable, forthright and accurate record of this unique personality." Norman Thomas
+ World Tomorrow 13:427 O '30 650w

COLEMAN, SARA LINDSAY (MRS WILLIAM SIDNEY PORTER). Common problem. 318p $2 Doubleday, Doran
29-17530

A story in which the course of true love was anything but smooth. It began when William gave a valentine to the little girl next door and lasted thru many ups and downs, even William's blindness, which was his share of war's heritage.

Books p34 S 29 '29 70w

"A light and pleasant story, made interesting by the charm of the characters about whom it is woven."
+ Boston Transcript p2 O 2 '29 100w

"A naive concoction of sweetness, young love, sunshine and shadow, heartache and misunderstanding is this romance by the widow of O. Henry."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:608 D 28 '29 130w

COLEMAN, MRS SATIS NARRONA, and THORN, ALICE GREEN. Singing time; songs for nursery and school. 48p il $2.50 Day
784.624 Children's songs 29-28522

A collection of short songs for very young children of nursery school age, with piano accompaniments and illustrations.

Booklist 26:165 Ja '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p88 Je '30

"The piano accompaniments are simple; in many cases the melody is played by both hands. The excellent art work in color adds much to the attractiveness of the book. Another notable feature is the successful adaptation of the words of the songs to the actual experiences of small children."
+ El School J 30:557 Mr '30 150w

"Suited to very young children, based on much practical experience at the Lincoln and Horace Mann schools." Edwin Seavor
+ N Y Evening Post p14m N 16 '29 70w

"The pictures are attractive and the songs of swings, sailboats, birds, animals and the out-of-doors are pleasing." O. M. Fuller
+ N Y World p11m D 22 '29 50w

Reviewed by M. L. Becker
Outlook 153:589 D 11 '29 30w

"The authors of the book are active in music and kindergarten work in connection with the Lincoln and Horace Mann schools, and their rhymes show that they know how utterly simple and repetitive children of four or five like them. The piano accompaniments are sometimes just the melody played in soft unison by both hands and sometimes somewhat more intricate. I should think children learning to play would be kept happy just by looking at those pictures!" Jean Wheeler
+ Sat R of Lit 6:424 N 16 '29 120w
Wis Lib Bul 26:69 F '30

COLETTE, pseud. See Jouvenel, G. C. de.

2 COLLINGWOOD, ROBIN GEORGE. Archaeology of Roman Britain. (Illustrated lib. of archaeology) 293p pl $6 Dial press [16s Methuen]
913.42 Great Britain—Antiquities, Roman

An excellently illustrated account of the roads, fortifications, villas, temples, tombs, coins, pottery, weapons, and other remains of the Roman occupation of Britain. For the specialist, rather than the general reader.

"A valuable and engaging handbook for those who have sought an elementary and at the same time a comprehensive digest of studies in the growing Romano-British field."
+ Books p13 D 28 '30 150w

"A trifle too technical, in view of its avowed appeal to the beginner." John Piper
Nation and Ath 48:241 N 15 '30 40w

"Because it is at once detailed, comprehensive and scientific in its method it offers, perhaps, rather rich food for the layman. It is intended rather for the use of beginners in archaeology and of amateurs who are specializing in it as a hobby."
N Y Times p35 D 14 '30 180w
Sat R of Lit 7:478 D 20 '30 20w

"Nothing better could be desired than this lucid, well-arranged and trustworthy conspectus of what is now known about the roads, camps and forts, the Wall, the towns and villas, and the inscriptions and smaller objects which the Roman masters of Britain left behind them. The illustrations are numerous and useful."
+ Spec 145:606 O 25 '30 150w

"This book is not a history. It is a practical handbook of field archaeology. And so, although some of its chapters would be equally suitable to a general work on Roman Britain, the book is written for the instruction of the archaeologist and the excavator."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1076 D 18 '30 480w

COLLINS, BERTRAND. Silver swan. 289p $2.50 Harper
30-25627

A beautiful and wealthy American girl, Claire Watson, is engineered by her scheming middle-class mother into the heart of English society by achieving marriage with Ian Bulteel, owner of Steyning, a famous English country house. The story follows Claire's life in England as Ian's wife, her love affair with Derek Barran,

COLLINS, BERTRAND—Continued
her separation from Ian and the birth of her baby, and her return to claim Steyning when old Mrs Bulteel dies.

Books p24 N 16 '30 480w

Boston Transcript p6 D 16 '30 300w

"Bertrand Collins's heroine fails because of the extremeness of the presentation. Neither Claire nor her mother, Jenny, between them, possess one honest and kindly trait. . . The staccato edge of Claire's and her mother's volubility becomes excessively tiresome. Mr. Collins does divine to a fine point the irony of life, but he has not yet learned to present it in its most effective form. He does not make it creep out from a silent corner and stab one to the heart; rather his sort is a continuous bunch of firecrackers hurled spluttering at the reader. . . Such a book is an ephemeral excitement as fleeting as Claire's loves."

— N Y Times p7 O 26 '30 380w

"The author should be commended for representing this latest version of American climber quite without mercy or special malice. The snobbery of the book is certainly self-conscious, if by no means green."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:292 N 1 '30 350w

Times [London] Lit Sup p993 N 20 '30 150w

COLLINS, FREDERICK LEWIS. Vacation ^{2} travelcharts and travel chats. 283p il $2.50 Bobbs

910.2 Travel 30-22556

"Mr. Collins begins with January and with two alternative travel charts and travel chats takes the reader right through the year with a journey suitable for each month. . . The alternatives in each month are strongly contrasted as to place—California and Italy, San Francisco and Paris, the Rocky Mountains and England, Havana and North Africa, and so on."—N Y Times

Booklist 27:152 D '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p140 N '30

"Any one wanting to take a vacation of a part or the whole of a month, or even longer, any time during the approaching year will find in this very practical little volume encouragement, good cheer, counsel, advice and careful and detailed guidance."

+ N Y Times p35 D 14 '30 180w

COLLINS, JOSEPH. Insomnia; how to combat it. (Appleton popular health ser.) 131p $1.50 (5s) Appleton

613.86 Insomnia. Sleep 30-5916

To victims of insomnia this is a reassuring book. Dr Collins makes clear the causes of sleeplessness and shows that the habit of sleep, being so deeply ingrained, can be reformed by the exercise of will-power and perseverance.

For biographical sketch of the author see Boston Transcript p1 Mr 15 '30

"The book is written in an interesting manner, even if it is padded and somewhat repetitious, and the information is eminently practical, even if the customary emphasis is placed on cure rather than on the prevention of the underlying causes of the defects discussed." J. A. Tobey

+ — Am J Pub Health 20:914 Ag '30 200w

Booklist 26:301 My '30

"Those who have Dr. Collins's previous books will not need to be told how readable he can make an exposition of this sort, how he can mingle exposition of fact with humorous viewpoint and clothe information in an entertaining style. As a consulting neurologist and an authority upon neurology, Dr. Collins speaks upon his theme with a voice that no layman would think of questioning."

+ N Y Times p23 Mr 2 '30 400w

Pratt p16 summer '30

St Louis 28:136 My '30

Survey 64:103 Ap 15 '30 50w

COLLINS, LILLIAN FOSTER. Little theatre in school. 271p il $2.50 Dodd

792 Drama in education. Amateur theatricals. College and school drama 30-26893

A teacher in the junior high school in Cleveland has written a practical account of the theatre in the school, with suggestions for staging plays. Contents: The place of the theatre in school; The organization of the school theatre; What to give: a calendar of plays for children; The plays: where to get them and all about them; How to give the plays; Writing plays with children. Four plays for children are included: The courtship of Miles Standish; The nightingale and the rose; The great bell of Peking; The magic fishbone.

Booklist 27:146 D '30

"Written by a junior high school teacher in Cleveland, who has actually contrived, it would appear, to make the more or less regular production of plays an accepted part of the curriculum. Unfortunately her book doesn't tell how she did it! . . Miss Collins has much practical advice regarding simple methods of production, the choice of plays and so on, including the actual creation of dramas by the group, through the employment of poems and stories studied in the English courses." W. P. Eaton

+ Books p20 O 5 '30 280w

Boston Transcript p3 S 27 '30 200w

"This is, indeed, a pioneer book on a subject that is beginning to be talked about among progressive educators and to have tentative experimenting made in it here and there. And, as a pioneer book should, it mingles in most of its chapters exposition of theory and insistence upon conviction with account of things that have been done along its lines, practical explanation of how its ideas and convictions can be realized, and incidents and anecdotes to illuminate its arguments."

+ N Y Times p17 Ag 31 '30 350w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:91 D '30

St Louis 28:268 N '30

Sat R of Lit 7:273 O 25 '30 80w

COLLISON, WILSON. Murder in the rain. 293p $2 McBride

30-5408

"Barry Weldon, a famous actor and woman's man, is found stabbed through the heart with a butcher knife in his Fifth Avenue apartment —indicating the feminine touch. The crook may be Kyra Weldon, a society leader; Maisie Tate, a Broadway butterfly; Lefty Murgan, a bootlegger; the Unknown Man, or the Girl with Brown Eyes. Solved by Molly Varc, of 'The Daily Pictorial,' with a combination of good sense, good looks and woman's intuition."—Books

"An ingenious and well written mystery."

+ Bookm 71:xxx Mr '30 60w

"All in all, an enjoyable and well built baffler of the sane variety with cumulative interest and an exciting climax." Will Cuppy

+ Books p22 F 9 '30 130w

Boston Transcript p2 F 8 '30 700w

Reviewed by Bruce Rae

N Y Times p26 S 21 '30 180w

"The dialogue is excellent, and very convincing is the inside view of the working of the Police Dept." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:189 Ja 29 '30 70w

COLLOID symposium annual; ed. by Harry B. Weiser. v 7 300p $4.50 Wiley

541.345 Colloids (28-25694)

"This is the customary résumé in book form of the papers presented at the Seventh Symposium on Colloid Chemistry, which was held in June, 1929, at Johns Hopkins University."—Chem & Met Eng

Reviewed by A. B. Lamb

Am Chem Soc J 52:2156 My '30 200w

"The group of papers assembled forms one of the finest reference groups descriptive of the recent investigations and theoretical discussion on important phases of colloid phenomena. Because of the care exercised by the National Research Council colloid committee, which supervises the symposium, in the selection of speakers and papers, the group represents an exceptionally fine composite. All libraries which undertake to keep in touch with colloid literature at all should have the work."

+ Chem & Met Eng 37:311 My '30 100w

Reviewed by W. D. Bancroft

J Phys Chem 34:887 Ap '30 220w

COLUM, PADRAIC. Cross roads in Ireland. ² 375p il $3.50 Macmillan

914.15 Ireland—Description and travel. Ireland— Social life and customs 30-32128

The Irish poet Padraic Colum, spokesman for the mythical as well as the actual Ireland of today, follows in this volume of travel-essays the Romany patteran across the island of his birth. He knows intimately and records the landscapes, the folklore, and the customs of the villagers in Meath and Cavan, mid-Ulster, east Ulster, the vale of the Liffey, and in the south of Ireland.

Reviewed by C. W. Thompson

N Y Times p7 D 14 '30 1100w

"This is desultory wandering, but of an individual sort. Padraic Colum is a poet, but he is also a recorder. He is sensitive to the witchery of the soil, but he also is alert to human change. The story of past revolts he knows sympathetically and well. But no bitterness darkens his pages. He goes about inquiring, not brooding. And he has one other Irish trait that endears him to the reader. He is an excellent story-teller. Every now and then he reports the stories of the people, and something of his own method goes into the telling." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p9 D 9 '30 480w

"This is an enchanting book, quietly picturesque, lovingly written, full of simple poetry. The illustrations from the work of contemporary Irish painters and etchers are a perfect complement to the book." F. L. R.

+ Outlook 156:468 N 19 '30 150w

"The object is to see Ireland with an utter intimacy, its past in its present. Its bones are refleshed, folk long dead walk again, yet do not collide with 'things as they are.' You meet folk in the flesh, as well as the lore of them. The book, more especially in its latter half, is crammed with men and types alive and actual. You meet poets,—some of them you would not want to miss—and painters, as well as every kind of common person. There is a teeming life, and it is present. You begin to learn that Ireland is not all a past—is not merely a green moss in history—but has a human wealth of the present." H. C. Tracy

+ Sat R of Lit 7:452 D 13 '30 750w

COLUM, PADRAIC. Old pastures. 42p $1.50 ² Macmillan

821 30-29019

New poems by the Irish lyricist, expressing the poet's nostalgia for the simplicity and beauty of his native countryside. The collection contains several lyrics and ballads based upon Padraic Colum's heritage of Irish legend and folklore.

Booklist 27:196 Ja '31

"A fond and lovely piety marks much of the work of the Irish poet who wrote this little book. There are poems in his first volume of verse, 'Wild Earth,' that bring home even to the stranger a feeling for the Irish scene and for the men and women who people it. 'An Old Woman of the Roads,' 'A Poor Scholar of the Forties,' 'Interior,' 'Across the Door'—there is nothing in the present book to match these for vividness, though one catches echoes of the same kind of pathos in the piece called 'A Man Bereaved,' in 'Song of the Starlings' and in 'The Landing.'" Babette Deutsch

+ — Books p25 D 14 '30 320w

Boston Transcript p2 D 24 '30 150w

"Mr. Colum has chosen for his particular field, as distinct from Yeats or Stephens, the poetry of the folk and of the folk heart. When he writes from the American scene it is as one exiled here and remembering the starlings. In 'Old Pastures' he is again singing his best, or telling legends as they should be told. The essence of poetry is here, and without any striving." E. L. Walton

+ Nation 131:738 D 31 '30 480w

"Unfortunately these poems are rather tired in accent and imagination; the images are too familiar; and they lack that incisive perfection of technique which is almost a requisite of good minor verse. With the exception of 'The Bat' and 'Dublin Roads,' the poems in this volume are inferior to Mr. Colum's other poetry, and also to his prose version of the myths." Frederick Dupee

— + New Repub 65:170 D 24 '30 180w

"Padraic Colum's voice is the sweet voice of the born poet calling musically and wistfully to behold the softer, more subdued beauties in a world in which beauty alternates with ugliness and tears alternate with laughter. Colum is all Irish, all poet. Hence he is one of the few rare spirits in this day's writing world." Percy Hutchison

+ N Y Times p20 D 14 '30 200w

"Colum takes his place as one of the four outstanding Irish poets of our day. First stands William Butler Yeats, who is, indeed, a world genius. A lesser genius is James Stephens, his best of inimitable flavor, his work as a whole erratic but often of intense brilliance. We ourselves should rank Padraic Colum the third, even above 'Æ,' for poetry, though that versatile artist and philosopher will remain one of the geniuses of modern Ireland. To us Colum's poetry, by itself, is of more sinew and originality than 'Æ's,' save in the exceptional instance." W. R. Benét

+ Sat R of Lit 7:288 N 1 '30 750w

COLUM, PADRAIC. Orpheus: myths of the ² world; twenty engr. by Boris Artzybasheff. 327p $5 Macmillan

291 Mythology 30-25512

"Padraic Colum has taken all the mythologies of the world as his province. It is a panorama of cosmologies and gods and culture heroes, once the very stuff of faith and main articles of great religious creeds. . . They range from Babylon to the Indian pueblos, from the Icelandic gods to the Polynesian, tales as different as the Celtic from the Aztec. . . Of the major mythologies this volume has omitted only that of the Hebrews."—Books

Booklist 27:137 D '30

Reviewed by Kenneth White

Bookm 72:335 N '30 200w

"Mr. Colum samples in all the myths of seventeen peoples. The most that he can offer is a taste from brew after brew, following one another so rapidly that we have little opportunity to adjust ourselves to their diversity. He has done well, therefore, to give to all the tales a retelling which gives them a similarity of flavor which by no means exists in the originals. Dressed in the noble and mellifluent prose that Mr. Colum has made his own, not even the Kalebala and the Vedic hymns and Jamshid the Resplendent sound so very unlike. The illustrations by Artzybasheff are as decorative as pages can be made, and he has produced a set of designs that are superb in the handling of the art forms of a dozen peoples and yet all of them distinctively his own." Ruth Benedict

+ Books p5 N 9 '30 1150w

"Mr. Colum's handling of the narrative materials, and his selection of details (not an easy thing in such voluminous cycles as those of Apollo and Dionysos) is unusually creditable. The stories begin dramatically and proceed with ease and swiftness. And the inventions of his own imagination are often delightful." Frederick Dupee

COLUM, PADRAIC—Continued

+ New Repub 65:170 D 24 '30 650w

"'Orpheus' is a very noteworthy and praiseworthy collection. It puts within handy reach of all of us the truths of yesterday. They possess a surprising unity and coherence set beside the truths of today. Also they are, in most cases, more logically stated and more beautiful." Eugene Lohrke

+ N Y Evening Post p6d N 15 '30 550w

"No one was better fitted by temperament to pursue the labor of poetic research than Padraic Colum. It is as though one who was a natural singer had passed slowly through the dense forest of the world and, striking inanimate things such as trees and stones, had commanded them to give forth music and recollection. . . Artzybasheff's bold and somewhat startling pictures go hand in hand with this compendium of fanciful and terrible beauty—religion, as conceived from the beginning in the heart of any race, be it weak or strong. Such a collection should well repay the author for the trouble of getting it together. It is a crown upon his head!" Laura Benet

+ N Y Times p34 N 30 '30 1050w

"Through his art he has made a magnificent collection. Some of the stories have not been previously accessible. Few of them, certainly, have been so well told before." Clinton Simpson

+ N Y World p3e D 7 '30 420w

St Louis 28:288 D '30

Reviewed by Hartley Alexander
Sat R of Lit 7:360 N 22 '30 550w

COLVER, MRS ALICE MARY (ROSS). Hilltop house. 282p $2 Dodd
30-27758

A story of complicated lives and the relations between two families which came about when the aristocratic Warings of Virginia were transplanted to Vermont. It is mainly the story of Margaret Waring and the man she married, John Underwood, owner of Hilltop House.

Books p19 N 2 '30 150w

"After reading this story of the Warings and the Underwoods, the title seems quite inadequate to the splendid characterizations. It is more suggestive of a little girl's book, rather than the mature, fine piece of writing it is. . . There is one flaw in this fascinatingly told story—the young Joan is scarcely real. Her romance before college with Dr. Holliday is the one discordant note. It does not ring true amid the other very human elements." M. M.

+ — Boston Transcript p2 O 22 '30 500w

"There is no doubt that with 'Hilltop House' Mrs. Colver graduates from the innocuous, chatterbox style of her previous work, some as recent as 1929."

+ — N Y Times p7 O 19 '30 380w

"The author writes usually from fresh observation, creates passable characters, keeps her situations going well, and salts her narrative with humor—real humor. It is no small accomplishment to have caught the turns of New England speech in dialogue, and to have written prose descriptions so beautiful and lyrical. A little less reliance on hackneyed plot, a little less use of 'novelese,' and this could have been an exceedingly fine novel."

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:292 N 1 '30 100w

COLVER, MRS ALICE MARY (ROSS). Red-headed goddess. 309p $2 Dodd
29-19776

Lorraine Kent, spoiled darling of modern luxury, wanted adventure; and Dirk Leslie undertook to supply her with a little when he invited her for a ride in his plane—to Utah. But an accident to the plane while they are flying over the Arizona desert turns the adventure into a very real and dangerous one, of which a parachute jump, a blinding sandstorm, an imprisonment in an ancient cliff dwelling and a rescue of Lorraine from the hands of the Navajos are among the incidents.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p11 D 29 '29 100w

"The tale is told with thrilling suspense. . . Rich with beautiful descriptions of nature, it shows the author's knowledge of the country in which it is set."

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 2 '29 180w

COMISH, NEWEL HOWLAND. Coöperative marketing of agricultural products. 479p $3.50 Appleton

631.18 Farm produce—Marketing. Agriculture, Cooperative 29-18353

Professor Comish, who has been teaching coöperative marketing at Oregon state college for the past twelve years, has written a full discussion of the subject, giving the history, methods and problems connected with the marketing of a variety of typical farm products. Much concrete material is used by way of illustration and questions and problems are given at the end of each chapter.

"In a general work of this kind it would be difficult indeed to contribute much to the wealth of information already available upon this subject. However, Professor Comish has carefully gleaned the best from all these data, condensed it into 'meaty' form, and presented it in a clear and interesting manner. . . The book is to be highly recommended as a text for courses in coöperative marketing, for which purpose it was evidently primarily designed." R. F. Breyer

+ Ann Am Acad 148:300 Mr '30 280w

Booklist 26:105 D '29

"Professor Comish has treated the subject with the utmost thoroughness, examining its origins, its growth, and its present status. His survey of the field, historically and functionally, is commendably presented, and more than counterbalances the occasional lapses into classroom generalities."

+ — Books p16 N 3 '29 200w

Reviewed by George Soule
N Y Times p14 Ag 10 '30 450w

St Louis 28:131 My '30

Survey 64:109 Ap 15 '30 50w

Wis Lib Bul 25:369 N '29

COMSTOCK, ALZADA PECKHAM. Taxation in the modern state. (Longmans' economics ser.) 240p $2 Longmans

336.2 Taxation 29-10136

A description of modern tax systems since the war. Post-war theories of taxation, American and British income taxes, customs, and capital levies are among the topics covered.

"This book brings to our aid in the task of appraising post-bellum tax development a valuable collection of materials relating to the leading countries of Europe and North America. It must be admitted, I think, that the book represents a collection of materials, pieced together by running comment, rather than a well-rounded discussion of the whole subject implied in the title. From this point of view the material, while strong in some departments, is weak in others, the evidence has not been fully digested, and there are marks of superficial analysis and hasty writing." F. R. Fairchild

+ — Am Econ R 20:148 Mr '30 650w

"Students of government who are interested in learning the source of public revenues necessary to support governmental undertakings will find the book of much value."

+ Am Pol Sci R 23:1064 N '29 80w

Nature 124:721 N 9 '29 230w

Wis Lib Bul 25:368 N '29

COMSTOCK, HARRIET THERESA (SMITH) (MRS PHILIP COMSTOCK). Piper's price. 303p $2 Doubleday, Doran
29-22130

Joan Radcliffe kept the secret of a youthful indiscretion from Ken Grahame, the man she met some years later and married. Joan herself, had believed her child born dead—but this was only Grandmother Patricia's fabrication to protect Joan's future from scandal. Norman Grey, the child's father, learned the secret and confessed his knowledge to Joan at his death. Thereupon Joan faced the hardest task of her life—telling her husband the truth about her past.

Bookm 71:xv Je '30 70w

Books p27 D 8 '29 100w

"There is material enough here for a sizable trilogy; far too much for one brief tale. It leaves too many loose ends, with the result that both plot and characters are unconvincing."

— + Boston Transcript p5 F 1 '30 280w

Cleveland Open Shelf p61 Ap '30

"If any one cares to learn through the perusal of a competent but unimaginative novel 'what love cost a girl who kept her past a secret,' he will be interested in Harriet Comstock's latest euphemistic treatise on the realities of life. The plot is pleasantly knotted and, once the two hundred and fiftieth page is passed the urge comes upon one to stick it out to the end."

+ — N Y Times p25 F 16 '30 200w

CONDE, E. R. Scandal sheets; a novel based on the life of Pietro Aretino, the first yellow journalist. 375p $2 Watt, G. Howard

Aretino, Pietro—Fiction

"The life of Aretino of Arezzo was a mad succession of crime, of deeds of valor and of romance, a life of war and adventure regulated by no code save that of personal satisfaction. Drawing from that vast store of biographical wealth, the author has written what he is pleased to call a novel 'based on the life of the first yellow-journalist.' In it he has captured the spirit of the Italian Renaissance, or at least of those aspects of it in which Aretino interested himself."—Boston Transcript

"Mr. Condé, in his fictionized biography, has animated the scene by a skillful recapture of the mood and movement of life during the Renaissance. In the author's estimation Aretino was the yellow journalist of his time, quick to sense the prestige which his position gave him and not reluctant to exercise its power. He occupies the center of the stage in this crisp narrative in which romance and sinister plotting are duly blended."

+ Books p17 S 21 '30 130w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 16 '30 150w

"This novel, built largely of imagination, with a slender thread of truth behind it and much misunderstanding of the Renaissance, falls far short of its possibilities. . . The measure of the book historically can best be gauged by the frequent misspelling of names—errors that are not typographical, because often repeated, but obviously due to carelessness or ignorance."

— N Y Times p6 Je 29 '30 480w

CONDLIFFE, JOHN BELL. New Zealand in the making; a survey of economic and social development. 524p $5 Univ. of Chicago press [15s Allen, G.]

330.9931 New Zealand—Economic conditions. New Zealand—Social conditions. New Zealand—Politics and government [30-25376]

New Zealand's ninety-year experiment in democracy and state control is described and evaluated by the research secretary of the Institute of Pacific relations.

Reviewed by T. C. McCormick

Am J Soc 36:497 N '30 280w

Booklist 27:138 D '30

Books p10 Je 15 '30 150w

Reviewed by C. H. Grattan

Current Hist 32:823 Jl '30 800w

"Mr. Condliffe tells the country's story admirably from the viewpoint of an economist. He is perhaps a little niggardly in the credit or blame which he assigns to legislative experiments in the making of New Zealand. Agricultural efficiency rather than any ventures in state socialism has been the primary cause of New Zealand's prosperity, he thinks." Arthur Warner

+ Nation 131:129 Jl 30 950w

Nation and Ath 47:326 Je 7 '30 180w

"We have here an economic history of New Zealand from its settlement written by a Cambridge man who became Professor of Economics in the University of that country. Now from the vantage ground of a post in Honolulu he gives us a detached and very thorough survey of the social and political experiments and controversies of the community in which his teaching work was done. A book of the kind, as capably written and as unbiassed as this, has been overdue for years. . . Students of New Zealand economics will find this the book they have been wanting. It easily takes its place as the best general authority on its subject." W. P. Reeves

+ New Statesman 35:121 My 3 '30 1700w

"Dr. Condliffe is well fitted to present a complete picture of what has been achieved under conditions thus favorable to the hopes of our race. Crisp in style, precise in allusion to authorities, replete with statistics, shrewd in comment, we have here what, in effect, is a consular report on the greatest of all attempts on earth actually to realize the beatific vision. So studied, this volume is not only invaluable to the banker, the merchant, the diplomatist. It is a challenging footnote to life itself." P. W. Wilson

+ N Y Times p1 Jl 6 '30 180w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:13 Ag '30 230w

St Louis 28:205 S '30

"Professor Condliffe analyses the progress of the Maoris from the point of view of an economist. Nobody else has described so lucidly the various phases of the land controversy which, of course, intimately concerned the Maoris, but could not affect them without strong reactions upon the fortunes of the British settlers. Then Professor Condliffe takes us through all the New Zealand experiments in State Socialism."

+ Spec 144:711 Ap 26 '30 900w

"This careful and valuable work is from an economist with many years' acquaintance of New Zealand. It attempts, for the first time, a scientific account and appraisal of those economic phases which are so largely the history of New Zealand; it brings impartial inquiry to those social experiments for which New Zealand is known to the outer world; it casts an objective regard over the place of New Zealand in Imperial and international politics; and concludes with an appreciation not wholly favorable, of the country's present character that both corroborates and supplements Lord Bryce's opinion."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p619 Jl 31 '30 550w

CONGER, GEORGE PERRIGO. New views of evolution. (Philosophy for the layman ser.) 235p $2.50 (10s 6d) Macmillan

575 Evolution 29-19460

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"The sketchiness of treatment tends to impair the philosophical authority of the book. But in the chapter on philosophies of evolution this brevity becomes a virtue, since the reader can get a clear notion of what Spencer, Bergson, Lloyd Morgan, Smuts and others are driving at, by reading the skillful summaries of one who is professionally acquainted with the ponderous works of these thinkers." H. M. Parshley

CONGER, G. P.—Continued

+ — Books p18 Ja 19 '30 360w

Reviewed by N. M. Grier

Christian Century 47:337 Mr 12 '30 600w

Cleveland Open Shelf p57 Ap '30

"An invaluable book for the layman—meaning of course the layman in science and philosophy. Simple (as can be) in statement, clear and without confusing technical terms, it must at once be recognized as accurate, the product of a clear mind and therefore singularly valuable." S. B. Meeser

+ Crozer Q 7:251 Ap '30 380w

Pratt p16 spring '30

St Louis 28:35 F '30

CONNELL, RICHARD EDWARD. Ironies. 280p $2 Minton

30-22757

Humorous short stories on varied themes, with an individual, ironic touch. The one entitled a half dollar story was the winner of a $3,000 prize in Life's short story contest.

"'Ironies' is not altogether a funny book. There is too much underlying seriousness in it for that. It has the gay manner that we have come to associate with Mr. Connell's work, from its dedication through to its last word of advice about being a cat. Mr. Connell has the trick of telling a really shocking story with a light touch. He has great precision of technique and a deft way with the sudden ending." R. B. Sanborn

+ Books p6 Ag 31 '30 550w

Boston Transcript p5 N 19 '30 250w

"Commonly recognized as one of the best of our popular story-writers, Richard Connell provides eloquent testimony against the short story racket in his latest book, 'Ironies.' . . Mr. Connell's stories, although they have successfully taken the blindfold test with millions of satisfied users, simply do not satisfy in any permanent sense. That is because Mr. Connell, who almost always begins well with people, almost always ends badly with situations. He is faithful to his editors, but not to any vision of reality." Edwin Seaver

— + N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 30 '30 150w

"Mr. Connell writes in too broad and obvious terms to make his collected works altogether worth re-publication. He is distinguished by cleverness in plot construction, by a surefire type of humor and a rapidity of style which makes him better reading for the 5:15 commuter on his way to Paulding Manor, L. I., than for the average acquirer of books. It is a pity, for the very tricks which have given him a large and remunerative public have here contrived to rob him of the critical reward which comes to a man of his talents if he devote them to a shrewder and more critical study of the contemporary scene than is available in 'Ironies.'"

+ — N Y Times p6 S 7 '30 450w

CONNELLY, MARCUS COOK. Green pastures. 173p $2 Farrar [6s Gollancz]

812 30-16400

Marc Connelly's play is a fable based upon Roark Bradford's "Ol' Man Adam an' His Chillun." The plot is, in reality, a dramatization of Negro psychology and imagination; it is the biblical picture of Hebrew history and the Lord himself as seen by the illiterate southern Negro. Joy among the angels is represented by a heavenly Negro fish-fry, and God's office is that of a small-town Negro lawyer. The chief Bible scenes presented are of Adam and Eve, Noah and his Ark, Pharaoh's court, and Moses and Aaron leading the children of Israel to the Promised land.

Booklist 27:20 S '30

"The Green Pastures is unusual and notable in that it rouses simultaneously such strong impulses toward laughter and tears. . . Essential to this effect is that the audience should be more sophisticated than the people whose fancies are represented, for laughter and pity and tenderness spring from a sense of superior understanding, and are fundamentally the same as the laughter and pity and tenderness we feel for little children."

+ Bookm 71:340 Je '30 630w

Cath World 131:210 My '30 1300w

"A living, breathing work of art that is essentially religious." Fred Eastman

+ Christian Century 47:597 My 7 '30 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p72 My '30

"I've heard it charged that the critics of the New York press have tossed too many laurels in the direction of Marc Connelly and neglected Roark Bradford, who wrote 'Ol 'Man Adam an' His Chillun.' If 'The Green Pastures' were a straight dramatization it would still be true that much of its success upon the stage would in justice be allotted to the theatrical collaborator. Nothing marches straight from the printed page and by a mere turn of the head changes itself from narrative to drama. And 'The Green Pastures' is not a dramatization. Distinctly this is an adaptation. Mr. Bradford seems to have been interested almost exclusively in the humorous potentialities of Bible folklore told from a Negro point of view in Negro dialect. The agonizing, heartbreaking moments of the play are wholly Connelly. I do not hold that pathos is of necessity a higher artistic expression than the merely comic, but Connelly's contribution is better rounded. He has taken black loam and breathed upon it." Heywood Broun

+ Nation 130:415 Ap 9 '30 1100w

Reviewed by Lyle Donaghy

Nation and Ath 47:354 Je 14 '30 120w

Reviewed by E. H. Gilpin

+ Nation and Ath 47:564 Ag 2 '30 1250w

"We must try at the outset to gauge the credit that goes to Mr. Marc Connelly, who wrote 'The Green Pastures,' and to Mr. Roark Bradford, who wrote the stories from which the play arose. The basic interpretation of the Negro mind and spirit—the conception of God as a kind, all-clever, good-humored and indulgent father who likes life pleasant and people happy around him; the easy and casual business of the universe, the naive vision of things in general—is Mr. Bradford's. He, on the other hand, is the most fortunate man in the world to have these qualities so understood, so often, though not always, kept, so unhurriedly and yet firmly molded into a story, a genuine dramatic sequence, by Mr. Marc Connelly." Stark Young

+ New Repub 62:128 Mr 19 '30 1400w

"The first fact that struck me, on reading the play, was that the religion was crude, not through the limitations of the black race, but through the limitations of the white race. It was an African fancy in an American setting; but what made it narrow and prosaic was the American setting. All the time I have been reading this quaint and in many ways touching fantasy there has hovered at the back of my imagination some memory of that ancient Christian tradition, which set a black African, emblazoned with gold and gorgeous colours, riding high among the three great Kings who brought to Bethlehem the homage of the whole world. He was a purely popular figure; he was purely human: he did not need to be humanised by a high hat or a cigar. But it was of his own will, free as the wind, that he came up great and golden out of Africa; and he has never been a slave." G. K. Chesterton

New Statesman 35:sup vii My 10 '30 1050w

N Y Times p14 N 16 '30 180w

"It is a pageant and it must be read as such. As one reads it one has constantly to visualize it in terms of a spectacle on a stage. There are some intense dramatic moments in it. But they are the dramatic moments of pageantry. It is not a play in the full meaning of that word and it has therefore none of that pre-occupation with itself which makes a play such absorbing reading. It is neither literature nor a play. It is the prompt-book of a pageant. But withal, let me repeat again, a remarkably sustained and beautiful piece of work." W. D. Blake

N Y World p10m Ap 27 '30 950w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p13 My 13 '30 150w

Reviewed by F. R. Bellamy

Outlook 154:429 Mr 12 '30 600w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:49 Je '30

Pratt p28 autumn '30

St Louis 28:215 S '30

Sat R 150:57 Jl 12 '30 500w

"There has been no play in New York for years where the access to the deep emotions is so direct and sure. Mr. Connelly and Mr. Bradford are to be congratulated; but this is a triumph not so much for them as for the Bible. It is the poetry of the Bible that moves the audiences of 'The Green Pastures.' "

+ Sat R of Lit 6:837 Mr 22 '30 280w

Reviewed by Jonathan Daniels

Sat R of Lit 6:941 Ap 19 '30 300w

Sat R of Lit 7:462 D 13 '30 180w

"The reason for the great success of this play lies mainly in the natural sincerity of the feelings expressed and the perfect understanding with which the author has been able to present the play, while the arrangements of the dialogue, and the action following the line of a well-defined argument, illuminated by some incidents of eminent dramatic beauty, no doubt contributed to it." Hanns Vischer

+ Spec 144:981 Je 14 '30 800w

Spec 145:sup889 D 6 '30 80w

Reviewed by Leon Whipple

Survey 64:156 My 1 '30 650w

"The whole of it, which may seem in report to be a grotesque challenge to Christian susceptibilities, is informed by a simple graciousness that is its sufficient defense. If Mr. Connelly had swerved from his path as an artist to throw in objective comment, he might have made his work blasphemous and unpardonable. From this he has refrained. What we experience we experience consistently through the medium of a childlike, pious and ecstatic imagination."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p410 My 15 '30 550w

World Tomorrow 13:280 Je '30 260w

CONNELY, WILLARD. Brawny Wycherley; first master in English modern comedy. 352p il $3 (10s 6d) Scribner

B or 92 Wycherley, William 30-8861

The biography of an English playwright who wrote gay comedies and kept gay company in the dissolute days of the Stuart restoration.

"He has surrounded Wycherley here with all the color inherent in his character, and all the color it was possible to borrow from the amazingly colorful age in which he lived. Mr. Connely's style is glib, romantic, and popular. He has, in fact, sacrificed the results of a good deal of honest scholarship in order to secure the full and strikingly romantic effect of his narrative. His account of Wycherley's long quarrel with Pope is entertaining, but somewhat too baldly drawn. Mr. Connely has been swayed too far, has painted Wycherley entirely fair, and has withheld from the unhappy, ill-natured little spider, Alexander Pope, even the slender justice which was his due. A little additional sobriety might have increased vastly the value of what is, in any case, a swift and amusing account of Wycherley's career."

+ — Bookm 71:220 Ap '30 320w

"Willard Connely, in writing a sprightly life of Wycherley, couldn't quite resist the academic display of 'research,' and disfigures his pages with footnotes, mostly indicating where his authority for this or that statement came from. Who cares? If we trust him enough to read his book we trust him enough to take his research for granted. And we read all his book, in spite of the absurd footnotes. . . There are no such letters of Wycherley as exist in the diplomatic correspondence of George Etherege to give first-hand vividness to a biography. But Mr. Connely has brought his hero vividly to life, even without their aid." W. P. Eaton

+ — Books p16 Ap 27 '30 400w

"It is a pathetic, though entertaining, story of one whose wit made him the premier dramatist of his age, whom nothing could ever make a poet, but who might have made a man of himself if he had lived in a more decent age—or even in that age if he had not been so absurdly goodlooking." W. E. Garrison

Christian Century 47:433 Ap 2 '30 300w

Reviewed by D. A. Roberts

Nation 131:276 S 10 '30 230w

"Worked up, according to the modern canons, into pseudo-fiction, with its high lights brightened and its sentiment stressed, it certainly evokes a period picture of vitality. One may, without insult, call it clever." Sylva Norman

+ Nation and Ath 47:250 My 24 '30 70w

"Mr. Connely in his 'Brawny Wycherley' conforms to only one of the canons of modern biography, the one that commands the light touch. His prose is crisp and incisive, and if at times his wit is stiffly self-conscious, this is in the tradition of the man he writes about. In other respects the book is admirably in the older fashion. Its grace is not the result of an absence of solidity, for Mr. Connely exhibits a thorough scholarship." Lionel Trilling

+ New Repub 63:52 My 28 '30 230w

New Statesman 35:160 My 10 '30 130w

"His biographer is a trifle too kind to his subject. Willard Connely gives us a Wycherley more amiable and romantic than he was. Yet in spite of this, we get an exceptionally brilliant life-picture of the man who was the master of the Restoration comedy of manners till Congreve rose to surpass him, and whose tragedy was that he long outlived the times when libertinism was looked on as essential to the character of a wit and gentleman." F. H. M.

+ — N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 29 '30 150w

"This new biography brings forward much new material and a correcting perspective. It is soundly based on research and well documented, without too much impeding of a narrative that portrays Wycherley from his youth in France to his death and burial in old St. Paul's." Edwin Clark

+ N Y Times p2 My 4 '30 1050w

"Readable and delightful book. . . Mr. Connely has gone into his subject exhaustively. He has visited all the places still in existence where Wycherley was wont to consort, and has ransacked the docket books and prison records in his search for accurate material. But he has been almost too generous with his footnotes." Bellamy Partridge

+ — N Y World p10m Ap 20 '30 480w

Outlook 155:24 My 7 '30 20w

St Louis 28:218 S '30

Sat R 149:829 Je 28 '30 250w

"From first to last, Mr. Connely's zestful and delightful Restoration biography is unconventional. He is at his best in recapturing the fine flavor of Restoration life and talk." G. H. Nettleton

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1066 My 24 '30 850w

Times [London] Lit Sup p461 My 29 '30 200w

"Mr. Connely never makes the mistake of stating crude facts without developing their full emotional significance. As a result his book has the readable quality of the new biographies, but not their weakness for fictitious rather than historical subject matter." H. T. Perry

+ Yale R n s 20:420 winter '31 550w

CONNINGTON, JOHN JERVIS, pseud. See Stewart, A. W.

CONNOLLY, JAMES BRENDAN. Gloucestermen; stories of the fishing fleet. 457p $2.50 Scribner
30-8267

A collection in one volume of the author's sea stories of the Gloucester fishing fleet, including three stories never before published. Contents: A chase overnight; Reykjavik to Gloucester; Echo o' the morn; Truth of the Cromwell; Price o' fish; The trawler; Drawn shutters; Dan Magee: white hope; Dory mates; Loose oilskins; Georges Shoals; Home bound, the Nannie O; The harsh word; North East bar; Strategy and seamanship; A man dies; Beyond the horizon; Fair wishes; Between shipments; Seizure of the Aurora Borealis; Clancy; The blasphemer; Americanization of Roll Down Joe; The ice dogs; Rollin' home, the Mornin' Glory; Peter steps ashore; No news value.

Booklist 26:405 Jl '30
Boston Transcript p2 My 28 '30 200w
Cleveland Open Shelf p80 My '30
Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 29 '30 180w
Reviewed by Percy Hutchison
N Y Times p2 Mr 30 '30 1350w
Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:547 Ap 2 '30 30w
Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 27 '30 200w

CONNOR, RALPH, pseud. See Gordon, C. W.

CONQUEST, JOAN (MRS LEONARD COOKE). The sale. 314p $2 Macaulay [7s 6d Laurie]
30-7305

Elinor Still, under deep provocation, sold her unborn child to the wealthy Bramly Lowth. When twins were born, a boy and a girl, Lowth took the boy as his heir and departed. Years later the twins met, ignorant of their relation and disaster resulted. The scene is an island off the coast of the Malay Peninsula.

Books p20 Ap 13 '30 170w

"This is a novel written with all the raciness, defiance, analysis, boldness and color of modern fiction. It contains rare moments of passion and dazzling color. The plot is unusual. It is an extraordinarily vivid, human, realistic novel."
+ Boston Transcript p3 Ap 18 '30 150w

"In spite of the melodramatic nature of the events, and the somewhat jerky style in which the novel is written, the story is absorbing, the action swift and the outcome arrived at logically. From the beginning the reader realizes the impending doom, and as the story progresses the conclusion becomes inevitable."
+ N Y Times p24 Mr 30 '30 230w

"Whatever criticism may be levelled at Miss Conquest's methods it is to her credit that her imagination and strong dramatic sense carry her through situations which otherwise would not only be impossible but ludicrous."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p104 F 6 '30 200w

CONROY, JOSEPH P. Arnold Damen; a chapter in the making of Chicago. 329p $2.25 Benziger
B or 92 Damen, Arnold 30-4730

The biography of Father Damen, much loved pastor of the Parish of the Holy family in Chicago's west side, and devoted missionary who travelled over the country conducting missions and retreats.

"This is a well-written and sympathetic biography of a rare soul and saint, a man who gave his life for his fellow men and for the cause of his church. It is a story of rare appeal and power." R. K. M.
+ Boston Transcript p5 Mr 15 '30 800w
Cath World 131:380 Je '30 120w

CONSTANTIN-WEYER, MAURICE. Half-breed. 310p $2 Macaulay
30-7304

Maurice Constantin-Weyer, winner of the Goncourt prize with his novel, A Man Scans his Past, presents in this novel an episode in French-Canadian history. It is the story of Louis Riel, a half-breed, who led two rebellions against the Canadian government, one in 1869, and one in 1885. Riel, a handsome man, a virile hunter and fighter, and a chivalrous lover, makes a highly romantic figure altho his exploits were far from idealistic, his revolts without great consequence, and his life brought to an ignominious end on the gallows.

Bookm 71:ix Jl '30 100w

" 'The Half-breed' is the work of an intelligent man. It is not one of those silly fairy tales about noble woodsmen, a holy Hudson's Bay Company and ever-righteous justice. It is a masculine book. Constantin-Weyer is a realist. His clear statement, his wholesome vulgarity, his direct attack on the main point are so refreshingly masculine that to read 'The Half-breed' is like shaking a big man's hand and squatting down with him beside a campfire to listen to a good story well told."
+ Books p17 Je 29 '30 400w
N Y Times p8 My 11 '30 700w

"The book is an unusual and interesting one, especially coming as it does from a Frenchman who has wandered far afield in the search for material, and, in this case at least, brought home something worth having. The style is also exceptional, recalling Kipling rather than Gallic models and yet succeeding in avoiding the customary clichés of most romances of the Northwest." Theodore Purdy, Jr.
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1140 Je 21 '30 350w

CONTEMPORARY American philosophy; personal statements; ed. by George P. Adams and William Pepperell Montague. (Lib. of philosophy) 2v 450;447p ea $6 Macmillan [ea 16s Allen, G.]
191 Philosophy, American [30-15563]

"Designed as a companion work to 'Contemporary British Philosophy,' published in 1924, the present volumes contain the intellectual autobiographies of thirty-four present or quondam professors of philosophy. Each contributor was asked to state his principal philosophic beliefs, the reasons supporting them, and the manner in which he had reached them."—Nation

Booklist 27:48 O '30
Reviewed by Irwin Edman
Books p1 Je 29 '30 2700w
Boston Transcript p1 Ag 16 '30 700w

"On the whole this bewildering assemblage of intellectual autobiographies is compelling, enchanting, brilliant." D. D. Zuver
+ Churchman p17 Ag 2 '30 500w

"It will probably be the fate of these two volumes to repose quietly on the shelves of reference libraries there to be dusted and consulted occasionally by a few earnest students and specialists. This will be regrettable for they are astonishingly rich in entertainment and stimulation. . . When one actually begins to read one finds this volume full of fascinating human documents and admirably compact arguments; it is probable that even the minor figures have here written more interestingly than they have anywhere else. Even when one is not interested in a man's opinions, one may still be interested in how he came to hold them." Henry Hazlitt
+ Nation 131:19 Jl 2 '30 1400w

"As a whole the impression remains that compared with contemporary philosophy abroad, the interests of professional American philosophy suffer from narrowness and a certain intellectual provincialism. Excepting Tufts, Cohen, Dewey and a few of the idealists, none of the contributors seems to realize how important present-day struggles in industry and politics are for ethical theory. The most impressive essays in the volume, providing just enough autobiographical detail to lend the confession of philosophic faith point and grace, are those by Santayana, Woodbridge, M. R. Cohen, E. A. Singer and W. G. Everett." Sidney Hook

New Repub 63:237 Jl 16 '30 2450w

New Statesman 35:598 Ag 16 '30 550w

"The two volumes of 'Contemporary American Philosophy: Personal Statements,' are unusual in character and extraordinarily interesting to read because, in the case of each contributor to the work, a somewhat autobiographical account is combined with a summary of doctrine. . . For philosophical reference, as well as for the sense it gives of the personalities and the temper of present-day American philosophical thought, it is a publication of unique importance." Axton Clark
N Y Times p10 Jl 13 '30 1480w

"There is little reason to complain of the philosophers selected by the editors. All the intellects included deserve to be found there. We regret, however, the absence of one who has exercised and still exercises a great influence on realist philosophy and we cannot understand why he has not been included. The exclusion of Edwin B. Holt, author of two such books like the Concept of Consciousness and the Freudian Wish, undoubtedly requires an explanation." Rubin Gotesky
+ — Outlook 155:468 Jl 23 '30 700w

Reviewed by J. C. Hardwick
Sat R 150:233 Ag 23 '30 1150w

"The autobiographical aspect of the essays is at times quite fascinating. Indeed it is to be regretted that all the writers did not give more space to this personal feature of the purpose that prompted the editing of the volumes; for the systematic definition of the views to which the various men have come could be gathered from their other articles and books. Yet undoubtedly readers of 'Contemporary American Philosophy' will find an adequate summary of the state of academic philosophy in this country today, at least so far as the older philosophers are concerned." S. P. Lamprecht
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1207 Jl 19 '30 1280w

COOK, MRS ELSIE THORNTON-. See Thornton-Cook, E.

COOK, JOE. True reason why I will not imitate four Hawaiians. 64p il $1 Simon & Schuster
817 30-32864

A short but hilarious account of the real reason behind his absolute refusal to imitate four Hawaiians, by Joe Cook of vaudeville fame. Three Hawaiians Joe can and will imitate, but four—never.

"His tiny book of roughneck, cuckoo and unclassified fun contains a complete humanist novel, good stories about cornflakes, cinnamon and baseball, a game of Tick-Tack-Toe, a map showing the most direct route from Hartford to Providence via Willimantic and the flat statement that 'Italy produces the majority of Italians.' "
+ Books p12 My 4 '30 100w

"Mr. Cook's humor consists of outgivings such as a March hare might utter if empowered with speech. His vagaries have no beginning, middle or end, but there is something comic about them. His style is so original that it is difficult to imagine any one so daring as to imitate it."
+ Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 25 '30 300w

COOLBRITH, INA DONNA. Wings of sunset. 215p $2.50 Houghton
811 29-25954

This posthumous volume of verse by the much loved California poet contains, among the one hundred and sixteen poems included, twelve which originally appeared in Songs from the Golden Gate. A memoir of the poet by Charles Phillips prefaces the collection.

Booklist 26:194 F '30

"Ina Coolbrith was not a great poet, in fact she scarcely reached the level of achievement that may be credited to a score of American women poets; but there is no doubt that she belongs among the few whose lives being infinitely rich and dominant, were the more conspicuous because framed with song." W. S. B.
+ — Boston Transcript p2 Ja 8 '30 550w
Cleveland Open Shelf p92 Je '30
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:26 Mr '30

"There seems to be no doubt that Ina Coolbrith has not yet been accorded her due place in American poetry. Geographical isolation and infrequent publication prevented her from competing with the crowd of minor poets who occupied the interregnum between the New England and the Chicago dynasties. No one would think of proposing her as a rival for the lonely independence of Emily Dickinson, but among the other women poets she deserves a niche. When the anthologies include Lizette Woodworth Reese and Edith M. Thomas, they should not omit Ina Coolbrith." Lionel Stevenson
+ Sat R of Lit 6:992 Ap 26 '30 1200w
Wis Lib Bul 26:102 Mr '30

COOLEY, ROBERT LAWRENCE; RODGERS, ROBERT HENRY; and BELMAN, HARRY S. My life work; building and metal trades. (McGraw-Hill vocational texts) 218p il $1.75 McGraw 371.425 Occupations. Metal-work. Building trades 30-14485

"Studies in a group of occupations which tell of the tools, the conditions of work, necessary qualifications, training, etc." (Pratt) Contents: Part 1, Building trades—carpenter, bricklayer, plumber, electrician, painter and decorator, sheet-metal worker, plasterer, steamfitter, structural iron worker; Part 2, Metal trades—draftsman, pattern-maker, molder and coremaker, machinist, tool and dyemaker, sheet-metal workers, forgeman, welder, boilermaker.

Booklist 27:92 N '30
Pratt p12 autumn '30

COOLEY, ROBERT LAWRENCE; RODGERS, ROBERT HENRY; and BELMAN, HARRY S. My life work; representative industries. (McGraw-Hill vocational texts) 241p il $1.75 McGraw
371.425 Occupations. Industrial arts 30-17496

Contents: The hosiery industry; The baking industry; The candy industry; The shoe industry; The electrical industry; The automobile industry; The telephone industry.

Booklist 27:95 N '30
St Louis 28:237 O '30

COOLEY, ROSSA BELLE. School acres; an adventure in rural education; illustrated with crayons from life by Winold Reiss; with an introd. by Paul U. Kellogg. 166p il $2.50 Yale univ. press
371.974 Negroes—Education. Penn normal, industrial and agricultural school, St Helena island, S.C. 30-32551

An account of the methods, aims and achievements of Penn school, the first southern Negro school, opened in the early sixties, located on the island of St Helena off the coast of South Carolina. In the first section of the book Miss Cooley tells of the functioning of the school before she and her associates went there to introduce modern educational methods. The latter chapters trace the history of the school up to now.

Boston Transcript p3 D 27 '30 600w
N Y Times p4 D 7 '30 300w

"Miss Cooley has blended with her narrative a record of practical experience that will be of help to race leaders and rural educators everywhere. Moreover she offers a new approach to the urban teacher or civic leader who would re-

COOLEY, R. B.—Continued
align our work for children to the far more rapid changes of our industrial centers." P. U. Kellogg
+ Survey 65:287 D 1 '30 500w

COOLIDGE, ALBERT SPRAGUE. Building a model railroad. 183p il $2 Macmillan
625 Railroads—Models 29-21897

These directions, illustrated with photographs and diagrams, for building a model railroad are based upon work done by the children's mechanics club of the Shady Hill school, Cambridge, Mass.

Booklist 26:236 Mr '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p36 Mr '30
N Y New Tech Bks 15:8 Ja '30
Reviewed by O. M. Fuller
N Y World p11m Mr 9 '30 80w

COONS, ARTHUR GARDINER. Foreign public debt of China. 251p $3 Press of the Univ. of Pa. [12s 6d Oxford]
336.51 Debts, Public—China. Finance—China. China—Commerce 30-14360

A study of the foreign financial obligations incurred by the Chinese government, from 1895, and of China's present as well as potential capacity to meet these obligations.

"This volume contains not only a comprehensive and precise description of the various loans to the Chinese government by foreigners, but also a careful analysis of the existing and potential financial resources of that government." A. N. H.
+ Am Pol Sci R 24:789 Ag '30 220w
Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 83:14 Ja '31 80w

"For students of Far Eastern economics this detailed balance-sheet will prove of great value."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p759 S 25 '30 250w

COOPER, CHARLES CHAMPLIN, ed. Religion and the modern mind. 227p $2 Harper
204 Religion 29-25337

A series of addresses given before the "Hungry Club" in Pittsburgh. Contents: An adventure in religion, by C. C. Cooper; Religion from the standpoint of agnosticism, by H. E. Barnes; Religion from the standpoint of science, by H. D. Curtis; Religion from the standpoint of psychology, by E. S. Ames; Religion from the standpoint of philosophy, by M. R. Gabbert; Religion from the standpoint of the ethical culture movement, by J. L. Elliott; Religion from the standpoint of Judaism, by S. H. Goldenson; Religion from the standpoint of Christianity, by F. J. McConnell.

Booklist 26:260 Ap '30

"This book is fruitful because it is a free endeavor to find out just what religion means today. The writers have nothing to defend, nothing to apologize for, nothing to reinterpret and restore. They are engaged in the job of finding truth, regardless of any sacred or even profane tradition. What they want is not to revive the old but only to find the new. Hence a book which is alive with prophecy!" J. H. Holmes
+ Books p25 Ja 26 '30 180w
Christian Century 47:598 My 7 '30 250w
Reviewed by R. E. E. Harkness
Crozer Q 7:107 Ja '30 500w
Reviewed by E. B. Chaffee
Outlook 153:638 D 18 '29 100w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:34 Ap '30
St Louis 28:64 Mr '30
Reviewed by C. S. Brown
Survey 63:538 F 1 '30 600w
Reviewed by T. K. Noss
World Tomorrow 13:184 Ap '30 450w

COOPER, COURTNEY RYLEY. Caged. 293p $2 Little 30-10080

Story of circus life and circus love which tells of a country boy who came to New York to win fame with his accordion and got tricked into the underworld of gangsters and racketeers.

Boston Transcript p3 My 17 '30 250w
N Y Times p23 My 25 '30 140w

"The story is readable, but not especially enthralling and one's feeling is that possibly Mr. Cooper's best evidence of expression lies more with real wild animals than with the human breed developed in recent years."
N Y World p3e N 2 '30 100w

COOPER, COURTNEY RYLEY. Go north, young man! 271p il $2.50 Little 917.1 Canada—Economic conditions. Canada—Description and travel. Frontier and pioneer life—Canada 29-21505

The author describes the modern conquest of the frozen North, which the aeroplane has largely made possible. The planes carry modern prospectors and mining engineers, mail, freight, and supplies to the outposts of civilization. Mr Cooper is especially enthusiastic concerning the rich economic future of the north country.

Booklist 26:232 Mr '30

"History is being made in northwestern Ontario, and 'Go North, Young Man!' is a vivid recital of some of the picturesque and thrilling details."
+ Books p15 F 23 '30 220w

"Tersely written in Mr. Cooper's readable and entertaining style, 'Go North, Young Man' describes the growth of an empire that is fascinating beyond words." T. S.
+ Boston Transcript p3 Ja 18 '30 300w
Cleveland Open Shelf p29 F '30

"Mr. Cooper is the first to give to American readers a comprehensive idea of what is going on in the further regions of our neighbor to the north. He has done it with a very vivid pen, a keen sense of good story, an eager interest in the human appeal of the heroic adventure of it all and a very considerable knowledge of its economic significance."
+ N Y Times p11 O 13 '29 600w
Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 19 '30 450w
Wis Lib Bul 26:66 F '30

COOPER, LETTICE ULPHA. Ship of truth. 313p $2.50 Little [7s 6d Hodder] 30-10089

"The story of a clergyman who loses his faith in church and finds it again in God's great out-of-doors. . . Clement Dyson is settled in a humble parish in his own Yorkshire. He feels compelled to resign because he discovers that authority, religious and secular, is neither reasonable nor humane. He leaves his wife and children, goes to London to work, undergoes an innocent love experience, falls ill and, recovering, takes a job in a stone quarry where he finds his faith again."—Outlook

Booklist 27:28 S '30
Books p13 Je 8 '30 150w
Boston Transcript p2 Ag 13 '30 500w

"A very sincere piece of work done with professional skill."
+ Christian Century 47:598 My 7 '30 150w
Reviewed by E. J. Cleveland
Churchman p5 Jl 26 '30 80w
Cleveland Open Shelf p95 Je '30

"The theme is no new one, but the treatment avoids the faults which usually mar its presentation in fiction. It is free from either propaganda or sensationalism. The various characters are portrayed in a way that shows that their author really understands them; she loves them and so they live in her pages. The book is inspired throughout by a transparent and beautiful sincerity." L. H.

+ Living Church 83:124 My 24 '30 200w

"Hardly a distinguished piece of work, it has, nevertheless a certain warmth and candor. Unfortunately, Miss Cooper is quite incapable of conveying the torture and bitter uncertainty through which her clergyman must have passed before he broke with the church. She tells her tale competently and pleasantly, but she never really comes to grips with the shattering experience which she describes." E. H. W.
+ — New Repub 63:27 My 21 '30 140w

"The greater part of the book is given over to religious discussions and the statements of various people concerning their personal beliefs and disbeliefs. The human elements, however, are much better done."
— + N Y Times p9 Ap 27 '30 400w

"The cause of Clement Dyson's actual reconversion is somewhat vague. A good many conversations held by different characters on religion or rather on man's spiritual needs help to point the moral of the story. The Ship of Truth is competently written but not particularly impressive."
— + Outlook 154:589 Ap 9 '30 200w

"It is a great pity that, although there are innumerable introspective soliloquies the reader is never given an insight as to the real impetus for Clement's belief or disbelief. Again the attempt at the end to introduce a mystic element into the reinstatement of belief verges on the sentimental. Yet the book is well-written, without religious bias, and certainly it stimulates both conjecture and discussion." K. G. David
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1073 My 24 '30 550w
Springf'd Republican p5e Ag 3 '30 600w
Times [London] Lit Sup p372 My 1 '30 220w

COOPER, PAUL FENIMORE. Tal; his marvelous adventures with Noom-Zor-Noom. 305p il $2.50 Morrow [7s 6d Gollancz]
29-19009

"Tal is the story of a little boy with a love of adventure. In the sixteen stories of this book—told to Tal by old Noom-zor-Noom in order to open the Golden Door—there is the magic of travel in far lands, and the glamour and the adventure of it."—Bookm

Booklist 26:285 Ap '30

"Tal brings a new writer to the ranks of those who are doing distinguished writing for boys and girls." Helen Ferris
Bookm 70:309 N '29 80w

" 'Tal' might have had a more immediate appeal to his own particular audience of younger children if his story could have been given convincing interpretation in color. But even without it the author is so graphic as to give evidence that a talented young American has written a children's book of exceptional quality." A. C. Moore
+ Books p8 S 8 '29 850w
Cleveland Open Shelf p132 N '29
New Statesman 36:sup xvi D 6 '30 100w

" 'Tal' is an elaborately wrought wonder tale—almost too elaborate. I doubt if a child young enough to enjoy it would be old enough to read it to himself." Elizabeth Woodbridge
Sat R of Lit 6:575 D 14 '29 100w
Times [London] Lit Sup p979 N 20 '30 180w
Wis Lib Bul 26:107 Mr '30

COOPER, VIOLA IRENE. Windjamming to Fiji. 295p il $4 Henkle
910 Voyages and travel. Seafaring life
29-24615

Two adventurous American girls, Viola Cooper and Jean Schoen, sail as midshipmen on the windjammer Bougainville, captained by L. Chateauvieux, on the ship's last voyage from Vancouver to New Caledonia in the Hebrides. Miss Cooper keeps the ship's log, and she recounts also the numerous incidents of interest and the dramatic episodes which occur on the voyage.

Booklist 26:232 Mr '30

"For pure adventure you could hardly imagine anything more juicy. But the writing has drained away the glamor. With such a fruitful start, little remains except a husk of amateurish descriptive banality. Miss Cooper does not let these tropical caprices of the weather emerge of themselves; she daubs at them with a heavy brush, piling color on color, shape on shape. You are left wistfully wishing that Miss Viola Cooper were as able a writer as she is an indomitable sailor."
— + Books p10 Ja 12 '30 230w

"Miss Cooper writes as unaffectedly as enthusiastically. She describes vividly the life on shipboard, as the Bougainville sailed, sometimes swiftly and sometimes slowly over the watery trail from Vancouver to Suva. We felt an almost personal interest in the two wholesomely adventurous 'middies,' before many leagues of blue water had been sailed. And as for the skipper—the reader will share their respect, even affection for him." F. B.
+ Boston Transcript p7 D 4 '29 900w
Cleveland Open Shelf p11 Ja '30

"The author is a good observer of the minutiæ of life aboard ship. The best parts of her book are those in which she records the conversation of the delightful skipper, Captain Chateauvieux; the savage steward, Louis, and the others of the ship's company or describes the routine of life on a sailing vessel. Unfortunately, she is not a good observer in a larger sense and when she permits her book to become subjective, she discloses the sad truth that an adventurous spirit cannot quite compensate for an unoriginal mind." M. L.
+ — N Y Evening Post p6s Ja 4 '30 120w

"A graphic, lively narrative which a good many kinds of people will find very interesting —such as those who delight in ocean trips and think they would enjoy such a long sojourn as this on the sea, and those who delight in adventure, and from first page to last will be envious of the good luck of these two girls, and those who delight in unhackneyed, zestful description of unusual experiences."
+ N Y Times p32 F 16 '30 420w

COPPARD, ALFRED EDGAR. Pink furniture; a tale for lovely children with noble natures. 251p il $2.50 (7s 6d) Cape
30-25188

A sophisticated fantasy for children, in which a little boy named Toby Tottel sets out to see the world, and has adventures very much like those of Alice in Wonderland.

"Although his incessant shafts will fly over the children's heads, the story holds a great deal for certain young readers and has high moments of entertainment for adults." K. G. Landon
+ Bookm 72:247 N '30 80w

"This children's book is certainly a good story, but it will need a sophisticated child to appreciate it. . . 'Pink Furniture,' with its sudden twists in style, may prove slightly too much even for the modern child, but it is a book that the modern parent might more than half enjoy reading aloud."
+ Nation and Ath 47:92 Ap 19 '30 120w

"The reviewer has no hesitation in his judgment: without giving away the secret of a single one of [these adventures] he can only describe them as immense, incredibly rich, witty, racy and unexpected, full of that strong colouring and irresponsible imagery that is truly and only Coppardian."
+ New Statesman 35:56 Ap 19 '30 480w

Reviewed by Ruth Seinfel
N Y Evening Post p7d N 15 '30 80w
Pratt p37 autumn '30

COPPARD, A. E.—Continued

"Mr. Coppard can write with a wealth of amusing fancy. Our adult perusal of the book found its multifarious nonsense palling somewhat, however, before we were through. All such books as Mr, Coppard's have eventually to stand the test of comparison with 'Alice' and even the best of them come off rather badly. For queer characters, unflagging invention, and pleasing interpersed nonsense rhymes, 'Pink Furniture' may be commended. And it is, of course, better written than the average, for it is written by a genuine poet, but we found it runs to too great a length for the weight of its matter. And we simply did not care for the style of Nancy Burkart Gurney's illustrations. Still there is much writing in it that is most engaging."

— + Sat R of Lit 7:344 N 15 '30 380w

"Something decidedly different from anything hitherto seen in the way of 'juvenile' literature. This magic-maker dares to be facetious—he dares to be unmistakably satirical at the expense of all solemn literary gentlemen—he dares to be preposterously nonsensical—in fact, he does absolutely as he likes, caring not a fig for anybody but his hero, young Mr. Toby Tottel. And what a world he creates for this seeker of Pink Furniture to wander in!"

+ Spec 144:sup629 Ap 12 '30 650w

"Children will criticize Mr. Coppard unmercifully for not keeping to the point (whatever that may be) of conventional wonder stories; but they will surely be delighted by the fantastic and yet homely characters which spring up, for every chapter is a box of surprises and hits the very lid of fantasy . . . In the delightful logicality of absurd dialogues and merry verse Mr. Coppard gives himself full scope for wit and fancy."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p316 Ap 10 '30 500w

CORBETT, ELIZABETH F. "If it takes all summer"; the life-story of Ulysses Grant. 319p $2.50 Stokes

Grant, Ulysses Simpson—Fiction 30-5696

The method used in this biography is that of dialogue sequence. General Grant's life-story is presented by means of conversations with real characters—people of his day.

"Grant cannot be said to enjoy a reputation for either public or private speech. One thinks of him as a man of action and few words. The attempt, therefore, to make him live by some 100 episodes in dialogue form falls short of success simply because it strikes one as a fabrication not in harmony with the man himself. Grant seems to be made a mere mouthpiece responding to cues. Another defect in this sort of biography is its inability to present events in their relative importance."

— Books p10 Ap 27 '30 230w

"After Woodward's 'Meet General Grant,' Stryker's 'Andrew Johnson' and Bower's 'Tragic Era,' it falls somewhat flat. And this despite its laudable patriotic purpose of having the General explain or extenuate himself out of anything and everything that might be suspected of shadowing the one hundred precentness of his fame." F. H. M.

— N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 8 '30 100w

"Historians will doubtless pick flaws in this method of novelizing biography—undoubtedly it is difficult to give proper emphasis to the more important events, but it must be conceded that out of these hundred conversations emerges distinctly the figure of a strong man, and a vitally interesting one."

+ — N Y Times p21 My 11 '30 380w

CORBIN, JOHN. Unknown Washington; biographic origins of the republic. 454p $4 (15s) Scribner

B or 92 Washington, George 30-10799

An attempt to solve the traditional enigma of Washington's personality has resulted in a new interpretation of the first president. Mr Corbin points out that the man's shy reserve was only a mask, a self-imposed disciplinary measure used to cover a hot-tempered, passionate nature. The biographer, by way of illustrating his point, enlarges upon Washington's love for Sally Fairfax, the wife of his neighbor and friend, and the influence of her character upon him. Of greater importance to historians, however, is the biographer's study of Washington's contribution to the formation of the Constitution, and his relationship to Jefferson and Hamilton in that connection.

"The volume is a product of a good deal of hard work. The author has plowed, at times fairly deeply, into the subsoil, and has displayed a great reluctance to follow the furrows made by previous workers. But the result of these conscientious labors is not likely to be entirely satisfying to the reader. The reviewer, after a good many hours of reading and examining its pages, put down the volume with a feeling of weariness and defeat. Another more astute reader may extort its secrets and force it to exude its juices. Why should one be compelled to call his strongest muscles into play? Even clarity of style is often absent, and this absence is the more distressing because the author can write clearly if he will."

— + Am Hist R 36:166 O '30 800w

Am Pol Sci R 24:1066 N '30 120w

Booklist 27:155 D '30

"Mr. Corbin has wisely not attempted to rework the ground already adequately tilled. He has begun his investigation, instead, at the point where other biographers have left off, and the result is a brilliant piece of exposition and interpretation."

+ Bookm 71:334 Je '30 350w

Reviewed by Avery Craven

Books p4 Je 15 '30 1350w

Boston Transcript p2 My 21 '30 750w

Cath World 131:629 Ag '30 380w

"Mr. Corbin has, at last, given us a fair account of the part played by the first President in the formation of the Federal Government of the United States. And he has set forth that part with a care and discrimination refreshing after the many pages written in the attempt to prove that the first President was, after all, no statesman. . . One might wish that Mr. Corbin had confined his research and his efforts to this aspect of Washington's life. But he has not. Like others, he has taken to speculation, and once away from his documents, his work leaves much to be desired. There are other defects, sufficient to prevent this book from being the long-hoped-for definitive biography. But no future biographer can disregard the proof offered here of Washington's right to be ranked among the world's great statesmen." F. H. A.

+ — Christian Science Monitor p5 S 6 '30 420w

"Mr. Corbin's whole contribution to the truth about Washington is 'humanly warm, and decent and wise' and 'highly civilized.' If in the course of his very carefully reasoned and documented theses he handles some of our more recent historians roughly, they have previously handled their predecessors as roughly. . . Those whom he has controverted will naturally disagree with Mr. Corbin's criticisms and his conclusions, but they will recognize his earnestness and his scholarship. His book is therefore of signal importance in the history of the founders of this government." Rupert Hughes

+ Current Hist 32:418 Je '30 1000w

Nation 131:187 Ag 13 '30 350w

"A great and generous Washington is here—a titan standing always above the squirm and squall of his times. Mr. Corbin has done a service and a finely tempered piece of research. To read it is to travel again through a country which one has seen before only in the dusk and where now a spread light has come upon the things that are there." J. H. Preston

+ N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 26 '30 950w

"In the immense literature upon Washington Mr. Corbin's book will take a position quite its own. It is the first thorough examination of Washington's position in our constitutional history. . . It is a valuable book in two respects—valuable for its fresh evidence upon critical episodes of Washington's life, and valuable for its suggestive if not always convincing hypotheses as to Washington's thinking and influence. Such writers as Mr. Corbin and Rupert Hughes are replacing the 'unknown' Washington with a human Washington whose greatness grows as we learn more of his character and his mind." Allan Nevins

+ N Y Times p1 Ap 20 '30 1500w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:68 O '30

"This is the most candid and most honest effort that has yet been attempted to penetrate and analyze the most enigmatic and perhaps greatest character of the American Revolution. After so many 'debunking' biographies, it is singularly comforting to find a study of Washington which deliberately neglects the non-essentials to determine and weigh the contribution made by the First President to the form of government finally accepted by the American people." Gilbert Chinard

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1103 Je 7 '30 1100w

"As a whole, the work is diffuse; attempts at fine writing obscure what, simply presented, might be clear enough, not to say obvious. The value of Mr. Corbin's book lies in the material which he has brought together."

— + Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 13 '30 950w

Times [London] Lit Sup p422 My 22 '30 750w

CORDELL, RICHARD ALBERT, ed. Representative modern plays; British and American, from Robertson to O'Neill. (Nelson's English ser.) 654p $3.90 Nelson

822.08 English drama—Collections. American drama—Collections 29-11191

An anthology containing plays by ten English and seven American playwrights: T. W. Robertson, W. S. Gilbert, Oscar Wilde, H. A. Jones, A. W. Pinero, Arnold Bennett, Clemence Dane, W. S. Maugham, A. A. Milne, Sean O'Casey, Clyde Fitch, George Ade, Rachel Crothers, Hatcher Hughes, Kaufman and Connelly, Eugene O'Neill.

Booklist 26:22 O '29

Reviewed by B. R. Redman
Books p11 Ja 5 '30 100w

Pratt p31 spring '30

COREY, LEWIS. House of Morgan; a social 2 biography of the masters of money. 479p $5 Watt

B or 92 Morgan, J. P. and co. Morgan, John Pierpont. Finance—United States

"A big, solidly written book which goes back to the foundations of the Morgan family in the United States and traces the growth of the formidable house of Morgan in Wall Street. This story, built up for the most part from official records and reports, describes in passing the period of America's greatest industrial and banking expansion."—N Y World

"While the book is the best history yet written on America's premier private banking institution that superlative description rests too much on its monopoly in the field. It lacks that sweeping interpretative quality that gives great books a lasting flavor and through no fault of Mr. Corey it lacks the punch of an inside history." P. W. Garrett

— + N Y Evening Post p4d D 13 '30 580w

Reviewed by R. L. Duffus
N Y Times p5 Ja 4 '31 1350w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p15 N 27 '30 550w

CORLEY, DONALD. Fifth son of the shoemaker. 282p $2 McBride

30-29343

"Here is a many-threaded story of the rise of an old Russian family of hereditary shoemakers, Muscovites, from an East Side cellar to the achievement of high romance—the romance of exotic slippers. In a sense it is a Cinderella story in which there is the theme of dreams versus the machine-made; the influence of a settlement house on the sons of Ivan the shoemaker, the career of the fifth son contrasted sharply with the other four."—Publisher's note

"Though it is thoroughly of New York and of our generation, 'The Fifth Son of the Shoemaker' has a fairytale, never-never-land quality. That in turn is relieved by humor and considerable worldliness. . . Slender of plot, the book is full of random bits of lore and solemnly mischievous fabrications." D. C. Tilden

Books p4 O 12 '30 800w

"It is more or less impossible to know why such books as this one have to be written, unless it is to appeal to those for whom Pollyanna is not enough."

— Nation 131:588 N 26 '30 180w

"The author has eyes to see the beauty and magic of life; he touches reality with the gold of imaginative writing. Mr. Corley combines the best qualities of fantasy and fairy-tale—poetry, fancy, charm, whimsy, delicacy—with a simple story of an east side family of shoemakers whose creations become the rage of social and theatrical New York. . . A book like this does not happen often. It is as precious as 'sun shining on a beautiful wall' or a glass of rare old wine."

+ N Y Times p7 O 26 '30 380w

CORNWALLIS-WEST, GEORGE FREDERICK MYDDELTON. Two wives. 361p $2.50 (7s 6d) Putnam

30-7570

The Honorable Tony Logan decided to spend six months in France in order to brush up on French before entering the diplomatic service. There he met a charming French girl, Antoinette, and fell in love with her, but was summoned again to England and a career. When Antoinette disappeared Tony married the vulgar newly rich Theresa. The path of love was not smooth, but in the end the way was cleared for the marriage of Tony and Antoinette.

Books p16 Ap 6 '30 260w

" 'Two Wives' could have been better than it is. The situations are forced and the characters puppets in prearranged situations. But there is a certain English freshness and buoyancy that is cheering."

— + N Y Times p22 Mr 30 '30 280w

"Although the author has had some previous experience as a biographer, his novel shows clearly that he is not a practised writer. Awkward in expression and sometimes preposterous in plot, the story nevertheless has a certain mild charm, since it makes no attempt at being anything more than a story. . . It is possible that the author has a future as a novelist, but upon the evidence of this first attempt it would seem that he was by temperament more suited to the sporting field than the printed page."

— + Sat R of Lit 6:1131 Je 14 '30 380w

Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 13 '30 120w

"In spite of the rather conventional pattern of the story, 'Two Wives' is an interesting novel, and Mr. Cornwallis-West has given himself sufficient scope to show his gift for writing dialogue and charging an outwardly normal scene with an undercurrent of emotion."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p13 Ja 2 '30 300w

CORREVON, HENRY. Rock garden and alpine plants; ed. by Leonard Barron. 544p il $6 (25s) Macmillan

635.9672 Rock gardens. Alpine flora 30-14864

Mr Correvon, world-famous French horticulturist, has had long experience in experimenting with alpine plants suited to rock gardening. His visit to the United States in 1926, under the auspices of the Garden Club of America, gave him first-hand knowledge of gardening conditions in this country. Following general descriptions of various types of rock gardens, this book contains a complete, alphabetical list of all plants for the rockery, wall, or alpine garden.

CORREVON, HENRY—Continued

Booklist 27:53 O '30

Books p12 Ag 24 '30 80w

"Henry Correvon for more than half a century has been devoting himself with the greatest joy and success to the cultivation of Alpine plants and rock gardens. He is famous among garden lovers and plant specialists all over the world as the most important living grower of Alpine plants . . . This new book—he has written more than twenty previous works, most of them in French—is not a translation but was written in English after his visit here, with special reference to what he learned while in America about conditions and needs of rock gardening."

+ N Y Times p16 Je 8 '30 570w

"A memorable garden book, a horticultural classic."

+ Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 20 '30 130w

Times [London] Lit Sup p586 Jl 17 '30 1050w

CORSE, WILLIAM MALCOLM. Bearing metals and bearings. (Am. chemical soc. Monograph ser.) 383p il $7 Chemical catalog co.

621.8 Bearings (machinery). Bearings (machinery)—Bibliography. Lubrication and lubricants—Bibliography 30-7504

"Closely classified bibliography of nearly 1100 titles of which the important ones, numbering 234 titles, are fully abstracted. There is an introduction covering history and general information."—N Y New Tech Bks

"The value of the book lies in the fact that it contains in one volume a comprehensive survey of the literature on the subject."

+ Chem & Met Eng 37:438 Jl '30 140w

"Corse's wide experience in making and studying bearings is evident throughout, but he is not dogmatic, and leaves the reader to form his own conclusions from the assembled information. As a matter of fact, no other method could produce so useful a book. . . The book will be useful to a wide circle of readers. The nonferrous metallurgist, the non-ferrous analyst, engineers having to do with bearings and lubrication, and the physicist interested in theories of lubrication will all find it of much value." H. W. Gillett

+ Ind & Eng Chem 22:303 Mr '30 350w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:16 Ap '30

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:69 O '30

St Louis 28:136 My '30

CORTISSOZ, ROYAL. Painter's craft. 473p $3.50 Scribner

750 Painting. Painters 30-8567

The author in his opening essay, The painter's craft, discusses the technique of painting. In the sketches, notes and criticisms that follow, he writes, in fairly chronological order, of the life and craftsmanship of such masters as Velasquez, El Greco, Botticelli, Dürer, Ingres, Manet, Renoir, Hogarth, Rossetti, Gilbert Stuart and George Bellows. The last chapter contains an interesting discussion of American collectors.

Booklist 26:303 My '30

Bookm 71:xxxi Ap '30 120w

"Agree with the author of 'The Painter's Craft' or not, you know that, in one way or another, he has again and again seen for himself the men and things he tells of. He has lived among them, always caring intensely about them, whether wild or tame, far oftener loving them than hating them and daily writing them down on the tablets of a prodigious memory." Adeline Adams

Books p7 F 23 '30 700w

"Mr. Cortissoz's notable friendships with celebrated men and his fine, unfailing taste and splendid championship of thorough workmanship make this record of artists not only delightful as biography, but as a clarification of those immutable principles of art which some of the recent schools affect to disdain, too avid for the gospel to remember its forerunner, the law." A. McC. S.

+ Cath World 131:507 Jl '30 100w

"He is chatty, enthusiastic, diplomatic; his writing is a contrast to the ponderous utterances of many critics, becoming, therefore, welcome to the layman. Without diminishing the value of his subject, Mr. Cortissoz can present it with a light touch which enlivens and clarifies. He can unfold a world of splendor, but it is a world already discovered. Mr. Cortissoz avoids the controversial; he omits discussion of the painting of most of his contemporaries." D. A.

+ Christian Science Monitor p13 Je 21 '30 300w

Reviewed by E. A. Jewell

N Y Times p20 Mr 30 '30 230w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:53 Je '30

Pratt p25 summer '30

"Do not think to meet in these seasoned pages any hint of that stressful, aspiring modernism which so intrigues the youth of to-day. Here all is serene, lucid, luminous. It is truly the Golden Age of art that Mr. Royal Cortissoz, doyen of our esthetic critics, envisages in his latest offering. Upon perusing this book from cover to cover one is constrained to regard Mr. Cortissoz as the Diderot of his day. . . That which in no small degree mars the fine, reasoned humanism of this particular book, and its incidental revelation of a notably urbane and likeable personality, is its covert and often overt antipathy toward modernism per se. One misses a sense of the single, continuous streamline unfolding of the esthetic consciousness which is always more evolutionary than revolutionary, and hence in reality not to be feared. This, in fine, is the one note of dissonance in an otherwise mellow, rounded echo of the Golden Age of art." Christian Brinton

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:892 Ap 5 '30 850w

"Mr Cortissoz writes with enthusiasm of Ingres, Manet, Renoir and Forain, and abstains from discussion of the modernist groups whose creed he is unable to accept. Though the critic's judgments are his own, his chapters are free from controversial tone."

Springf'd Republican p10 F 7 '30 330w

"In these accounts of painters and their works he strikes a singularly happy blend of criticism with narrative, anecdote, and instructive comment. He possesses and displays a philosophy of appreciation which is calm and judicial, but by no means lacking fire. He contrives to strike a note of intimacy, as if he were sitting with his reader by the hearthside, giving away secrets." D. V. Thompson, Jr.

+ Yale R n s 19:838 summer '30 750w

COSTER, DIRK. The living and the lifeless: marginalia; tr. from the Dutch with an introd. by Beatrice M. Hinkle. 169p $1.75 Harcourt [3s 6d Harrap]

150 Love. Life. Aphorisms and apothegms 29-30228

The underlying thought of this book, by a Dutch littérateur, is the superiority of the living force of love over the lifeless force of the intellect. A great dividing line separates humanity, not into good and evil, not into good men and bad men, but into the living and the lifeless. It separates those who can hate and love from those who can neither hate nor love. The writer's reflections on this theme, expressed in the form of apothegms, are marked by keen psychological insight.

"Mr. Coster uses his key-words—love, life-force, soul, happiness—vaguely, as talismans. That does not prevent much of his book being good, though it is largely a restatement of ideas which have been current for some time."

+ — New Statesman 35:776 S 27 '30 180w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p10m Ja 25 '30 100w

"The book, profound in its psychological insight and human understanding, is apothegmatic in style, bringing the message that a direct understanding comes not from our intellect, but from our life-force. The book is a fountain of wisdom, rich in its penetrating and sententious truths, which should be observed by all men and women of our time." Fritz Wittels, M.D.

+ Survey 63:724 Mr 15 '30 250w

COTTRELL, MRS DOROTHY. Tharlane. 358p $2.50 Houghton

30-13095

A thousand square miles of still unconquered bush in southwestern Australia became the dream of old H.B.—a fat, cruel, grimly powerful man. Tharlane he called it, and devoted a lifetime of savage combat against drought, disease, pear cactus and other enemies, to its conquest. Interwoven with his story are the romance of the drover, Abel, and lovely Georgina, the tragic love story of Sandy and Martha, and the pitiful yet heroic struggle of Sara Strathmore on her section of land. The novel reaches a stirring conclusion when a wronged man wreaks vengeance upon H.B. and Tharlane by setting the great fire that sweeps over his land.

Booklist 26:396 Jl '30

"This story is a mixture of good and bad. The bad has a bookish smell, as though during formative years the writer had read too deeply of sloppy sentimental romance. In this category I put Donald the shearer's wooing of Georgina, the half-caste girl—in fact the whole unlikely personality of Donald—and I put Sandy and his wooing, and the wooing of everybody and all the childhoods. In the category of good I put all those things which seem to be rooted in observation—the look of the land, the casual description of local types." Esther Forbes

— + Bookm 71:441 Jl '30 280w

"The total effect [of the book] is sentimental. It is not that Miss Cottrell is inclined to indulge in affectedly tender comments, for she is not, but that at the core of her mind, so to speak, there is a mushy spot which prevents her from working out the implications of her facts. . . To get an idea of how fundamentally false 'Tharlane' is I suggest that the interested person take up Miss Prichard's 'Coonardoo' after reading Miss Cottrell's book. It will then be very clear why it is not unjust to say that Miss Cottrell's stories will find their true home in magazines for 'ladies.' " C. H. Grattan

— Books p10 Je 22 '30 300w

"With strength and beauty of description of a country little known to those who have not toiled and suffered there, with exceedingly clever delineation of character, with an ability to see that in spite of human weakness, in spite of many and grievous sins, there may be something heroic in a rough-hewn, primitive man, here is a drama which sets 'against the immensity and indifference of nature the poignant yet strangely passing lives of men.' " G. B.

+ Boston Transcript p1 Je 28 '30 950w

N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 2 '30 150w

"Except for an over-lavish use of adjectives in her descriptive passages, Dorothy Cottrell has a dramatic style well adapted to her subject, and her book should give much pleasure."

+ — Outlook 155:104 My 21 '30 220w

Sat R of Lit 7:27 Ag 2 '30 300w

Springf'd Republican p7e Ag 31 '30 550w

COULANGE, FATHER LOUIS, pseud. Life of the devil; tr. from the French by Stephen Haden Guest. 320p il $5 (15s) Knopf

235 Devil. Demonology. Witchcraft 30-12396

"Traces the emergence of the personality of the Devil from the epoch of the monotheistic religion of the Jews to the culmination of fleshly phantasmal horror in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. Beginning with the origin and fall of the Devil, the author proceeds to discuss the malevolent activities of the Devil in heaven, the proportionate number of demons, the Devil and demons as corporeal beings and, later, as spiritual beings. Then follows a section detailing the activities of the Devil on earth before the foundation of the Church, and another on the Devil's preoccupations after the coming of Christ and on sorcerers and witches. The last section of the book concerns itself with the war of the Church against the Devil, treating of exorcism by means of baptism and otherwise, and giving some account of celebrated Christian exorcists."—Times [London] Lit Sup

Bookm 72:xii N '30 80w

Reviewed by Woodbridge Riley

Books p2 Ap 6 '30 380w

Boston Transcript p3 Ap 18 '30 500w

Reviewed by Cuthbert Wright

New Repub 63:212 Jl 9 '30 350w

"The book is well documented with contemporary accounts of witches' sabbaths, and famous cases of possession, including the remarkable instance of Jeanne des Anges, a nun of the Ursuline community of Loudun in the fifteenth century."

+ New Statesman 34:374 D 21 '29 180w

Reviewed by L. M. Field

N Y Times p10 Mr 2 '30 850w

St Louis 28:203 S '30

"Father Coulange is a venerable French priest who, with what would seem to be needless caution, has taken a pseudonym because of the supposedly unorthodox nature of his speculations. This same timidity characterizes his book throughout. . . On the whole, Father Coulange's devil is a mincing, pedantic personage and rather a dull dog as devils go." Ramon Guthrie

Sat R of Lit 6:941 Ap 19 '30 230w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1078 D 19 '29 550w

COULSON, THOMAS. Mata Hari: courtesan and spy. 312p $3 Harper [12s 6d Hutchinson]

B or 92 Mata Hari (Mrs Margaretha Geertruida Zelle 30-8686

Mata Hari's picturesque career as dancer, courtesan and the most famous spy of the war is given a straightforward, unromanticized account by Major Coulson. As Margaret Zelle, she was of Dutch parentage, with a Javanese strain; but she maintained that she was purely oriental, and wove an air of mysticism about herself. Her lovers included men high in military and diplomatic life in Germany and France. Her career as Spy H21 in the service of Germany began in Berlin at the outbreak of the war, and she was credited by French authorities with the death of 50,000 men thru her manoeuvers. In 1917 she was arrested and, tho conducting a brilliant defense, died before a French firing squad.

"There have been a number of glamorous romances written about this devotee of Shivaism, but none has pictured her as being so deadly as does this authentic story of her perilous career."

+ Bookm 71:vi Jl '30 120w

"Major Thomas Coulson, who was in the British Intelligence Service, has written her story with no especial charm of style, but in a thoroughly informative manner. His disgust at her morals prevents him from being thrilled by her, yet he shirks none of the details. He is at his best in portraying Mata Hari, the spy. Coulson has gone farther than any one in uncovering her methods and in establishing certain hitherto unknown facts concerning her relationships in Germany both before and during the war." W. A. Roberts

+ — Books p4 Mr 30 '30 1200w

Boston Transcript p3 Ap 26 '30 600w

"Major Coulson's account . . . shows us how she outwitted the secret service of three countries before the French intelligence force had accumulated enough evidence to warrant laying hands on her. . . My chief objection to his book is based on such passages as the following: 'Like her favorite reptile, the serpent, the slime of her writhing body coiled from one city to another, leaving its track of debauchery and treacherous betrayal.' Quite aside from the rather execrable grammar of such passages, they show us that the Major considers himself not only as narrator but also as judge. To be sure, Mata Hari was a spy and a rather terribly efficient spy, too, but is not the intelligence service a recognized branch of the military of every country?"

COULSON, THOMAS—Continued

+ — N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 22 '30 480w

"It is an amazing story, told in a straightforward manner, and one that mixes history, drama, comedy and tragedy and, methinks, a bit of fiction into a most absorbing whole." F. L. Minnigerode

+ N Y Times p11 My 11 '30 650w

"It is a work of absorbing interest and one which, without question, is nearer to this woman's true history than any other version in English."

+ N Y World p11m My 4 '30 100w

St Louis 28:218 S '30

Sat R 149:798 Je 21 '30 250w

"Major Coulson's book upon first sight appears to be sensational. Its jacket, emphasizing this, belies the author's more sincere purpose. He has attempted to write a convincing, accurate biography based on the most reliable confidential accounts. He has unquestionably given the most logical and reasonable story of Mata Hari that has appeared. At times his caution amounts to pedantry; his story could often be more dramatically written without losing authority." H. J. Smith

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1023 My 10 '30 500w

Springf'd Republican p7e My 4 '30 500w

Times [London] Lit Sup p459 My 29 '30 150w

COULTON, GEORGE GORDON. The inquisition. (New lib.) 128p 60c Cape

272.2 Inquisition 30-26631

In this short treatise the author treats the Spanish Inquisition not as an isolated phenomenon, but as one of the various manifestations of the inquisition impulse that lies within human nature and society. The book traces various methods that have been used to punish free speech and free thought from early times to the present.

Books p23 Ap 6 '30 100w

"Here we have clearly set forth the birth and growth of the idea which blossomed forth in that terrible attempt to bring men into the Kingdom by torture." E. B. Chaffee

+ Outlook 155:549 Ag 6 '30 80w

COUNTS, GEORGE SYLVESTER. American road to culture; a social interpretation of education in the United States. 194p $2.50 Day

370.973 Education—United States. United States—Civilization 30-21541

A study of the principles and ideals that shape the conduct and evolution of education in the United States. For his critique of American life in terms of what the schools teach our children, the author has gathered data from all fields and theories of education.

Booklist 27:139 D '30

"Once again Professor Counts has scored heavily with a well-timed volume; the high value of his present effort may be attributed to the fact that in it he concerns himself not with the theories of professors of education but with the practices of American schools." Irving Astrachan

+ Bookm 72:336 N '30 400w

Books p10 Ag 31 '30 950w

Boston Transcript p1 Ag 16 '30 600w

Reviewed by Sidney Hook

Current Hist 33:x O '30 1050w

"This volume is far in advance of most of the theoretical educational treatises that have appeared in recent years. It is one of the best brief social interpretations now available of education in the United States. . . The book thus suffers from one great fault of American education: it fails to furnish adequate illustrative material and is too general." Jerome Davis

+ — Nation 131:184 Ag 13 '30 670w

"His book is noteworthy for its clarity, logical arrangement and judicious fair-mindedness." John Bakeless

+ N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 26 '30 650w

"In recounting the dying out of social vision in the American school, both Dr. Counts's facts and his manner of impartial observer are exceedingly effective. For an honest, courageous and sometimes subtle account of their present educational dilemma Americans are in his debt." E. F. Barnard

+ N Y Times p1 Jl 27 '30 2000w

"Here is a book on education that should not be allowed to gather dust, but which should rather be read and reread by all who seek an understanding of the intellectual life of this country." C. H. Grattan

+ N Y World p4m Ag 31 '30 380w

"Mr. Counts' study traces, with admirable brevity but with primerish simplicity, every movement or modification known to the last three centuries of American education. And it does this with a lack of passion that is unique for a pedagogical writer." A. W. Porterfield

+ Outlook 155:546 Ag 6 '30 630w

Pratt p12 autumn '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:12 O '30 120w

St Louis 28:261 N '30

"Taken as a whole the volume is a distinct contribution to the analysis of American education. It is moreover, sufficiently the product of a mature and balanced intellect to provide an aid in clearing the general field for such synthesis and progress as the future may be able to achieve." C. C. Little

+ Sat R of Lit 7:178 O 4 '30 550w

COUPERUS, LOUIS MARIE ANNE. Arrogance; the conquests of Xerxes; [tr. by Frederick H. Martens]. 314p il $3 Farrar

Xerxes—Fiction 30-7192

A fictionized biography of Xerxes the mighty king of Persia who attempted to conquer Greece. Written by a Dutch novelist.

"The whole book is the schoolboy version of the glory that was Greece."

— Books p15 Ap 6 '30 250w

Boston Transcript p1 Ap 18 '30 1400w

"Fictionized biography here tackles a difficult subject. There is color and action in abundance, but the oriental potentate so persistently played the role of a god on earth that even the most skillful writing can scarcely make him very convincing as a man. We do however get a vivid picture of the Persian invasions as seen from their side."

— + Christian Century 47:531 Ap 23 '30 150w

Cleveland Open Shelf p62 Ap '30

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

New Repub 63:106 Je 11 '30 150w

"A narrative that has movement, splendid color and dramatic unity. But 'Arrogance,' though professionally written, has bare spots and remains superficial, chiefly because the major characters have not been filled in with sufficient freedom and care." C. A. Smart

+ — N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 15 '30 600w

"Compared with the usual fictionized biography or the average historical novel, this book by Louis Couperus is like a Titian beside an amateur pencil sketch. Done on heroic lines, in glowing and glorious colors, it has splendor, movement, life. With no sacrifice of dignity to vivacity, yet with no hesitancy in showing the littlenesses as well as the grandeurs of the time, Louis Couperus has given us a book worthy of the great events of which it tells, a book which proclaims the triumph of spiritual forces over material." L. M. Field

+ N Y Times p5 Ap 13 '30 1250w

Reviewed by Bellamy Partridge
N Y World p10m Mr 23 '30 200w
Springf'd Republican p6 Ap 28 '30 550w

COURNOS, JOHN. Grandmother Martin is murdered. 280p $2 Farrar [7s 6d Skeffington]
30-4859

Grandmother Martin was a cantankerous, selfish old tyrant who made life miserable for her children and grandchildren. Nobody liked her, and more than one, driven to exasperation, was heard to say he wished she were dead. Wilberforce, her grand-daughter's husband, had even written a novel in which he propounded the theory that aged, helpless and dependent people should be mercifully put out of the way. But, when Grandmother Martin was actually found dead—due to an overdose of morphia wilfully administered by some one—Wilberforce found that real danger to himself lay in the attitude of Nurse Purcell, who had known and loved him prior to his marriage to Hetty Martin.

Bookm 71:xxviii Ap '30 100w

"You are fairly sure to be stirred by this story if you prefer realistic background, convincing people and capable writing. Although Mr. Cournos does not stress the humors of the situation, the tale manufactures its own smiles as it goes along. The solution is good enough and what goes before is better." Will Cuppy
+ Books p18 F 16 '30 200w
Boston Transcript p2 F 26 '30 320w

"Stilted and carelessly written." W. R. Brooks
— Outlook 154:350 F 26 '30 30w
Times [London] Lit Sup p277 Mr 27 '30 80w

COURNOS, JOHN. Wandering women. (Boni bks.) 173p pa 50c Boni, C.
30-25823

"A tale of the Connecticut countryside and the Latin Quarter of Paris. This geographical wrench is no more curious than the break in the lives of the two women involved: mother and daughter who cast aside their Puritan inheritance, their Colonial house, their comforting landscape, their devoted men folk, in quest of life more abundant and of death. All her married life Mrs. Prescott was oppressed with the sense of something missing in her life. She determined not to let her daughter travel the same road and in this determination disrupts her daughter's engagement, takes her to Paris, and sees her through a series of affairs each one of which offers less than the one before."—N Y Evening Post

---

"The story is a superb one in its people and in its understanding of their lives; but Mr. Cournos, in an attitude of detachment that is admirable, holds himself too aloof in his prose. Whether this aloofness springs entirely from his objective view or whether it results from the understatement of compressing the material for a vast psychological novel into the confines of a novelette is very hard to determine. In any case, he has succeeded in adding a character to fiction in Mary Prescott." Coley Taylor
+ Books p26 N 16 '30 700w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p4d N 8 '30 200w

"Its title and the fact that is costs only 50 cents are the only possible recommendations of 'Wandering Women,' a story so stilted in its telling and so obvious that it might have sprung from among the paper-backed fiction of half a century ago."
— N Y Times p38 D 7 '30 200w

COWAN, MRS EDWINA EUNICE (ABBOTT), and CARLSON, MRS AVIS D. Bringing up your child; a practical manual; with an introd. by Arthur Dean. 278p $2.50 Duffield
136.7 Children—Management. Child study
30-14819

Written to meet the problems of those engaged in the training of children, this book makes clear the process known as the conditioning of responses. The authors analyze some typical training problems in terms of conditional responses and describe the uses and limitations to which the method may be put.

Reviewed by Emanuel Blum
Books p15 Ag 3 '30 250w
Boston Transcript p2 Jl 2 '30 230w
J Home Econ 22:865 O '30 80w

"Dr. Cowan's technique of what she calls conditioned response is stated so simply that even the least gifted parent should be able to learn painlessly how to condition a child's responses, not only to spinach and cod-liver oil but to those gracious ways which lead to the development of agreeable personalities." F. G. Seabury
+ Outlook 155:508 Jl 30 '30 130w
St Louis 28:201 S '30

"Many of the fundamental principles of child training were given expression years or even centuries ago. Their mechanisms have recently been elucidated by the work of physiological psychologists. With this elucidation at their command, Cowan and Carlson have reclothed these fundamental principles in modern terminology. This they have accomplished more or less successfully, though their statement of formulas is not always comprehensible. The book should be of interest to psychologists and those professionally interested in child training." R. W. Washburn
Sat R of Lit 7:500 Ja 3 '31 600w

COWAN, MRS EDWINA EUNICE (ABBOTT), and THORNBOROUGH, LAURA, pseud. Psychologist keeps house. 213p $2 Midwest co., 1645 Hennepin Av., Minneapolis, Minn.
173.7 Home. Family. Psychology, Applied
30-12349

A book on psychology in relation to home life to help parents in the solving of problems concerning the rearing of children. The authors outline a history of the material home, and show how modern developments have produced the invisible or intangible home. Part two is devoted to a study of the relationships of mother, father and the child.

"A book whose scope is wider and more significant than the title indicates. . . A welcome minor feature is a chapter about the adults other than parents who are found in many families, but whose existence is frequently ignored by writers on family relationships."
+ J Home Econ 22:577 Jl '30 100w

"The authors believe that psychology is pointing the way to a possible renaissance of the home that will be as valuable in its way as the old-time home was in the service it rendered to its own time. . . They present and discuss all this in a simple, direct style, although their arguments and the methods and materials whose use they advise are scientifically sound, for both the authors are trained psychologists, Miss Cowan being a professor in Friends University and a consulting psychologist and Miss Thornborough having been connected with the universities of Tennessee and George Washington."
+ N Y Times p26 My 18 '30 400w
St Louis 28:202 S '30

COWDRY, EDMUND VINCENT, ed. Human biology and racial welfare; contributors: Walter B. Cannon, Alexis Carrel, Edmund V. Cowdry, and others; with an introd. by Edwin R. Embree. 612p $6 Hoeber [28s H. K. Lewis]

573 Man. Biology. Evolution 30-5711

"This symposium by a number of distinguished American men of science, with contributions by Sir Humphry Rolleston and Sir Charles Sherrington, is intended for the student about to specialize who requires, as a preliminary, a broad perspective of the sciences dealing with man and also for the general reader. It is divided into sections dealing with such subjects as the origin of man, physiology, environment and the future (inheritance of disease, population and race problems, eugenics)."—Times [London] Lit Sup

---

"In treatment the editor evidently endeavored to avoid both a popular superficiality and a degree of technical accuracy beyond the level of laymen likely to be interested in matters of science. The essays differ a good deal in this respect but on the whole tend to be over-simplified. . . A few of the papers present positions that are more or less peculiar to the men presenting them and give therefore a somewhat biased perspective of the field. The idiosyncrasies are in some cases somewhat offset by other papers in the series. Davenport and Hrdlička for example somewhat balance each other on the question of the racial effects of race crossings. But the book on the whole is an admirable and fairly successful attempt to popularize science without making it silly and inaccurate." E. B. Reuter

+ Am J Soc 36:482 N '30 580w

J Home Econ 22:499 Je '30 70w

"Though care has been exercised in arrangement, the effect cannot be other than to give the impression of a collection of scraps. The field is vast and those parts of it which are touched upon are briefly, sometimes very briefly, treated. There seems to be no reason why some problems are included and others omitted. . . A worthy attempt has been made to fill a gap which undoubtedly exists by the alternative method, but with a degree of success that is necessarily limited by the defects of that method."

— + Nature 126:396 S 13 '30 200w

"To the serious student of nature, man and society, 'Human Biology and Racial Welfare' is, for a single volume, a very remarkable achievement, and one which could not readily be substituted for adequately by a dozen smaller works, even though each were devoted to some special aspect of biology and human welfare." Maynard Shipley

+ N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 5 '30 900w

"No summary can, of course, do justice to a book which is itself the result of a process of heroic condensation. One can only say that here is a rich and varied region of thought for the layman to explore—a field not too easy to traverse, yet not beyond the average man's reach." R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p10 Ag 3 '30 1080w

St Louis 28:234 O '30

"The book as a whole summarizes well the present state of biological science on the matters treated, its gaps and uncertainties as well as its very substantial sum of positive achievements. There are of course inequalities and inadequacies of treatment. The plan of the work results in a lack of coordination, of unification; the papers are a set of independent encyclopedia articles. A serious omission is the lack of a connected presentation of the biological foundations of inheritance, diversity, and development. But the book is of great value, and comes into a world that needs it." H. S. Jennings

+ — Survey 64:520 S 15 '30 350w

Times [London] Lit Sup p559 Jl 3 '30 70w

COWELL, HENRY. New musical resources. 143p il $2.50 (8s 6d) Knopf

781 Harmony. Musical meter and rhythm 30-4107

"A sound and carefully presented discussion of modernistic music."—Cleveland Open Shelf

---

Cleveland Open Shelf p50 Ap '30

Nation 131:188 Ag 13 '30 150w

"This is not at all a book for the musical layman, as the jacket maintains; but for those who can understand, it makes interesting reading. The material is there, and Mr. Cowell lights on some things from which it is possible to draw other, and perhaps more reasonable, conclusions." Jeffrey Mark

+ — New Repub 64:184 O 1 '30 550w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:41 My '30

St Louis 28:214 S '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p470 Je 5 '30 500w

COX, ANTHONY BERKELEY (ANTHONY BERKELEY, pseud.). Piccadilly murder. 339p $1 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Collins]

30-33622

Mr Amos Chitterwick happens to be having his tea in a Piccadilly hotel when he sees a murder committed before his very eyes. So Mr Chitterwick takes a personal interest in the strange affair and even succeeds in unraveling the mystery, to the satisfaction of all concerned.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p14 N 9 '30 180w

"The book has originality and a sense of drollness—a rare enough quality in such stories."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p13 Ja 2 '30 180w

COX, ANTHONY BERKELEY (ANTHONY BERKELEY, pseud.). Poisoned chocolates case. 299p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Collins]

29-29976

Mrs Graham Bendix, the victim, received via her husband and Sir Eustace Pennefather a box of liqueur chocolates containing fatal doses of nitrobenzene. Scotland Yard failed to discover the murderer. So the Crime Club, founded by Roger Sheringham, and having for its members Sir Charles Wildman, criminal lawyer, Mrs Fielder Flemming, dramatist, Morton Bradley, detective story writer, Alicia Dammers, novelist, and Ambrose Chitterwick, business man, undertakes to solve the case by individual sleuthing. At six successive meetings of the club each member makes a report of his findings, theory and solution; but flaws are found in each case and the real murderer is brought to light by Mr Chitterwick.

Booklist 26:205 F '30

Bookm 70:xxvi F '30 80w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p11 D 29 '29 200w

"The story is more interesting, more intriguing, more cleverly written, and far more original than the popular Van Dine books. The plot is deeply mysterious, the murder is logically conceived, planned with great care and carried out with the utmost skill." G. B.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 15 '30 750w

N Y Times p25 Ja 12 '30 230w

"Mr. Berkeley has carefully worked out his various solutions, both wrong and right, and from his evident pleasure in making the wrong ones so convincingly plausible seems to be taking the opportunity gently to satirize the deductive methods of some of the greatest figures of detective fiction."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p540 Jl 4 '29 200w

COX, ANTHONY BERKELEY (ANTHONY BERKELEY, pseud.). Wychford poisoning case. 308p $2 Doubleday, Doran
30-13355

In which Roger Sheringham, novelist and criminal investigator, frees young Mrs Bentley from the charge of having poisoned her husband with arsenic.

Bookm 72:xxvi N '30 100w

"This is a clever reconstruction of a classic riddle, well above the average." Will Cuppy

Books p14 My 11 '30 150w

"His book runs a brisk, entertaining race to a flabby and unsporting end." Dashiell Hammett

+ — N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 26 '30 80w

N Y Times p25 My 4 '30 120w

COXON, MURIEL (HINE) (MRS SIDNEY COXON). Pilgrim's Ford. 343p $2 Appleton [7s 6d Lane]
30-10246

The orphaned Joy Grandison came to live at her grandfather's beautiful English estate, Pilgrim's Ford, when she was ten years old. From that day until his death Joy was the main consolation in life to John Grandison. Under his tutelage Joy developed from a rather spoiled child into a thoroly staunch, fine woman, ready to meet bravely whatever might come.

Booklist 27:64 O '30

"Though seen entirely from the outside, the characters have a semblance of reality. 'Pilgrim's Ford' proves that it is possible to have a view of life completely lacking in the insight of reality and yet see a universe so self-sufficient in cause and effect that you need have no sense that anything more fundamental exists."

+ Books p17 Je 8 '30 200w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p10m My 10 '30 30w

"A well-told tale of plausible events and believable people. It makes no pretense at strong dramatic scenes, but in the conflict of wills and of diverse traits within one human being there is admirably sustained interest. While 'Pilgrim's Ford' will never be labeled a great novel it is an altogether readable one, told with a considerable degree of skill and charm."

+ N Y Times p8 My 4 '30 300w

" 'Pilgrim's Ford' is a study in married life —a problem piece. And yet the problem is so delicately clothed in flesh and blood, and so closely related to everyday life, that one does not feel that Miss Muriel Hine has over-simplified her canvas. . . She has shown a very just sense of complicated issues in 'Pilgrim's Ford'; it holds one's interest to the last." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 149:275 Mr 1 '30 180w

"Miss Hine has a real understanding of the problems and hopes of youth and she would have done well to have concentrated on that part of her story rather than on the second part which describes Joy's marriage to a man considerably older than herself. But the author keeps the interest of the reader to the end; she is not too eager to resolve the quarrels and skilfully avoids a sentimental ending."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1095 My 31 '30 280w

Times [London] Lit Sup p216 Mr 13 '30 150w

COYLE, KATHLEEN. Flock of birds. 256p $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d Cape, J.]
30-16617

The scene is Ireland; the action takes place in the space of a few days while the family of Christy Munster is waiting his possible release from a murder charge. The reprieve does not come. The reactions of the various members of the family, particularly of the mother, tell the story.

Booklist 27:28 S '30

Bookm 71:545 Ag '30 220w

"She has given us no bridge to the soul of Catherine Munster. It is as though she wished to shut this woman, whose psychology she too clearly prefers, away from coarse contacts. It is an intangible flaw, and a difficult one to track to the source. It may be that other readers will not sense or object to an emanation of vague hostility; or it may be that this is the perfect reconstruction of such a woman's feelings in the given situation. In any case, it is not enough to eradicate the impression of mastery which the book as a whole creates." M. C. Dawson

+ — Books p2 Je 8 '30 630w

"Each of Mrs. Coyle's sensitively poignant stories beats out its individual measures upon the reader's heart-strings. But none other as hauntingly as this. As a story it is unique. As a subtle analysis of the mysterious intermingling of the sub-conscious with the conscious mind in emotional climacterics of life, it is unsurpassed." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Jl 5 '30 650w

In 'A Flock of Birds' James Joyce is quoted, and his influence mars the natural delicacy of Miss Coyle's writing. There is much beauty and sensitive divination in this book." K. C. Tomlinson

+ — Nation and Ath 47:180 My 10 '30 150w

"A Flock of Birds is a little disappointing. The theme is admirable, but ought, it seems to me, to have been treated either with calm and implacable concentration or with a righteous and poetic fervour resembling Mr. O'Flaherty's. As it is, Miss Coyle digresses and fails to hold us, and though there are many beautiful things in A Flock of Birds, it does not wring our hearts or deepen our understanding of woman."

— + New Statesman 34:776 Mr 22 '30 120w

"Perhaps her most arresting value is that she is capable of pointing up an emotion or an incident into a singular and piercing poetry which translates itself for the reader into a sharpness of pure white feeling. Her work has little mass, and does not strive for it, but the thinness of her line is wiry and keen, flexible without undue deviations, and fine enough to establish the least blunt distinctions of personality and relationship." Vincent McHugh

+ — N Y Evening Post p9m Je 14 '30 600w

"Through the distorting medium of strong and unusual emotion, Kathleen Coyle has given us a sane and more than usually clear picture of a group of widely different persons. . . 'A Flock of Birds' is an amazing exercise in concentrated emotional writing." Margaret Wallace

+ N Y Times p9 Je 8 '30 550w

Outlook 155:269 Je 18 '30 80w

"It takes courage to read the book; it must have taken tremendous courage to write it. . . The novel is bounded by the personality of this woman. No single event is presented save as she sees it. The book is a perfect example of the subjective method; there is never the slip of a sentence nor a second into the outside world yet it has the form and resilience so often lacking in the stream-of-consciousness novels. These qualities are gained through the meticulous craftsmanship of the author and through the strong, unsentimental fibre of the mother's mind." Gladys Graham

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1189 Jl 12 '30 450w

Spec 144:1020 Je 21 '30 180w

"The mind of the reader is inevitably stirred to desire some reasonable information concerning Christy's crime—if it were a crime. The state of his mother's feelings is wonderfully pictured, and by implication those of other members of the family. But it is not every one who will willingly suffer vicariously through those terrible days of suspense, awaiting the possible reprieve from the Home Secretary, without even the relief of being able to form any kind of independent judgment on Christy's bloodguiltiness. Moreover, the strained attention that Miss Coyle has demanded from her readers should be rewarded with an occasional satisfaction."

COYLE, KATHLEEN—Continued
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p390 My 8 '30 550w

CRADDOCK, HARRY, comp. Savoy cocktail book. 287p $2.50 Smith, R.R. [7s 6d Constable]

663.8 Beverages

Harry Craddock, of the Savoy Hotel, provides this generous collection of recipes for cocktails and other drinks.

"A fertile, original piece of work. Those who have assisted Mr. Harry Craddock to produce his Anatomy of Delectability have been worthy of their distinction; thanks to Mr. Rumbold's pictures and the typographer's brilliant play, the book is a kalcidoscope of gladness." Edmund Blunden
+ Nation and Ath 48:795 N 8 '30 600w

"A rich collection, logically divided into sours, toddies, flips, egg noggs, Tom Collins, flings, shrubs, sangarees, highballs, fizzes, coolers, rickeys, daises, fixes, juleps, smashes, cobblers, frappés, punches and cups. A concluding but not quite congruous closing section on wine gives a useful list of districts and crus, with a few details of manufacture; and would have been more valuable still if the dates of the best recent vintages had been added."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p882 O 30 '30 100w

CRADDOCK, SIR REGINALD HENRY. Dilemma in India. 2d ed 378p $4.50 Smith, R.R. [15s Constable]

342.54 India—Politics and government [30-9298]

"Sir Reginald Craddock knows India as few other living Englishmen do; he loves the simple unlettered folk of farm and village; and he is miserably unhappy lest rash political changes should be their undoing. Hence the 'dilemma' which he discloses. In the Cabinet's announcement of August, 1917, we promised India Self-government; in her proclamation in 1858, Queen Victoria promised India good government, and under present conditions the two are incompatible. To demonstrate this thesis, he takes us through the whole gamut of Indian problems. The major problem, he says, is not the framing of a constitution; there are far graver questions to settle before India can be left to manage her own affairs. With many of these Sir Reginald deals fully and faithfully."—Spec

"Sir Reginald Craddock has given outspoken and detailed expression to his views of the Indian civil servants of the die-hard persuasion." R. E.
Am Pol Sci R 24:516 My '30 200w

"Forty years' diversified experience lies in the background of Sir Reginald Craddock's defense of British rule in India. The author writes with authority, and also, for one keenly a partisan, with restraint. His point of view is tangible and clear cut. . . Sir Reginald's book is a mine of information, well organized and for the most part authentic." W. P. Hall
+ Current Hist 33:xviii D '30 580w

"Even though the reader may disagree with the author's conclusions, this is a book worth reading, if only to appreciate the enormous gulf which separates the visionary from the practical administrator."
+ Nation and Ath 46:175 N 2 '29 650w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett
New Repub 65:106 D 10 '30 280w
Sat R 148:453 O 19 '29 1100w

"The outstanding value of the book lies in its proof that the foundations, tangible and intangible, on which our Western democracies are based, have not yet been laid in India."
+ Spec 143:468 O 5 '29 1000w

" 'The Dilemma in India' is the work of a man who has rendered long and honourable service to India. But it is also, we would respectfully suggest, in some degree the work of a man who does not altogether realize that change is inevitable and that a temporary change for the worse is not necessarily a matter for repining. . . Sir Reginald's sincerity no one can doubt, but unfortunately clarity is not a marked characteristic of his book. The style is heavy; the matter, though abundant, is not very well arranged. Those who read with their minds already stored with Indian experience will find the book suggestive; those who approach the subject for the first time are likely to find it rather difficult reading."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p755 O 3 '29 1000w

CRAIG, GORDON. Henry Irving. 232p il $3 Longmans [15s Dent]

B or 92 Irving, Sir Henry 30-28609

The author, who is the son of Ellen Terry, knew Irving from childhood and for twelve years acted in Irving's company. Craig starts off in clear unmistakable terms by saying that he has "never known of, or seen, or heard, a greater actor than Irving." He defends Irving in everything, even his mannerisms, and his strange stage speech and gait. Irving is shown on the stage, as theater director and stage manager, and in private life.

Booklist 27:155 D '30

"No one today is better suited to write of Irving than Gordon Craig, because he was a member of the Lyceum company, because he is the son of Ellen Terry and because his European fame in the theatre makes what he has to say on the subject worth listening to. In the bright but fitful illumination of the pages, Irving flashes before us with his magnetic personality and painstaking art, making plays to his own measure in his own world of the Lyceum, with the world of London crowding eagerly over its enchanted borders." Olga Katzin
Bookm 72:318 N '30 320w

"Nobody who knows Gordon Craig would expect his book on Henry Irving to be a biography: nobody would expect it to be tempered and judicial: nobody would expect it to be even entirely consistent. And every wide awake person would expect it to be lively and immensely stimulating. Craig is writing a book to make Irving, the artist, live again, to explain what he did, how he did it, what he stood for, and why Gordon Craig calls himself his disciple. This is a difficult undertaking, for no task in the entire range of critical writing is so hard as that of bringing a dead actor back to life. The measure of success which Craig achieves is considerable, and his analysis of how the effects he describes were technically brought off by the actor is, of course, of great value." W. P. Eaton
+ Books p5 O 12 '30 850w

"No man was better qualified to write of Irving, no man had a richer store of intimate associations to draw upon, no man can recapture the first, fine, careless rapture like Mr. Craig. But, good as the book is, it might have been better." J. T. Grein
+ — Christian Science Monitor p6 D 13 '30 900w

Cleveland Open Shelf p151 D '30

"Mr. Gordon Craig writes in a spirit of hero-worship that leads him into a number of unnecessary exaggerations and detractions. He is obsessed, too, with his conception of Irving as the precursor of the Ubermarionette. Throughout the book one is conscious of 'the murmer of innumerable bees.' But it is at least a feather in Mr. Craig's bonnet that there does emerge from his pages a portrait, definite, vivid and recognizable." T. M. Pope
+ — Nation and Ath 48:108 O 18 '30 420w

Reviewed by Harold Clurman
New Repub 65:145 D 17 '30 700w

"Mr. Gordon Craig's book on Henry Irving is a performance of unique distinction. To my knowledge, nothing comparable with it exists in the English language, and I believe Irving would have loved it. He would have loved all of it except the parts which the author himself acknowledges he might dislike, and it is pretty certain that most of Mr. Craig's most faithful friends and admirers will deplore. For the sake of the admirable, I shall try here to ignore the nonsensical; merely imploring those who happen to open the book at the pages in which Mr. Craig airs his own peevishness, to turn hastily to those in which as an artist he interprets the great Irving's artistry." Conal O'Riordan

+ New Statesman 36:sup x O 11 '30 1700w

"Craig-on-Irving, once I got into it, proved to be well worth the effort to get by the title page. It is a glamorous work, written in that utterly simple, colloquial, unprofessional style that Craig has evolved for himself, a style that makes you feel you are listening to a man talk, an exceptional man consumed by a passion to tell you everything he thinks and feels. It is a style that is the very opposite of 'fine' writing." B. H. Clark
+ N Y Evening Post p4d D 27 '30 700w

"Suppose Mr. Craig does use Sir Henry as a stalking horse for his own ego and his pet vagaries. Suppose there is a lot of airing of Mr. Craig's more or less important private views on the theatre in general and Bernard Shaw in particular—for the distaste of the prophet of superpuppets for the propagandist of the superman is intense. Nevertheless, we have here a chance to look at a very famous personage from a rarely privileged proximity. . . It is a very handsome tribute to Irving—an admirable collection of worthwhile reminiscence and critical appreciation of the great artist who is the excuse and the inspiration of the volume. Except in the case of Mr. Shaw, Mr. Craig is rarely downright peevish. Some of the things he says are acute enough to excuse—almost—the exaggerated esteem in which he is held by his disciples." H. I. Brock
+ N Y Times p5 O 19 '30 1550w

Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith
N Y World p3e O 26 '30 170w

"Mr. Craig gives us brilliant, illuminating views of Irving on the stage, as manager and in private life. His mannerisms, his theories of art, his astounding attention to detail, his stage tricks, his talk are here to the life. . . Mr. Craig is so satisfying when he tells things that one readily excuses his breathless, familiar way of chatting with his reader and his onslaughts on William Archer, Bernard Shaw and all non-Irving-worshippers—often made quite un-apropos to his subject." R. D. T.
+ Outlook 156:230 O 8 '30 250w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:86 D '30
St Louis 28:301 D '30
Sat R 150:606 N 8 '30 500w

Reviewed by Richard Jennings
Spec 145:693 N 8 '30 300w

"It is intelligible that Mr. Gordon Craig should praise his old chief with a note of warmth, even of indignation. That attitude is fine and loyal, but, combined with Mr. Craig's native incapacity to resist the beckonings of caprice, it leads to some extravagances."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p817 O 16 '30 2200w

CRAM, MILDRED (MRS C. S. MCDOWELL). Madder music. 323p $2.50 Little [7s 6d Harrap]
30-3349

The Batemans are an artistic family: Grandmother Bateman was a famous musician; her granddaughter Elena promises to be an equally famous actress; Richard, Angus, Ysobel, Jean and Arthur are also talented in literary and musical lines. Elena, at twenty, brings home to the family a baby girl, Nancy, whose mother has died. The family dramatically accept the child as Elena's illegitimate baby, and as such Nancy is brought up. Elena's fame as an actress grows, as does her flair for emotionally "madder music" and love affairs. Nancy, however, is a practical, homeloving person with an aversion for artistic life; but she wins the love of young Peter Mifflin, whom Elena, at forty, has married.

"'Madder Music,' jumbling tin horns with thrills of violin, leaves a chaotic echo ringing in your head. What should have been a touch of eccentricity becomes the crash of madness. You see these Batemans as they dream of themselves, not as they are in actuality. They act too often, dance too glibly, sing too startlingly, talk too bitterly. Yet a phrase here, and a note of feeling there, a certain metallic glint in the writing, make your heart drum. The book tingles, compels you to keep time."
+ — Books p10 F 23 '30 430w
Cleveland Open Shelf p63 Ap '30

"Mad as all these people appear, Miss Cram's knowledge of their psychology is impressive, and the book is bright and gay throughout." K. C. Tomlinson
+ — Nation and Ath 47:738 S 13 '30 120w
New Statesman 35:596 Ag 16 '30 150w

"A fine sense of comedy spent on a commonplace vehicle." Edwin Seaver
— + N Y Evening Post p11m F 8 '30 120w

"'Madder Music' takes the human drama of birth, death, ambition, love and makes of it no human thing. Intelligence is there; remarkable facility of language, the kind of agile cleverness that is a sign of the times, but of the life-spark, nothing. It is as if one tried to warm one's self at a display of fireworks."
— N Y Times p22 F 9 '30 350w

"The merits of 'Madder Music' are all on the surface. The story is entertaining, the writing is lively and does justice to the story. The characters and their actions are without depth and outside credibility. But profundity is not always wanted, and for an evening's storytelling, gay and bright-colored, Miss Cram is to be thanked and 'Madder Music' to be read."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:879 Mr 29 '30 230w

"The book lacks any pretence of subtlety, is carelessly written and by no means free from vulgarity, but it must be credited with a certain vigour and what is evidently first-hand knowledge of the life depicted."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p670 Ag 21 '30 180w

CRAM, RALPH ADAMS. Catholic church and art. (Calvert ser.) 121p $1 Macmillan [4s Burns]

701 Art and religion. Roman Catholic church
30-2620

"The only hope for a revival of true art Mr. Cram sees in the Catholic Church, and he calls on her consciously to assume the position which she once unconsciously held as 'creator, patron and protector of the arts' and found a school of Christian art—'a Catholic school under a very simple semi-monastic rule.'"—Boston Transcript

---

"This essay is of peculiar interest in that it is written by one of the greatest ecclesiastical architects in America, who is, we believe, an Episcopal layman. While this is not a history of Christian architecture, it is an interesting interpretation of the development of architecture under the impulse and inspiration of the Christian religion. In fact, in many places where Mr. Cram writes Catholic, he might well write Christian." T. C. R.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 22 '30 600w
Cath World 131:244 My '30 500w

"An eminent architect, Mr. Cram takes most of his texts from architecture. In 'modernism' he sees the raising up of ugliness, and he looks to the Church as the agency for revitalization." Byron Darnton
N Y Evening Post p11m Ja 25 '30 50w

"An exceeding wealth of scholarship, almost more than a book of this length will hold, is concentrated in these pages, which, in consequence, serve admirably as an introduction to the highly complex study of the passing of the torch from age to age." Shaemas O'Sheel
+ N Y World p11m Mr 9 '30 420w

"As a significant essay upon art and its laws this book deserves praise but we cannot be so sure that the author proves his case as to the part the Church has played in the development of all that is worth while in this field." E. B. Chaffee

CRAM, R. A.—Continued

+ — Outlook 155:549 Ag 6 '30 200w

St Louis 28:102 Ap '30

CRANE, HART. The bridge. 82p $2.50 Liveright

811 30-8704

"'The Bridge' is a unified group of fifteen poems dealing primarily with Brooklyn Bridge. But the bridge itself is treated as a symbol; it is the bridge between past and future, between Europe and the Indies; it is the visible token of the American continent. And, although this book of poems—this one massive poem divided into eight sections and fifteen chants—begins with a modest apostrophe to a bridge over the East River, it ends bravely as an attempt to create the myth of America."—New Repub

---

For biographical sketch of the author see Wilson bulletin 5:104 O '30

Booklist 27:58 O '30

"One cannot characterize a time and land, any more satisfactorily than one can classify an animal, by merely naming its diseases. Neither can one describe a country three thousand miles wide and three hundred years old without taking longer views into time and space than those offered by the Woolworth Building. Mr. Crane has indeed heard of an American hinterland, and he writes five stanzas about the Mississippi that are the best stanzas in his book because they are the least strident, but in imagination he never gets farther west than Brooklyn Bridge or closer to the twentieth century than Walt Whitman. . . Mr. Crane explicitly claims intellectual descent from Walt Whitman, but he is a better poet than this would indicate." Odell Shepard

Bookm 72:86 S '30 850w

"Despite Hart Crane's occasional lapses into rhetoric that becomes merely florid and diffuse there is no one writing poetry today with like emotional intensity. With the publication of 'The Bridge' his promise as an important American poet is fulfilled. His defects and merits are here, eloquently displayed." Horace Gregory

+ Books p4 Ap 20 '30 1150w

"He is intensely modern in methods of thought and expression—impressionistic, futuristic. . . Someone has said that the reason so many people say they do not like poetry is because they are mentally too lazy to put forth the effort necessary to enjoy good poetry. 'The Bridge' will repay such mental effort and will in the end give the reader some idea of what the best of the extreme modernists are trying to do."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 25 '30 480w

Cleveland Open Shelf p153 D '30

"Slowly, with dignity, in lines compact with thought, in phrases soaked with implications, the poem moves to its ultimate, mystic vision, in which the bridge, symbol of all that America may be, is symbol of that union of the individual soul with the eternal reality which is the goal of every mystic's quest. Its imagery, as even a few quotations show, is sound and amazingly original." Granville Hicks

+ Nation 130:520 Ap 30 '30 950w

"A poet who chooses such a theme, and who, by power of imagination or intensity of feeling, escapes the platitudinous, is tempted to assume the role of a Messiah. Many ambitious poems are both messianic and commonplace, but 'The Bridge,' I think, is neither. In its presumptuous effort the poem has succeeded —not wholly, of course, for its faults are obvious; but still it has succeeded to an impressive degree." Malcolm Cowley

+ New Repub 62:276 Ap 23 '30 1450w

"This is perhaps the most remarkable attempt at an orchestrated modern American poem since Eliot's 'Wasteland.' . . One does not feel that 'The Bridge' has been more than partially successful in its larger implication. To propose so enormous and complex a mystic synthesis is almost to invite failure. Hart Crane has succeeded at least in catching certain major qualities of the American spirit and tradition. He has welded them in a 'swift peal of secular light.' He has honorably advanced the tradition of Walt Whitman." Vincent McHugh

+ N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 19 '30 500w

"We suggested the possibility of a theory of poetry which 'The Bridge' may have been written to exemplify. Such a theory might be called cubism in poetry. And it would call for just such work as Hart Crane has given us. If this conclusion is in any degree correct, then 'The Bridge' is to be regarded as a successful piece of work. The totality of tonal variations and tonal massings, plus the occasional pictorial achievements, give to the entire piece indisputable weight. Since to the mind of the present writer cubism, whatever value it may have for painting, is wholly valueless in poetry, 'The Bridge,' nevertheless remains for him, in spite of its glitter and its seeming intellectual importance, a piece that is in the main spurious as poetry." P. H.

+ — N Y Times p2 Ap 27 '30 780w

"It cannot be doubted that 'The Bridge' is as important a poem as has been written in our time. That it will be subjected to careful critical scrutiny is certain, and it is probable that that scrutiny will find in it a greatness beyond the reach of a reviewer's superlatives." Granville Hicks

+ N Y World p10m My 4 '30 700w

Reviewed by L. T. Nicholl

Outlook 155:146 My 28 '30 80w

"There are moments throughout the poem when the hypnosis is achieved, and lines of pure electricity occur; but the lapse to the descriptive is sudden and immediate. The poem is composed mainly of unfused details, and is excited rather than rhythmic. In Mr. Crane we see an attempt to emotionalize a theme to the point where both he and the reader will forget to question its justification. It is, whatever fragmentary success may result from it, a form of hysteria . . . It is possible that Mr. Crane may recover himself. In any event, he has given us, in his first book, several lyrics that one is tempted to call great. And one thing he has demonstrated, the impossibility of getting anywhere with the Whitmanian inspiration. No writer of comparable ability has struggled with it before, and, with Mr. Crane's wreckage in view, it seems highly unlikely that any writer of comparable genius will struggle with it again." Yvor Winters

— + Poetry 36:153 Je '30 3150w

"As a sheer phrase-maker Crane commands attention. . . Yet it is not phrase-making that chiefly distinguishes Crane; it is the apostrophic power, the strangely tuned but undeniable eloquence which makes 'The Bridge' an important contribution to recent American poetry. Here is the accepted distortion and telescoping of time-space which has become, it seems, part of every modernist's equipment; here is the mechanism of 'The Waste Land' and the Poundian 'Cantos' giving shape to scattered symphonic passages. But here also is a passion that mounts to a sometimes broken but finally sustained rhapsody. 'The Bridge' is manifestly prophetic." Louis Untermeyer

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1125 Je 14 '30 850w

"He has, perhaps, a touch—how slight or great it may be we are not prepared to say—of the thing called genius. He has the fire in his bowels. And he does things to the English language that make us wish to scream in torment. The use of intransitive verbs as transitive verbs, the use of nouns as verbs, the jarring of mismated adjectives and nouns, the typographical tricks, so many wild phrases like 'Who grindest oar, and arguing the mast Subscribest holocaust of ships,' a great deal of sound and fury in reality signifying very little, cannot negate the fact that on occasion the cascading fervor of this poet's speech sweeps aside his obvious faults and raises the rainbow of his vision before our eyes." W. R. Benét

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1176 Jl 5 '30 1350w

CRANE, NATHALIA CLARA RUTH. Pocahontas. 103p $2.50 Dutton
811 30-29353

A dramatic narrative in which the young poet conceives a Red revolution in the United States. Eight poets beg the reincarnated Pocahontas to aid the country, and she does so. The story is presented in seven canto divisions of variously rhymed verse.

"Often reminding us that it is the work of a girl in her teens, but heartening and refreshing for novelty and a wit that at times degenerates into smartness. . . Whatever its defects, 'Pocahontas' is a daring and amusing step forward in a young poet's work." Laura Benet
+ — Books p30 D 7 '30 500w

Christian Century 48:29 Ja 7 '31 100w

"It is a cheerful social satire in mock heroic couplets, sounding very much as though written by a young Pope, well acquainted with movies and jazz. She has passed the period of charming by naïveté or childish insight, and has not yet arrived at any particular knowledge of human nature; but out of the land of books, newspapers and museums she has produced by cleverness alone an astonishing and amusing unreality."
+ — Christian Science Monitor p4 D 6 '30 230w

" 'Pocahontas' will remain one of the salient curiosities of our literature. What next comes from Miss Crane's pen will, we hope, be even more clearly and directly written. She seems to be struggling free of unusual word usages that had turned against her. She has much still to learn concerning language. But her fancy remains extremely original. And we give her fair warning that we shall scrutinize every word and phrase of her next book with an extortionate eye that no longer judges her as a little-girl poet." W. R. Benét
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:342 N 15 '30 450w

CRANE, STEPHEN. Collected poems; ed. by Wilson Follett. 132p $2.50 (7s 6d) Knopf 811 30-9605

"Stephen Crane, the romanticist and adventurer and the novelist of the '90s, published during his short lifetime two books of poetry: 'The Black Riders' and 'War is Kind.' These two volumes, together with certain other more recently discovered poems, are now given us again in the 'Collected Poems.' "—N Y Times

Booklist 26:387 Jl '30

"Quite aside from any other virtue that the poems may possess, they are perennially youthful and alert. . . The percentage of genuinely youthful, spontaneous poetry is remarkably small. The production of such poetry demands technical precocity, and Stephen Crane was decidedly precocious in many ways." Horace Gregory
+ New Repub 63:159 Je 25 '30 600w

"Granting that he was to some extent an innovator, he must be judged today simply for his poetic work, and that is rather slight. The truth is that Crane was not so much a poet as he was a writer of parables. . . Crane had no command of rhythm. his verse is utterly lacking in rhythmical persuasion. He had no very unique or telling imagery. He is always, moreover, rather more interested in being prophet than in being poet. . . These parables will be read for their wisdom and their skepticism and not for their poetic quality." E. L. Walton
— + N Y Times p2 S 14 '30 500w

"As epigrams his poems must have been bewildering in the nineties, and they are not without force and pertinence at the present time; but good epigrams are not necessarily good poems." Granville Hicks
— + N Y World p7m Je 1 '30 150w

Pratt p27 autumn '30

"There is nothing contemptible in the least of his poems. Acidulous and brilliant, unappreciated in his time, these elliptical concisions have not yet received their due from a generation which employs their very technique. It was forty years before Emily Dickinson won her rightful audience and a quarter of a centuary before a publisher ventured a 'Complete Works' of Stephen Crane. It is a cause for gratification that the same publisher has also risked the first complete—and popularly priced—collection of Crane's concisely intimate poetry."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1150 Je 21 '30 300w

"The secret of Crane's success in the short story lay in the tension he achieved between passion and irony and in his mastery of impressionism. In his verse all these qualities are present, but they are seldom brought into a creative unity and the loose free verse which he used favoured laxness. Consequently the reporter in him was too often free to throw off a mood into words which failed to distil its essence. His moods were often and reasonably embittered, but he tended merely to relieve his bitterness in verse instead of expressing it with an intensity that transcended the purely personal reaction. Much of his verse therefore was a kind of exasperated prose."
Times [London] Lit Sup p671 Ag 21 '30 280w

CRAUFORD, LANE. Acting; its theory and practice; with illustrative examples of players past and present; foreword by H. Chance Newton. 248p $3 Smith, R.R. [10s 6d Constable]
792 Acting 30-33697

The late Mr Lane Crauford, from his notes collected for a handbook on the technique of the actor, completed this volume just before his death. The various aspects of technique which he takes up include the expression of the emotions, natural acting, distinction, business and by-play, interplay and ensemble, finesse, stage movements, style, and exits and entrances.

Boston Transcript p3 N 8 '30 350w

Reviewed by Mark Segal
Nation and Ath 47:324 Je 7 '30 30w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:91 D '30

"Mr. Crauford's able treatise is the work of a deep lover of the theatre."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p495 Je 12 '30 1200w

CRAWFORD, MARY CAROLINE. Famous families of Massachusetts. 2v il $10 Little 929.1 Massachusetts—Biography. Massachusetts—Genealogy 30-32010

"Included are sketches of the following families: Adams, Agassiz, Ames, Amory, Appleton, Balch, Bowditch, Boylston, Bradford, Brooks, Bulfinch, Cabot, Choate, Conant, Coolidge, Crowninshield, Derby, Dexter, Eliot, Endicott, Forbes, Frothingham, Gardner, Gray, Hemenway, Higginson, Holmes, Hunnewell, Jackson, Lawrence, Long, Lowell, Lyman, Otis, Paine, Palfrey, Parkman, Peabody, Perkins, Phillips, Pickering, Quincy, Revere, Saltonstall, Sargent, Sears, Sedgwick, Shaw, Sigourney, Sturgis, Thayer, Tuckerman, Warren, Weld, Wigglesworth, Winslow, Winthrop and Woodberry. These receive the chief biographical sketches, but many others related to them are mentioned in the course of the narrative."—N Y World

"Not formal enough to be called history nor detailed enough to be placed on the genealogical shelves, the collection of anecdotes and episodes represent, nevertheless, more of definite research, more of scholarly selection and elimination, than if they belonged to either one class or the other. Because of her wide familiarity with her subject she has not been forced to write with one finger on her notes, so to speak. Indeed, she gives the impression of writing from personal knowledge alone, a knowledge not gained from books, and such an impression is most definitely true." G. R. B. Richards
+ Boston Transcript p8 N 29 '30 2300w

"The amount of research that went into the preparation of this work must give us pause. It is clearly a task lightened by enthusiasm.

CRAWFORD, M. C.—Continued
Miss Crawford has a pleasant style, and a faculty for carrying on the thread of her narrative clearly and consecutively amid the tempting ramifications of family branches."
+ Christian Science Monitor p6 D 13 '30 300w

"If the text is primarily intended as a banquet of delight for all the New Englanders who belong to or are connected with the select galaxy here served up, it is of a sort to furnish likewise a deal of solid nourishment to the student of history and the curious examiner into the springs which operate and regulate our national machinery. . . If the author cannot always keep her tongue out of her cheek—as in the case of Cap'n Bill Sturgis—she is by and large, a thoroughgoing True Believer." H. I. Brock
N Y Times p3 D 21 '30 1500w

"Mary Caroline Crawford, who has prepared these two volumes, has told many entertaining anecdotes about these old families and their modern representatives. She is neither fulsome in her praise nor long-winded in her story. We can respect the achievements of these men and women because among them are some of the most distinguished names of our history." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p3e N 30 '30 280w

CRAWFORD, NELSON ANTRIM. Unhappy wind. 361p $2.50 Coward-McCann
30-28185

The childhood and adolescence of a sensitive boy who, in early years, sees reality in terms of color, and later, during the high school period, thru the illusory media of romance and religion. Externally, Winfrid lives the ordinary life of a boy brought up in a middle-western town; it is the inner life of a developing personality at variance with its environment, that most deeply concerns the author.

Bookm 72:302 N '30 300w
Books p17 N 9 '30 600w
Boston Transcript p3 D 20 '30 450w
Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p4d O 18 '30 100w

"The author has marked talent for handling truthfully all the crises of adolescence, especially those of the incipient artist. He can get under the skin of his young hero and write and exult with him through episodes involving both flesh and spirit. But he does not make him lovable throughout his blunders. The reader closes the book thinking: What a young cad!"
N Y Times p6 N 9 '30 300w

"It is interesting as a study of a human being who is moved solely by sense impulses. But the hero's insistent translation of every sense impression into terms of color, while no doubt significant from a psychologist's point of view, is boring to the ordinary reader of fiction." F. L. R.
— Outlook 156:311 O 22 '30 80w
Sat R of Lit 7:292 N 1 '30 500w

CRAWFORD, NELSON ANTRIM, and MENNINGER, KARL AUGUSTUS, eds. Healthy-minded child. 198p $1.75 Coward-McCann
136.7 Children—Management. Mental physiology and hygiene 30-22238

The contributors to this symposium on the mental hygiene of the child attempt to show how science may be specifically applied to the bringing up of children and to the developing in children of healthy-mindedness. Contents: What is a healthy mind? by K. A. Menninger; Mental health in the home, by G. K. Pratt; A mother looks at mental health, by L. M. Gilbreth; Mental health and the school—a psychiatrist's view, by H. M. Adler; Mental health and the school—a teacher's view, by Bertrand Russell; The physical basis of mental health, by J. A. Jackson; The formation of habits, by L. G. Lowrey; Lying, stealing, and running away, by N. A. Crawford; Mental health in youth, by E. R. and G. H. Groves; Play and mental health, by W. C. Menninger; Sexual development and sex education, by K. A. Menninger; The child's reading, by N. A. Crawford.

Booklist 27:186 Ja '31
Boston Transcript p3 O 1 '30 150w
Reviewed by F. G. Seabury
Outlook 156:670 D 24 '30 80w
St Louis 28:257 N '30
Reviewed by Joseph Jastrow
Sat R of Lit 7:366 N 22 '30 750w

CRAWFORD, PHYLLIS (MRS CYRIL KAY SCOTT) (JOSIE TURNER, pseud.). Blot: little city cat. 56p il $2 Cape

The strange adventures of a little black city cat who got into serious difficulties when kind Mr Brindle, with whom he stayed, was ill. But when Mr Brindle came back to his paper store all went well with the Blot.

"It is certainly not a happy story, but might serve a decidedly worthy purpose in the hands of the child who needs education in the treatment of animals." A. L. S.
Chicago Daily Tribune p13 N 15 '30 50w

"Sincerely child-like and amusing. . . The format of this book is another example of the good bookmaking of Robert Ballou, and the illustrations by Mr. Holling, already known in the Middle West for his work on children's books, are droll and have just the right touch of whimsy." O. M. Fuller
+ N Y World p3e N 23 '30 100w

"Page after page shows across its surface or along the wide margins the Blot, playful, plaintive, skittering off before the onslaught of brooms, wet and miserable, investigative, sleepy, hungry, feeding, asleep, always a live half-grown kitten to the last hair of his tail. And his world is seen in the same way: feet, and reaching hands, and ash-cans, and the under parts of furniture. One would need no text to follow the changing story of the twenty-four hours from the moment the substitute news-seller cruelly sweeps the Blot out of the news-stand to his safe return to the welcome of Mr. Brindle the next morning. But the text of Phyllis Crawford is as satisfactory in its own way as the pictures, a simple chronicle of entirely cat-like affairs, to be understood by the smallest child and relished by the oldest uncle."
+ Sat R of Lit 7:440 D 6 '30 300w

CRAWFORD, PHYLLIS (MRS CYRIL KAY SCOTT) (JOSIE TURNER, pseud.). Elsie Dinsmore on the loose. 166p il $2.50 Cape
Finley, Martha—Parodies, travesties, etc.
30-27954

Elsie Dinsmore, that sanctimonious heroine of a former day, comes to life in this later and more sophisticated age, but still clings to the precepts and teachings of a former generation. From the age of fourteen to her sixteenth birthday we follow her valiant attempts to inflict her godly principles on a harassed and worldly-wise father, and are surprised to learn that despite her encounters with this bootlegging world Elsie is "older and wiser than when we first met her, though no less pure, innocent, and devout."

"Miss Turner woos and easily wins the restrained chuckle rather than the loud laugh."
+ Books p11 Ag 24 '30 100w

"Miss Turner has given this material a perfect treatment. There is a delightful grace and good humor in this parading of the virtues which the present generation has cast off in the way the young snake sheds its skin. . . Miss Turner's book can be recommended to those in quest of frivolous diversion; but it bears in its pages, just the same, the wisdom, quaintly conveyed, of tolerant reflectiveness." Evelyn Scott
+ N Y Evening Post p11m My 17 '30 600w

"Miss Turner has caught, as well as one may expect from a modern worldling, the tone and manner of the ineffable child. It sounds like Elsie, it looks like Elsie—even the pansies on the cover have not been forgotten—but it is not quite Elsie. That indescribable aura of religious self-righteousness has so nearly vanished from the world that it is hard to call up even its echo."
+ — N Y Times p6 My 25 '30 380w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton
Sat R of Lit 7:6 Jl 26 '30 450w

CRAWLEY, ALFRED ERNEST. Studies of savages and sex; ed. by Theodore Besterman. 300p $4.50 Dutton [10s 6d Methuen]

392 Savages. Sex. Marriage. Society, Primitive [29-17411]

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Reviewed by E. M. Loeb
Am Anthropol 32:662 O '30 500w

"There is little in anthropological and psychological literature which can match the insights given by Mr. Crawley into the problems discussed in this volume." Herbert Blumer
+ Am J Soc 35:860 Mr '30 180w

CRAWLEY, RAYBURN. Valley of creeping men. 319p $2 Harper
30-14875

The murder of Marakoff, a scientist who kept a gorilla, the Yellow One, in his London flat, gives Ned Shackleton the opportunity to take up his work. The Shackleton party penetrates the heart of an African jungle in their search for the mysterious and fabulously rich Valley of creeping men. One of them enters—at the cost of his life. But Shackleton, with Marakoff's secret in his possession, and the woman he loves by his side, goes forward on his quest for fame and the Yellow One.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p12 Je 29 '30 120w
Boston Transcript p4 Je 21 '30 450w

Reviewed by Dashiell Hammett
N Y Evening Post p4s Je 7 '30 200w

"The plot is extremely involved and neither the characters nor the incidents are particulary convincing."
— N Y Times p17 Je 15 '30 180w

"The story succeeds in conjuring up wild expectations of the grisly and fabulous, which fail repeatedly and dismally to materialize."
— N Y World p7m Je 15 '30 100w

CRAWSHAY-WILLIAMS, ELIOT. Booby trap. 306p $2 Hale
30-31488

All about two young middle-class Britishers, Stair Regan and Peter Vayne, who proceed to fall in love (English fashion) on the Rapide en route to the Riviera and carry the affair to its conclusion at Cannes, Nice and Monte Carlo.

Bookm 72:vii N '30 70w

"Whether this volume deserves to be called brilliant, provocative, darlng, charming, animated, sparkling, serious, exotic, profound, startling, delightful and intimate, in agreement with the adjectival jacket, each reader must decide for himself. To one observer it seemed a harmless, well mannered and . . . not very silly yarn about the adventures in Cannes, Nice and Monte Carlo of two young Britishers: Miss Stair Regan, who has suffered, and Peter Vayne, afflicted with 'A pagan worship of beauty and joy' and a bad habit of exclaiming, 'How extraordinarily jolly!' "
Books p22 N 2 '30 150w
Boston Transcript p5 N 22 '30 200w

"The author ruined what might have been at least a fair, though still a usual and inconsequential story, with a peculiarly maddening variation of the aside. During each conversation long italicized paragraphs are inserted, introduced by such captions as 'Flash of Peter's thought,' 'Section of Stair's thought,' 'Peter's thoughts (standing, looking in a milliner's window),' and similar phrases which, though supposed to give an insight into the characters, actually kill what reality they may have."
— N Y Times p20 N 23 '30 230w

CREEL, HERRLEE GLESSNER. Sinism; a study of the evolution of the Chinese world-view. 127p $2 (9s) Open ct.

181.1 Philosophy, Chinese 29-22818

This book is given briefly to two tasks. The first of these is to show the existence, in pre-Buddhist China, of a distinctively world-view, which has been termed Sinism. The second is to trace the origin and development of Chinese thought from the earliest times thru the period of the classical philosophical systems.

"The subject of the book is entirely too inclusive for Dr. Creel's background. Not only are there ancient Chinese texts of which he shows no knowledge, but he ignores modern critical Chinese scholarship, such as the work of Hu Shih and K'ang Yu Wei, and he does not use a number of important European works which he should have considered, such as Forke's Geschichte der alten chinesischen Philosophie. In spite of these limitations, Dr. Creel's book is stimulating, and as a first effort in a very difficult field, it is a creditable achievement." J. K. Shryock
— + Ann Am Acad 152:404 N '30 300w

"Chinese philosophy receives a well-studied and attractive interpretation in this book."
+ Boston Transcript p2 D 31 '29 450w

"Here is a welcome and stimulating volume for all students striving after some notion of Chinese thought as an organic whole. . . In lucid, smooth-running style he characterizes afresh the classic worthies of Chinese thought, finding in each the dream of a perfect harmony within an adjusted cosmic social order." C. H. Hamilton
+ Int J Ethics 40:445 Ap '30 1200w

"Considering the poverty of literature in English on Chinese thought, it is disappointing that this book adds so little to our knowledge. Even what Dr. Creel appears to regard as new presents nothing very different from what Dr. E. H. Parker gave us years ago. His association of these ideas with the early village and agricultural life of the Chinese, though interesting, is not very significant. Dr. Creel's book is carefully written and may be recommended to those who wish for a brief survey of some main lines of Chinese thought." A. G. Widgery
— + J Religion 10:262 Ap '30 300w
St Louis 28:63 Mr '30
Times [London] Lit Sup p278 Mr 27 '30 200w

CRESSON, WILLIAM PENN. Francis Dana, a ² Puritan diplomat at the court of Catherine the Great. 397p il $5 Dial press

B or 92 Dana, Francis. United States—Foreign relations—Russia. Russia—Foreign relations—United States 30-31350

"Professor Cresson gives us a detailed biography of a Puritan 'Father of Liberty,' a supporter of Washington in Congress, and later Chief Justice of Massachusetts. He stresses the most significant chapter of his life, his diplomatic career at the court of Catherine the Great of Russia, by whom, incidentally, he was never officially received. With many excerpts from his correspondence with John Adams and Franklin, hitherto unpublished, it gives us the first full-length story of a picturesque incident in American diplomatic history."—N Y Evening Post

N Y Evening Post p4d D 27 '30 100w

CRESSON, W. P.—Continued

"Professor Cresson, who was formerly a member of the Foreign Service of the United States (he served as Secretary of the American Embassy in Russia), and who is an authority on diplomatic history, writes in a scholarly manner, with no attempt at 'modernizing' his subject. His narrative is always profusely documented, and it possesses fully the qualities required in a serious investigatory work. That at times it may be found not very vivid is excusable; for, obviously, the author's primary object was not to entertain the reader." Alexander Nazaroff

+ N Y Times p14 D 21 '30 1450w

"If any further evidence were needed of the startling force of the personalities of the Adamses of Massachusetts, it could be found in W. P. Cresson's book. These somewhat pedestrian pages, not so much biographical as historical, and dealing with an obscure chapter of early American diplomacy, spring into life whenever the name of Adams appears upon them. One wonders at the fact that the precious Dana papers upon which the work is based have lain so long unused. Nevertheless, for the general reader this portrait of the Puritan diplomat takes on its greatest value as it takes on its undoubted interest from the fact that Dana was a friend of the Adamses." F. L. Robbins

Outlook 156:546 D 3 '30 750w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 83:18 Ja '31 180w

CRESTON, DORMER, pseud. See Baynes, D. J.

CREW, HELEN (COALE) (MRS HENRY CREW). Singing seamen. 237p il $1.75 Century

30-22900

A reworking of the Æneid for boys and girls. Around a group of the younger followers of Æneas the author has woven this story of the hardships and adventures which ended when they stood on the site of the future city of Rome.

Cleveland Open Shelf p134 N '30

"To transform the Æneid into a tale for children Miss Crew has used a device that affords good opportunity for entertainment. . . Lack of a unified conception is the fundamental weakness of the book. Another weakness is Miss Crew's failure to comprehend the dramatic possibilities of the supernatural in her original. She interprets Juno and Venus as two meddling old women! . . Miss Crew's dialogue is not always convincing." A. C. Vaughan

— + Sat R of Lit 7:333 N 15 '30 500w

Reviewed by Beulah Amidon

Survey 65:341 D 15 '30 30w

CROCKETT, WILLIAM DAY, and CROCKETT, MRS SARAH FRANCES (GATES). Satchel guide to Spain and Portugal. 350p $4 Houghton [16s Allen, G.]

914.6 Spain—Description and travel. Portugal—Description and travel 30-18383

The book gives all information likely to be required by the traveller to Spain or Portugal. It is of a handy size, and contains a map of the Peninsula and plans of Madrid, Barcelona, Seville, Lisbon and the Alhambra.

Booklist 27:60 O '30

Nation and Ath 47:742 S 12 '30 220w

"Appears to be the most comprehensive travelers' guide to the Iberian Peninsula that has yet been issued, and an excellent companion to 'A Satchel Guide to Europe.' " Halsey Raines

+ N Y Times p14 Ag 3 '30 170w

"No one could ask for a more compact and comprehensive guide than this little book, covering as it does every corner of the two countries and providing you with all the information you could possibly need whether it be historical background or the mere mechanics of travel. It is evident from this splendid guide that the authors have made a long and intimate study of the Iberian Peninsula." Bernice Whittemore

+ Outlook 155:395 Jl 9 '30 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:74 O '30

St Louis 28:216 S '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p669 Ag 21 '30 140w

CROFTS, FREEMAN WILLS. Sir John Magill's last journey. 328p $2 Harper [7s 6d Collins]

30-30709

Inspector Frost investigates and solves the strange case of the disappearance of a wealthy Belfast linen manufacturer.

Bookm 72:xxiv D '30 100w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p20 N 23 '30 220w

Boston Transcript p6 D 10 '30 280w

"There is plenty of action in this thriller, but the re-enactment of episodes on the boat train is something that it is highly improbable any set of detectives would undertake." Bruce Rae

+ — N Y Times p32 N 30 '30 220w

"We are bewildered; but the story is told so well that we see the relevance of each detail and, beginning dimly to suspect the ingenuity that made the crime possible, we are prepared in a measure for French's synthesis. Mr. Crofts has written nothing better since the Starvel tragedy, which one reader, at least, regards as the high-water mark of detective fiction."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p760 S 25 '30 250w

CRON, MRS GRETCHEN. Roaring veldt. 286p il $5 (21s) Putnam

799.2 Hunting—Africa. Africa, East 30-5542

A finely illustrated record of hunting and photographing adventures by the author and her husband on their four expeditions to British East Africa.

Booklist 26:303 My '30

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice

Bookm 71:xiv Ag '30 280w

Books p18 Mr 16 '30 100w

"There is a 'feminine' element in this book which gives it the novel appeal of a delectable incongruity. . . They are practically all hunting-with-a-camera adventures. They are told with such a sensitive response to the weird beauty of the haunts of African wild animal life, that we also feel the spell of that ancient land." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Mr 15 '30 1000w

Cleveland Open Shelf p74 My '30

Reviewed by Sylva Norman

Nation and Ath 47:90 Ap 19 '30 230w

Reviewed by Gregory Mason

N Y Times p14 Je 1 '30 300w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 154:351 F 26 '30 70w

St Louis 28:141 My '30

"A most readable account of present day safari life in East Africa. She has made four expeditions and is in a position to speak with authority." Kermit Roosevelt

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1045 My 17 '30 250w

Spec 145:260 Ag 23 '30 200w

Springf'd Republican p12 My 1 '30 380w

Times [London] Lit Sup p272 Mr 27 '30 900w

CROOKALL, R. Coal measure plants. 80p pl $5 Longmans [12s 6d Arnold, E. & co.]

561 Paleobotany [30-5715]

"A brief and, as far as possible, non-technical introduction to the palæobotany of the British Coal Measures from the point of view of the external morphology."—Pref.

N Y New Tech Bks 14:52 O '29

Times [London] Lit Sup p1039 D 5 '29 300w

CROOKER, HERBERT. Hollywood murder mystery. 304p $2 Macaulay

A party in Beverly Hills is followed by the murder of lovely Berylyn Bovary. Many persons connected with the Hollywood film world are involved, until Clay Brooke, blithe criminologist, solves the mystery.

Bookm 72:xxvii O '30 50w

"Readable, riddlesome and generally far less trying than most Hollywood mysteries." Will Cuppy

+ Books p16 Mr 16 '30 100w

"Movie fans should enjoy the story, but judged by the standards of first rate mystery fiction the book is a sad affair."

— N Y World p8m My 18 '30 100w

Springf'd Republican p7e Je 15 '30 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p921 N 6 '30 200w

CROSS, RUTH. Enchantment. 288p $2 Longmans

[30-6543]

Depicts the rise of Rosemary Mooney, from the wrong side of the railroad tracks in Goshen, Texas, to Broadway stardom, describing as an important step therein her marriage to a stiff-necked millionaire and her divorce from him.

Books p10 F 23 '30 180w

"Miss Cross writes in an interesting and animated style a tale characterized by admirable intuition into the characters' motives." A. C. F.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 26 '30 450w

"The story moves swiftly and, though it falls back on sentiment to solve a problem of hard human realities, is entertaining in a light way."

+ — N Y Evening Post p7e My 11 '30 250w

"It is a sincere and sympathetic story Miss Cross has told, in a prose which is a constant delight."

+ N Y Times p27 Mr 23 '30 550w

CROSS, WILBUR LUCIUS. Four contemporary novelists. 204p $2 Macmillan

823 English fiction. Conrad, Joseph. Bennett, Arnold. Galsworthy, John. Wells, Herbert George 30-28311

As supplementary to his Development of the English Novel, first published in 1899, the author has chosen for rather full exposition four contemporary novelists of the elder generation —Conrad, Bennett, Galsworthy and Wells.

Booklist 27:196 Ja '31

"This is the typical work of a literary historian, combining its virtues and its limitations. On the credit side we must put a simple, readable style; clear analyses of long and often difficult novels; a comprehensive view gained from a lifetime of specialization in the field; reasonable and unbiased judgments, which if they are not very bold are very venerable. But as criticism the method is ineffective, both by reason of the dilution already mentioned, and by reason of lacking a point of view. Impartiality is admirable in a scientist, but admirations and convictions are the life of criticism: we want to know where a man stands even if we disagree with him." A. R. Thompson

+ — Bookm 72:435 D '30 650w

"Although these sketches add little to our knowledge of Conrad, Bennett, Galsworthy and Wells they bring them freshly and pleasantly into our minds again and emphasize their importance as painters of their time. Already, Dean Cross points out, these novelists are the elder generation. Rebecca West has called them 'the uncles,' and a new group with a new manner is presenting a new age. Meanwhile 'the uncle,' like the elder Forsytes, retain their vitality." Garreta Busey

+ Books p7 N 23 '30 600w

Churchman p16 N 1 '30 20w

N Y Times p2 O 26 '30 650w

"Dean Cross brings to his studies of Conrad, Galsworthy, Bennett and Wells fine critical equipment and a delightful, witty style. . . He opens no new critical vistas, but he amplifies those already open, and his book will illuminate the reading of those who seek to read contemporary fiction critically." F. L. R.

+ Outlook 156:347 O 29 '30 220w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1090 D 18 '30 180w

CROUSE, RUSSEL. Mr Currier and Mr Ives; ² a note on their lives and times. 138p pl $5 Doubleday, Doran

769 Currier and Ives. Currier, Nathaniel. Ives, James Merritt. Engravings. United States—Social life and customs 31-489

With the exception of one brief chapter on Gentleman Johnny Burgoyne, this book is a commentary on American life and manners in the 19th century, as illustrated by the prints of Messrs Currier and Ives. The text covers among other subjects: votes for women; the Chicago fire; wood-burning locomotives; ice-skating in Central Park; horses that raced when Lincoln was president; and the episode of Maria Bloomer.

"Mr. Crouse, realizing that the prints of those two gentlemen are simply illustrations of life in the United States during the last two centuries, has used some of them as such in this book of authentic and seemingly spontaneous bits of Americana. If you want to read of the workshop, printing processes and business methods of the 'Printmakers to the American People' you will be disappointed. But, if you have a love for the gayety, courage and sorrows of our fathers and their fathers, this book is for you." Everett Henry

Books p5 D 14 '30 450w

"The interest lies not only in the quaint illustrations of American scenes but in the essays Crouse has written decribing the customs of days long gone by. He combines information and comment and makes his articles vivid and enjoyable. . . The illustrations in 'Mr. Currier and Mr. Ives' are reminiscent of those that father threw out some time in the nineties, but, like the horsehair sofa, the marble-topped center table and the walnut highboy, they are back in favor and many of them are rarities. There is no denying their appeal now that the objects they portray belong to the historic past." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p11 N 24 '30 230w

" 'Mr. Currier and Mr. Ives' represent all that is most sentimental, most innocent, and most superficial in the America of the mid-nineteenth century. . . This is 'popular art' at its worst, and pretty bad at that! But as records —pitiful records—of what the Americans of 1840 to 1880 had to look at as souvenirs of their ideals and fancies the book [is] invaluable."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:478 D 20 '30 480w

CROWELL, CHESTER THEODORE. Liquor, loot and ladies. 405p $3 (10s 6d) Knopf 30-14012

"This is the story of the rise and fall of a political boss. It is a rather full account of how politics are run in city, county and state. The central character went to college for a time. Then he became a lawyer. Then he tried to make a speech in a saloon and found his vocation. Or rather his vocation found him. It was not speech making. It was the supplying of ways and means of procedure to the organization. That organization was personified in Mike Callaghan, the boss at the time the story opens. Presently the leadership passed to the man who is telling this story, and he made and unmade Mayors, Governors, and other figureheads until the day of the gangster swept him in turn out of the singularly unimaginative picture."—N Y Times

CROWELL, C. T.—Continued

"This book is a clear and logical text on machine politics. Great stretches of it are not exciting, but all of it is informative and fascinating." Stanley Walker
+ — Books p16 My 11 '30 500w

Reviewed by Courtenay Terret
N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 15 '30 800w

"The parts about the town and county are entertaining. The parts about State politics are pretty dull. The style is quick and unadorned."
N Y Times p24 Mr 30 '30 230w

Sat R of Lit 6:970 Ap 19 '30 350w

Times [London] Lit Sup p671 Ag 21 '30 400w

CROWELL'S dictionary of business and finance. rev ed 601p $3.50 Crowell

658.03 Business—Dictionaries. Finance—Dictionaries 30-7726

A new edition of this practical compendium of important terms used in business and finance. The articles in the appendix on the monetary system, tables of foreign coins value in United States money, legal holidays, postal information, limitation table on judgments, and interest tables, have been brought up to date. The bibliography has been omitted.

Booklist 26:405 Jl '30

CROWTHER, SAMUEL. Prohibition and prosperity. 81p $1 Day

351.761 Prohibition. United States—Economic conditions 30-5704

That prohibition in America has proved to be an unqualified economic success is the assertion of Mr Crowther, economist, whose articles are familiar to Saturday Evening Post readers. Mr Crowther quotes facts regarding our national prosperity since the passing of the Eighteenth amendment—a prosperity measured by the great increase in automobiles, radios, electric refrigerators, washing machines and other comforts of life. The book is provided with an introduction by Doring A. Schuler, editor of the Ladies' Home Journal.

Booklist 26:298 My '30

Bookm 71:vi Ap '30 150w

"The argument for the economic value of prohibition, despite obvious shortcomings in enforcement, has never been so well presented. It will be used again and again by those speaking in support of the policy. The wets will be forced to answer it, and they will have trouble in doing so. But a word of caution may be in order. The prosperity argument is a good argument, but its limitations need to be borne in mind." Paul Hutchinson
+ Christian Century 47:177 F 5 '30 600w

"Mr. Crowther writes with the detachment of a research student, and the clarity of a journalist. His book is a welcome and worthy addition to the nonfanatical and instructive literature of prohibition."
+ Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 15 '30 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p72 My '30

"Mr. Crowther writes with forcefulness and presents his impressive array of evidence and his argument in concise language that is wholly without the taint of emotionalism or of propagandism. His book would have had a wider scope if he had paid more attention to the arguments of those who insist that there are other and more important causes for the increase in our spending power than prohibition."
+ — N Y Times p10 F 16 '30 350w

Pratt p7 summer '30

St Louis 28:128 My '30

Springf'd Republican p9e Ag 17 '30 600w

Wis Lib Bul 26:99 Mr '30

CROZIER, FRANK PERCY. Brass hat in No Man's Land. 254p il $2.50 (7s 6d) Cape

940.48 European war, 1914-1918—Personal narratives 30-19728

General Crozier, at the outbreak of the war a major in the Royal Irish Rifles, tells of the moulding of the war machine in 1915, the inculcation of martial ideas, the initial activities of men under his command, and the acid test of battle. In direct, matter-of-fact testimony, General Crozier exposes the fallacies, horrors and needless wastes of war.

"From a journalistic point of view his book is a clumsy affair, awkwardly written in an unsuccessful attempt at present-tense narration, frequently obscure in diction, and abounding in such clichés as 'the field of honor' and 'a hero's death.' Despite all this, it is not a book that can be thrown aside as worthless. The fact that General Crozier was a directing participant in some of the most talked of engagements of the war is not the only element of its great interest; it has an even greater value as the apologia of a member of that class of England which, to a large extent, sanctioned and made possible the war, which formed the backbone of the British fighting spirit, and which is now whole-heartedly striving for world peace." Lambert Davis
+ — Books p7 Ag 10 '30 500w

Boston Transcript p3 Ag 30 '30 250w

"Never before has a brilliant general so completely turned state's evidence against the whole war system."
Christian Century 47:969 Ag 6 '30 250w

"Like the narrative of the American private, it is without literary value. It contains a great deal about fighting, many lengthy references to sexual conditions among the soldiers in England and France, and at the end a feeble plea for international peace. A general should do better." J. B. Wharton
— Nation 131:530 N 12 '30 80w

"'A Brass Hat' is rather jumbled, but its amateurish smack is engaging. Anything that was a war measure went with Crozier during the conflict, and he is quite clear-headed now in admitting to shooting German prisoners and in talking of the necessity for propaganda and the popular press in running a modern Armageddon. To him it is not the 'Cavell atrocity,' but the 'official murder of Nurse Cavell.' The obvious moral of his book is 'Abolish war; but if you can't do that, don't delude yourself by thinking that war can be played according to rule.'" John Chamberlain
New Repub 64:79 S 3 '30 500w

"His book is merely an Irish soldier's talk, the outcome of a youthful mind and a disposition rather arrogantly boyish."
New Statesman 35:128 My 3 '30 730w

Reviewed by Eugene Lohrke
N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 26 '30 900w

"General Crozier is a hard-boiled, realistic witness against the cult of war, and since he has satisfied neither militarists nor sentimentalists his evidence becomes increasingly important." S. T. Williamson
N Y Times p5 Ag 3 '30 1200w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p9 Jl 28 '30 300w

"It is a wonderfully good book. But why in the name of the Lord, and the Lords of War, was it not written ten years ago?"
+ Outlook 155:548 Ag 6 '30 350w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:75 O '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:8 S '30 80w

St Louis 28:246 O '30

Reviewed by R. G. Burton
Sat R 149:560 My 3 '30 750w

"Small wonder that this book has created a sensation in England. It depicts the sordid and distressing behavior of undisciplined young British officers; it rakes the system and traditions which unnerved and demoralized weak lads not fit for service with the colors. With equal relish, the general sets down names, dates, and places, whether writing of poltroon or hero. His book is as frank as a secret diary. But the feature of the book which chiefly arrests the reader's attention is the author's truly extraordinary picture of himself. He writes of Crozier the soldier, at moments, as if that gallant and faithful officer were a figure out of a deeply regretted past. It is very confusing. Or is it that all the writers on war feel committed to the duty of parroting that war is altogether evil?" E. G. Taylor
Sat R of Lit 7:84 Ag 30 '30 900w

"His book is not outstanding, but it contains some vivid passages. Its outspokenness, coupled with the opportunities for observation given by the author's position, and the downrightness of his theories and digressions, give it much interest."
Springf'd Republican p12 S 11 '30 650w

"This book is one of the most valuable of all for peace propaganda; its truth, wisdom, and passion make it unique in all the writing of generals in history. This solemn line must ring today in England's mind: 'In 1914 England changed her soul. Otherwise she would have lost.' What price victory!" Leon Whipple
+ Survey 65:283 D 1 '30 380w

"The author of this book had the reputation of being a man of remarkable personal bravery and a successful commander of the cut-and-thrust order; one cannot truly say that he reveals himself as an engaging personality. It must be admitted, however, that he has a philosophy and sticks to it consistently. . . There are features of the book in the highest degree reprehensible. Allusions are made to despicable conduct on the part of brother-officers, not always with names mentioned, indeed, but in fashion such that the names could be identified. . . If the vices and brutalities of the War are to be exposed, they should be exposed scientifically and calmly—not in a crude fashion which is more likely to result in whetting lust and cruelty than blunting them."
Times [London] Lit Sup p418 My 15 '30 280w

CRUMBINE, SAMUEL JAY, and TOBEY, JAMES ALNER. Most nearly perfect food; the story of milk. 292p il $2.50 Williams & Wilkins [10s 6d Bailliere]

637.1 Milk. Nutrition 29-22015

"The authors tell briefly what we know about the history of milk in [ancient and] medieval times, and they even touch on references to milk in literature with quotations from the Bible and from Shakespeare. They discuss milk as an excellent substitute for the elixir of life and tell how it helps to defer old age and to make declining years pleasant and profitable. They deal with it authoritatively as an article of diet and as one of the very important aids in the promotion of health. They describe the methods of milk production that insure clean and safe milk and they have interesting chapters on milk products, on the story of concentrated milks, on milk and good cookery and on milk production, care and delivery in many parts of the world."—N Y Times

---

Reviewed by I. V. Hiscock
Am J Pub Health 19:1393 D '29 200w

Booklist 26:266 Ap '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p122 S '30

"The whole case in favor of milk as human food brought together and ably presented by the general executive of the American Child Health Association and a well-known writer of semi-popular articles on health."
+ J Home Econ 21:936 D '29 60w

"The authors are quite justified in their belief that they have written the first full story of milk in its relation to man, for their book is very much more than a work on nutrition, of which there are many, or one on dairy science, or one on both together. . . It is all written in a style simple and interesting enough to appeal very much to the average reader while its authoritative facts and statistics and tables will make it useful for teachers and students in the wide and varied fields of hygiene and public health."
+ N Y Times p18 D 29 '29 450w

Pratt p20 spring '30

St Louis 28:137 My '30

Reviewed by M. S. Rose
Survey 63:486 Ja 15 '30 300w

CRUMP, MRS LUCY (HILL). Nursery life 300 years ago; the story of a dauphin of France, 1601-10, taken from the journal of Jean Héroard, physician-in-charge, and from other contemporary sources. 251p pl $3.75 Dutton [10s 6d Routledge]

B or 92 Louis XIII, king of France. Children in France. France—Social life and customs 30-15425

The childhood of Louis the Dauphin, little son of Henry of Navarre, as recorded chiefly by the journal of Dr Jean Héroard, the king's physician, and other contemporary sources, is described in Miss Crump's interesting book on nursery life in the early seventeenth century. The birth of the baby (from the acount of the mid-wife), the little Dauphin's play days with his half brothers and sisters, his punishments for being naughty, his games and toys, picture books and lessons, his toilet and dress, and many childhood incidents are narrated with appreciative humor and understanding.

"The story of life at Fontainebleau, of dances and court ceremonies, of table manners, dress and toys is one which is inescapably interesting, although Miss Crump hammers each point so needlessly that she dulls the effect of it."
+ — Books p12 Je 15 '30 220w

J Home Econ 22:597 Jl '30 50w

"Mrs. Crump's main interest is in domestic details, what they ate, what they ate it with, how they dressed, what toys they had, how often they washed, and so on, questions which have a tantalizing interest for everyone except the austerer kind of historian. Her research into these matters has been considerable, and has produced some interesting information, particularly about food and the care of the person, but her book suffers, as seems inevitable in 'social' histories, from vagueness of outline and a general scrappiness and untidiness. There are some pretty photographs of seventeenth-century toys."
+ — Nation and Ath 46:292 N 23 '29 550w

"This is, indeed, a readable book, and only marred by that mist of sentimentality which seems inevitable when what rightly belongs to the domain of Memoirs is transposed into Drawing-room History."
+ — New Statesman 34:94 O 26 '29 450w

"Miss Crump has made selections that bring before us naturally and vividly the life of a royal child of that day. Therein she has made a contribution."
+ N Y Times p28 Je 22 '30 380w

St Louis 28:218 S '30

Spec 143:sup539 O 19 '29 950w

Times [London] Lit Sup p962 N 21 '29 550w

CRUSE, MRS AMY. Boys and girls who became famous. 258p il $2 Harcourt [7s 6d Harrap]

920 Biography 30-26381

Stories of twenty-four boys and girls of many nations who lived to be famous in their various vocations. Contents: Jeanne D'Arc; Michel de Montaigne; Benjamin Franklin; George Romney; Wolfgang Mozart; Hans Christian Andersen; Fanny Kemble; Frederick Chopin; Charles Dickens; Charlotte Brontë and her sisters; John Ruskin; Rosa Bonheur; Louisa Alcott; Robert Louis Stevenson; Walter Page; Booker Washington; Thomas Edison; James Barrie; Edward Bok; Helen Keller; Melba; Clara Butt, Marya Curie; Sybil Thorndike.

CRUSE, AMY—Continued

Booklist 26:316 My '30

"Imagination and fancy of course mingle here and there with the fact, but on the whole Miss Cruse gives fairly accurate portraitures and biographical sketches." E. F. E.
+ Boston Transcript p3 F 5 '30 500w
N Y Evening Post p11m F 8 '30 50w
St Louis 28:247 O '30

"The stories are told in a very objective fashion, and in the main simply relate incidents without much description. While they have the interest of lives actually lived, there are too few details of the environment which shaped each character. . . The most pervasive impression the book gives is of hard work, not only for success, but for the actual means of livelihood in almost every case."
Sat R of Lit 6:973 Ap 19 '30 230w

CRUSE, MRS AMY. Englishman and his books in the early nineteenth century. 301p il $3.50 Crowell [7s 6d Harrap]

820.9 English literature—History and criticism. Books and reading. Authors and readers [30-29799]

The story of the habits and fashions of the English reader during the period between the French revolution and the opening of the Victorian period. The material was gathered from contemporary letters, diaries, biographies, publisher's statistics, reviews, etc.

Booklist 27:196 Ja '31

"Mrs. Cruse would indeed be a genius if she were to avoid altogether redundancy and improvising. Both of these faults, unfortunately, are conspicuous. In some chapters it seems that the ground has been covered adequately many times before, while in others she seems to forsake direct evidence to build her thesis upon pure supposition. Still again, however, notably in her quotations, the reader has a flash of insight into the times that more than justifies the author's effort to develop the theme in this way. Although there is no chapter on cartoons, the illustrations of the book, taken from drawings of Gillray, Cruikshank and others, speak for themselves." M. M. Waterman
Bookm 72:203 O '30 450w

"Mrs. Cruse has a pleasant style, and has written an informative and amusing book."
+ Books p20 D 7 '30 180w
Boston Transcript p3 N 8 '30 280w

"This is a very pleasant book of chit-chat as far as it goes, good enough in fact to make one wish that it were better. . . Though there is much amusing reading in this book, Mrs. Cruse has not gone very far afield. Much of her material is familiar and of more modern sources. She does not seem to have found much save the lately published Journals of Crabb Robinson and Miss Clarissa Trout. A book that must be based on hints and sidelights, like this one, can only be the fine flower of terrific scholarship, and Mrs. Cruse, though well read, is not a scholar." Francis Birrell
— + Nation and Ath 48:19 O 4 '30 600w

"So long as Mrs. Cruse keeps to her appropriate plot of ground—that is, the old-fashioned reader's response to the authors of his time—she is fairly trustworthy. It is when she becomes ambitious that she goes astray. . . Charles Lamb's suppers and the dinners at Holland House have been described innumerable times, and often far more competently than they are done here. It is strange, moreover, to find a book dealing with the world of readers a century ago which makes little or nothing of the wealth of fact, comment and gossip lying ready to hand in Isaac D'Israeli, the Farington Diary, in Leigh Hunt and Thomas Moore, in the letters and diaries of Washington Irving, Fenimore Cooper and other Americans who conquered London. The untouched material, in a word, is endless."
— + New Statesman 35:624 Ag 23 '30 800w

"In bringing back this group to walk, even as ghosts across the pages of a book, Mrs. Cruse has done a service to the lovers of literature."
+ N Y Times p16 N 30 '30 550w
Sat R of Lit 7:510 Ja 3 '31 50w

"Mrs. Cruse in her charming new volume tells us what men and women and children were reading in the fifty years before Victoria regulated the home life of the middle classes. . . Wise readers will not be too busy to run through Mrs. Cruse's 280 odd pages of uninterrupted entertainment."
+ Spec 145:286 Ag 30 '30 1000w

"Mrs. Cruse extracts a great deal of very curious information. Though she is rather discursive and perhaps does not use all possible sources of material, the early nineteenth-century reader does emerge very clearly in her book."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p859 O 23 '30 900w

CRUTTWELL, MAUD. Madame de Maintenon. 400p il $5 Dutton [15s Dent]

B or 92 Maintenon, Françoise d'Aubigné, marquise de [30-21293]

The present biographer of Madame de Maintenon, the woman whose life is so inextricably bound with the whole of Louis XIV's reign, seeks to clear the reputation tradition has largely accorded her, as well as the misrepresentation she suffered during her lifetime. Miss Cruttwell accredits Madame de Maintenon with beauty and brilliance; but takes pains to point out that she concentrated her genius on religious matters—to an almost fanatical extent—rather than upon material affairs. She was far-seeing, sympathetic, a lover of peace; but she could not influence Louis, and thus spare France the suffering which his mania for conquest brought upon the country.

"Miss Cruttwell's Life gives the facts of Madame de Maintenon's career, and even if her style is at times slovenly and her dislike of commas disconcerting, it is a readable and interesting book." Grenville Vernon
+ — Bookm 72:81 S '30 500w

"The author has gone through her material very carefully, she seems to be perfectly honest in the presentation of material which may clash a little with her very positive contentions, and she has the gift of making a story get along. But her carelessness in sentence structure is almost unbelievable. There ought to be a law to require books as useful and as readable as this one to be more carefully written." R. T. House
+ — Books p33 S 28 '30 1000w
Boston Transcript p3 N 15 '30 550w

"It might be counted as one of the blessings of the past that, tactfully approached, it can shed light without engendering heat. But no; Miss Cruttwell approaches it in a spirit which would be suitable if she were setting out to write a letter to the Times about some contemporary abuse. Her book might be the biography of a lately departed and slightly calumniated head-mistress written by the second-in-command, and, completely identifying herself with the dislikes and prejudices which her heroine suffered from under the pressure of real life, she is forced to give pretty well everybody at Versailles no marks out of ten . . . The punctuation and grammar are wildly erratic."
— Nation and Ath 46:808 Mr 15 '30 600w

"Had this book been submitted before publication to someone who knew the English language, it might have been possible to praise it. As it stands, it is deformed by an amazing laxity which has all but destroyed our pleasure in reading it. In the first few chapters we marked forty or fifty grammatical errors . . . When we add that the punctuation is as bad as the grammar, it will be understood that we have found the perusal of this book one of the most exasperating tasks we have ever faced."

— New Statesman 34:640 F 22 '30 1100w

"The author chooses to draw only the favorable conclusions. It is the one serious shortcoming in an otherwise splendid study. The reader has an uncomfortable feeling that a mold has been fashioned in advance and the character poured into it. Miss Cruttwell, however, is too good a historian not to put all the facts before her readers. The scholarship is sound; nothing seems to have been overlooked in the vast amount of material that forms the source of Mme. de Maintenon's life." H. L. Matthews

+ — N Y Times p11 D 28 '30 1350w

"Miss Cruttwell's writing is not always above criticism but it is always genuinely interesting, and, altogether, the book appears to be a sincerer piece of work than many that have appeared of late."

+ — Sat R 149:199 F 15 '30 450w

Spec 144:sup377 Mr 8 '30 900w

CUDAHY, JOHN. African horizons. 159p il $3 Duffield

799.2 Hunting—Africa. Africa, East 30-7765

Lively tales of hunting big game in Tanganyika and Safariland. The author was a member of the Massee-Milwaukee public museum expedition.

Books p18 Mr 16 '30 100w

"A book that is a delight from cover to cover."

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 7 '30 320w

Cleveland Open Shelf p93 Je '30

"A real sportsman's conversational tales of hunting African big game illustrated by uncommonly good drawings and by photos taken 'on the spot.' Mr. Cudahy's vivid bag of adventurous experience in Tanganyika with rifle and camera is full-bloodedly rewarding. It is actual what-happened-to-me stuff without a bit of travelogue padding and will be enjoyed as such." F. H. M.

+ N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 5 '30 50w

Reviewed by Gregory Mason

N Y Times p14 Je 1 '30 300w

St Louis 28:239 O '30

CULBERT, JANE FULLERTON. Visiting teacher at work. 235p il $1.50 Commonwealth fund

371 Visiting teachers. Children, Abnormal and backward 30-6999

"A handbook for the guidance of visiting teachers and the information of school administrators; prepared by a recognized leader in the field on the basis of experience gained in 30 three-year demonstrations carried on by the National Committee on Visiting Teachers as part of the Commonwealth Fund's program in child guidance. The first part deals with the work with the child in school, home, and community; and the second, with the professional and administrative aspects of the work, including the relations of the visiting teacher to the school staff and administration, methods of recording and interpreting her work, and standards for her training and experience."—J Home Econ

Reviewed by C. H. Keene

Am J Pub Health 20:565 My '30 450w

Reviewed by H. I. Clark

Am J Soc 36:326 S '30 450w

Reviewed by S. A. Queen

Ann Am Acad 149:sup206 My '30 30w

Booklist 26:298 My '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p121 S '30

"The visiting-teacher movement, which has undergone remarkable growth in recent years, has developed under the supervision of several enlightened agencies that have understood the need of studying with care the progress of a new type of educational activity. The Visiting Teacher at Work is one of the most informing that has been issued. . . The book is well organized, and the style is clear and non-technical. The book is indispensable to visiting teachers in training and in service." P. W. Terry

+ El School J 30:709 My '30 500w

J Home Econ 22:221 Mr '30 120w

St Louis 28:208 S '30

"The book will be of particular interest to administrators, personnel officers, social workers, and mental hygienists. It is the best single handbook of occupational information dealing with the task of the visiting teacher, and it will educate the sympathies of any person concerned with the stimulation and control of the growth of healthy boys and girls. It is one more manifestation of the enlightened insight into the educative process which has been developed by recent scientific advances in the fields of dynamic psychology and educational psychiatry." H. Y. McClusky

+ School R 38:629 O '30 650w

"As one reads this book, the complex job of the visiting teacher assumes form and clarity. Visiting teachers will find here the clear statement and practical textbook which they have needed; its graphic and untechnical style with illustration of type cases, makes it of interest to laymen." E. G. Case

+ Survey 63:724 Mr 15 '30 350w

CULLUM, RIDGWELL. Treasure of Big Waters. 315p $2 Lippincott [7s 6d Cassell] 30-28176

Mary Melrose and Andy Forsyth grew up together in Canada near the Arctic circle. While Andy was away at college Mary grew into young womanhood, and learned the ways of the North. When Andy returned it was Mary who guided him in his dangerous search for his father's secret source of wealth.

Bookm 72:xi S '30 50w

"A rousing outdoor story. The main secret concerns the nature of the hidden treasure which, it is not too much to say, will astonish the scientific experts as much as it is likely to delight Mr. and Mrs. General Reader." Will Cuppy

+ Books p16 S 14 '30 100w

Boston Transcript p2 O 4 '30 320w

N Y Times p28 S 28 '30 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p737 S 18 '30 80w

CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM, ROBERT BONTINE. José Antonio Páez. 328p il $5 Macrae Smith co. [15s Heinemann]

B or 92 Páez, José Antonio. Venezuela—History 30-4720

Biography of the Venezuelan general and politician, who was a distinguished cavalry leader in the war for Venezuelan independence and the first president of Venezuela after the separation from Colombia.

Boston Transcript p2 My 17 '30 800w

"Mr. Cunninghame Graham's narrative suffers from a certain amount of repetition. We forget how many times and at what varying ages he tells us Páez could not read or write, or how big the population of Venezuela was. On the other hand, his knowledge of the terrain is, of course, unequalled; and his intimate understanding of South American life and history enables him, once more, to rise splendidly to the richness and excitement of an heroic theme."

+ — New Statesman 33:582 Ag 17 '29 650w

"Mr. Graham tells the story of Páez with completeness, but there is a certain diffuseness in his style which at times becomes annoying. He is too wont to digress. He is also guilty of a number of repetitions, the quotations from the Spanish with which he plentifully besprinkles his foot-notes are not always correct, and his absence of respect for chronological sequence is rather bewildering. None of these shortcomings, however, suffice to blur the portrait of José Antonio Páez which Mr. Graham has painted nor to impair the fact that he has written a rattling good tale." T. R. Ybarra

CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM, R. B.—Continued
+ — N Y Times p16 Je 8 '30 1600w

"Mr. Cunninghame Graham's book suffers somewhat from the confusion of its subject, but his enormous knowledge of the country and its people, and his power of presenting action vividly, ensure that there are never any dull pages even though there may be some that are not straightforward."
+ Sat R 148:20 Jl 6 '29 800w

"Mr. Cunninghame Graham is a specialist in these matters, and shows an intimate understanding of his subject possible only because of his long experience in the region of the Llanos. Yet there are certain annoying inaccuracies in the spelling of names and the citation of authorities. Though his work might have been better performed, it is the sort of thing that only the author could have handled at all, and he is to be thanked for it."
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:995 Ap 26 '30 450w

"Mr. Cunninghame Graham has added another to the long list of brilliant books on South America for which we are indebted to him. This is a particularly satisfactory volume, for it is a piece of very serious and useful historical work, as well as a piece of literature. . . It contains certain passages of rather deliberate fine writing, but even these are, on the whole, skilful and attractive."
+ Spec 142:939 Je 15 '29 900w

CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM, ROBERT BONTINE. Mogreb-el-Acksa; a journey in Morocco; introd. by Edward Garnett. 358p $3.50 Viking press [7s 6d Duckworth]
916.4 Morocco—Description and travel
30-10355

An account of a journey which the author made more than thirty years ago in an attempt to reach the forbidden city of Tarudant in the Atlas mountains of Morocco. He never reached his objective but his adventures and dangers on the way make an exciting story. First published in London in 1898.

Booklist 27:22 S '30

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice
Bookm 71:xiv Ag '30 150w

Reviewed by C. J. Finger
Books p5 My 11 '30 850w

Cleveland Open Shelf p104 Jl '30

"He is especially good in his accounts of personalities and customs, and when one has finished one has apparently an excellent idea of what Southern Morocco was like before the motor bus and the airplane arrived. The book is no 'Bible in Spain' or 'Arabia Deserta.' But it is worth preserving, even after thirty-two eventful years."
+ N Y Times p8 Ag 17 '30 480w

"I read the book with a certain irritation. For it is always irritating to be aware of a lack in something admirable. The book just misses being a masterpiece. It is certain to live long. There are so few great books of travel, and this is immeasurably better than so securely established a book as 'Eothen.' The lack is passion and the compensation for it is ideas. . . I do not mean to suggest by this that Graham is a cold and intellectual writer. On the contrary, he writes vigorously and colorfully. He has a sense of the drama and he writes a sturdy English. Nevertheless the passion in his writing is all a product of ideas." Isidor Schneider
+ — N Y World p7m Jl 13 '30 600w

"If he had not been born a Scotch laird and a Spanish don, Cunninghame Graham would have been a dangerous desperado. His cool nerve, his grand sense of humor, his sympathetic and reflective observation, his wandering asides and his brilliant narrative style make this book, like all his others, a continuous delight."
+ Outlook 154:627 Ap 16 '30 180w

R of Rs 82:11 Jl '30 120w

St Louis 28:216 S '30

"What Morier in 'Hajji Babba' did for Persia, and Pickthall in 'Said the Fisherman' did for the Levant, Cunninghame Graham has done for Morocco. His racy style, his asides, his moralizing and philosophizing, give an amazingly vivid picture of the country and its people. The publishers of 'Mogreb-El-Acksa' are indeed to be congratulated on the judgment of this selection, and on the attractive form in which they have clothed this reprint." Kermit Roosevelt
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1173 Jl 5 '30 650w

"R. B. Cunninghame Graham upholds the worthiest traditions of English travel literature. To do this one must have a personality of one's own and a style compounded of sensibility, verve and rhythm. In passages of narrative and portrayal Mr Graham's style is at times almost too personal, perhaps too humane, for the purpose. The grit of reality sometimes eludes the reader through the unfailing ease and charm of the author's phrasing."
+ — Springf'd Republican p6 My 5 '30 700w

CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM, ROBERT BONTINE. Thirty tales & sketches; sel. with an introd. by Edward Garnett. 354p $3 Viking press [8s 6d Duckworth]
29-19240

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"Strikingly original and individual." J. C.
+ Churchman p17 Ja 25 '30 20w

"The first impression this book makes is of deliberate craftsmanship, exploiting rhythm and sound and the associations of words to the full. Long series of names, either romantic-sounding or exactly descriptive, are saved from monotony by the shift of a word here or the change of a conjunction there, so that an easy rhythm flows on to the flat, ironical close. Another time a sentence will begin in fixed rhythms, which are gradually resolved. His precise vocabulary contributes no less to vividness of description."
+ Nation and Ath 46:178 N 2 '29 500w

"He sees three things: the man, the action, the scene, and he drives the three along before him, now a willing, now a difficult team. There are few writers who have his power of putting the whole paraphernalia of a continent upon a sheet of paper, with its roughness, heat, noise, secrecy and dust."
+ Sat R 148:514 N 2 '29 470w

"Every piece is first-class. . . It is difficult, indeed, to single out one of his great pieces of description above another. A whole world separates the deck of the steamer Oldenburg from the palace of Don Justo de Urquiza, the South American Napoleon, but Mr. Cunninghame Graham's sympathy and mastery span that gulf with ease."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p893 N 7 '29 1100w

CURTAYNE, ALICE. Saint Catherine of Siena. 268p $2.75 Macmillan [7s 6d Sheed]
B or 92 Catherine of Siena, Saint 30-9156

This biography of Catherine Benincasa, youngest daughter of a dyer of Siena, lights up the character of one of the most interesting saints of the Middle Ages who was practically worshipped as a saint during her lifetime and who has lived on in her disciples and her writings.

"Miss Curtayne tells the story of this strange sad heroic life gracefully and with restraint. Whatever we may think of the occasional miraculous narratives in it, we must be grateful to the author for a vivid and uncommonly well written biography." W. L. Sullivan
+ Books p12 S 21 '30 550w

"Alice Curtayne's Saint Catherine of Siena has the claim of special merit, being indeed something of a masterpiece. Perhaps more effectively than any preceding sketch, it will avail to make the woman whom Pastor called 'the greatest saint of the later Middle Ages' a clear and familiar figure to the modern imagination. . . For all its learning, the book contains no dull paragraph. Hero worship is here and fervent Catholic faith and love of historical truth, all in due proportion."

+ Cath World 131:626 Ag '30 700w

"This is a thoroughly edifying study ('nihil obstat—imprimatur') not only of the life and character of Catherine but of a period in which the church was grievously afflicted with unworthy leaders."

+ Christian Century 47:1314 O 29 '30 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p818 O 17 '29 950w

CURTI, MERLE EUGENE. American peace crusade, 1815-1860. 258p il $3.50 Duke univ.

172.4 Peace. Peace societies. Arbitration, International. United States—Foreign relations (29-28361)

"In this authentic, if partial, record will be found the essentials for an understanding of the conditions out of which peace societies first grew, a bit about the most outstanding leaders, the development and clash of group attitudes within and without the movement, the successes and failures of its efforts to influence Congress, the rather dogmatic and fine-strung theorizing of the radical pacifists of those days, and, fairly but plainly, the temporizing and compromising tactics often indulged in by timid leadership."—World Tomorrow

---

"The study is well documented and has the ultimate virtue of a good index. The account is well organized and well written." R. W. Kelsey

+ Am Hist R 35:926 Jl '30 380w

"Mr. Curti's volume is quite indispensable to any library on the organization of peace. It may be noted that while its title refers to the American peace crusade only, much of the narrative deals with early pacifist efforts in England as well." W. J. A.

+ Christian Science Monitor p13 Je 14 '30 280w

Reviewed by J. A. Krout

Hist Outlook 21:398 D '30 450w

St Louis 28:63 Mr '30

"Prof Curti tells the story of these attempts at ameliorative efforts to improve international peace with unusual clearness. He never allows himself to advocate the cause which he so brilliantly describes. Occasionally one is impressed with an excess of names. It is hoped that in the forthcoming volumes this historian will favor us with a more detailed examination of the economic forces which threatened the peace of the world rather than with the various opinions of those who crusaded to that end." Harold Landin

+ — Springf'd Republican p5e Ag 3 '30 850w

"Professor Curti writes clearly, though hardly with distinction. Happily, however, he does allow himself to write as a human being, with some appreciation of personality and with an evident warmth when it comes to certain peace men in particular. We rather suspect him at times of hero-worship, and like his book and him the better for it. . . It is heartening, to say the least, when writers with a sense of proportion, a rich field of historic reading, and a genuine depth of interest, even fascination, in their subject, set themselves to the task of making known the indubitable values to American life of its ultimately most significant movement." D. A.

+ World Tomorrow 13:375 S '30 750w

CURTIS, MRS EDITH. Anne Hutchinson; a biography; with an introd. by M. A. DeWolfe Howe. 122p $2.50 Washburn & Thomas

B or 92 Hutchinson, Mrs Anne (Marbury) 30-10230

"A brief, bald account of Anne Hutchinson's misfortunes in the Boston of our earliest forefathers."—Bookm

---

"Here, at least, is a competent narrative of a compelling human experience. It is told with sympathy for its troubled—and troubling—subject, but in the main without excessive rancor against her enemies. The author has made no claims to originality. She has frankly gotten her material out of the familiar writings on the Antinomian controversy, chiefly from C. F. Adams." V. W. Crane

+ Am Hist R 36:205 O '30 300w

Booklist 26:354 Je '30

"Essentially arid chronicle." John Chamberlain

— Bookm 71:223 Ap '30 380w

"Mrs. Curtis sticks closely to the facts and gives an account both clear and reliable. In 100 pages one learns all that can be certainly known or fairly concluded about Anne Hutchinson and her persecutors. Yet the book is not successful. If it is to be really scholarly it needs a bibliography and more painstaking annotation. If it is to be a good biography it needs more composition of the material and more enthusiasm for the subject. What we have is a careful mosaic of fact and quotation. Even with such cautious use of sources it would be possible to paint a picture more vivid than this. Mrs. Curtis remains always safely outside her subject." H. F. Whicher

— + Books p18 Ap 27 '30 400w

"For Mrs. Curtis's biography much can be said. She has not tried to catch the public favor by an alluring title. . . [And] to Mrs. Curtis's everlasting praise be it said, she seeks to record not to create. This is why her little volume is smaller than either Mrs. Rugg's or Mrs. Auger's. It is written justly and is an excellent piece of work all around. Unlike Mrs. Rugg and Mrs. Auger, Mrs. Curtis finds that she can close her volume without an imagined picture of the death of Mrs. Hutchinson. The last two pages are restrained, poignantly pathetic, and there is no false melodrama in them."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 15 '30 450w

N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 2 '30 100w

Reviewed by Herbert Gorman

N Y Times p10 My 11 '30 650w

"Perhaps the most valuable parts of Miss Curtis's book are some very lucid, condensed statements about religious issues, against whose background Anne Hutchinson lived her life. She makes clear how great was Mrs. Hutchinson's sin, in the judgment of her contemporaries, in opposing established authority. Moreover, the bare quotation of words of Mrs. Hutchinson or of John Cotton, without comment, create a drama quite as moving as the more elaborate stage settings. It is to be regretted documentation of the book is sketchy, and that it lacks an index." S. T. Williams

+ Sat R of Lit 7:157 S 27 '30 300w

CURTIS, MRS HELEN PERRY. When Sally sews, she makes fifty things that any girl can make. 130p il $2 Macmillan

646.2 Sewing. Dressmaking 29-28493

"A book which has grown out of a 'Christmas present page' in The American Girl, and in which practical, clear directions are given for making things that really interest a girl and are within her powers and pocket-book, including things to wear, for winter sports, at the seashore, when she lounges, goes to a party, or stays at home; not to mention things for her own room and to give to all the family at Christmas."—J Home Econ

---

Booklist 26:285 Ap '30

"Attractive enough to tempt any girl and apparently sensible and practical enough not to disappoint her when she yields to its suggestions."

+ J Home Econ 22:130 F '30 100w

St Louis 28:101 Ap '30

"To the girl who enjoys sewing this book would be a treasure. There are patterns galore, and each step in the work is simply told and easy to follow. In all there are fifty possible things for Sally to make. By the time she has made the greater part of them she will realize, not only the joy of having created something lovely, but she will have gained also the experience and confidence that comes with experimenting."

CURTIS, H. P.—Continued

+ Sat R of Lit 6:881 Mr 29 '30 180w

CURTISS, MINA K., comp. Olive, cypress and palm; an anthology of love and death. 296p $2.50 Harcourt

821.08 English poetry—Collections. Death—Poetry. Love poetry 30-13761

An anthology of poems on two constant themes in poetic literature—love and death. The poets represented, English and American, range from Chaucer to Robert Bridges and Emily Dickinson. The compiler says that she has excluded poems of any writer born after 1850 since a "definite change in attitude toward death, and consequently in elegiac poetry," took place then.

Reviewed by B. R. Redman
Books p12 My 25 '30 320w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 21 '30 500w

"It is interesting to see how well Emily Dickinson, who is represented here with some half dozen poems, holds her own in the company of the immortals. Was ever pain and anguish and despair more nobly sustained, more bravely expressed than in those brief bird notes of Emily Dickinson's poetry?" Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p5s Je 7 '30 100w

"This is a collection filled with the very breadth of exquisite lyricism, to use an old-fashioned term, a 'garland' of poesy in every sense."

+ N Y Times p11 Jl 13 '30 380w

"The fine taste and the wide reading that have dictated the selection of its contents fit it for general reading. The chosen poems have, one judges, had to meet a double test: the editor's rigorous poetic standards and her sense of what may console the mind of man in days of bereavement. Few anthologists are more independent; the fact that a poem is familiar is made neither a reason for inclusion nor a reason for exclusion." Granville Hicks

+ N Y World p7m Je 1 '30 130w

"Exquisitely creative and critical anthology. The work of selection and arrangement is unerringly distinguished and discriminative. Some obscure poems which have lain under their writers' famous names like flowers under tombstones, are resurrected here; nor has she been afraid to quote all of 'Lycidas' and 'Adonais.'" L. T. Nicholl

+ Outlook 155:146 My 28 '30 120w

"An excellent collection revealing remarkably good literary taste. The best consolation of its kind that we have ever seen." W. R. Benét

+ Sat R of Lit 7:9 Jl 26 '30 30w

CURWOOD, JAMES OLIVER. Green timber; completed by Dorothea A. Bryant. 299p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Jarrolds]
30-10983

The story of the regeneration of a Detroit gangster, once a scholar and a gentleman, thru the healing influence of the forests and the love of a saintly girl.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p16 Ap 13 '30 100w

"Mr. Curwood's many admirers will be charmed with it and the cynics will note again its well worn plot, its group of saintly and uninteresting characters, and the Curwoodian conclusion of eternal happiness to all good people and death and damnation to all the bad 'uns. Mr. Curwood had many of the elements of a good story teller. His books were very popular in France, and in 'Green Timber' the exuberant vitality of the man floods his mediocre literary material with a modicum of warmth and grace."

— + N Y Times p22 Ap 27 '30 320w

"The tale has in plenty all the flagrant bathos and maudlin sentimentality which have endeared the Curwood romances to untold millions of guileless readers."

— N Y World p11m Ap 27 '30 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p556 Jl 3 '30 200w

CURWOOD, JAMES OLIVER. Son of the forests; an autobiography, as completed by Dorothea A. Bryant. 243p $1 Doubleday, Doran

B or 92 30-19962

Autobiography of the popular outdoor author who died in 1927. He describes his boyhood days in Michigan and Ohio, student life at Ann Arbor, his visits to northern Canada, and his struggles to become a successful novelist. Thru the whole book his love of the outdoors runs like an undercurrent. The book was practically completed when Mr Curwood died, and was finished from his notes by Dorothea Bryant.

Booklist 27:155 D '30

Books p10 Jl 27 '30 100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p124 S '30

St Louis 28:245 O '30

CUST, SIR LIONEL HENRY. King Edward VII and his court; some reminiscences. 272p il $3.50 Dutton [12s Murray, J.]

B or 92 Edward VII, king of Great Britain. Great Britain—Court and courtiers
[30-20841]

Reminiscences of his "king, master and friend," Edward VII, and of his court, by the late Sir Lionel Cust who, as surveyor of the king's pictures and gentleman usher, came into both personal and formal contact with the king.

"Fortunately for his readers, Sir Lionel had a sense of humor, as did his wife, who contributes to the book an appreciative biographical sketch and a few extracts from her own diary, and the record of laborious days and nights is studded with amusing incidents. A reader who has a dull journey in prospect may be cordially advised to take this book along." William MacDonald

+ Books p20 D 7 '30 500w

Boston Transcript p2 S 17 '30 750w

Cleveland Open Shelf p139 N '30

"A pleasant account of the minor events of life at Court in King Edward's time, told very readably in an intimate and wholly unaffected style." Gordon Ross

+ Nation and Ath 47:412 Je 28 '30 600w

New Statesman 35:480 Jl 19 '30 500w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson
N Y Times p3 S 21 '30 320w

Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith
N Y World p3e O 26 '30 220w

"These recollections of the late Sir Lionel Cust add to the store of our knowledge of King Edward, giving some vivid glimpses of his life intime, and of the Court. In some degree it may be said to supplement the official biography, though in haphazard form." A. P. N.

+ Sat R 149:762 Je 14 '30 400w

"A charming volume of reminiscences into which the author has infused the spirit of gaiety which we see in the sparkling eyes of the portrait reproduced in Lady Cust's memoir of her husband . . . There is no mawkish adulation here, rather a portrait built up of a hundred tell-tale touches."

+ Spec 144:943 Je 7 '30 120w

"Sir Lionel's qualities of observation and memory, for both of which he was noted in the circle of his friends, are happily joined in this book with delightful ability at narration. King Edward VII, lost for most in the haze of a dim recollection, emerges with growing clearness as the chapters pass until one feels that he has shaken the king's hand, enjoyed his jests, walked with him in the great corridors at Windsor, stood by him in the magnificence of his courts, sympathized with him in the besetting problems of his day and finally mourned with a nation at his bier."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e O 12 '30 1350w

"The real value of these memoirs lies in what their author has to tell us of his work among the art treasures and other relics and possessions in the Royal Palaces where he exercised his oversight. Here he is well qualified to speak, and recounts much that is worth reading."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p482 Je 5 '30 350w

CUTHRELL, MRS FAITH (BALDWIN). Make-believe. 311p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Low]

30-24043

Mary Lou had always loved to make believe. When she undertook to make believe that she was Delight Harford who had supposedly married Lorry Travers during the war she found it a difficult part to play. But she did it, and cured Lorry of shell shock. And then the make believe became real.

"It is a sprightly concoction, undeniably amusing. Confirmed fiction readers have discovered that Miss Baldwin knows how to put a story together so that it unfolds without wrinkling, and 'Make-Believe' has that attribute."

+ Books p16 O 26 '30 150w

"The delicate situation is handled without offense, as only a writer of popular romance can skirt reality. Mary Lou's innocence and sweetness get her through more than slightly impossible problems, and make the book a good one for those who thrive on diets of ice cream and cake."

+ N Y Times p28 S 28 '30 300w

CUTHRELL, MRS FAITH (BALDWIN). Office wife. 279p $2 Dodd

30-6729

Anne Murdock, private secretary and "office wife" to Larry Fellowes, falls in love with her employer—and breaks her engagement to Ted, the nice boy who wants to marry her. The novel is concerned with the problem of girls in business versus marriage, and reaches the conclusion that marriage is the only career for a young and pretty woman.

Cleveland Open Shelf p95 Je '30

"The author is kind to everybody concerned and the necessary readjustments are quickly made. She leaves every one happy except the reader, who cannot quite stomach the glib shallowness of the whole performance."

— N Y Times p24 Mr 23 '30 350w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1068 D 11 '30 220w

CUTLER, CARL C. Greyhounds of the sea; the ^{2} story of the American clipper ship; with a foreword by Charles Francis Adams. 592p il $15 Putnam

387.5 Clipper ships. Merchant marine—United States

30-31481

A finely illustrated volume telling the story of the rise and decline of the American clipper ships—the romance of their building, facts about the more famous builders, and an account of the race for speed on the ocean. Appendices give lists of fast sailing vessels, 1782-1849, with measurements and names of master and owner; record sailing ship passages; voyages made in the China-England trade; California voyages; also ship and sail plans from original models and plans, bibliography, and index.

"The book is chock-a-block, as sailors would say, with facts, and although it may appear a little formidable to the general reader it will appeal to the ship enthusiast. The appendices contain lists of ships with their measurement, master, builders and owners, and records of passages on the well known sailing routes. Sailing ship records have been open to much dispute, partly due to doubt in regard to the reliability of the evidence, but also because of failure to give all the knowable circumstances. In his praiseworthy zeal to unearth and set forth the latter, Mr. Cutler has made it possible to unkink many a snarl. The illustrations are both beautiful and explanatory." Arthur Warner

+ Books p7 D 21 '30 800w

"This is not just 'another clipper ship book,' however fascinating in interest many of these volumes may be. It is essentially American history and American history which has never been written before. It deals, of course, with sailing ships in general and the clipper ship in particular, but at every step the progress of the maritime industry is tied up with the history of the country. Its research is so exhaustive that it may well prove to be the 'last word' on the subject, but this fact is not quite the measure of Mr. Cutler's achievement. Carrying his wealth of authoritative fact is a story that grips the reader throughout its four hundred pages, a tale as dramatic as the plot of any 'best seller.' " W. E. Playfair

+ Boston Transcript p2 N 15 '30 2150w

CUTTING, ELISABETH BROWN. Jefferson Davis, political soldier. 361p il $5 Dodd

B or 92 Davis, Jefferson

30-25078

The present biography of "the only president of the Confederacy" is an attempt to discover the man himself, both from the evidence of his contemporaries and from his own letters and speeches, and to determine his personal responsibility for the downfall of the Confederacy. The author has had access to hitherto unpublished material in the archives of the Ministry of foreign affairs at Paris, and has also used materials from the London Public record office and letters in the British Museum, which shed some light on the stand taken by France and England toward the Confederacy.

Booklist 27:204 Ja '31

Reviewed by D. C. Seitz

Bookm 72:429 D '30 500w

"This new biography of Jefferson Davis is most satisfactory. It is comprehensive, unbiassed and based on diligent research in libraries and archives both here and in Europe. . . While this is the most comprehensive biography that has yet appeared of Mr. Davis, it offers little that is new; that is not at all a denial of merit." G. R. B. R.

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 8 '30 800w

Christian Century 47:1417 N 19 '30 180w

"Davis's biographers have been unable to agree on his stature or his place, and as the years pass it becomes increasingly less likely that a definitive life will appear. Certainly, Jefferson Davis: Political Soldier, brings nothing new to a true evaluation." E. F. Brown

— Current Hist 33:xviii O '30 800w

"Like Mr. Tate's animated and picturesque narrative, Miss Cutting's more stately yet invariably readable study is a fine attempt to 'discover the man.' Though she is kinder in her treatment of 'the leader of a cause but not of men,' it is clear that reading between the lines of her final summary she agrees, with reservations, with Mr. Tate that Davis's mistakes played their part in the loss of his 'Cause.'. . A fine study and estimate, Miss Cutting's book deserves wide reading." F. H. M.

+ N Y Evening Post p4d O 11 '30 120w

"Miss Cutting has the power of telling a chapter completely in a page. Miss Cutting's style has a serene beauty; she is a master of English, plays on it like a harp, and can produce an effect on the imagination by what seems a negligent phrase." C. W. Thompson

+ N Y Times p8 N 9 '30 850w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:8 D '30 30w

St Louis 28:272 N '30

CUTTING, E. B.—Continued

"On the whole she presents him much as the historical fraternity, if not the general public, has come to know him. She glosses over some difficulties and ignores others, but reveals his essential faults. For his stormy career, however, her manner is rather too polite, too serene, too smooth." Dumas Malone

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:413 D 6 '30 600w

D

D'ABERNON, EDGAR VINCENT, 1st viscount. Diary of an ambassador; with historical notes by Maurice Alfred Gerothwohl; v 2, Rapallo to Dawes, 1922-1924. 350p il $5 Doubleday, Doran [21s Hodder]

B or 92 Europe—Politics. Great Britain—Foreign relations. Ruhr valley—Invasion (29-9279)

The second volume of the diary of the British ambassador to Germany covers the years 1922-1924, centering upon the events leading up to the occupation of the Ruhr by French troops and the consequences of that occupation, notably the collapse of German finance. A third volume, intending to show how Germany became a member of the League of nations, is to follow.

Reviewed by L. B. Packard

Am Hist R 36:157 O '30 850w

Books p20 Ap 6 '30 250w

Reviewed by William MacDonald

Current Hist 32:633 Jl '30 700w

"His personal appraisals, especially of Poincaré, Tchitcherin (of whose abilities he appears to have formed no high opinion), Bonar Law, and the German leaders, are keen and illuminating, and he sets down a number of good stories about contemporaries and others."

+ Nation 131:132 Jl 30 '30 250w

"Lord D'Abernon comes before us in his diaries not only as an Ambassador but also as a writer, and here he has to be judged mainly as an author. A good man or a good Ambassador may—nay, he more often than not does—make a terribly dull writer. But the good fairies seem simply to have showered gifts on the late Ambassador in his cradle, so that he might become in course of time not only a first-rate diplomatist, but the author of a very entertaining book." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 46:254 N 16 '29 900w

"This instalment of the Diary is not, from the standpoint of the general reader, quite so interesting as the last was. It covers the period of the French invasion of the Ruhr and of the catastrophic fall of the mark, and so naturally the entries relate to finance almost from beginning to end. At the time of its occurrence the financial crisis in Germany was both of absorbing interest and of vast political importance; but now that the thing is over and done with, the tale of the crisis, as it unrolled itself from day to day and month to month, can hardly be expected to hold very closely the attention of any but economists or currency experts."

New Statesman 34:sup vi N 9 '29 900w

"Aside from obvious position-taking, D'Abernon's sketch of Poincare and his ten-page analysis of 'The French Character' are splendid as psychological tours-de-force of the English intelligence at its best. The latter in particular should be read by any one truly interested in European politics; it throws more light on such baffling problems as the made-in-Paris impasse at the London Naval Conference than hundreds of factual accounts." Percy Winner

+ N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 5 '30 850w

"On the whole in humorous characterization and ironic estimate of his contemporaries the book is very kind to the years that inspired it. From the pen of so shrewd and sapient a commentator, with so many of the virtues of generous judgment, the 'Diary of an Ambassador' should be one of the most just and honest records of our time. It is certainly one of the most civilized explanations that the post-war melée has yet prompted." Gardner Harding

+ N Y Times p6 Ap 27 '30 1100w

Sat R 148:536 N 9 '29 1050w

"The second volume of Lord D'Abernon's diary has the high merit of the first. In a way it is even more illuminating, as it deals with a period for which there were no leading lights. Even those who study foreign politics regularly find it difficult to speak with confidence of events and causes in the years 1922 and 1923, but Lord D'Abernon's diary, concise though it is, shows a clear channel. We are confident that when the three volumes describing Lord D'Abernon's Ambassadorship in Germany are completed, they will be recognised as a truly remarkable work—probably the English work for the period."

+ Spec 143:633 N 2 '29 1250w

Times [London] Lit Sup p883 N 7 '29 1150w

DABNEY, EDITH, and WISE, CLAUDE MERTON. Book of dramatic costume. 163p il $3 Crofts [10s 6d Harrap]

391 Costume 30-5825

This handbook for play producers and directors undertakes to present in line-drawing pictures, a selection of the costumes of the chief peoples and periods touched by dramatic literature.

Booklist 26:262 Ap '30

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:49 Je '30

St Louis 28:134 My '30

Wis Lib Bul 26:64 F '30

DAGLISH, ERIC FITCH. Animals in black and white. v 5, Reptiles; v 6, Fishes & sea animals. 47,47p il ea $1.25 Morrow [ea 2s 6d Dent]

590 Zoology—Juvenile literature. Animal pictures. Fishes (28-26858)

"These two volumes are devoted to reptiles and to fishes and sea-animals (including sea-anemone, crab and lobster). They follow the same plan as the other volumes—a brief introduction on the group and then the twenty woodcuts, each being given a page with the description on the opposite page. The text is clearly and simply written and of a kind to interest the young reader."—Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 26:124 D '29

"The introductions to the books, taking up the general biological characteristics of the subjects, are handled with the same economy and concentration of the essentials that mark the individual treatments." M. G. Bonner

+ N Y Times p36 O 6 '29 100w

"Eric Fitch Daglish has used the lovely coils and traceries of his reptiles to such decorative effect that the most nervous child could, it seems to me, make its first acquaintance with snakes in no more quieting fashion." M. L. Becker

+ Outlook 153:590 D 11 '29 80w

St Louis 27:344 D '29

Sat R 147:584 Ap 27 '29 250w

Sat R of Lit 6:546 D 7 '29 80w

"The woodcuts are as distinguished as Mr. Daglish has led us to expect from him—some of them, such as that of the crocodile, are extraordinarily effective."

Times [London] Lit Sup p386 My 9 '29 120w

Wis Lib Bul 26:69 F '30

DAGLISH, ERIC FITCH. Life story of birds. 236p il $3 Morrow [6s Dent]

598.2 Birds 30-7856

Mr Daglish, naturalist and artist, describes the ways and habits of all kinds of birds, and has illustrated his book with twenty woodcuts. His opening chapter on birds in general is followed by discussions of courtship, nest building, eggs, bird babies, birds and their food, birds and their enemies, migration, etc.

Booklist 26:360 Je '30

"This book, distinguished by the same keen observation and the simplicity of its rendering of factual information as the Animals in Black and White series, will interest older boys and girls. . . The twenty woodcuts which give life and authenticity to the text have been admirably reproduced and the type page is a very clear and attractive one." A. C. M.

+ Books p8 Mr 9 '30 160w

"For its ease and clarity of style this book belongs to the old-fashioned but still valid tradition of natural history."

+ Books p7 Jl 6 '30 100w

"Many varieties of birds are included and the facts are clearly and simply presented. Very important are the beautifully executed woodcuts picturing the birds in their proper environments. Even the most casual observer must be impressed with the beauty of these fine pictures of bird life, perfect in every detail." A. L. Shea

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p12 Ap 5 '30 150w

Christian Century 47:818 Je 25 '30 100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p56 Ap '30

"Charmingly illustrated with woodcuts whose individuality and excellence have been widely recognized. He has observed much himself, but it is doubtful if any one, even our most eminent bird explorers, has had an opportunity personally to observe all the birds Eric Daglish brings into his pages. As a result, Mr. Daglish has had to depend on the notes of others, and sometimes they seem to have fallen somewhat short of full authority." Charles Johnston

+ — N Y Times p10 My 18 '30 500w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 154:510 Mr 26 '30 40w

Sat R of Lit 7:316 N 8 '30 250w

Springf'd Republican p7e My 4 '30 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p418 My 15 '30 250w

DAHLBERG, EDWARD. Bottom dogs; with an introd. by D. H. Lawrence. 269p $2.50 Simon & Schuster [7s 6d Putnam]

30-6431

Lorry Lewis and his mother Lizzie, a lady barber, move from Dallas, Texas, during the early nineteen hundreds, to Kansas City. The first part of the story tells of Lorry's boyhood in an orphan's home; the remainder of the narrative is given to a study of his life as a young man, his companions, his subsequent wanderings as a salesman, and as a hobo. The novel is chiefly a realistic indictment of American institutions, and the repulsiveness and futility of life on its lowest level.

"It is an exercise in unlovely virtuosity, skilful enough but somehow unimportant." Guy Holt

— Bookm 71:350 Je '30 350w

"As Mr. D. H. Lawrence fails to point out in an exciting introduction, Mr. Dahlberg has laid hands upon a remarkable and accurate prose style. . . There is no controversy, no dramatic conflict in 'Bottom Dogs.' The people in the novel were beaten and smashed before the novel started. No questions are asked and none is answered. It is a painful record, fascinating in its meticulous detail, slowly unrolling before our eyes." Horace Gregory

+ Books p5 Mr 2 '30 750w

Boston Transcript p2 Ap 5 '30 180w

"In this novel there are no lurid scenes, no extraordinary pictures of depravity, cruelty, or crime. But the whole is raw and hideous—and true. Except for the last chapters about the Los Angeles Y.M.C.A., the book is written in a stale, flat, back-alley Americanese—an ugly argot. There is a lot of meaningless foul talk which, however, is important, for it tremendously enhances the realism. D. H. Lawrence writes an interesting preface." F. T. Marsh

Nation 130:496 Ap 23 '30 320w

"Those who can tolerate the subject will probably be able to tolerate also the semi-illiteracy of the style and the spelling—I found them often both natural and forcible. The story is deliberately flat—without dramatic design, without crises, without beginning, without end—but it possesses quite unusual individuality and sincerity." L. L. Irvine

+ Nation and Ath 46:580 Ja 25 '30 250w

"Dahlberg has produced a novel which we read with a sort of wonder, so unpredictably does it show the transmutation of the rawest, the most sordid, the most commonplace American material by a man of talent so deeply submerged in it that he can only speak its language, yet reacting strongly enough against it, acting on it pervasively enough, to produce work, not merely of personal texture and color, but even of distinction." Edmund Wilson

+ New Repub 62:157 Mr 26 '30 300w

"An odd, spasmodic book, all of whose characters are infected by the mist of unreality that clouds their endeavors and dims their aspirations."

New Statesman 34:582 F 8 '30 280w

"As a document, as a study of manners, this book has undoubted force. The mass of physical detail and the succession of pictures it provides give us surfaces of life that are frighteningly effective. But even Lawrence, while granting that 'Bottom Dogs' proved an experience, is forced to admit that it is an objectionable book and an exaggerated one; even the publishers, while asserting that it is 'irresistible,' are forced to admit that, simultaneously, it is repelling. It is all three of these things and a fourth thing as well—it is dull. The book is free from the self-consciousness that generally accomplishes unflinching treatment of a sordid milieu; but it suffers from over-estimating the value of disagreeable detail."

— + N Y Times p9 Ap 6 '30 600w

"This story of the dregs and scum of America is the last twist of naturalism round the neck of interest. It is as dull and drab and dirty as its title suggests. It proves to this present writer that Mr. Dahlberg had unhappy experiences in his youth and was unfortunately advised to write about them. 'Bottom Dogs' is an illegitimate child of Art by Sociology and should be labeled 'specimen' and put into a bibliography."

— Sat R of Lit 6:837 Mr 22 '30 150w

"The artistic merit of the book, if it can be called such, is that manner perfectly fits matter. There is no plot, no dramatization, smelly words and paragraphs follow each other in the same dull level of aimlessness as the incidents of the boy's and young man's life. We doubt if the book helps one to understand any considerable or significant part of anything."

— Sat R of Lit 6:924 Ap 12 '30 550w

"Seen through the eyes or rather smelled by the nose of such a man as Lorry, the American scene of slums, low 'joints', cheap barbers' shops, lodging houses, railway yards and street corners, is pungent and terrible. Mr. Dahlberg's clever use of the American vernacular renders just the right atmosphere of grinning dreariness and spurious vitality. . . The humour is lean and pungent; its coarseness is of the same character as the irritable revulsions of Ulysses. There is no full-bodied

DAHLBERG, EDWARD—Continued

Rabelaisian laughter. There is also very little sky in Bottom Dogs; everyone seems short-sighted. The book is a definitely sordid and remarkable piece of catharsis." V. S. Pritchett

Spec 144:99 Ja 18 '30 500w

Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 13 '30 320w

DAHLBERG, MARY. Dagger. 344p $2 Duffield
30-10703

"Love carries Dagger Marley, a spirited young American girl, from her home on the Texas border to New York, Paris, Algiers, India and China where she has many adventures and finds the happiness she was seeking."—Publishers' Weekly

Books p19 My 25 '30 120w

"In writing a most virile novel, full of horses, range riding, airplanes, war, strange travel with many adventures, Miss Dahlberg has retained sensitiveness to all the finer feminine emotions by making all these merely the properties of an exquisite love story. Such a novel, written by a young girl, is more than a promise of future success; it is a distinct achievement." F. M.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 11 '30 800w

"The story is an excellent psychological portrayal of the development of a girl from childhood to maturity, done with restraint and understanding."

+ N Y Times p20 My 18 '30 120w

DALGLIESH, ALICE. Little wooden farmer; and, The story of the jungle pool. unp il $1 Macmillan
30-18294

Two stories for very little children, one about the little wooden farmer and his animals, the other about the little boy who went out to the jungle to catch a wild pet, but eventually decided that a rabbit would be better. There are directions for making plays of the stories by means of toys.

Booklist 27:107 N '30

"These two stories are really of a kind a small child will listen to, that is, they are simple enough, and the illustrations are very gay."

+ Bookm 72:xxviii O '30 50w

DALTON, MORAY. Body in the road. 281p $2 Harper
30-12379

Lord David Haringdon, formerly with Scotland Yard, attempted to solve the mystery of the murder of pretty Violet Hunter, and got into trouble with the local authorities. Because the girl he loved was accused of the murder, David refused to let the matter rest, and hired a queer investigator, Mr Glide, to look into the case. Glide's methods were not above suspicion, but he located the murderer.

Bookm 71:xxi Je '30 80w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p20 Ap 20 '30 100w

N Y Times p24 Ap 20 '30 120w

DALY, CARROLL JOHN. Tag murders. 320p $2 Clode
30-14392

A thrilling chase in which Race Williams, gunman, again gets his man—the Head Tag.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p10 Jl 6 '30 130w

"It is not done in the usual prosaic way which every avid reader of detective stories comes to recognize so well. Its action is vivid, and moves fast, and has original touches."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Jl 12 '30 150w

"Badly written, incredible, but has lots of pep." W. R. Brooks

— + Outlook 155:228 Je 11 '30 70w

DALZELL, JAMES RALPH; McKINNEY, JAMES; and RITOW, HERMAN. Blueprint reading—for the building trades—a practical manual of self-instruction on blueprint reading. 107p il $1.25 Am. tech. soc.

744 Architectural drawing. Blueprints
29-27908

A practical treatise on blueprints designed for those in charge of building construction who have not had the technical training in blueprint making and reading that designers and architects possess.

Booklist 26:193 F '30

N Y New Tech Bks 14:36 Jl '29

Pratt p23 summer '30

St Louis 28:12 Ja '30

Wis Lib Bul 26:101 Mr '30

DAMON, SAMUEL FOSTER. Day after Christmas. 205p il $2 Boni
30-29568

The day after Christmas Abbie, at home alone, discovered Chris, a Christmas fairy, hiding in the Christmas tree. Together they took a trip to Fairyland and had a beautiful time.

"Any child audience would adore the book for it never patronizes and it is dexterously illogical. Things happen swiftly and every province of a child's fancy is represented. There is very little sentimentality, and the whimsey is usually quite sensible." Nancy Evans

+ Books p8 D 21 '30 550w

"'The Day After Christmas' is one of those books we hear about, but so seldom see, that appeal to children of all ages, from six to sixty, and under and over these ages. Naturally, being the work of Mr. Damon, the English is perfect, a joy to the eye and to the ear. Moreover, the story, once the premise is accepted, is so very logical no one can read it without living, for the time, with the fairies." J. W. M.

+ Boston Transcript p5 N 12 '30 500w

"The book is rich in imagery and in literary associations. It should have proved a welcome opportunity for the art of Vera Bock, but she is not so successful here as in 'The Tangle-Coated Horse.'"

+ Nation 131:558 N 19 '30 150w

"Though occasionally lacking in spontaneity, the story has charm and imagination and will be enjoyed by children. For boys and girls 9 to 11." A. T. Eaton

+ — N Y Times p45 D 7 '30 130w

"This is a glimmery sort of fairy story. That is, it is a perfectly good fairy story, with fairies and elves and magic and all the 'fixings' such as any regular fairy story ought to have. And then, besides, there are glimmers of ideas that you can't quite hold or even examine. . . It is good story telling, full of the detail that a child loves, yet full of variety and notion. And, for the imaginative child, and the grown-up who may be reading aloud, there are the glimmers. . . Those pages about wishes contain as pretty a bit of writing as one is likely to meet. But it is all pretty writing, simple and swift and vivid."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:438 D 6 '30 280w

DAMON, SAMUEL FOSTER. Thomas Holley Chivers, friend of Poe; with sel. from his poems; a strange chapter in American literary history. 305p il $5 Harper

B or 92 Chivers, Thomas Holley. Poe, Edgar Allen
30-12492

The extraordinary verses of the Georgia poet and contemporary of Poe, Thomas Holley Chivers, M.D., receive special review and criticism in this biography of a man who is now almost forgotten except for his relationship to Poe. Chivers was a poet of striking originality, who wrote some of the best and worst verses of his time. His influence, however, upon Poe and other poets was considerable; the biographer believes that "tho Chivers wrote some poems which would have made even Satan smile, his best work deserves a more serious attitude."

Booklist 27:101 N '30

"All in all Mr. Damon's scholarship is more to be commended than his literary judgment; and Chivers had better make the most of the present, for the future, like the past, is apt to prove unkind." Louis Kronenberger
Bookm 71:456 Jl '30 380w

"Mr. Damon has made a fruitful excursion into the hinterland of nineteenth century American literature. By revealing how much poetry was written in the days of Poe . . . by clearing up a chapter in the biography of Poe, and by telling the story of Chivers himself with tact and skill he has accomplished a set of useful ends. Doubtless it is well that American literature should be getting this sort of attention at the moment; we know little enough about it, heaven knows. But I cannot conclude that Mr. Damon has saved a poet for us out of all that darkness." Mark Van Doren
+ — Books p6 My 18 '30 750w

"Step by step Mr. Damon follows 'the tragedy of Chivers'—a 'genius born out of time and place,' and by his skillful selection of excerpts and in some cases entire poems from his verse, gives the reader a gratefully clear idea of its psychical thought, its curiously fantastic style. . . . His long-forgotten life story, told as Mr. Damon tells it, is not only uniquely illuminative, holding as it does much hitherto unpublished material, both poems and letters, but it fills lacunas which have long made incomplete one of the most important chapters of the history of American literature." F. B.
+ Boston Transcript p1 My 31 '30 1000w

"Whether or not one thinks Chivers worth rescuing from obscurity on his own account, his story (under Professor Damon's competent hands) proves to be fascinating. Professor Damon has combined scholarship and human interest in a rare degree." J. J. R.
+ Cath World 132:122 O '30 180w

"Mr. Damon uses him chiefly as a specimen, and he succeeds by that means in illuminating the minds and fancies of a whole generation. No one interested in the history of the American temperament should miss his book." J. W. Krutch
+ Nation 130:655 Je 4 '30 550w

"Mr. Damon does not push his claims for Chivers too far: this biography is singularly well balanced and sane. (If there is any fault to find with it, it is the thinness of its social background; the author apparently knows little and cares less about society that produced Chivers; his graciously patronizing attitude towards it better becomes an Eastern contemporary of his subject than a modern scholar enlightened, supposedly, by a new generation of historians.)" Allen Tate
+ New Repub 63:294 Jl 23 '30 1200w
New Statesman 36:308 D 13 '30 1150w

"Mr. Damon's description of this curious and important association can hardly be overpraised, particularly since it presents an unforgettable portrait of one of the most curious, ridiculous, and pathetic figures ever produced by an age which was a treasury of literary oddities." Margaret Wallace
+ N Y Evening Post p11m My 10 '30 850w

Reviewed by Herbert Gorman
N Y Times p4 Ag 10 '30 1750w

"His monograph immediately joins such excellent works, to mention but one, as John Donald Wade's 'Augustus Baldwin Longstreet,' one of the most valuable studies of antebellum Southern culture ever written. Prof. Damon's work is not so solid as Dr. Wade's, for the very good reason that his subject did not warrant a similiar treatment, but within its limits it is extremely good." C. H. Grattan
+ N Y World p5m Je 29 '30 700w

"We may thank Mr. Damon for furnishing from what seems an arid text a readable book (it is permitted to skip some of the poems)." R. D. Townsend
+ Outlook 155:24 My 7 '30 400w
St Louis 28:218 S '30
Times [London] Lit Sup p869 O 23 '30 320w

DAMPIER-WHETHAM, WILLIAM CECIL DAMPIER. History of science, and its relations with philosophy & religion. [new ed rev] 514p il $4 Macmillan [18s Cambridge univ. press]

509 Science—History. Philosophy [30-9305]

"In this admirably planned and written volume Mr. Dampier-Whetham traces the evolution of scientific thought and research from the dawn of history in Babylonia and Egypt, through the ingenious speculations of the Greeks and past the blind alleys of the Middle ages, to the discoveries and theories of the present year. It is needless to say that Mr. Dampier-Whetham is a very high authority on physical science, but it is something of a revelation to find him equally sure as a guide in biology and other departments of thought." —Spec

"The author's discussion of modern science is the most valuable part of the book and the field in which he is evidently most at home. His inclusions and omissions here will be noted with interest and the relationship which he indicates between different thinkers and advances. It is this part of the work which chiefly will have to justify the place of this new work among preceding one volume histories of science. Skill is shown in simplification, generalization, and coordination. The treatment is clear, sane, and substantial in character. One general criticism of the book as a whole which occurs to the present reviewer is that the relation of scientific advance to practical invention and scientific instruments has been somewhat slighted because of the author's interest in the development of scientific thought and its relation to philosophy and religion." Lynn Thorndike
+ — Am Hist R 35:583 Ap '30 750w

"In this volume the author has performed the unique achievement of writing a history of science in a connected fabric. One of the most interesting features of the volume is the close attention paid to the interaction of scientific and philosophical thought throughout the epochs with which he deals. The author, because of his profound knowledge in both fields, is peculiarly competent to treat this aspect of the subject. This volume is to be highly commended to the general reader in the field of the history of science." H. Blumer
+ Am J Soc 36:161 Jl '30 250w
Boston Transcript p3 D 28 '29 850w
Boston Transcript p3 O 11 '30 450w

"A work of extraordinary erudition and comprehensiveness. For the field which it covers, this volume, I judge will for a considerable time remain a standard treatise without serious rival." W. E. Garrison
+ Christian Century 46:1610 D 25 '29 200w

"Here is a book designed to meet a long felt need in the English-speaking world. German and French works attempting such an enterprise have long been in existence, but so far as my knowledge goes nothing quite like it has hitherto appeared in English. On the side of scholarly familiarity with the fields of historical knowledge which his treatment attempts to bring together, Dr. Dampier-Whetham gives few opportunities to any but a meticulous and carping critic; if his interpretation of the history of philosophy follows somewhat stereotyped lines, and his comments on some specific points, such as the pragmatic theory of truth, are open to serious attack, he is but following the lead of many philosophers in the narrower sense of the word and is no more guilty than they. But many readers will almost certainly find themselves raising the question whether the author's method of treatment is such as to render the book as valuable to any definite group of thinkers as they had hoped from the title." E. A. Burtt

DAMPIER-WHETHAM, W. C. D.—Continued
+ — J Philos 27:530 S 11 '30 950w

"Mr. Whetham has unrivalled qualifications for the task he has set himself; and he is to be congratulated upon having produced, at the cost of what must have been great labour, a fascinating book." Maurice Amos
+ Nation and Ath 46:612 F 1 '30 850w

"The book is a fine and bold piece of work. The narrative is always clear and concise and the sequence orderly; it never degenerates into the dismal catalogue of names and dates which sometimes masquerades as the history of science. The mutual relations between scientific discovery and other phases of contemporary thought are generally well brought out, particularly the relations between science and philosophy." A. D. Ritchie
+ Nature 125:4 Ja 4 '30 2000w

"The author is not only a chemist of repute in the fields of colloids and solutions, but has published a number of books and monographs on the history of science and related subjects. But, notwithstanding his splendid background and intentions, his latest work suffers from a distortion of historical perspective, from a misplacement of emphasis and from a reactionary social attitude which prejudices its outlook. . . Mr. Dampier-Whetham's account of the influence of science upon modern thought, in contrast to his meager treatment of other subjects, is full and vivid." Hyman Rosen
+ New Repub 64:238 O 15 '30 750w
New Statesman 34:134 N 2 '29 130w
N Y New Tech Bks 15:9 Ja '30

"The book far surpasses in excellence any one-volume work of the kind that has so far appeared in the English language. A feature for which all readers will be grateful is the addition of marginal subheadings, which appear on every page, supplemented by a fully adequate index." Maynard Shipley
+ N Y Times p28 F 16 '30 1000w
St Louis 28:134 My '30
Sat R 149:231 F 22 '30 950w

"The ease with which he handles his immense subject is truly remarkable. Science is his wash-pot, and over philosophy has he cast his shoe. He here presents, in the most lucid and attractive fashion, 'a complete outline of the development of scientific thought.' It would not be excessive to pay Mr. Dampier-Whetham the compliment which pleased Macaulay best of all, and to say that there is not a single sentence in his book which needs to be read twice before it can be understood. This is not to assert there are not many sentences, and indeed pages, which require and deserve long revolution in the mind, but that is due to the profundity of the subject—not to any lack of clearness in its presentation."
+ Spec 143:787 N 23 '29 230w
Times [London] Lit Sup p496 Je 12 '30 1500w

DANE, CLEMENCE, pseud. (WINIFRED ASHTON), and SIMPSON, HELEN. Author unknown. 321p $2 Cosmopolitan bk.
30-7197

A light satire upon London's literary circles and its lions and lambs, into which a murder-mystery is woven. Marmion Poole, the celebrity of the moment, is about to publish his sensational memoirs. Then Horatia Pedler, who is no mean figure in the publishing world, reveals to Poole the fact that he has an illegitimate daughter, now twenty years of age, named Gilda, who has been employed in her firm. The mystery of the story achieves a climax when Horatia plunges to her death from the roof of her house the night that the manuscripts of Poole's memoirs are destroyed by fire.

"Something pretty stunning in the way of a tragi-comedy of the literary life, sub-species murder mystery. Decidedly not for the moron trade, this smooth, sprightly and frequently funny collaboration should just suit those of medium brows and on up." Will Cuppy
+ Books p12 Mr 9 '30 200w
Boston Transcript p2 My 3 '30 320w
Cleveland Open Shelf p63 Ap '30

"The authors have built their characters deftly and strikingly, and as for their mystery it is baffling if brief. With no slightest knowledge of how Clemence Dane and Helen Simpson managed their collaboration, it is possible to suspect that one had a light literary novel in her mind, while the other grafted upon it murder and mystery. And do they quite fuse? Not too well."
N Y Times p21 Mr 30 '30 320w

"As to what the authors relied upon to sustain one's interest in the tale from the beginning up to the occurrence of the tragedy (page 190) we are at a loss to explain; nor until the last few pages of the book does anything akin to effective mystery stuff enter into the story. In other words, we regretfully own that the book bored us bitterly and that the talented collaborators fell far short of our expectations." E. C. Beckwith
— N Y World p10m Mr 9 '30 240w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:548 Ap 2 '30 100w
Pratt p37 autumn '30
Sat R of Lit 6:1211 Jl 19 '30 80w
Springf'd Republican p7e My 25 '30 150w

DANIEL, HAWTHORNE. Peggy of old Annapolis. 256p $2 Coward-McCann
30-25743

The period of this book for older girls is the eve of the Revolution. Peggy's father is host to a Mr Morton who is plotting, partly in the interests of the British, but more in the interests of Mr Morton. Peggy picks up a carrier-pigeon bearing a code message which she does not understand. With the help of her cousin Will, she works out the code, and does valiant services for her country.

Reviewed by Lindsay Skinner
N Y Evening Post p7d N 15 '30 150w

"There is plenty of action and the book reads easily, but the characters are not overdrawn, as is frequently the case in historical stories for girls." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p19 D 28 '30 150w

"Mr. Daniels knows enough about the region and the time to write with sureness. He knows, too, how to write a girl's story which has the fascination of adventure, and in which the suspense never flags. The book has atmosphere, descriptive value and the merit of steady, careful development. Without being too elaborate, it is really original."
+ Sat R of Lit 7:351 N 15 '30 330w

DANIEL, SAMUEL. Poems, and A defense of ryme; ed. by Arthur Colby Sprague. 215p $3 Harvard univ. press [13s 6d Milford]
821 30-7222

The editor has included all that is worthwhile by this Elizabethan poet, 1562-1619, whose "Delia" sonnets are supposed to have influenced Shakespeare. The book contains a long critical introduction by the editor. The remainder of the book is made up of poems by Samuel Daniel, and a reprint of his chief prose work, including the pamphlet, "A Defence of Ryme."

"Although the book is scholarly in every detail, Mr. Sprague does not merely rattle the dry bones of scholarship, as many are prone to do. His pleasing and graceful English makes his subject thoroughly alive." F. M.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 26 '30 900w

"Daniel was an interesting man, but a reading of the 'Delia' sonnets will not enliven anybody unless that anybody should happen to be a student of Elizabethan verse."

N Y Times p18 Mr 30 '30 150w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks

N Y World p5m Jl 27 '30 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p475 Je 5 '30 2200w

DANIELS, JONATHAN. Clash of angels. 288p $2.50 Brewer

30-8165

The story of this satiric fantasy begins with the days when Heaven was young, and the angels Jehovah and Lucifer still on speaking terms. Then Jehovah had a dream of power, and, with Gabriel as his prime minister and the lovely Lucretia as his spouse, set up a glorified kingdom of Heaven and elected himself God. Lucifer and his hosts, content with love and beauty as they found them, refused to worship Jehovah. The great clash of angels followed, resulting (thru a sly ruse on the part of the host of Zion) in victory for the followers of God. Lucifer and his brave angels gallantly disappear, in a concert of dramatic action, over the fearful Edge of Heaven.

"I find it thoroughly entertaining and on the whole capably done. Removed from its association with biblical tradition, it assumes dignified proportions as a philosophic fairy-tale: a sensitive and charmingly told allegory of the perpetual conflict between the hedonist and the person with a moral axe to grind." Guy Holt

+ Bookm 71:474 Jl '30 550w

"The writing throughout is swift, clear and entertaining." Paul Hogan

+ Books p4 Ap 13 '30 600w

N Y Times p22 My 25 '30 500w

Outlook 155:24 My 7 '30 30w

"Mr. Daniels is wise and clever; and he has told the story in an exciting way. His demonology is exact, his theology thoughtful, and his battles are extremely active. And the book gathers power as it progresses. . . The wisest writers of our times will welcome him for the excellence of his learning, the power of his narrative, and the clearness of his ideas." Robert Nathan

+ Sat R of Lit 6:869 Mr 29 '30 650w

"It is no second-rate and ineffective conception. It is keen, logical, powerful. It sets forth in a new and vital drama the eternal conflict between the Spirit of Light and the Spirit of Darkness. It will lead many a reader to consider earnestly whether it does not epitomize the history of belief among men from the beginning down to the present day, and its outcome accord with the nature of the race. Its remarkable quality will certainly bring it recognition."

+ Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 27 '30 850w

DANTZIG, TOBIAS. Number, the language of science; a critical survey written for the cultured non-mathematician. 260p il $3.50 Macmillan [10s Allen, G.]

510.1 Number concept 30-19408

A study of the evolution of the modern number concept. "All irrelevant technicalities have been studiously avoided, and to understand the issues involved no other mathematical equipment is required than that which is offered in the average high-school curriculum." (Pref.)

Booklist 27:95 N '30

Bookm 72:xiv N '30 180w

"'Number' is a wise book. It brings no new store of information, as have many recent books on stars and atoms, but it examines the human mind functioning at its best. Its outlook is as broad and unprejudiced as that of mathematics itself. Its instinct for human values is unerring. It is a book of extraordinary fascination for any one who can think, and especially for all who have an aversion to mathematics, provided only that they are capable of detachment and can escape from themselves." Gerald Wendt

+ Books p4 Ag 3 '30 920w

Boston Transcript p1 Ag 30 '30 580w

"The first part presents a simple subject matter, which anyone may read about with interest. But as the author approaches the more technical and philosophical problems of mathematics, the ordinary reader cannot follow him, while the instructed reader does not get his money's worth. There is no question of the author's knowledge of the subject, but the method of exposition depends too much on a superficially vivid style, rather than on a serious attempt to organize the ideas for the benefit of the reader. Had Professor Dantzig not taken snappy writing as a dogma of what a popular book should be, he might have been more successful." Benjamin Ginzburg

+ — New Repub 64:107 S 10 '30 220w

"Professor Dantzig is a scholarly mathematician. But if he had been a mere technician, no matter how skilled, he could not have produced this work. He was able to do it because, in addition to being a well-trained technician, he is at heart a poet. Throughout the work, even in the driest parts, the reader is quickened and sustained by a certain galvanic quality that is due in large measure to the admirable clarity of the style." C. J. Keyser

+ N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 19 '30 1050w

N Y Times p4 Ag 17 '30 850w

"A fascinating exposition of the evolution of numbers and the relation of mathematics to science." Bernice Whittemore

+ Outlook 155:470 Jl 23 '30 100w

St Louis 28:262 N '30

Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 25 '30 80w

"This volume tells the story as simply, I suppose, as it can be told—and a grand tale of stumbling, stuttering progress it makes. It almost proves the mathematician's boast that only through Number and Form can we understand the universe; but not quite, for number freezes life and tends to abstractions that find no counterpart in reality. . . Now whether that makes sense to you, or not, you will find this a fascinating book." Leon Whipple

+ Survey 64:41 O 1 '30 750w

"This is an excellent account for the mathematical student, or the general reader mathematically disposed, who wishes for some sort of philosophical conspectus of the subject."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1090 D 18 '30 220w

DANZIG, ALLISON. Racquet game; with an introd. by Herbert N. Rawlins, jr. 283p il $4 (17s) Macmillan

796.34 Tennis. Rackets (game). Squash rackets (game) 30-4629

A history of the games of court tennis, racquets, squash racquets and squash tennis in the United States. The author describes in each case the origin of the game, the courts upon which it is played, the problems and methods of play, the introduction into the United States, and outstanding players.

Booklist 26:347 Je '30

N Y Times p28 Mr 16 '30 200w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:43 My '30

St Louis 28:141 My '30

"Mr. Danzig's knowledge of his subjects is only equalled by his modesty in writing of what should be a classic in America and Canada, as well as an invaluable book of reference."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p375 My 1 '30 500w

DARBY, ADA CLAIRE. Hickory-goody. 277p il $1.75 Stokes 30-20586

A tale of pioneer days in Missouri. Little Martha and her brother have a full share in the experiences of the settlers and meet Daniel Boone and Kit Carson.

Booklist 27:166 D '30

St Louis 28:247 O '30

"The small heroine and her brother contrive to lisp their way through frontier life doing and saying little which could reasonably be expected to interest a child. There is an occasional interesting scene or description, such as the finding of a honey bee's nest in a hollow tree or a meeting with Daniel Boone. On the whole, however, the experiences of these two 'poor, little motherless lambs' are as dull and uninteresting as are the constant moralizations of the author." F. B. Bird

— Sat R of Lit 7:348 N 15 '30 170w

D'ARCY, CHARLES FREDERICK. Christian outlook in the modern world. 256p $1.75 (6s) Macmillan

230 Christianity

The Archbishop of Armagh is a liberal-minded churchman who writes in the belief that a sound understanding of modern science helps to a fresher and clearer appreciation of spiritual realities.

"There is nothing pessimistic about the bishop, neither is there anything radical. His thinking and his reading have kept up with the times. He knows religion even better than he knows science, but it is not mediaeval in character or language."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 30 '30 300w

"The novelty of the present volume lies in its rare combination of liberal outlook and old creedal formulas. The author finds no difficulty in making the mass of recently acquired data fit into historic dogmas. The old wineskins are equal to their modern contents." W. E. Hammond

+ Christian Century 47:871 Jl 9 '30 700w

"The great charm of the book is its naturalness. There is no straining after a reconciliation between two opposed points of view; the outlook of the Christian and the outlook of the modern mind are seen to be working together in harmony in the most natural way in the world." L. H.

+ Living Church 83:807 O 11 '30 200w

Springf'd Republican p10 My 27 '30 130w

"In this book a service which few men are better qualified to undertake is rendered by the Archbishop of Armagh, who expounds the leading elements of Christianity in terms designed to commend them to those whose outlook on the world and human life is that of modern science. . . The value of the book is greatly enhanced by the prominence it gives to those elements of Christianity that are most vigorously challenged at the present time, such as the existence of God, creation, the Divine Man, immortality, the Trinity, Divine suffering, and prayer. Whatever may be the presuppositions and outlook of the reader, he will confess that he is presented with an exposition of Christianity which does really face the special difficulties of what may be called the scientific mind affected by certain tendencies in current philosophical theories."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p52 Ja 23 '30 850w

D'ARCY, MARTIN CYRIL. Thomas Aquinas. (Leaders of philosophy) 304p $3.50 Little [12s 6d Benn]

B or 92 Thomas Aquinas, Saint [30-26945]

"The aim of this new volume in the Leaders of Philosophy series is to present the philosophy of St. Thomas as nothing more or less than a rationalist system of philosophy and to treat it in all its parts principally from this point of view. The author is careful to point out in this connexion that in spite of his dogmatic reputation St. Thomas has a strong claim to be considered as a rationalist, and, in Fr. D'Arcy's opinion at least, St. Thomas would have desired no other test."—Times [London] Lit Sup

Books p19 N 23 '30 300w

"While this study of St. Thomas is erudite and scholarly, it is written with such clarity of expression, despite the abstractness of the theme, that the general public cannot fail to find it of very present interest." G. R. B. R.

+ Boston Transcript p2 N 5 '30 700w

"It is not an easy thing to piece together from the vast work of St. Thomas 'the philosophic system that makes his views consistent.' Father D'Arcy has done so successfully." Lyle Donaghy

+ Nation and Ath 48:239 N 15 '30 700w

"Father D'Arcy has succeeded in presenting the fundamental principles of the Angelic doctor's system in a concise and accurate form." T. G.

+ Nature 126:951 D 20 '30 200w

"Father d'Arcy's study of the great Dominican is singularly free from tedious bias. He writes—if one may risk an old-fashioned compliment—like a scholar and a gentleman, handling abstruse subjects as lightly as their weight allows, and contriving also to fashion out of the rather slender biographical material a personal impression of one who laboured constantly to efface himself."

+ New Statesman 36:57 O 18 '30 750w

"Although writing from the orthodox Catholic point of view, Father D'Arcy is successful in his attempt to establish in a thoroughly impartial manner the important claims of Thomas Aquinas as a philosopher, apart from whatever position he may occupy as a saintly personality or as the exponent of a particular religious system."

+ N Y Times p3 N 16 '30 380w

Reviewed by Evelyn Underhill

Spec 145:103 Jl 19 '30 500w

Times [London] Lit Sup p755 S 25 '30 1300w

DARE, ALAN, pseud. See Goodchild, G.

DARLING, ESTHER BIRDSALL. Navarre of the North. 268p $2 Doubleday, Doran 30-21938

Navarre, an Eskimo wolf-dog, descendant of the famous Baldy of Nome, is rescued by young Paul Barrau from a cruel master. The dog accompanies Paul to France, where he rescues a wounded officer and is awarded the Croix de guerre.

Booklist 27:67 O '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p133 N '30

"There is courage and loyalty in the book without sentimentality. For boys and girls 10 to 16." A. T. Eaton

+ N Y Times p15 Ag 17 '39 150w

"Mrs. Darling has written a book out of her experience with the kennels which supplied dogs to serve with the Army of the Vosges. . . What we like about this book is its scope, and its many true word pictures of Alaskan life; what we would like to see is an adult book by Mrs. Darling in which her human beings are as true to nature as her dogs."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:27 Ag 2 '30 160w

DARLING, MALCOLM LYALL. Rusticus loquitur; or, The old light and the new in the Punjab village. 414p $6 (15s) Oxford

915.45 Punjab. Peasantry—Punjab [30-29432]

"Mr. Darling has carefully delimited the field of his investigation. Having previously written a volume on 'The Punjab Peasant in Prosperity and Debt,' he has now gone thoroughly into such questions as the peasant's and villager's relations to his landlords and priests, his standard of living, the status of women, marriage customs, education, religion and its relation to economic conditions. The two books together are comparable to Thomas's classic 'Polish Peasant,' though less voluminous, and not wholly dissimilar in method."—Christian Century

---

"Based upon first-hand research in village after village—hundreds of them—across the Punjab, and absolutely free from any taint of pre-judgment in the interest of this or that conclusion, this scholarly study presents the most scientific and dependable body of facts and conclusions that this reviewer has seen about one part of India."

+ Christian Century 47:1092 S 10 '30 230w

Reviewed by Edmund Blunden

Nation and Ath 47:379 Je 21 '30 1350w

"A charming and reassuring book." Charles Johnston

+ N Y Times p18 Ag 3 '30 220w

"Mr. Darling has accepted Dr. Tagore's invitation to 'come inside India: accept all her good and all her evil: if there be deformity, then try to cure it from within, but see it with your own eyes, understand it, think over it, turn your face towards it, become one with it.' Although the Punjab is very far from being all India, we know of no book with a more direct and practical approach to her problems, or one with truer sympathy for and understanding of the mind of the peasant."

+ Spec 145:170 Ag 2 '30 670w

"The Punjab village is here described with an understanding sympathy, but without sentimentality, by a trained observer. Mr. Darling has not only eyes to see and ears to hear—common enough qualities—but the skill to describe what he has seen and heard with a picturesque accuracy that brings conviction."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p585 Jl 17 '30 1750w

DARROW, FLOYD LAVERN. Builders of empire. 303p il $2.50 Longmans
^{2}

920 United States—Biography. Biography 30-20102

Brief biographical sketches of the lives of pioneers in various fields in the United States since the Civil war, including scientists, inventors, engineers, explorers, physicians and financiers.

Booklist 27:108 N '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p135 N '30

St Louis 28:275 N '30

"I have one quarrel with Builders of Empire; it is much too patriotic. Science is essentially international, and if a book about scientific discovery is at all political or tendential, it should, surely, be written with a view of showing the essentially international character of scientific discovery, and should not, in the least, suggest what is not in fact the case, that one country has been overwhelmingly ahead of others in this field. Apart from this, however, I would recommend the book as being well written, inspiring, and accurate." W. B. Curry

+ — Survey 65:342 D 15 '30 250w

DARROW, FLOYD LAVERN. New world of physical discovery. 371p il $3.50 Bobbs

530.9 Physics—History 30-6527

"From the beginnings of physics, through the Greek, Roman and mediaeval periods of science down to its modern outflowerings in the wonders of astronomy, in the striking changes that have taken place in our theories about matter, and in the overturns due largely to the Einstein doctrine of relativity, the author guides his readers. In a multitude of aspects, he shows, the physical world of yesterday is now 'upside down.'"—Boston Transcript

---

Booklist 26:344 Je '30

"Mr. Darrow avoids those superlatives and romanticisms which often make popular science books offensively childish. He entertains without trying to amuse. His style is conversational rather than literary; it is easy to read but by no means distinguished. If there is any hope for laymen to learn easily and pleasantly the point of view and methods of scientific research it is to be found in this book." Gerald Wendt

+ Books p17 Je 8 '30 900w

"Masterly in its grasp of the material and well adapted for popular reading, the volume resembles the unfolding of a panorama in which are presented not only the achievements won, but also the winners of them, and along with both an account of their contribution to human thought and their influence upon civilization." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 5 '30 700w

"It must be authentic science, for a committee of eminent scientists approved it for the Scientific book club. And it is written in a style intelligible to readers without technical preparation. There are mysteries enough remaining, even to the scientists themselves, but this book will aid in dispelling the fog of ignorance surrounding, for most of us, the newer physical discoveries. It even makes relativity fairly comprehensible."

+ Christian Century 47:690 My 28 '30 120w

Reviewed by Clyde Fisher

N Y Evening Post p4s Je 7 '30 150w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:24 Ap '30

"If Mr. Darrow had done no more than explain the Einstein theory, his version of these startling laws deduced by the German philosopher would alone be worth the price of the book." H. J. Forman

+ N Y Times p5 Ap 13 '30 1050w

Reviewed by E. T. Devine

Outlook 155:70 My 14 '30 40w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:53 Je '30

Pratt p14 summer '30

St Louis 28:135 My '30

"This is decidedly the best scientific popularization that has come to my ken. It is unusually accurate. It is well-balanced. It is readable without touching the low level of imbecile diction so many popular writers on science consider it necessary to use when addressing presumably adult and educated laymen." T. S. Harding

+ Sat R of Lit 6:921 Ap 12 '30 650w

"While Mr Darrow aims to make his exposition popular, he seldom sacrifices scientific accuracy. A reading of the book will go far toward acquainting any reader with the newer aspects of a superlatively important and rapidly expanding science."

+ Springf'd Republican p14 My 7 '30 300w

"Physics and astronomy are married in one chapter, and there is a resumé of the influence of physical discovery on man's life. This is the most scholarly, close-woven, yet comprehensible picture of these physical powers that I have found. Master these facts and you will feel as much at home in the world as you ever can today." Leon Whipple

+ Survey 64:41 O 1 '30 200w

DARWIN, BERNARD RICHARD MEIRION, ed. Dickens advertiser; a collection of the advertisements in the original parts of novels by Charles Dickens. 208p il $2.50 Macmillan [7s 6d Mathews]
^{2}

659 Dickens, Charles. Advertising

Dickens's novels were originally published in monthly parts. These eagerly awaited green-covered numbers were a rich depository of old advertisements that show up amusingly the interests of Victorian days. The advertisements are grouped under such headings as dress, pills, for the head, smoking, etc., and the delightful verses of Mr Moses, tailor, hatter, hosier and poet, have a chapter all to themselves. The editor supplies an entertaining commentary to the whole.

DARWIN, B. R. M., ed.—Continued

"The selection given here is delightful, and Mr. Darwin's commentary has great liveliness and zest. The advertisements themselves are much richer than most of their imitations to-day." Richard Sunne
+ New Statesman 36:54 O 18 '30 380w

Reviewed by Oakley Johnson
N Y Evening Post p4d Ja 3 '31 650w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 D 3 '30 700w

"Mr. Darwin brings to his task a perfectly illimitable gusto because Dickens is connected with it. Flint strikes steel, and a bouquet of delightful sparks is the entertaining result. . . This rescue of ancient advertisement from these rare books brings up, like pearls from deep water, all sorts of entrancing details about the paraphernalia of daily life which must else have remained in their ocean caves for ever." E. F. Benson
+ Spec 145:600 O 25 '30 950w

"It is a world as weird and wonderful as Dickens's own, and marvellously disconnected from it."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p973 N 20 '30 1850w

DARWIN, LEONARD. What is eugenics? (Forum ser.) 88p $1 Galton pub. co., inc., 11 W. 42d st., N.Y. [1s; pa 7d Watts & co.]

613.94 Eugenics 29-19702

In this brief monograph the author, who has been for several years president of the Eugenics society, sets forth an explanation of the reasons for and results that might be accomplished by a proper application of eugenics in this country. Among the topics relative to the main subject which he discusses are hereditary qualities, inferior stocks, birth control, sterilization, the habitual criminal, financial aids to parenthood, and selection in marriage.

Reviewed by M. P. Ravenel
Am J Pub Health 20:796 Jl '30 50w

"At a time when the birth control movement is coming more and more under discussion this explanation of eugenics by a recognized authority on the subject, who had Charles Darwin for his father, makes a timely appeal to all who are interested in race improvement."
Boston Transcript p3 Mr 22 '30 550w

Nation and Ath 44:500 Ja 5 '29 300w

"In many ways this tiny volume is a more effective plea for a eugenic social policy than the same author's large work, 'The Need for Eugenic Reform'. The need for brevity has made him concentrate on essentials and disregard relatively unimportant considerations, while the style is clearer and less involved. . . The book is the best brief answer yet published to the question the title asks."
+ Nature 124:686 N 2 '29 150w

N Y Times p33 F 16 '30 140w

Pratt p15 summer '30

"This little volume is very condensed, as the author says, but by no means 'hard reading.' Into it has gone the simplicity and clearness engendered by long thought: there is charity also, and common sense. . . Every educated man and woman should understand the aims of eugenics after reading this survey."
+ Spec 141:702 N 10 '28 130w

DAVENPORT, RUSSELL W. Through-traffic (Eng title: Abominable branch). 307p $1 Doubleday, Doran

30-31487

Joe Hurd, scion of a wealthy Park Avenue family, failed at Harvard and had a dislike in general for work, academic or otherwise. And he could not forget why his father had committed suicide—nor forgive his mother, who was the direct cause. Then Joe fell in love, reformed morally, suddenly went to work and made a fortune in Wall street.

Reviewed by Guy Holt
Bookm 72:451 D '30 50w

"On almost every count 'Through-Traffic' were best regarded as a practice flight by one who may live—for such are the rewards of industry—to spin much finer tales for your delight. Mr. Davenport's faults at present appear to be merely those inherent in youth and inexperience."
+ — Books p42 D 7 '30 130w

"The story reflects New York life in certain surface aspects, and Park Avenue is thrust at the reader with a reiteration which finally ceases to impress. The ending is the happy Park Avenue sort."
— Books p45 D 7 '30 170w

DAVID, EVAN JOHN, ed. Great moments of adventure; the dramatic records of nineteen gallant gentlemen, by themselves and by [the editor.] 404p $2 Duffield

910.8 Adventure and adventurers 30-24033

True stories of great adventure as experienced in the exploits of famous men, and retold by Evan David. Included in the book are the high points in the adventures of Colonel Charles W. Whittlesey on the Argonne; Major F. L. Martin, whose plane was lost on a world flight; Perry and his winning of the North Pole; Lawrence and his Arabian adventures; and Amundsen's discovery of the South Pole.

"Mr. David has fashioned an entertaining book of adventure on land and sea, and in the air above."
+ Books p26 O 26 '30 220w

"These pedestrian sketches lean rather heavily upon events of the World War. Aviation, too, receives its full share of attention. Additionally, Mr. David provides a vivid description of some trapped coal miners, a modest account of Stanley's search for Dr. Livingston and miscellaneous incidents not without thrills —nineteen in all."
Books p22 D 7 '30 80w

DAVIE, MAURICE REA. Evolution of war; a study of its rôle in early societies. (Yale publications in economics, social science and government) 391p $4 Yale univ. press [18s Milford]

355 War 30-1247

" 'The Evolution of War' is a study, not as its main title might imply, of the development of the art of war throughout the ages, but as its subtitle indicates, 'a study of the rôle of war in early societies.' The erudition displayed is enormous. There are nearly 150 pages of notes, references, bibliography, appendices. The subjects dealt with include the part played in the warfare of primitive and savage peoples by cannibalism, human sacrifice, head-hunting, blood-revenge, women, booty, religion, sex."—Sat R of Lit

"The 'Evolution of War' is without doubt the most thorough and exhaustive study of this important subject available. The collection of cases used to support the author's generalizations is remarkable and will prove of value to any student of group conflict. It is to be hoped that Dr. Davie will in course of time complete the work so well begun by a companion volume bringing the evolution of war down to modern times." E. E. Muntz
+ Am Econ R 20:775 D '30 1150w

"Perhaps the weakest chapter is on 'Religion as a Cause of War.' Since no preliterates have a sectarian consciousness nor any missionary zeal, the discussion chiefly enumerates magical beliefs about war and bloodshed. The effect is clearly set forth as the cause and the essential difference which written books and civilization make in the culture of a people is obscured. Some of the best works on primitive people are conspicuously absent from the citations. There is no mention of Brown's work on the Andaman islanders, no reference to Watson's census on the division of labor, or to Radin's work on the Winnebago. Malinowski's name doesn't appear, nor F. C. Cole, nor indeed, a score of other most important names. The author of this book had an important subject and a real opportunity. It will be a matter of regret that he did not rise to the occasion." Ellsworth Faris

— Am J Soc 35:1114 My '30 1000w

Am Pol Sci R 24:1064 N '30 180w

Boston Transcript p2 Ja 25 '30 700w

"Unmistakably, he has a flair for his subject, and succeeds in making interesting and vital a book that might easily have become a dry-as-dust treatise. A captious critic might make [the objection] that Professor Davie buries his best points under too great an accumulation of evidence. The lay reader is mazed at times by the barrage of facts with which he is assailed in support of some point he has been perfectly willing to accept on the say-so of the author. Furthermore, this particular reviewer would have liked a more sparing use of quotation marks."

+ — Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 15 '30 600w

"'The Evolution of War' is an unfortunate misnomer for Professor Maurice R. Davie's really excellent new book. It is not a study of the evolution of war at all—not, at least, if the word 'evolution' is used in its accepted sense to designate the process of slow change by which things have become what they are. Instead, Professor Davie gives his readers an extremely vivid—though scholarly and carefully documented—account of the general conditions of warfare among savages. He might with reasonable accuracy have entitled it, 'The Origin of War.' He would have been perfectly accurate had he called it 'Primitive Warfare.'" John Bakeless

+ — N Y Times p26 F 16 '30 1100w

St Louis 28:92 Ap '30

Reviewed by Norman Angell

Sat R of Lit 6:865 Mr 29 '30 2800w

"Professor Davie certainly gives us a great mass of facts, though rather in that patchwork of the first stage of the 'comparative' method where no great heed is given to any inner order in relative time or degree of culture. We are taken all over the world; but far finer analysis will be needed if the 'facts' are to yield their true implications."

Times [London] Lit Sup p250 Mr 20 '30 350w

Reviewed by J. E. Cutler

Yale R n s 20:198 autumn '30 850w

DAVIES, ARTHUR BOWEN. Etchings and lithographs; comp. and with an introd. by Frederic Newlin Price. ltd ed 23p,205pl $20 Kennerley

767 Etchings 30-704

Reproductions of the collected examples of the etchings and lithographs of the late Arthur B. Davies, two hundred and five in number. There is an autobiographical introduction by the artist's friend, Frederic Newlin Price.

"Davies had unmistakable talent, but a talent so delicate and perishable that it is already in process of dissolution. . . Occasionally, for some obscure reason, he ventured into the modernist technique, arbitrarily introducing sharp angles and planes into his frail nymphs. Such things are painful to behold. Mr. Price's introduction is doubtless intended as a hymn of appreciation, but it is so utterly extravagant and uncritical as to destroy all sense of conviction."

— + Books p17 Mr 2 '30 220w

"The plates range from early to late, furnishing a scope that illumines for us in retrospect the changing moods and ceaseless experimentation of this truly great American artist. The few pages of text by his friend, Frederic Newlin Price, are finely in the spirit of the man of whose character and work they treat." E. A. Jewell

+ N Y Times p20 Mr 30 '30 230w

"The press work of the book, except for a frontispiece portrait reproduced in repellent open screen, is excellent. Frederic Newlin Price supplies an appreciative introduction, which, in places, he could suitably have translated from rhapsody into English." R. E. Renaud

+ — N Y World p10m My 11 '30 450w

St Louis 28:214 S '30

DAVIES, BLODWEN. Saguenay (Sâginawa) the river of deep waters. 204p il $2.50 Dodd

917.14 Saguenay river. Quebec—Description and travel 30-26953

An account of a voyage on the St Lawrence and Saguenay rivers, describing the cities and villages along the way, and the history connected with them.

Booklist 27:99 N '30

Books p13 Jl 6 '30 100w

"The unbroken tone of adulation which marks Mr. Davies's description of the regions about the River Saguenay, and of the isles and bays of the St. Lawrence from Quebec to Tadoussac, suggests that the book has been published more as an advertisement for prospective vacationists than as a personal travel record. This thought is further borne out by the fact that the book has been copyrighted by the Canada Steamship Lines whose ships have for years plied the waters of the St. Lawrence with their summer cargo of tourists."

Boston Transcript p3 Ag 2 '30 120w

"The reviewer, for whom this particular trip is still impressive in its freshness, finds that Blodwen Davies has done peculiar justice to the beauties of a gigantic and majestic stream, to the successive races who peopled her banks and to those cities that mark the resting places of the voyageur. He has stressed especially the historical setting; and chapters like the one on Tadoussac should be lingered over for the dramatic scenes afforded in bygone days." Laura Benet

+ N Y Times p9 Ag 31 '30 500w

St Louis 28:216 S '30

DAVIES, CECIL WHITFIELD. Conductivity of solutions and the modern dissociation theory. 204p il $4 Wiley [15s Chapman]

541.37 Electrolytes—Conductivity. Dissociation 30-21053

"The older dissociation theory as supplemented, though not replaced by the more recent theory of interionic attraction. Includes applications."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"These problems are treated, perhaps for the first time in a systematic manner, in Mr. Davies's work, and it can be asserted that no worker who undertakes research in this field will feel quite safe in his deductions unless he has weighed up the considerations which are here advanced. For this reason, the book can be commended heartily to the specialist as well as to the general student of chemistry, since both will find in it facts and deductions which are too important to be overlooked." T. M. Lowry

+ Nature 126:429 S 20 '30 1000w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:37 Jl '30

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:69 O '30

St Louis 28:209 S '30

DAVIES, RHYS. Rings on her fingers. 278p $2 Harcourt [7s 6d Shaylor]

30-18867

Having grown up in the poverty-ridden home of a collier, Edith wanted something more of life. Thru her marriage with Edgar Roberts, wealthy shop owner, she hoped to achieve the luxury and comfort she craved. But she did not love her husband, and could not forget the young collier who had wanted her to marry him. The woman in Edith finally rebels; but from that rebellion she and Edgar arrive at a better understanding of each other.

DAVIES, RHYS—Continued

"The reunion between Edith and Edgar is the little masterpiece of the book. With perfect delicacy and humor the author brings them through the progressive stages of release through champagne. There are other fine spots in this novel. There are, too, consistent qualities of vitality, psychological penetration and dramatic sweep. It is so good that one wishes it better. The characters fall just short of being compounded of the bone, muscle and blood, of which they talk. One senses the self-consciousness of experiment, but it is that of an experiment decidedly worth while in itself and holding promise." Lillian Feldman
+ — Books p14 S 21 '30 600w

Reviewed by K. C. Tomlinson
Nation and Ath 47:625 Ag 16 '30 200w

"Mr. Davies employs the Lawrence palette, but handles his colors very gingerly." J. R.
— New Repub 64:108 S 10 '30 120w

"Rings on Her Fingers is a very exceptional and moving novel, written with an intensity and anger that augur well for Mr. Davies' future."
+ — New Statesman 35:370 Je 28 '30 100w

"Cross-currents of passion in a drab Welsh mining valley are Mr. Davies's grim theme, and he tells his story with genuine perception."
Sat R 149:822 Je 28 '30 80w

"The story is unsatisfactory, because the woman, on whom everything depends, is not large enough by nature to support the length of a book. Her life has nothing in it but a futile attempt to eat her cake and have it; and she has none of the cleverness and determination that might make this interesting, nothing but the desire for pleasure, chiefly physical."
— Sat R of Lit 7:307 N 8 '30 680w
Spec 145:290 Ag 20 '30 180w

"Not only is the setting a Welsh mining town, but there is throughout the writing a Celtic imagery and violence, an insistence on the importance of physical passion, and it must be said, an entire lack of humour and, sometimes, of reason. Nevertheless Mr. Davies has the courage of his extravagances, and his heroine, Edith Roberts, has genuine personality in her own intense and violent way. It is not a pleasant novel, but Mr. Davies has plenty of imagination and he knows very definitely what he wants to say."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p642 Ag 7 '30 200w

DAVIES, STANLEY POWELL. Social control of the mentally deficient; with foreword by Frankwood E. Williams. (Crowell's social science ser.) 389p il $3 Crowell [13s Constable]

362.3 Feeble-minded. Defective and delinquent classes 30-6979

Beginning with a history of efforts made to study the problem of mental defects, the author tells what is now being done toward the socializing of the subnormal in the light of modern views concerning heredity, environment, and behavior. He emphasizes the value of the special institution, or training colony for the feebleminded and delinquent, as a socializing force. This book was published in 1923 under the title: Social Control of the Feebleminded.

"Once every so often—but unhappily not often enough—a truly monumental book flashes across the horizon of our times. This is one of those volumes, although the reviewer is convinced that this book will not flash transiently, but will remain for many years a classic in its field." G. K. Pratt
+ Am J Pub Health 20:909 Ag '30 380w

Reviewed by S. A. Queen
Am J Soc 36:318 S '30 420w

"Especially interesting and important are the discussions of the tendencies in respect to defective delinquents and the critical consideration of colonization so successfully established in New York. The book will have a wide appeal. It should prove to be of especial value to educators, sociologists, psychiatrists, and social workers." W. C. Sandy
+ Ann Am Acad 149:sup200 My '30 420w
Booklist 26:341 Je '30

"There have been many books about the feeble-minded that have studied them from the standpoint of psychology, psychiatry, or medicine, but there have been very few that considered them in their relation to society as, in a way, its wards. Therefore, the fact that Mr. Davies is primarily a sociologist and is interested in the mentally defective as a social problem gives unique value to his book and greatly widens its general interest. Mr. Davies discusses this question out of notable wealth of knowledge and practical experience."
+ N Y Times p30 Mr 23 '30 500w
St Louis 28:207 S '30
Times [London] Lit Sup p887 O 30 '30 1100w

DAVIES, THOMAS FREDERICK. Charm of trees. 125p $1.50 Revell

582 Trees 30-13989

"A series of essays in which Bishop Davies tells in charming style something of what trees mean to him. The keynote of the book is sounded in the first chapter when he says, 'I like to cultivate the acquaintance of the various trees and endeavor better to understand their particular dispositions.' "—N Y Times

N Y Times p27 Je 8 '30 120w
St Louis 28:235 O '30

"Those who feel that one defect of American culture is a lack of unhurried meditation associated with country life will welcome the evidence here of a man's library study enriched by a background of rural calm. The element of homily in Bishop Davies's essays is not the better part. But it is by no means preponderant. And the hortatory passages are not confined to religious or ethical moralizing in the narrow sense."
+ — Springf'd Republican p10 My 9 '30 630w

DAVIES, WILLIAM WATKIN. Wayfarer in
² Wales. (Wayfarer ser.) 212p $3 Houghton [7s 6d Methuen]

914.29 Wales—Description and travel

Mr Davies is a walker and mountain climber and he emphasizes the possibilities of Wales from that point of view, including practical advice on the way to travel and places most worth visiting.

"The author of 'A Wayfarer in Wales,' like other contributors to the same series of travel volumes, departs from guidebook order and aridity without apology and succeeds in presenting the attractions of the country in engaging fashion."
+ Books p21 N 2 '30 120w

"Unfortunately, the author has spent the greater part of his book upon North Wales, which, while it is the most interesting and beautiful part of the country, is by no means, the most 'foreign.' It has, moreover, been very adequately portrayed, described, surveyed and mapped out not only by multitudinous guide-books but also by Englishmen whose literary reputations are high even in Wales. . . When Mr. Davies leaves North Wales for the South he becomes a more interesting author. Either because he does not consider the natural aspects of the country as worthy of intimate description or because his knowledge of it is more limited, he begins to write of Wales and the Welsh more generally."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p710 S 11 '30 950w

DAVIS, ARTHUR KYLE, Jr., ed. Traditional ballads of Virginia; coll. under the auspices of the Virginia folk-lore society. 634p il $7.50 Harvard univ. press [33s Milford]

811.08 American ballads and songs. Folk-songs—Virginia. Ballads, American 29-30695

"An interesting collection of fifty-one ballads with their many versions and variations; each one has a brief descriptive head-note. The introductory chapter contains information on ballads in general, and a history of the ballad movement in Virginia. Musical accompaniments are given."—St Louis

"So careful and comprehensive a volume cannot but interest scholars quite as much as the charm of the content will appeal to the poetry lover." G. R. B. R.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ja 25 '30 550w

"The present volume contains one contribution of paramount importance. There are fifty-one titles, all of which are included in the Child collection. In addition, there is printed the same number of tunes for ballads, but in two or three cases no tunes for ballads were found, and tunes were found for which there existed no complete text. Frequently there is more than one tune for a given title. Unless a similar music anthology has before been compiled—and this reviewer knows of none—this portion of the Davis volume is unique." Percy Hutchison

+ N Y Times p2 Ag 3 '30 1000w

St Louis 28:107 Ap '30

Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 6 '30 650w

"Its music is almost worthless, because it is clear, both from internal evidence and from the naive avowal of the editor, that there is no guarantee that what is printed represents what was actually sung by the folk-singer to the ballad collector. On the literary problems with which he is competent to deal Mr. Davis writes learnedly and racily; but editorial work of this kind needs the direction of a literary-minded musician, not a collaboration of collectors, editors and musicians who are none of them fully competent. Much of their work in this collection is wasted labour."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p451 My 29 '30 1350w

"The editing of the texts is excellent and the notes of provenance full. Best of all for the general reader is Mr. Davis's Introduction, in which, after steering a skilfully discreet course through the cross currents of communal and non-communal theory, he illustrates the progress of ballad-collecting in Virginia with many delightful memorabilia from the letters of collectors." Tucker Brooke

+ Yale R n s 19:839 summer '30 550w

DAVIS, ELMER HOLMES. Morals for moderns. 321p $2 Bobbs 30-28403

A collection of stories all of which deal with matters of sexual conduct. Contents: Bachelor girl; Free soil; Amateur; Ungracious lady; Count no man happy; Cold sunlight; Sharpshooter; Handy man; Bride of quietness; Jealous mistress; Locksmiths laugh at love.

"Mr. Elmer Davis is an extremely intelligent man whose lively reflections on the modern scene have been presented to us in a variety of forms. His is an unprejudiced, inquiring and subtle mind. But when he writes fiction, he stumbles. He ought to be just the man to perpetrate that old and yet continually repeated audacity, for he has a wide experience of people, he has observed their flounderings with a keen eye, and he has a real gift for story telling. Although I do not think these stories good, I couldn't be pried away from one, once I had started it. These three gifts alone should almost make a story teller, but they don't." A. B. Parsons

— + Books p6 O 19 '30 600w

"Mr. Davis, who has ability as a farceur, has never given himself a chance to become a good short-story writer. He, too, is system ridden, but it is by the system of the average magazine editor, who desires a hint or two of motivation, but never too much. The result in 'Morals for Moderns' is a compromise. It leaves one with the impression that Mr. Davis is exploiting the supposed current need for moral integration in much the same way that writers of ten years ago were exploiting the interest in freedom for moderns. Mr. Davis is attempting to cash in on the dilemma of the liberated, and he begs the question." John Chamberlain

— New Repub 65:226 Ja 7 '31 550w

"Mr. Davis's true métier in creative writing is the farce: he belongs in the theatre, where everything proceeds joyfully through absurd plotting, where the cuckold is a figure of fun, where the satire is never obviously close to the reformer's zeal. He is less at home on the plane of the tragic—either that or he has never been willing to admit the urgency of tragedy."

— N Y Times p6 N 9 '30 450w

"When Elmer Davis examines morals, he is worth your attention. This is particularly true when he writes short stories. Davis occasionally gives vent to ironic comment in serious articles on politics and manners which appear in magazines. Trying for effect, he is not always strictly accurate. It is in his short stories—in inventions pure and simple—that he becomes dreadfully accurate and true." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p11 O 15 '30 700w

DAVIS, JAMES JOHN, and WRIGHT, JOHN CALVIN. You and your job. 242p $2 Wiley [10s Chapman]

331.01 Work. Success 30-15954

"Here is a record of the conversations between the two authors on topics which appear to be vitally significant to the young person who is just entering the industrial world as a worker. It is primarily a book to give a point of view and stimulation." (Survey) Among the subjects discussed are the dignity and importance of work, its psychology and philosophy, and the necessity for training and education.

Booklist 27:12 S '30

"The authors have dealt with the subject of employment in a most engaging way, giving it a romantic as well as a practical flavor. . . The entire spirit of the book is along the lines of inspiration. Any reader will absorb from it a new dignity in labor. Any young boy or girl will find in it an urge to do his work just a little better." W. H. M.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Jl 12 '30 550w

"There is a ring in its close written pages that is true—the genuine ring of the experience of two men who counted only on their own perseverance, good training and economy to get them on in the hard cold world."

+ N Y Times p20 Je 15 '30 150w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:14 Jl '30 200w

St Louis 28:202 S '30

"The book should be stimulating and genuinely helpful to the early adolescent who has to win his living from the world. Such a one who reads it and acts seriously upon it will be likely to envision more than drudgery in his day's work and to do a better job of getting along on the job, for this is prepotently a viewpoint book forged from experience." D. A. Laird

+ Survey 65:111 O 15 '30 200w

DAVIS, JEROME DWIGHT, ed. Labor speaks for itself on religion; a symposium of labor leaders throughout the world; with an introd. by [the editor]. 265p $2 (8s 6d) Macmillan

261 Church and labor 29-13318

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Am J Soc 35:525 N '29 50w

Cleveland Open Shelf p18 F '30

Reviewed by Norman Thomas

Nation 131:182 Ag 13 '30 250w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:6 Ja '30

DAVIS, J. D., ed.—Continued
Reviewed by F. E. Johnson
Survey 63:42 O 1 '29 750w
Times [London] Lit Sup p35 Ja 16 '30 950w

DAVIS, JOHN WILLIAM. Party government in the United States. (Stafford Little lectures for 1929) 68p $1.25 Princeton univ. press [6s Oxford]

329 United States—Politics and government. Political parties—United States 30-2227

A brief discussion of the growth and functions of American political parties, and of party principles, leaders and nominations.

"Mr. John W. Davis brings to this discussion of an interesting subject a rare experience in public life as a party worker, a congressman, a solicitor-general, an ambassador, and finally as the Democratic candidate for the Presidency in 1924. . . In every way these lectures are a worthy addition to the former Stafford Little Lectures." R. S. Morris
+ Ann Am Acad 151:300 S '30 420w
Booklist 26:298 My '30
St Louis 28:130 My '30

"This small but admirable book contains the substance of two lectures delivered last year at Princeton University. Mr. Davis himself, of course, has been Democratic candidate for the Presidency, and is therefore able to add to a shrewd analysis of the growth and functions of party in the United States the appraisal of one well acquainted with party working."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p278 Mr 27 '30 220w

DAVIS, JOSEPH STANCLIFFE. Farm export debenture plan. (Leland Stanford junior univ. Food research inst. Miscellaneous publications) 274p $3 Food research inst.

338.1 Farm produce—Marketing 30-5950

Outlining and explaining the essential features of the debenture plan, Dr Davis presents the arguments against it. He deals with this measure for farm relief in the light of sound economic principles, and reasons from the fact that "our tariff policies have worked to the the detriment of the farming class."

"The work by Dr. Davis must be rated as one of the finest studies which our agricultural depression has called forth." C. C. Zimmerman
+ Am J Soc 36:305 S '30 450w

"Unquestionably, this book presents the strongest arguments, some quite pessimistic, against the debenture plan that have yet made their appearance within a single volume. These are presented in such tolerant, convincing manner that the affirmative, indeed, would do credit to itself to present an equally forceful case. Particularly clear is the analysis of the workability of the plan for wheat and derived products which Dr. Davis visualizes with a perspective which many, no doubt, do not have." M. A. Schaars
+ Ann Am Acad 150:309 Jl '30 800w
Booklist 26:381 Jl '30

DAVIS, MARTHA KING (MRS HOWARD H. DAVIS). Mary's children. 294p $2 Macrae Smith co.

30-2685

A quiet story in which a brave, sensible mother backs her children in their desires to live their own lives and is amply repaid for her trust.

Boston Transcript p2 F 12 '30 350w

"It must be confessed that 'Mary's Children' is extremely mild and innocuous entertainment. . . Miss Davis writes good pedestrian prose but she lacks the ability to make her people come alive—and there is no severer test of characterization than in putting a small group of folk in a village setting. Action—as the frill upon a gown—covers deficiencies of line."
— N Y Times p16 Je 15 '30 180w

DAVIS, MARY GOULD, ed. Baker's dozen. 207p $2 Harcourt

30-20065

Thirteen stories to tell or to read aloud to children. Each of the stories has been told many times in story hours at the New York public libraries. Contents: The hungry old witch, from Tales From Silver Lands, by C. J. Finger; The hare that ran away, from Eastern Stories and Legends, by M. L. Shedlock; The ratcatcher's daughter, from A Doorway in Fairyland, by Laurence Housman; The white horse girl and the blue wind boy, from Rootabaga Stories, by Carl Sandburg; Numskull and the rabbit, from The Panchatantra, tr. by A. W. Ryder; The stone lion, from Tales From Timbuktu, by Constance Smedley; The pumpkin giant, from the Pot of Gold, by M. E. Wilkins; Ting-a-ling's visit to Turilira, from Ting Ling Tales, by F. R. Stockton; Kuratko the terrible, from The Shoemaker's Apron, by Parker Fillmore; A Chinese fairy tale, from Moonshine and Clover, by Laurence Housman; Hungry Hans, from The Fat of the Cat, by Gottfried Keller; Mighty Mikko, from Mighty Mikko, by Parker Fillmore; The legend of Scarface, from Blackfoot Lodge Tales, by G. B. Grinnell.

Booklist 27:108 N '30
Bookm 72:xxvii S '30 80w
Reviewed by K. G. Landon
Bookm 72:247 N '30 100w
Boston Transcript p2 S 27 '30 180w
Cleveland Open Shelf p135 N '30

"Because one of the outstanding stories in this collection is Laurence Housman's 'Chinese Fairy Tale,' 'A Baker's Dozen' naturally comes to mind in connection with 'The Cat Who Went to Heaven.' The other stories in the collection are notable for other than idealistic appeal. There are humor, fantasy, realism, and a touch of horror in the stories."
+ Nation 131:556 N 19 '30 120w

"Miss Davis has selected material of distinction and with a wide range of interest. Boys and girls will enjoy reading the book, and the storyteller will at once recognize the dramatic possibilities and intrinsic value of the stories. A really important addition to collections planned for story-telling. The decorative headings for each story have humor and appropriateness." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p33 N 30 '30 120w

"There are thirteen strong, varied stories ready to her hand. For children's own reading the book is bound to be successful. But I should like to emphasize its pleasure and value for those parents who save time each day for reading aloud." B. E. Mahony
+ Sat R of Lit 7:402 N 29 '30 1050w

DAVIS, MRS MARY LEE (CADWELL). Uncle Sam's attic; the intimate story of Alaska. 402p il $3.50 Wilde

917.98 Alaska 30-26954

Modern Alaska—travel routes, coast towns, the Yukon River, the heart of the country, the far north, the summer climate, the Eskimos, reindeer, furs, fisheries, pastures, the social arctic circle, education, transportation, communication, and aviation—described with color and enthusiasm by a resident and "sour dough," or pioneer.

Booklist 27:99 N '30
Reviewed by C. L. Skinner
Books p18 O 19 '30 400w
Boston Transcript p1 Jl 19 '30 1150w

"The author acknowledges her inability to do justice to Alaskan scenery, and yet, save only in a few places where she has attempted a too flowery descriptive style, she has given many fine word pictures of a great country teeming with beauty and, yes, with life. In spots there is fine drama woven into the pages of this book, and a man must be anemic, indeed, who could read the story of Amundsen's arrival in the little town of Eagle and not feel that indescribable something which sends shivers up one's spine." F. L. Minnigerode

+ N Y Times p4 S 21 '30 650w

"Contains a great deal of information, historical and descriptive, about that northwestern territory, which should be of interest to Americans everywhere. It is not very well written, but it is interesting nevertheless." W. R. Brooks
+ — Outlook 155:507 Jl 30 '30 70w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:91 D '30
St Louis 28:271 N '30

DAVIS, MRS MARY MONTAGUE. Betty Bradford, engineer. 244p il $1.75 Macmillan 30-14390

Betty Bradford, niece of a famous western engineer, was educated in an eastern finishing school. A summer in her uncle's western camp in the shadow of Mount Shasta made Betty determine to become an engineer, in order to help her beloved uncle. And tho there were some misunderstandings about definitions, she became in time Betty Bradford, engineer.

"The style is lively and the ideas wholesome, and there is an undercurrent of suggestion as to what a sophisticated Eastern education is for and what uses may be made of it. A good deal of real enlightenment for Eastern girls lies between the covers, and a dash of romance and adventure are not forgotten." M. C. Dodd
+ Sat R of Lit 7:207 O 11 '30 180w

"An exciting story as well as an absorbing study of unusual characters."
+ Springf'd Republican p5e Ag 3 '30 100w

DAVIS, MICHAEL MARKS, and JARRETT, MARY CROMWELL. Health inventory of New York city; a study of the volume and distribution of health service in the five boroughs. (Study 1 of the Research bureau of the Welfare council) 367p $2 Welfare council of New York city, 151 5th Av., N.Y.
352.4 New York (city)—Sanitary affairs. Health surveys 30-951

"The research department of the Welfare Council of New York City presents as its first comprehensive study a listing, analysis, and evaluation of health services in the five boroughs. The report covers both public and private agencies in the fields of treatment and prevention of disease. While its greatest value will obviously be to those immediately concerned with the situation in New York, this document will be useful for comparative purposes to citizens and administrators in other cities. It is also a contribution to the general literature of social technology."—Am J Soc

Am J Soc 36:169 Jl '30 150w

"The authors have interpreted a vast amount of quantitative data with strict differentiation of fact and opinion." C. R. Rorem
Ann Am Acad 149:200 My '30 280w

DAVIS, ROBERT HOBART. On home soil with Bob Davis. 314p $2 Appleton
814 30-25270

Sixty-odd of the tales in this book were "collected along the highways" by the author on an automobile trip from "New York City, down the Atlantic coast, thru the southern and southwestern states, up the Pacific coast, into the northern states, thru New England and back to Manhattan." Reprinted from the New York Sun.

"From Pennsylvania to the Gulf, up the west coast, through the middle states to Manhattan, the famous editor pursues his theory that every man has a story. Otto Kahn and the negress who once saw 'Abraham Saint Lincoln', the Texas oil-driller and Casey Jones furnish him with the brightest kind of local color and star-spangled anecdote. This is a good guide to what America likes to think about itself."
+ Bookm 72:xv O '30 100w

"Bob Davis has the born knack of the story-teller, and so all his little narratives are presented with skill and dramatic effect. They include the widest variety of people and incidents and scenes."
+ N Y Times p23 O 12 '30 230w

DAVIS, WARREN JEFFERSON. Air conquest. 233p il pa $3 Parker, Stone
629.13 Aeronautics 30-26955

"An account of man's conquest of the air and development of air transport. . . Mr. Davis sounds a stirring tocsin for the awakening of the United States to its opportunities in the air. He predicts, and has figures to lend justification to his prediction, a dominant position in air transport, both by airplane and by dirigible, for America."—N Y Times

Booklist 27:95 N '30

"It is weakened by reiteration—there is an astonishing amount of vexatious repetition in a volume which received the Aeronautical Publication Award for 1930—but the book remains the fruit of an evidently sincere conviction, based upon wide observation at first hand, and conveys a message of real interest and not a little inspiration." R. M. Cleveland
+ — N Y Times p3 Je 8 '30 550w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:85 D '30
St Louis 28:211 S '30

DAVIS, WARREN JEFFERSON. Radio law. 364,40p $5 Parker, Stone
384.5 Radio laws and regulations 30-5706

Contents: The trend of radio; European progress in control; The radio act of 1927 (text and comments); State and municipal regulation; Copyright and radio; Libel and slander; The Washington conference of 1927, with text of the code; Results of the North American radio conference and the 1929 Conference at Prague; Procedure before the Federal radio commission.

"The writer carries the review of the subject well into 1929. He has done ably with the scant material to work with at the time and though perhaps he has not considered all available data, he has furnished another guidepost which should be valuable to those who are studying the subject." Philbrick McCoy
+ Ann Am Acad 149:211 My '30 220w

"The book's emphasis throughout is on the public law problems, rather than on the legal problems which are constantly presenting themselves to the broadcaster. . . The radio broadcasting industry has already developed to an extent sufficient to warrant a treatise devoted primarily to the legal problems arising in the conduct of the business. . . The volume under review barely touches on them." R. F. Colin
Columbia Law R 30:429 Mr '30 600w
N Y New Tech Bks 15:9 Ja '30
St Louis 28:211 S '30

DAVIS, WILLIAM STEARNS. Life in Elizabethan days; a picture of a typical English community at the end of the sixteenth century. 376p il $3.50 Harper
914.2 England—Social life and customs
30-28572

The author takes an imaginary person, Sir Walter Hollydean of Boroughport, and around this central figure and his intimates weaves a picture of the typical modes, manners and customs of an English community in the time of Queen Elizabeth.

Booklist 27:150 D '30

DAVIS, W. S.—Continued

"With the same clarity, simplicity and scholarly thoroughness which made his earlier book [Life on a Mediæval Barony] memorable, Mr. Davis has investigated the social life of an English community of the sixteenth century. The present volume, although its results reflect less obvious credit upon the author, has been a far larger labor. Mr. Davis has given us here a cross section of a social organization infinitely more complex and more fluid than the mediæval barony." Margaret Wallace

+ Bookm 72:335 N '30 500w

"Mr. Davis's reading has been wide; his selection of characteristic incidents, settings and customs is happy, and his book is calculated to convey pleasantly much information to those for whom these subjects have not been staled by overmuch repetition of late. Unfortunately his scholarship is not impeccable. He gives, for instance, an entirely false idea of the Elizabethan conception of fairies; he relates to St. John's Day a superstition connected with St. Mark's, and he identifies the King's Evil with epilepsy, not scrofula."

+ — Books p10 N 23 '30 280w

Reviewed by Rosalind Ivan

N Y Times p14 N 2 '30 500w

"Davis describes the everyday life of the latter part of the sixteenth century as if it were being lived by the people just across the river. He imagines a typical household at Hollydean Hall. It is such as might have been at Warwick Castle, or Charlcotte Hall, where Shakespeare trespassed for deer. Thus Davis is able to describe life from top to bottom—from the quality to the most humble villager." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p13 O 16 '30 500w

"Nicely written and generally accurate account of the life in an English village from hall to cottage. Exception might be taken to the unnecessarily low standard of teaching described in the grammar school, since we know that Latin dialogues were learnt by heart at a very early stage, and the existence of a local printing press in the time of Martin Marprelate is clearly impossible. As a whole the book is more suitable for the American children for whom it is written than for English readers."

+ — Sat R 150:804 D 13 '30 180w

DAVISON, RONALD CONWAY. Unemployed; old policies and new. 273p $4 (10s 6d) Longmans

331.137 Unemployed—Great Britain. Insurance, Unemployment [29-4880]

"Mr Davison, with entire freedom from party bias, approaches his task by tracing historically the changing attitudes of English public opinion towards unemployment and the corresponding development of the practical efforts for dealing with workless people. Though ranging back over four centuries for comparison, his aim rightly requires him to fill the bulk of his work with the story of recent years, since the passing of the Unemployed Workmen's Act in 1905. Outwardly the book makes no pretension to scientific exhaustiveness, yet for this period it turns out to be as searching as it is readable."—Times [London] Lit Sup

---

Reviewed by M. R. Carroll

Am Econ R 20:755 D '30 380w

"Here in a simple, straightforward account the reader may gain an understanding of nearly a score of post-war methods of dealing with unemployment in Great Britain, their interrelations and their significance. Mr. Davison not only describes but also evaluates. This book is strongly recommended to students, social workers, employers, and lawmakers." S. A. Queen

+ Am J Soc 35:674 Ja '30 350w

"His book is excellent. It embodies an admirable survey of ways and methods of dealing with unemployment both before and since the war. And perhaps its most valuable feature is its attempt to analyse the composition of the mass of the unemployed. The emphasis which Mr. Davison lays on training and other restorative methods, and on improving the quality of adolescent employment, is of the greatest value."

+ New Statesman 32:768 Mr 23 '29 800w

St Louis 28:205 S '30

Sat R 147:464 Ap 6 '29 1350w

"At last we have a thoroughly well-informed and entirely dispassionate survey of the subject. He is not concerned to advertise panaceas, but, rather, to show that the malady is as varied and complex as human nature itself and must be treated accordingly."

+ Spec 142:395 Mr 9 '29 1000w

"Mr. Davison's The Unemployed and Henry Clay's recently published The Post-War Unemployment Problem are, in the judgment of this reviewer, the most important books that have appeared on this subject since the publication in 1909 of Sir William Beveridge's Unemployment, a Problem of Industry." Leo Wolman

+ Survey 63:487 Ja 15 '30 420w

"The student who knows where to lay his hand on all the diversified evidence may find here little that is new to him, but that hardly makes less valuable a volume which brings together so much material and presents it so fairly and constructively."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p251 Mr 28 '29 1050w

DAVISON, RONALD CONWAY. What's wrong
2 with unemployment insurance. 73p pa $1 (2s 6d) Longmans

331.25 Insurance, Unemployment [30-19955]

"This volume condenses into brief and readable form the results of long experience with the British system, carefully analyzed."—Am Econ R

Reviewed by M. R. Carroll

Am Econ R 20:755 D '30 280w

"Mr. Davison has at any rate the courage not only to denounce what is wrong, but also to prescribe what he believes to be at least in part a remedy. His criticisms of things as they are are broadly sound; but his remedy is a highly controversial matter."

+ — New Statesman 35:658 Ag 30 '30 850w

St Louis 28:290 D '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p631 Jl 31 '30 50w

DAWSON, CARL ADDINGTON, and GETTYS, WARNER ENSIGN. Introduction to sociology. 866p il $4.50 Ronald

301 Sociology 29-20586

"Though called an introduction, the book is a rather extended statement of fundamental sociological principles. A feature of the book is the emphasis and detailed treatment given to the ecological processes involved in the patterns of distribution of human beings and social institutions. The authors use a large amount of case material, that is, concretely described social situations; and the serviceability of their book is increased thereby. Most of these examples describe phases of urban life, and many of them relate to economic activities."—Am Econ R

"A valuable addition to the available sociology texts." M. G. Smith

+ Am Econ R 20:85 Mr '30 180w

"In a decade characterized by the rapid succession of new textbooks for introductory college courses in sociology, Dawson and Gettys' Introduction to Sociology stands out as a book of very unusual merit. No textbook in sociology published up to now combines so successfully the desirable qualities of content, organization, comprehensiveness of scope, with a clear and interesting style." F. N. House

+ Am J Soc 35:839 Mr '30 750w

"The chief value of the book seems to the reviewer to consist in the assemblage in Part II of some well selected excerpts from recent sociological studies of regional culture patterns, ecological processes, and certain mechanisms of social interaction. The book makes this material available to students with limited library facilities. By comparison with Park and Burgess' Introduction to the Science of Sociology (1921) the book adds nothing to our understanding of the subject matter of sociology." F. S. Chapin

Ann Am Acad 149:216 My '30 550w

Boston Transcript p7 N 13 '29 550w

DAWSON, CONINGSBY WILLIAM. Fugitives from passion. 373p $2 Doubleday, Doran

In the Canadian backwoods Gordon Fithian and his childhood sweetheart, Gay, grew up together and pledged their faith. Then the war came, to claim Gordon's services, while Gay went to live with her titled relatives in England. Gordon remained true to his ideal, while Gay, capricious by nature and spoiled by luxury, married the officer of whom her guardians approved. Subsequently she realized that she could never love anyone but Gordon, and following the death of her husband, the life-long lovers were united.

Bookm 71:ix Ag '30 100w

"Mr. Dawson is still in flight when the last word is reached. He never really plumbs the poetic depths of his story."

— Books p13 Je 22 '30 300w

"Among the many novels of the war recently published, there have been very few which have given us a truer vision of those four years which will never be forgotten by those who lived through them. . . Poignantly appealing, intensely dramatic, yet simple and true to life is this story of Gordon and Gay Dolores, fugitives from the passion which they regarded with doubt and misgiving, yet reaching each other at last by a strange journey, and by a way they knew not." G. B.

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 7 '30 950w

N Y Times p8 Ap 27 '30 420w

Times [London] Lit Sup p497 Je 12 '30 250w

DAWSON, ROBERT MACGREGOR. Civil service of Canada. 266p $6 (16s) Oxford

351.1 Civil service—Canada [L30-63]

"Dr. Dawson's book is divided into two unequal parts. The first and shorter portion traces the history of public appointments in Canada down to the present day. . . The second and longer portion is devoted to a description and criticism of the Canadian civil service system as it now operates. The author deplores the rigidity of the existing arrangements and intimates that the civil service commission is performing its task in a too narrow spirit."—Am Hist R

"The author has given us an excellent monograph on an interesting subject. He has gone into it thoroughly and has put his results together in workmanlike fashion. Throughout the book he displays, moreover, a keen understanding of the way in which the mind of a practical politician functions. And not the least among the merits of the book is its style, which combines fluidity with vigor and flavors well-reasoned argument with occasional touches of satire and humor." W. B. Munro

+ Am Hist R 35:932 Jl '30 500w

Times [London] Lit Sup p18 Ja 9 '30 1120w

DAY, OMAR H., and VINCENT, TERENCE. Miniature aircraft; how to make and how to fly them. 86p il pa 80c Manual arts press

629.18 Airplanes—Models 29-21898

"A manual for use in the club, school, or home, containing practical working directions for making and flying model aircraft. Rules for contests and tournaments are included."—Cleveland Open Shelf

Booklist 26:400 Jl '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p91 Je '30

Pratt p18 autumn '30

St Louis 28:137 My '30

DEANE, ANTHONY CHARLES. How to understand the Gospels. 212p $1.50 Harper [2s 6d Hodder]

226 Bible. New Testament—Gospels 29-21931

"A simple yet scholarly account of the growth of the Gospel narratives. It begins by describing the conditions in which they had their origin, and the sources from which they were derived. Each Gospel in turn is considered, its special features being described in terms which enable the general reader to attain a sound knowledge of the general results of modern research."—Times [London] Lit Sup

Christian Century 47:1496 D 3 '30 50w

"For an intelligent understanding of the Gospels there is probably no better book than this little volume for popular use. The author is entirely up to date, his brief outlines of the Gospels throw new light on many points, and he attempts to present fairly the various theories of the critics." W. L. C.

+ Churchman 141:16 Ja 11 '30 100w

"A popular and not very penetrating rehearsal of the elementary facts about the four Gospels. . . The tone of the book is extremely—perhaps excessively is not too strong a word—conservative." M. S. Enslin

Crozer Q 7:143 Ja '30 200w

"Here is a very readable popular statement of modern English critical opinion regarding the origins of the New Testament gospels. The views represented are in the main those of Canon Streeter, but with a somewhat stronger leaning toward traditional opinions regarding the Fourth Gospel. Such attempts to mediate between the research scholar and the general reader deserve high commendation."

+ J Religion 10:156 Ja '30 70w

"The fruits of wide reading are here set out with the care and skill of one who has learned how to hold the attention of readers who have neither time nor opportunity for reading more technical books. . . Though small in compass, this little work will repay attention, and help readers to believe that they are justified in accepting the Gospels as historical documents of the highest value."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1007 N 28 '29 230w

DEARLE, NORMAN BURRELL. Economic chronicle of the Great war for Great Britain and Ireland, 1914-1919; with a supplement dealing briefly with the years 1920, 1921 and 1922. (Carnegie endowment for int. peace. Division of economics and hist. Economic and social hist. of the World war. British ser.) 397p $3 Yale univ. press [15s Oxford]

940.342 European war, 1914-1918—Economic aspects. European war, 1914-1918—Great Britain. Great Britain—Economic conditions 30-10162

The author chronicles, in diary form, month by month, a record of the War's economic effects in Great Britain and Ireland, covering the period from August 1914 till the end of 1922.

Books p17 My 4 '30 160w

Current Hist 31:829 Ja '30 80w

"This volume must have involved enormous labour, and its value is unquestionable; but the strictly chronological arrangement makes it a very laborious matter to trace, separately, developments in any special field."

+ — Nation and Ath 46:410 D 14 '29 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p848 O 24 '29 120w

DE CHAIRE, SOMERSET STRUBEN. Impending storm. 137p $1.50 Smith, R.R. [5s Constable]

940.5 Europe—Politics. World politics
30-12126

Written by a young Englishman eighteen years old, this book sets forth, from the point of view of a generation untouched by the World war, contemporary international problems.

Bookm 72:v S '30 250w

"His viewpoint is necessarily a youthful one, but nevertheless is keen, discriminating, and sensible. The style is simple and appealing, being replete with colorings from travels and from personal interviews with celebrities." R. K. M.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ag 2 '30 300w

Current Hist 33:xxiv D '30 150w

Reviewed by R. P. F. Strachey

Nation and Ath 47:538 Jl 26 '30 270w

"This book is an essay on international politics by a youth of eighteen just going up to Balliol. And to such, a good deal may be forgiven; in fact almost everything, except the writing of books on politics. The author is unembarrassed in his declarations: 'I am very young and inexperienced. I admit it. I am eighteen years old.' What is serious in the book is that it offers us as the remedy for our political ills a great new war. . . Perhaps we need hardly say that the actual mistakes of the book are on as generous a scale as the impending war."

— New Statesman 35:126 My 3 '30 620w

Reviewed by John Carter

Outlook 155:108 My 21 '30 150w

"Mr. de Chaire is rather too easily impressed by the things he has seen and the people he has met as contrasted with what he has merely read about, and is, therefore, too ready to conclude that the side of the question visible to him is the only side worth notice. On the other hand he has seen significant things and most important people. What is more, he knows how to arrange his ideas clearly, and how to bring the proper touch of imagination to their development." H. S.

— + Sat R 149:427 Ap 5 '30 400w

"The author, an eighteen-year-old, does not lay claim to more than a little learning, but one would have thought that a firm that has so long been associated with publications of the League of Nations, would have realized what a dangerous thing they were sending out into the world in publishing such a book. No one would deny that there are any number of unsolved problems in Europe and the East, or that the dynamite is there ready to explode, but a casual selection of the black spots by one who admits himself that he has not made 'a deep personal research of international problems' is merely a disservice to humanity."

— Spec 145:472 O 4 '30 150w

"The weakness of his book is that, while it effectively sets out the conditions making for war, it does less than justice to those making for peace. . . Mr. de Chaire's fluent pen sometimes runs away with him and he is too ready to consider only one side of a question, but what he has written deserves the attention of his seniors."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p374 My 1 '30 250w

DECKER, GEORGE C. Bows and arrows for boys. 48p il pa 75c Bruce pub.

799.32 Archery
30-12668

Directions for making bows and arrows at moderate cost, with chapters on shooting, accessories, and suggestions for the organization of an archery club.

Booklist 26:400 Jl '30

Chicago Daily Tribune p14 N 22 '30 100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p137 N '30

St Louis 28:220 S '30

DEEPING, WARWICK. Exile. 330p $2.50 Knopf [7s 6d Cassell]
30-9742

Billy Brown, an English girl, comes to Tindaro, an Italian resort, to assist Miss Julia Lord in her English library and tea shop. Oscar Slade, a cynical novelist who has a rather unsavory reputation in the colony, pursues Billy, and they become engaged. Then Lotta, Slade's jealous Italian housekeeper and ex-mistress, kills him. Billy sensibly recovers from the shock of the sordid affair; and later, when Thomas Isherwood, a young architect whose ill-health has undermined his ambition and success, appears on the scene and falls in love with her, she courageously undertakes his regeneration and regains her own faith in mankind.

Booklist 26:356 Je '30

Books p14 Je 8 '30 400w

Cleveland Open Shelf p110 Jl '30

New Statesman 34:741 Mr 15 '30 50w

"Mr. Deeping seems to me to be too obviously a builder. He uses sentences and paragraphs like bricks, each one stuck to its fellow with a smear of plaster, with never the hint of that internal singing rhythm, that intensity of vision and purpose that lifts a theme into significance. Mr. Deeping, like so many novelists, does not tell a story; he builds it." Edwin Seaver

— N Y Evening Post p7s Mr 1 '30 280w

"Mr. Deeping's characterizations are simple and effective. He works very much to formula, without waste motion and without subtlety."

N Y Times p19 Mr 2 '30 520w

"Mr. Deeping has a facile and agreeable style, a clear if somewhat simple train of thought, and a whimsical almost cartoonlike sense of character. The gloomier and brainier and truer novelists might emulate him to advantage in the rounded and clarified trend of his writing." Marie Luhrs

+ N Y World p11m Ap 6 '30 180w

"Exile again displays the qualities which have won the author such a great and loyal public."

+ Outlook 154:467 Mr 19 '30 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:31 Ap '30

Pratt p39 summer '30

"Mr. Deeping's gifts are great and well-known, and that 'Exile' is better written than the run of novels goes without saying. But in this book the author has cut himself off from the full exercise of some of his powers. Then Anglo-Italian degenerates are not the sort of characters he has drawn elsewhere so well and affectionately. . . 'Sorrel and Son,' Mr. Deeping's first successful book, remains his best."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:773 Mr 1 '30 430w

"There is plenty of incident and interest in the story which is written with the author's usual briskness, but one feels that even so sensible and fastidious a young woman as Barbara would not have washed her hands of the man she loved quite so speedily, in spite of all that she heard about him. Apart from this rather jarring episode the book is very readable."

+ — Spec 144:792 My 10 '30 150w

"Mr. Deeping's juxtaposition of Billy and Julia is a cleverly-contrived piece of work."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p252 Mr 20 '30 180w

DEEPING, WARWICK. Stories of love, courage and compassion. 821p $3 Knopf 30-27115

An omnibus volume in which Warwick Deeping has gathered the best of his shorter fiction. Contains three novelettes: The pool of the satyr; Six months to live; Contraband; and forty-eight short stories.

Booklist 27:164 D '30

"There is no doubt that out of Mr. Deeping's vast collection of short stories many of them will only pass muster in the crowd. The better ones carry the weight of the worst and fortunately outnumber them. Mr. Deeping has an unambitious manner and forbears to superimpose a superior style upon inferior matter, and he appears to enjoy telling stories."

+ — N Y Times p26 N 30 '30 600w

DEERING, MRS IVAH EVERETT. Creative home; with an introd. by Joseph Lee. 180p il $1.50 Smith, R.R.

649.5 Play. Children 30-23088

A book for parents upon how to develop the native powers of children thru creative play. Mrs Deering, a child psychologist, has had wide experience in club and playground work.

"Discounting Mrs. Deering's rhapsodizing in dealing with a subject which may easily inspire over-enthusiasm, there yet remains a book of sound advice to parents. A bibliography for further reading on the subject is appended."

+ Bookm 72:xv D '30 80w

"Certainly mothers will be thankful for these interesting and valuable suggestions which are put in a charming, readable and easily understood way."

+ Boston Transcript p2 N 1 '30 180w

"Mrs. Deering writes very earnestly, but also very simply, and any intelligent parent who wants the help she offers can read her book understandingly. There are few parents who cannot get from it stimulus, suggestion and practical aid, while there are many for whom it would open a wide door upon a whole great new field of ideas as to parental responsibilities and possibilities."

+ N Y Times p28 S 21 '30 250w

DE FOREST, CHARLES MILLS. How old am I financially? A life guide in personal economics with record tables. 115,54p il $3 Am. provident soc., inc., 51 Madison av, N.Y.

331.84 Saving and thrift 30-6986

"Argues eloquently for systematic saving and for the three 'M.R.'s'—minimum, middling, and master reserves, with full schedules showing deposits and interest for each from 18 to 65 years of age."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Booklist 27:12 S '30
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:40 My '30
St Louis 28:202 S '30

DEITRICK, MRS JAQUELIN. Parade ground. 318p $1 Doubleday, Doran

30-23089

The community of officers and their wives of Fort Brian coast artillery forms the social background to the novel. Janet, daughter of Captain Custis, grows up in this atmosphere, and young officers fall in love with her. She breaks off with Tommy and marries Dickie after a drunken New Year's party. Because they are constantly broke—and for other reasons—the young people are not happy. Janet goes to New York to be free. She is even more unhappy, gets tight more often, and is unfaithful to Dickie. But she continues to love him and, seeing tragedy in the lives of many other young couples, goes back to Dickie to start all over again.

"The book itself has merits. It is an interesting and perhaps accurate picture of American army life. It faithfully records the speech and I suspect the attitudes of people who are slightly subnormal mentally. But it is over long; its account of the heroine's alcoholic and amatory experiences soon grows monotonous; and when it comes to deal with actual human emotions it is naïve when not positively childish. The author has an undisciplined talent which may amount to something." Guy Holt

— + Bookm 72:339 N '30 120w

"Miss Deitrick tells of the Blythes and several other untrammeled couples in a breathless, unrestrained manner not suitable to her material. Miss Deitrick's characters make no claim to spiritual subtlety. They carry on in the key of C, in four-four time, when sober."

Books p17 O 5 '30 120w

"Miss Deitrick's novel is a thick slice of life heavily buttered with impressionistic dabs of actuality." Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 30 '30 150w

"As a young woman's first novel 'Parade Ground' has promise. It is vigorous and straightforward, uncompromising and almost masculine in treatment, and the dialogue, which composes the greater part of the book, is often excellent. The story is marred by overdetailed treatment of repetitious incidents. Not a pleasant novel, but interesting for what it has to say about certain young people, army life and the drinking question."

+ — N Y Times p22 S 14 '30 320w

DEKOBRA, MAURICE. Perfumed tigers; adventures in the land of the maharajahs; tr. from the French by Neal Wainwright. 300p il $3.50 Brewer

915.4 India—Description and travel. India—Social life and customs 30-23426

From an unbiased viewpoint, and with an eye to the humorous situation, Maurice Dekobra, novelist, has written this travel book on India. In anecdotal fashion, he describes native sights, characters and customs, and the life of Englishmen in India.

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice

Bookm 72:xviii O '30 500w

"Minor inaccuracies are more numerous to the page than in any book I recall having read for years, most of them attributable to the author, some to the translator. But the book is too trivial for these to matter much. The best part of the volume lies in the chapters on the seldom visited Kingdom of Nepal. Otherwise the interest of the book is chiefly in its revelation of M. Dekobra, as to what repels, pleases, or amuses him. Those who find an afternoon's solace in one of his lissome novels might as well read this too. It has no plot, but they will like it just as well." W. N. Brown

— Books p20 O 26 '30 450w

"'Perfumed Tigers' is indeed diverse in moods and in environments. It also is delightfully Continental in its sophistication. It is full of chuckles, full of engrossing reading, and it has its spicy tidbits which have the tang so rightly associated with the French." F. B. B.

+ Boston Transcript p3 S 24 '30 550w

"Genuinely entertaining and informative and readable. India is a big place and M. Dekobra does not attempt to solve its problems or put it in its place for us. He tells us merely what he observed or what he heard, and he tells these things with wit, charm and vividness." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p4d O 4 '30 80w

DEKOBRA, MAURICE. Sphinx has spoken; tr. [2] from the French by Metcalfe Wood. 274p $2 Brewer [7s 6d Laurie]

30-32140

Capt. Roberts and Lieut. Nicholson, British officers stationed in India, are rivals for the love of Alba, and enemies until in a battle against Indian rebels Roberts saves Nicholson's life. Thence the pact of friendship between the two men becomes stronger than their former regard for Alba—and she, knowing this, exacts the revenge of a beautiful woman scorned.

Bookm 72:ix D '30 50w

"Here we have M. Dekobra once again sprinkling the germs of superficial naughtiness upon a sentimental tale of amour. This time he has restrained his comedic talent most cruelly the while he warbles of honor, love and money among a characteristically exotic group. . . The narrative is colorfully set in time and space,

DEKOBRA, MAURICE—Continued
having its full complement of Zara Kehls, Mirazis, jirgahs, spin-giris, subadars and mulas."

Books p38 D 7 '30 150w

"Drug-store, Hollywood literature." E. S.

N Y Evening Post p4d D 13 '30 30w

DE KOVEN, ANNA (FARWELL) (MRS REGINALD DE KOVEN). Horace Walpole and Madame du Deffand; an eighteenth century friendship. 199p il $3 (10s 6d) Appleton

B or 92 Walpole, Horace, 4th earl of Orford. Du Deffand de La Lande, Marie Anne (de Vichy Chamrond) marquise 29-20135

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:157 Ja '30

Reviewed by Norah Meade

Bookm 70:685 F '30 450w

Nation and Ath 46:490 Ja 4 '30 650w

St Louis 28:81 Mr '30

"It would, indeed, be a difficult task to add anything very new to a story which has been told and retold so often. But it is certainly a good story, even a great story, and those who do not already know it will find Mr. de Koven's book of great interest."

+ Spec 143:881 D 7 '29 650w

DELAFIELD, E. M., pseud. See De La Pasture, E. E. M.

DE LA MARE, WALTER JOHN. Desert islands and Robinson Crusoe. 299p $4 Farrar [21s Faber]

823 Defoe, Daniel. Islands. Fiction—History and criticism 30-13153

Robinson Crusoe, the prince and founder of desert island romance, is Mr de la Mare's central interest in this discursive volume on the desert island in literature. That the island is symbolic of man's love of adventure and longing to escape is shown by the author's comments and his selections from island stories, sketches of the lives of castaways, and the adventures of explorers, real and imaginary, such as Dampier, Defoe, R. L. Stevenson, Jules Verne and Edgar Allan Poe.

Booklist 27:148 D '30

Reviewed by C. J. Finger

Books p3 S 21 '30 950w

"It is that very recipe of unconsidered trifles which lends the work its attractive quality and lures the reader on to fresh aspects of adventure."

+ Christian Science Monitor p5 S 6 '30 300w

"The Voyage of a Hulk, Mr. De la Mare calls his book, laden with an unconscionable Cargo of Odds and Ends, much of it borrowed from other Vessels. But a great deal of its treasure is his own 'very soft pure gold,' and as to the rest, it is of his own digging and lading, and floats under the flag of his intent." Adrian Bell

+ Nation and Ath 47:292 My 31 '30 650w

"Before the buccaneers knew Dead Man's Cove and Three Palm Beach, long ages before Selkirk was born, the sirens were there. There they must be still, it seems. Mr. De la Mare heard them and paid attention, with an ear better attuned to their far call than ours. But he has not run up the skull and cross-bones over his claim; it was not likely he would do that; his flag is a signal for us to meet him there, if ever we had an acquaintance with Robinson Crusoe. . . It was lucky for us that Mr. De la Mare heard the sirens first; the desert islands are his. His book must go on the shelf, at once native there, where we find the selected travel stuff." H. M. Tomlinson

+ New Statesman 35:sup viii My 10 '30 1150w

Reviewed by Percy Hutchison

N Y Times p2 S 28 '30 1300w

Reviewed by Harry Salpeter

N Y World p3e O 12 '30 600w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:89 D '30

St Louis 28:298 D '30

"Who but Mr. De la Mare should have written of islands? It was his calling by nature and name; and as poets customarily write good prose and necessarily have rich imagination, does it not follow that 'Desert Islands' is a rich book? To suck the last drop from this sugar cane, readers must have green memories of their childhood, or refresh themselves in 'The Life and Strange, Surprizing Adventures of Robinson Crusoe, of York, Mariner.'" Geoffrey Grigson

+ Sat R 149:794 Je 21 '30 1150w

"Desert Islands is far from being a mere anthology, and it is certainly much more enchanting than a volume of formal literary criticism could be. Though perhaps slightly irritated at first by its inconsequence, reading on one begins to fall under the spell, by way of Mr. De la Mare's fine sinuous prose and fanciful comments, of those distant places, those buccaneers' islands and remote wave-washed ocean rocks, by which he himself is so strongly fascinated."

+ Spec 144:785 My 10 '30 400w

Times [London] Lit Sup p389 My 8 '30 1350w

DE LA MARE, WALTER JOHN. Poems for children. 229p $2.50 Holt [7s 6d Constable]

821 30-30190

A selection from the author's previously published poems for children, with the addition of some new ones. There is a charming introduction by the author.

"Should have a place in every household as the first signpost in twentieth-century exploration of the child's mind." A. C. Moore

+ Atlantic Bookshelf p50 D '30 40w

Booklist 27:212 Ja '31

"The spiritually fed child ought by all means to know Walter de la Mare, who lives and breathes in the tradition of Shakespeare, Blake, Wordsworth and Coleridge. The publishers have made it easy to know De la Mare's work by bringing out in a beautiful format a collection, with some poems not previously printed, chosen for the purpose by the author."

+ Bookm 72:vii D '30 120w

"I like Mr. de la Mare's poems because they are not always limpid, clear, innocent, pleasant. In fact, I had as soon they were more intricate, irresponsible and appalling than they are. . . The child is, of course, not used to effort, and may not like it at first. Hence he may seem to prefer mediocrity and saccharinity to high quality. But subject him to quality in reasonable doses and he will come to like it. Also, he will learn to distinguish it. And a good way to begin is to read Mr. de la Mare's poems with him." F. E. Hill

+ Books p12 N 16 '30 800w

Boston Transcript p1 N 12 '30 120w

"It is a pity that Miss Lathrop could not also have provided Walter de la Mare's 'Poems for Children' with illustrations worthy of the exquisite verse which he has chosen from 'Peacock Pie' and several of his earlier books. Here are many old favorites such as 'Silver,' 'Araby,' 'Miss T,' also others from the less familiar 'Flora' and several unpublished heretofore." Rachel Field

+ N Y Evening Post p7d N 15 '30 120w

"When a child is 10 years old no better volume could be put into his hands and the chances are he will never outgrow it. Words and images which he does not consciously understand will nevertheless convey a message to him." A. T. Eaton

+ N Y Times p45 D 7 '30 250w

"The melodies of Walter de la Mare almost defy analysis. He introduced into English verse a new combination of slight and subtle variations that served to make his own accent unmistakable. And his infinitely elusive 'otherwhereness' almost leads one to believe that there are indeed other regions beyond this present scene. He, at least, is a native of more than England or any country in a peculiar sense that touches Blake at one end of the scale and the Mother Goose immortals at the other."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:342 N 15 '30 380w

Spec 145:sup903 D 6 '30 250w

"The book is not only for children. Their elders may buy it, first for the introduction, which begins as an apology for the title: 'It appears to take far too much for granted; as would, say, "Hymns for Cherubs" or "Wisdom for the Wise." ' From this beginning Mr. de la Mare extends his scope so easily and gently that we may be surprised at the end to find that we have been considering the nature of poetry, of children, and even of 'this earthly existence' itself."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p973 N 20 '30 250w

DELANY, SELDEN PEABODY. Why Rome. 233p $2.50 Dial press

282 Roman Catholic church—Doctrinal and controversial works 30-25641

"Dr. Delany's book narrates the stages that have led up to his acceptance of the Roman position. . . The first half of his book deals entirely with the causes of his dissatisfaction with the Anglican Church."—Living Church

"There is an engaging, and one might say, a disarming frankness about this self-revealing book. Though reminiscent of Newman's Apologia it has no trace of the extreme sensitiveness that caused Newman to shed scalding tears as he wrote. . . Our author pursues his search remorselessly, with calm deliberation and without the slightest trace of emotional influence. Unlike books of its kind this is pervaded by a spirit of genial humor which should prove an attraction for the average reader." J. H. M.

+ Cath World 132:369 D '30 1000w

Reviewed by W. E. Garrison

Christian Century 47:1562 D 17 '30 750w

Reviewed by D. D. Zuver

Churchman p16 N 1 '30 160w

"Dr. Delany's book is the usual Roman propaganda. Why every Anglican going to Rome immediately forgets the distinction between the Roman primacy, which is primitive and would undoubtedly be accepted by the whole Church to this day if it had not been abandoned by its friends for the later and more vulnerable doctrines of the Roman supremacy and Papal infallibility, passes our comprehension. Dr. Delany undoubtedly understood that distinction once, but his book shows no gleam of his recollecting it today."

— Living Church 83:763 O 4 '30 2800w

DE LA PASTURE, EDMEE ELIZABETH MONICA (MRS A. P. DASHWOOD) (E. M. DELAFIELD, pseud.). Turn back the leaves. 329p $2.50 Harper [7s 6d Macmillan] 30-6725

The story of an English Catholic family, progressing thru every conceivable sorrow and deprivation, but holding on to their faith until the end.

For biographical sketch of the author see Boston Transcript p1 D 20 '30

"There is skilful writing in Miss Delafield's latest book, writing which is at these moments compact and even dramatic; and then there are stretches which seem to be skimped. Perhaps Miss Delafield would herself plead guilty to the latter indictment and at the same time enter the defence that she is interested not in showing the development of character but rather in painting crucial moments in the lives of the characters." Grenville Vernon

+ — Bookm 71:323 Je '30 420w

"Miss Delafield is neither polemical nor controversial. It is to be deeply regretted if her work should give offense, because she has offered plenty of evidence of her admiration for and belief in the necessity of faith, whether in religion or in anything else. Her book deals with a religious topic, but she is interested and makes her readers interested more in the reactions of certain people to a certain religion and its demands than in that religion itself; and these reactions result in unhappiness only where there is intolerance. Miss Delafield's approach is that of the artist and not the doctrinaire." C. B. Hogan

+ Books p16 Mr 30 '30 850w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 5 '30 750w

Cath World 131:628 Ag '30 350w

"Miss Delafield is one of the few established novelists whose work continues to be as good as it has ever been." L. L. Irvine

+ Nation and Ath 46:707 F 22 '30 120w

"She cannot write love-scenes, but in hate-scenes she has no living equal. She does not interest us much in the religious qualms and colourless love-affairs of the Floyds; but we greet with delight and relief the jealous bickerings of Stella's nurse and governess, and the exquisitely malicious descriptions of that quite unimportant character, Chloë Bourdillon who, being both repulsive and ridiculous, is ten times more alive than anybody else in the story. This destruction of balance begins the ruin of the book: what completes it is that towards the end Miss Delafield allows her style to become not only dry but positively desiccated. Dry wit is an excellent wine: dry melodrama is a parched and arid waste."

— + New Statesman 34:669 Mr 1 '30 450w

"Appealing story, humanly and emotionally the best she has written." F. H. M.

+ N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 19 '30 100w

"Mrs. Delafield has drawn a faithful and convincing picture of Catholic life and portrayed a drama which grows out of it soundly and naturally. Where she chiefly fails is in her characterizations. None of her people is individually real, Stella least of all."

+ — N Y Times p8 Ap 6 '30 650w

"The author has a distinct pattern in mind and in some ways her story has suffered because of her resolution to see this pattern through to the end. It is a strangely unsatisfactory story." O. M. Fuller

— N Y World p11m Ap 20 '30 320w

"The theme has possibilities which remain undeveloped because the author is too busy giving an unconvincing background of English aristocracy to take the time to develop her characters as human beings."

— Outlook 154:546 Ap 2 '30 70w

Pratt p37 autumn '30

"It is a novel full of excellent characterization and insight into human relationships; a most impressive story, and so unusual that one will remember it long after the names of the members of the Floyd family have sunk into oblivion."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1211 Jl 19 '30 600w

"Miss Delafield's malice is very enjoyable: her dialogue is extraordinarily good. . . In some respects, like a book of caricatures, Turn Back the Leaves is unsatisfying; further, being a chronicle, it suffers from the dispersal of interest over a number of characters, and, owing to the pace of the narrative, one is not allowed to linger over any one of them. They flash for a moment like the pictures in an album, and vanish as the rapid pages fly back." V. S. Pritchett

+ — Spec 144:244 F 15 '30 280w

"One of the freshest and most significant novels of the year. The basic configuration of characters and events seems extreme, but, granting the author her original conception, the reader will be impressed by the human reality which she imparts to it."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 30 '30 370w

DE LA PASTURE, E. E. M.—Continued

"Miss E. M. Delafield may have written more amusing books than Turn Back the Leaves, but she has never put better work into any of them, nor has she ever disciplined so sternly her talent for ridicule and drawn such firm, impartial and admirable portraits as in her latest novel."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p120 F 13 '30 520w

DE LA PASTURE, EDMEE ELIZABETH MONICA (MRS A. P. DASHWOOD) (E. M. DELAFIELD, pseud.). Women are like that; short stories. 312p $2.50 Harper [7s 6d Macmillan]

In these seventeen short stories Miss Delafield portrays the emotions, the whims, and the typical behavior of women—chiefly in the old game of life and love—with sympathy and humor.

"This volume is Miss Delafield at her best."
+ Bookm 72:viii N '30 100w

"If Miss Delafield's title has led you to expect a glittering generalization about women clothed in cynical fiction, you will be pleasantly disappointed. If you are tired of the sweeping statements so commonly made about either sex, you will be glad to find that here, at least, whatever. women may be like, they are not like each other. . . Those seventeen stories are light in general tone, but few of them are flippant, and none of them is harsh. Their author's observation of feminine foibles has been wide and merciless, but at the core of each of her stories there is almost invariably a moment of serious sympathy for her heroine." Garreta Busey
+ Books p12 O 12 '30 750w

Reviewed by Edith Weigle
Chicago Daily Tribune p8 D 27 '30 50w
N Y World p3e N 6 '30 80w

"Miss Delafield has always been better at small, satirically drawn character-parts than at full-length portraits of sympathetic characters; and in these short stories she can leave out sympathetic characters in a way impossible to the novel. 'The Breaking-Point' shows her at her excellent best." L. P. Hartley
+ Sat R 147:620 My 4 '29 230w

"It is the weaker side of feminine nature that inspires her most successfully. She is at her best when revealing women's little foibles, vanities, falsities, or when probing to the hidden fact or illusion of 'romance' that lurks in the heart of the apparently devoted and dutiful wife. There is a touch of malice in many of her stories; but subtle humour and sympathy are the prevailing characteristics of this delightfully readable book."
+ Spec 142:985 Je 22 '29 200w

DE LA ROCHE, MAZO. Portrait of a dog. 199p il $2.50 Little [7s 6d Macmillan]
636.78 Dogs—Legends and stories 30-25965

Story of a lively little Scotch terrier, Bunty, who was companion and friend to the author. When blindness came Bunty's pluck and spirit and joy in living were undiminished.

"In ultimate concern with pure understanding, her book has probably not been surpassed. Few readers will last through it unmoved. In its small deliberate way, this portrait is the work of a master. Observation and understanding have crowned this book. A dog lives again: his play, his temper, his love, his 'grand little body,' his spirit which transcended the blindness of his last days." David McCord
+ Atlantic Bookshelf p44 D '30 450w
Booklist 27:142 D '30

"A most unusual book—the story of Bunty, a Scotch terrier, told without sentimentality, but with warmth, tenderness and humor."
+ Bookm 72:xxiii D '30 120w

"This is a book to savor slowly, to read deliberately page by page, for this slender volume is a glowing tribute not only to Bunty but to all dogs. Yet Bunty, the particular, is never lost in the general classification. With her wistful understanding, her playful spirit, her gentleness and sympathy in time or sorrow, Argyle Bunty is a real character, well worthy of the talented pen which Mazo de la Roche wields in her behalf." Barbara Nolen
+ Books p8 N 16 '30 180w

"Miss de la Roche has not only written about a dog, but she has painted a noble and inspiriting picture of life, and the adjustments of courage which it demands. . . It is certainly the most enchanting thing that has ever been written about that—to me, at least—most amusing and most attractive of all breeds, the Scotch terrier." Fanny Butcher
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p15 O 18 '30 120w
Cleveland Open Shelf p143 N '30

" 'Portrait of a Dog' is richly sentimental. Many writers give human attributes to dogs, but in this instance we have only the writer's feelings and her description of the puppy's acts. It is to the credit of her skill as a writer that she inspires an affectionate feeling for the terrier in the reader by her prose." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p11 O 22 '30 180w

"It is difficult to convey the charming sensibility with which this book is written. It is no easy matter to present the story of a dog's life without sentimentalizing, or becoming trivial. Many have tried, and a few have succeeded. Miss de la Roche is definitely among that distinguished minority."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p989 N 20 '30 250w

DE LA RUE, SIDNEY. Land of the pepper bird; Liberia. 330p il $3.50 (15s) Putnam
916.66 Liberia—Description and travel
30-10354

A description of life in the picturesque black republic of Liberia on the west coast of Africa.

Books p12 Jl 6 '30 100w
Cleveland Open Shelf p93 Je '30

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 19 '30 100w
Sat R 149:826 Je 28 '30 480w

"His stories of native life, while more or less the commonplaces of existence of white men in the tropics, are told with a light and humorous air."
Sat R of Lit 7:180 O 4 '30 80w
Spec 145:194 Ag 9 '30 250w

"The reader will find in 'The Land of the Pepper Bird' not only the interest one expects from the 'travel' class of books, but also the variety of substantial information that results from extended personal experience."
+ Springf'd Republican p12 My 22 '30 320w

"It is evident from the fullness and variety of the information contained in it, and from the fluency with which it is imparted, that it was his pleasure as well as his business to make a thorough study of the country and its inhabitants. Mr. de la Rue provides an answer to any question likely to suggest itself to the general reader. But it needs patience to find the answer. There is no index; the chapter headings are, like the title, picturesque rather than informative; and for those who know little of Liberia it will be a drawback that Mr. de la Rue knows too much to reckon with the ignorance of other people. He does not define his terms in advance."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p446 My 29 '30 1050w

DELL, ETHEL MAY (MRS G. T. SAVAGE). Altar of honour. 408p $2 Putnam [7s 6d Hutchinson]
30-13453

Lovely Charmaine, whose adored mother has been killed in the hunting field, is neglected by her father and hated by her step-sister, Griselda. Rory Donovan, a jolly naval cadet, befriends Charmaine. Then Charmaine is packed off to London to make a good marriage. She captures Basil Conister, son of a wealthy lord, but just before the wedding Rory turns up. As a result of this triangle a sacrifice on the altar of honour has to be made.

Books p10 My 18 '30 100w
Boston Transcript p2 Mr 12 '30 150w

"The tale is spun like a gossamer web which could without difficulty be torn to shreds by a thrust of hard reality. Unless, however, such an experiment is deemed expedient, the pattern is handled expertly and cleverly enough to sustain the romantic-minded interest of the large number of readers who enjoy the novels of Ethel M. Dell. The author has added a strain of heredity and a lover to the otherwise simple and time-worn plot."
+ — N Y Times p22 F 9 '30 250w

"The semi-tragic denouement is not very convincing. Miss Dell's work has a sketchiness which has all the earmarks of hasty composition, or else it is a constitutional incapacity for verisimilitude which makes her characters seem so vapid and insignificant."
— Outlook 154:268 F 12 '30 230w

"The solution is rather less full-blooded than one would have expected from Miss Dell—indeed, the whole book is in a more subdued key than is usual with her—but the reader who does not worry too much about truths and probabilities will find much in it to entertain him."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p1060 D 12 '29 220w

DELL, FLOYD. Love in the machine age; a psychological study of the transition from patriarchal society. 428p $3.50 Farrar [12s 6d Routledge]

392 Sex. Moral conditions. Marriage 30-10157

"This book is a lucid statement of the present-day trend in sex attitudes and the adjustments which parents must make in training their children to conform to it . . . a book which attempts to reconcile parents to modern conditions so that they will cease to fight a useless battle against them. . . Mr. Dell envisages the evils of the present day as the results of an incomplete transition from attitudes suitable to our European past—which he calls patriarchal—and attitudes suitable to the modern age. Throughout the book the Freudian viewpoint is taken completely for granted."—N Y Evening Post

"The author by no means has solutions for all the various problems that confront modern society. He knows better than to pretend that he has. But he comes to grips with these problems in a wholesome, vigorous way that commands our attention and respect, and in many instances our approval. Of course, we cannot all think alike, and it would be unfortunate if we did, but at least to be capable of honestly facing a situation as frankly, as openly and as effectively as the author has done in this book means a task well performed. I cannot think of another work on mental hygiene which is its equal." W. A. White
+ Ann Am Acad 149:sup201 My '30 1500w
Booklist 27:92 N '30

"Mr. Dell has said many things that are penetrating and some things that are wise. His idealism may outrage some and make others wistful, but it should appeal to youth that is growing a little tired of being flaming or hard-boiled, and perhaps to some who are not so young but also a little tired. There are references, an index, etc. The book might have been written by a mere scholar, only it would not have been so interesting." Lorine Pruette
+ Books p3 Ap 6 '30 1350w
Boston Transcript p2 Je 4 '30 230w

"The book as a whole is as sickening as it is futile." Francis Snow
— Current Hist 32:214 My '30 220w

Reviewed by Malcolm Cowley
New Repub 62:304 Ap 30 '30 1300w

"Judging the book as the author wishes it to be judged, we can say that it is a sane, balanced, delightful plea for bringing up children so that they may be emotionally, socially and economically free to choose their own partners in love and willing and anxious to work hard enough to make their love relations permanent and secure. . . 'Love in the Machine Age' will do much to reconcile anxious and doubting parents to the new order to which they must, willy nilly, entrust their children. It is an exceedingly readable, often revealing, intelligent pleading for an ordering of human life which the author presents as having a great dignity and power of giving happiness." Margaret Mead
+ N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 5 '30 1250w

"Always an interesting writer, Mr. Floyd Dell has in the present volume embarked upon a captivating subject, and he could not well have chosen a more intriguing title. . . In short, more or less overwritten though this book appears to be, it cannot but stimulate the reader to considerable fresh thinking and reading upon his own account." H. J. Forman
+ N Y Times p11 S 28 '30 950w

"His book may be regarded as an application of the best theories developed by the last two decades of psychoanalytical research to modern living conditions in the United States." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p14 Ap 4 '30 300w

Reviewed by F. G. Seabury
Outlook 155:149 My 28 '30 150w
Sat R 150:608 N 8 '30 180w

Reviewed by F. W. Binkley
Sat R of Lit 6:1090 My 31 '30 950w
Times [London] Lit Sup p903 N 6 '30 750w

DELTEIL, JOSEPH. Once there was a man Napoleon; tr. from the French by Lewis Galantière. 190p $3 Covici

B or 92 Napoleon I, emperor of the French 30-3669

Delteil paints Napoleon in a series of detached episodes—as a child in Corsica, chasing a rainbow, as consul of Italy, in the Egyptian expedition, in the Russian campaign, and at St Helena, living over his victories. Thru all he is the man who dreamed, who had faith in his dreams and carried them out, since "for Napoleon to dream and to act were the same."

"This book may be regarded either as a hymn or a biographical rhapsody. The rich and stabbing style in which it has been composed (and which has been so splendidly translated into English by Mr. Lewis Galantière) is shot through and through with connotations that transcend mere prose. There is poetical substance here and because this is so the book may bewilder the casual reader at first. But not after he has been drawn into the swiftly moving and brightly sparkling stream of its development."
+ Bookm 71:116 Mr '30 350w

"For well over a quarter of a century, I have been reading Napoleonic literature. I hardly expected any new thrills. All the important facts are known, only the paltriest gleaning remains possible. I had not anticipated Joseph Delteil. That insolent young man has at least a touch of genius. He goes straight to essentials and with Napoleon, the essential is the legend." Albert Guerard
+ Books p4 Je 8 '30 1250w

"It is a book of bright images, quick sketches, distorted close-ups, and quick fade-outs. Indeed, it moves so quickly that it leaves more of an impression of Napoleon the grasshopper than Napoleon the man. But it is not without some nice bits. . . It is a readable book, and while it adds little to the Napoleonic history it illuminates the entire period with a gorgeous splash of color." Bellamy Partridge
+ — N Y World p10m Ja 26 '30 350w

DELTEIL, JOSEPH—Continued

"Once There Was a Man Napoleon is not a biography; it is Napoleon's career, seen through several thicknesses of theatrical gauze which blur details, glorify personages, and cast over history the unearthly light of legend. It interprets the man, and whether the interpretation is the right, or the only one, doesn't matter. It is decidedly worth reading." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:227 F 5 '30 60w

St Louis 28:147 My '30

"Without a doubt Lewis Galantiere, the translator, has done an excellent piece of work at rendering into readable English the erratic, impressionistic style of M Delteil, with its inapt, startling images. But the style and method of treating the subject are inadequate rather than 'unique,' as the publishers choose to call it."

— + Springf'd Republican p12 F 26 '30 600w

DEMAISON, ANDRE. Beasts called wild; tr. by Guy Endore. 275p il $3.50 Farrar

591.5 Animals—Legends and stories 30-25597

An intimate knowledge of animal psychology, of the moods and desires of jungle beasts is revealed in these seven tales. Numbered as his friends among those wild animals that have been tamed by the kindness of their master are Ouara, the lioness; Kho-Kho, the marabou; Poupah, the elephant; and Tan, the antelope. The book was awarded the Prix de roman by the French Academy.

Booklist 27:191 Ja '31

"Beasts Called Wild is a good book to read amid a welter of introspective and shoddy prose. The translation, by Guy Endore, is well made, with few lapses from dignified English. The illustrations by André Durenceau go far to make it a book for one's own delight and the delight of one's friends." Charles Norman

+ Bookm 72:201 O '30 200w

"'Beasts Called Wild' will be enjoyed by readers who like a brisk narrative account of the behavior of wild animals, and the imaginative sentimentality which accompanies it will undoubtedly appeal to many. Animal lovers will find plenty of passages to make the heart glow. As an epic of natural history it is not convincing. The volume is well printed. The illustrations, by André Durenceau, are modern in spirit, exquisitely executed and reproduced, but frankly grotesque in interpretation. . . Most obvious of [the author's] handicaps is probably the translator. Throughout the book numerous words and passages occur that are decidedly out of place, if the author is the student we are given to believe he is." H. E. Anthony

Books p5 S 28 '30 600w

"The book has enjoyed wide popularity in France and richly deserves to succeed in this country. The translation is a capable one and the illustrations by André Duranceau are quite striking."

+ Nation 131:630 D 3 '30 200w

"One cannot say for certain that he faithfully portrays the sensations, desires and cogitations of his elephant, his antelope, his lioness; but one can say that he has an intense emotional realization of their feelings and that he conveys his feeling with equal vividness to us. . . It is impossible to know exactly what, under given circumstances, are the thoughts of an elephant or a crocodile. But M. Demaison's interpretation of these thoughts, or, rather, waves of instinctive emotion, is at once convincing and powerful." Charles Johnston

+ N Y Times p4 O 12 '30 900w

DEMING, HORACE GROVE. In the realm of carbon: the story of organic chemistry. 365p il $3 Wiley [15s Chapman]

547 Chemistry, Organic 30-13368

"Part I contains a three-chapter discussion of atoms and molecules . . . followed by an interesting treatise on the history of organic chemistry leading up to our modern conceptions of valence. In Part II excellent summaries are given of the role of organic chemistry in the various chemical industries. Part III contains very interesting chapters on the role of bacteria, yeasts, algae, fungi, and enzymes in life and in industrial processes. The book ends with a 'clairvoyant' chapter, Looking toward the Future, in which some of the wonders yet to come are portrayed."— Ind & Eng Chem

"'In the Realm of Carbon' undoubtedly will furnish a fascinating story for the lay reader and for students not specializing in chemistry, but it will be equally interesting and useful to research chemists, research directors, and also to many college professors. The book could have been improved by a more liberal use of charts and tables." H. J. Barrett

+ — Ind & Eng Chem 22:918 Ag '30 650w

Reviewed by W. D. Bancroft

J Phys Chem 34:2125 S '30 2200w

"Prof. Deming has skirted the pitfall which has swallowed divers of his countrymen who have sought to popularise chemistry; for, although he emphasises the material achievements of organic chemistry, he is not led thereby to shut his eyes to the importance of the theoretical foundations and the historical development of the science. He has, indeed, produced a proportioned and readable story of organic chemistry." John Read

+ Nature 126:908 D 13 '30 380w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:32 Jl '30

St Louis 28:209 S '30

DEMING, THERESE (OSTERHELD) (MRS EDWIN WILLARD DEMING). Many snows ago. unp il $3 Stokes

970.1 Indians of North America 29-20979

The story of the Indians as they lived before the white man came, including tales of the Delight makers, the Pueblos, the Blackfeet, the Eskimos, and others. The illustrations are in water color and black and white.

"The pictures make a sort of glorified geography book, and I should think teachers would love to use it. There isn't quite enough story in it for the ordinary child to want to read it on its own account." Rose Fyleman

Books p8 N 10 '29 80w

"They are very, very good little braves indeed who figure in its pages, almost too good to be human,—little girls may like them, but we fear the boys will call them tame and uninteresting, unpardonable qualities surely, especially when found in an Indian!"

— Cath World 130:378 D '29 120w

St Louis 27:344 D '29

Wis Lib Bul 25:414 D '29

DENISON, JOHN HOPKINS. Enlargement of personality; behavior patterns and their formation. 340p $3 (10s 6d) Scribner

137 Personality. Psychology 30-27704

Mr Denison describes the forces which create and modify personality, and shows how a man may change his own pattern of behavior by conditioning all his various reactions. He suggests how this transformation and enlargement of self may be brought about.

"If this book is not taken too seriously, it is possible that it may prove helpful. . . There is a great deal of shaky anthropology in the book, and a great deal of every type of 'psychology'. It is a question whether taking this kind of thought will actually add a cubit to the soul."

— + Bookm 72:xxii O '30 100w

Books p12 D 21 '30 100w

"In 'The Enlargement of Personality' Mr. Denison has placed much reading, experience and travel under tribute. A paucity of authoritative references and the absence of bibliography and index may be explained by the fact that it was written for popular consumption. . . A straining for effect is noticeable in some of the statements. For instance, when the writer speaks of 'men who are bad because they are good and others who are good because they are weak or bad,' we fear he is likely to surrender clarity to cleverness, and to obliterate vital distinctions." W. P. Lemon

— + Christian Century 47:1487 D 3 '30 620w

"The point of the book is that it's quite possible to formulate a different mental image of ourselves, and the thoughts and emotions produced by this new vision will actually transform us. Some centuries ago, a similar psychological truth appeared in the form of a proverb to the effect that as a man thinketh in his heart, so is he. But Mr. Denison is much more explicit than Solomon and in some respects a livelier writer." F. G. Scabury

+ Outlook 156:313 O 22 '30 180w

DENNETT, MRS MARY (WARE). Who's obscene? 281p $2.50 Vanguard press

176 Sex instruction. Literature, Immoral—Laws and legislation. Censorship 30-9406

"This volume is Mrs. Dennett's response to the indictment and trial through which she went last year on the charge of sending an obscene pamphlet through the mails. She tells here the full story of the case, from her reasons for writing 'The Sex Side of Life' for the reading of her own young sons, and the popularity it gradually won among other parents which made it necessary for her to have it printed in pamphlet form, through the many years in which she continued to sell and mail it, to her indictment and prosecution. The account of the progress of her case through the courts is given in full, together with the numerous letters she received of sympathy and approval from notable pecple and extracts from editorials in leading newspapers. The complete contents of the little pamphlet are also reproduced."—N Y Times

Booklist 27:48 O '30

"Mrs. Dennett's book, in what she expressly states or implies, gives much food for thought as to the lumbering, tradition-ridden, conservative technique and attitudes of our judicial machinery, as it may affect any one who may be charged with technical infraction of law. . . Mrs. Dennett has written a book that will serve the cause of decent and intelligent liberals and of those in whose behalf the latter labor." L. I. Harris, M.D.

+ Books p3 Mr 30 '30 750w

N Y Times p5 Ap 20 '30 200w

Reviewed by F. G. Seabury

Outlook 154:710 Ap 30 '30 100w

St Louis 28:204 S '30

"This is a wise and sound study that you will find instructive reading." Leon Whipple

+ Survey 64:154 My 1 '30 750w

World Tomorrow 13:281 Je '30 60w

DENNIS, GEOFFREY POMEROY. End of the world. 170p $2.50 Simon & Schuster [8s 6d Eyre]

523.1 Universe, Destruction of [30-29488]

Speculations, based upon superstitions and metaphysical and astronomical theory, as to how and when life upon earth will become extinct, or the earth itself cease to be a body in space.

"This is a terrifying and a remarkable book. You cannot stop reading. You have to experience with the author all the possible ways in which the earth could be destroyed, with each way as reasonable and frightening as the one before." Margery Latimer

+ Books p7 O 26 '30 750w

"Authors like Mr. Dennis are all too rare. What is more, they will continue to be rare, for the style is not one that is calculated to appeal to the general reader. Mr. Dennis is an author's author, and his work is calculated to please the few, the connoisseurs. Only those of the inner temple will read and appreciate him. Most readers will never hear of him. But he will not be lost. His books will always be found in the libraries of the true bibliophiles."

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 1 '30 400w

"The first section is the least good, but never unworthy of its theme; the final section rises to a tremendous level. It is a book not to read and set aside, but to taste and return to." Geoffrey West

+ Nation and Ath 48:438 D 27 '30 180w

"This is an extraordinary book. The author is capable of individual thought and feeling and says what he has to say in a manner of his own. Those looking for smooth journalese, for the well-laundried scentless and airless sentences and paragraphs of the great popular novelists of the day, will be disappointed here. Those who—to adapt Mr. Gordon Craig's excellent phrase—mistake the commonplace for the natural may think that the style of Mr. Geoffrey Dennis is strained or affected because it is not commonplace. It is, on the contrary, simple, concise and vivid. It is the style of a man capable of severe and sustained thinking, who has digested thoroughly the matter of his book before he began to write it and who consequently can be brief and pithy, omitting nothing essential to his argument."

+ New Statesman 36:212 N 22 '30 800w

"Mr. Dennis writes in a somber, poetic style vivified by a strong and active imagination and inspired by a profound emotion whose sincerity, however, one sometimes questions a little, although for the most part it seems genuine. On the less taut emotional levels his prose frequently rises to a sort of gloomy grandeur and attains real impressiveness, but sometimes it becomes bizarre and morbid and barely escapes absurdity."

+ — N Y Times p18 O 26 '30 400w

"It is a curious book, in many passages it inspires emotions bordering upon terror, but religion has to deal with these ultimate questions which are here raised with such tremendous power." E. B. Chaffee

+ Outlook 156:350 O 29 '30 200w

"The charm of the book lies not in its matter, though Mr. Dennis displays a wide erudition, but in the style—rhythmical and melodious, as rich as a fruit cake; and like a fruit cake it sits better if you take it in small bits at a time." Elmer Davis

Sat R of Lit 7:243 O 18 '30 280w

"The god of Mr. Geoffrey Dennis's childhood, a sinister figure conjured out of Calvinism, torments his conscience still, and his new book is an effort to prove that god to be a monster of arithmetical cruelty and cosmological indifference. He has accumulated an enormous ammunition for the campaign. . . The result is a formidable indictment, which admits of no contradiction since his method of arguing is to run a history of opposites in parallel. 'Here is the argument for black,' he says, 'and now here is the argument for white.' His mind is driven to excessive activity by a fervour amounting to genius. He drives his flock of facts before him, cracking the whip of rhetoric with a gesture that compels our admiration. We stand awe-stricken before the sound and fury of this anti-revivalist procession, thanking our lucky fate that our lives are not thus haunted."

+ Spec 145:sup545 O 18 '30 650w

Times [London] Lit Sup p915 N 6 '30 800w

DENNIS, LOUIS MUNROE, and NICHOLS, MELVIN L. Gas analysis. rev ed 499p il $4 Macmillan

545.7 Gases—Analysis 29-22030

"Revision and enlargement of 1913 edition includes new methods based on thermal conductivity, new procedures for specific gravity determination, the interferometer and its use, specific absorption, and the correction of barometric readings. Apparatus and manipulation of mercury, the analysis of flue gas, illuminating gas, acetylene, atmospheric air.

DENNIS, L. M., and NICHOLS, M. L.—Cont. and various other gases, and on micro-analysis, and physical methods. Authors are professors in Cornell University."—N Y New Tech Bks

" 'Gas Analysis' illustrates in a very simple, straightforward manner how to go after your own particular problem without delving into many voluminous reference books. It is, in the reviewer's estimation, the outstanding book on gas analysis." W. O. Hebler
+ Chem & Met Eng 37:173 Mr '30 320w

"This book is a valuable contribution to the literature of gas analysis, as until recently up-to-date information on this subject has been rather meager. It has probably been written more as a textbook than for industrial use." J. M. Gonder
+ Ind & Eng Chem 22:103 Ja '30 150w
N Y New Tech Bks 14:54 O '29

DENNY, LUDWELL. America conquers Britain; a record of economic war. 441p $4 (12s 6d) Knopf

330.973 Great Britain—Relations (general) with United States. United States—Relations (general) with Great Britain. United States—Economic conditions. Great Britain—Economic conditions. Great Britain—Commercial policy. United States—Commercial policy 30-6440

"Mr. Denny develops on an elaborate scale a thesis similar in the main to that which Nicholas Roosevelt has lately expounded more summarily in his 'America and England?' namely, that America and Britain are economically at war, and that the economic superiority of America, actual and potential, makes the defeat of Britain only a matter of time. Where Mr. Roosevelt, however, treated his subject with special reference to its bearing upon the London naval conference, Mr. Denny keeps before his readers the possibility of an ultimate clash of arms. The 'unthinkable war' is to him very thinkable indeed, not because either nation desires it, but because the economic conflict that is being waged is in fact a life-or-death struggle for Great Britain."—Nation

Reviewed by H. M. Sinclair
Am Econ R 20:294 Je '30 200w
Reviewed by S. M. Rosen
Am J Soc 36:321 S '30 380w
Booklist 26:341 Je '30

"For those who want to understand the economic realities of the world today, the forces which give power to statesmen's words and ultimately mold history far more effectively than better-advertised events like the London conference, here is an indispensable book. Mr. Denny is a war correspondent on the battlefront of an economic war more important than the struggles in the Balkans or in Manchuria." Lewis Gannett
+ Books p1 F 16 '30 1050w

"A book which every student of foreign affairs should read—and unlike many volumes on this topic it is fascinating reading." W. J. A.
+ Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 22 '30 520w
Cleveland Open Shelf p39 Mr '30

"Minor and unimportant errors of fact and judgment may be found, but they count for little when contrasted with the vast amount of useful and accurate information which is contained in the 400 long pages of this book, and with the shrewd interpretations which he places on many of the subjects discussed." Nicholas Roosevelt
+ — Current Hist 32:201 Ap '30 700w

"Though the edge has been taken off this subject by the recent book by Nicholas Roosevelt, this volume can be confidently recommended as one of the most interesting political writings of the past quarter."
+ Foreign Affairs 8:670 Jl '30 200w
Reviewed by William MacDonald
Nation 130:299 Mr 12 '30 550w
Reviewed by F. S. Marvin
Nature 125:965 Je 28 '30 850w

"He writes with bounce and gusto, frankly as a journalist and not as an academic economist, but his readability does not detract from the serious importance of what he says. His book deserves the careful attention of Americans, and the still more careful attention of Englishmen." Bruce Bliven
+ New Repub 62:356 My 14 '30 600w

"The faults of this book are rather those of omission than of commission. We get only one side of the picture of Anglo-American rivalry and there is little mention of those forces which are working for commercial and financial co-operation between the two countries." F. R. Dulles
+ — N Y Evening Post p9s F 22 '30 900w
Reviewed by William MacDonald
N Y Times p1 F 23 '30 2000w
Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 F 4 '30 650w
Reviewed by John Carter
Outlook 154:510 Mr 26 '30 250w
St Louis 28:131 My '30

"The whole vast problem in all its breadth and depth is highly illuminated by the discussion in this book. It would perhaps be an exaggeration to sav that it is impossible to understand the problem without this volume and the one of Roosevelt's but it is no exaggeration to say that nowhere else can so comprehensive and satisfying a presentation of all its ramifications be found in anything like as brief a compass." H. K. Norton
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1103 Je 7 '30 750w

"In spite of defects in reasoning and in tone the book is a store of very valuable information."
— + Spec 144:279 F 22 '30 400w
Reviewed by H. McD. Clokir
Survey 64:156 My 1 '30 500w

"His book is of exceptional importance, if only for its admirable selection and presentation of the essential facts relating to the economic rivalry between England and the United States. We have here a fully documented and lucidly written survey of the whole field."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p544 Jl 3 '30 1150w

"To the layman this book may present unsurmountable difficulties. He may dismiss it with a dismal sense of futility. But no person genuinely interested in peace can afford to miss it. To the pacifist it will offer a fresh challenge to his courage and his daring. It will impell him to re-evaluate pacific methods and technique in the light of these facts, and it will goad him to a more scientific, honest, and intelligent approach." Dorothy Detzer
+ — World Tomorrow 13:230 My '30 1050w

DENT, RICHARD C. Life story of King George V. 321p il $3.90 Dutton

B or 92 George V, king of Great Britain 30-8838

An intimate biography of King George V of England from boyhood to the present.

Booklist 26:354 Je '30

"The absurd adulation and exaggeration of the book overshadow all of its factual merit." Paul Allen
— Bookm 71:335 Je '30 100w
Reviewed by William Macdonald
Books p18 F 23 '30 280w

"It is offered as an 'authoritative,' not to say authorized, life story of the monarch, and the fact that its publication has been forbidden in England by George himself only serves to strengthen its appeal to readers in the United States. That the book is founded on any new sources of information regarding the King's public life and relation to British politics Mr. Dent would be the last to claim." Edmund Noble
+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 1 '30 650w
Cleveland Open Shelf p124 S '30

Reviewed by T. R. Ybarra
N Y Times p10 F 23 '30 700w

"There is nothing in Mr. Dent's account that could not be read aloud to the youngest member of the Labor Party. Nor is there anything that cannot be printed at any time in the English pictorial weeklies that mirror the acts of the King and that throughout his reign have told us so much about him." Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 F 15 '30 400w

"Mr. Dent's biography of King George is just such a book as might be expected from a subject writing of his monarch during the lifetime of the sovereign. It is chatty, laudatory, and entirely insignificant. When obviously it is impossible to reveal either intimate personal affairs or important matters of state, there remains nothing to write but a chronicle of trivial happenings and emotions on parade. Of the course of empire, the problems of diplomacy and statecraft, the tactics of sovereignty, nothing at all appears in Mr. Dent's book."
— Sat R of Lit 6:785 Mr 1 '30 180w

DENT, W. REDVERS. Show me death! 375p $2.50 Harper [7s 6d Constable]
30-9732

An autobiographical novel of a young Canadian who enlisted at sixteen and was sent to France. He became a gunner in the Canadian "suicide corps." This book is the story of the high points in his life at the front, the friends whom he loved, and who fought and died, the girl whom he married and who was killed. Finally comes the story of his own injuries—his terrible disfigurement and spiritual torture—and of Luella, the American girl who loved him and stood by him in spite of everything.

"'Show Me Death' has the merit of being quite simple and unaffected. But it is rarely moving, and few of the characters are even half convincing."
+ — Books p9 S 7 '30 200w

"Mr. Dent has written a book with many unusual qualities. It is as important for its subject matter as for its story, for it gives another personal glimpse at the World War. Here is youth, enthusiasm, freshness and vigor effectively combined. There is an air of breathlessness, drama, youthful impetuosity and dauntless courage that holds the reader." R. K. M.
+ Boston Transcript p3 Je 14 '30 500w

"A cheap, sentimental story of the wounded hero and the loyal sweetheart." G. T. Hellman
— New Repub 62:358 My 14 '30 30w

"It is a fine and vivid record, and when one has read it one has lived a life."
+ New Statesman 35:542 Ag 2 '30 350w

"'Show Me Death' is an unrelieved tale of horror, written ably if not brilliantly and shot through and through with physical and spiritual suffering."
+ N Y Times p22 My 11 '30 420w

"The book compels respect from the first page by its passion and sincerity. Mr. Dent has a wonderful power to communicate suffering, both mental and physical. No better antidote to a certain type of War-book could be found than this unpretentious story, of which Mr. Dent's countrymen may well be proud."
+ Spec 145:319 S 6 '30 200w
Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 20 '30 250w

"A Canadian war-novel very well worth reading. One of the great merits of the book is the vivid simplicity with which, as he tells his story, the narrator is made to reveal his character and the moral struggle that is ceaselessly being waged in his mind."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p682 Ag 28 '30 500w

DERING, CINI WILLOUGHBY, pseud. See Buddicom, J. L. M.

DER LING, princess (MRS THADDEUS C. WHITE). Lotos petals. 267p il $3.50 Dodd

915.1 China—Social life and customs. China—Court and courtiers. Tales, Chinese 30-28320

Princess Der Ling's volume consists of short stories from Chinese folklore, alternated with chapters in which she describes certain incidents and customs of Chinese life and compares them with American ways and customs.

Booklist 27:201 Ja '31

"Princess Der Ling writes with ease and fluency, and wholly without false modesty. More than anything she has written heretofore, her legends and short stories in 'Lotos Petals' show her power as a story-teller." J. W. M.
+ Boston Transcript p2 N 5 '30 1000w

"The author has thorough command of English and writes interestingly and effectively, although her treatment of her themes is usually rather superficial."
+ — N Y Times p21 O 12 '30 400w
St Louis 28:301 D '30

"This book is a collection of short articles. Hardly could you call them Lotus Petals for lotus petals are alike in their delicate texture and coloring and this somewhat hastily thrown together collection is not all of such delicacy. There is one chapter entitled 'Was Kipling Right?' which is a harsh and rasping criticism."
Sat R of Lit 7:475 D 20 '30 250w

DERMENGHEM, EMILE. Life of Mahomet; [tr. from the French by Arabella Yorke]. 352p $5 Dial press [15s Routledge]

B or 92 Mohammed [30-18759]

"M. Dermenghem, a French historian who has made a specialty of studying the lives of mystics, is excellently qualified for the task of writing a biography of the great religious and military leader who in the seventh century established the monotheistic rule of Islam over disorganized and idolatrous Arabia."—Bookm

---

"M. Dermenghem is a thorough, affectionate scholar; he writes engagingly; and in particular he has an understanding of mystic experience. As the result of a personal residence among the Arabs, a careful study of the Koran, the Sunna, the Sira, and other Moslem texts, he has been able to reconstruct the career of Mahomet and, employing a semi-fictional technique, to breathe new life into it. . . M. Dermenghem has taken for granted in his reader some knowledge of Mohammedanism, and in certain places he has even seemed to address himself to a restricted circle of Orientalists. On the other hand, the cultured reader with a fair amount of interest in the subject cannot but find his book valuable. It is scholarly, it is unbiased, and it is directed by a genuine insight."
+ — Bookm 72:321 N '30 300w

"This biography attempts to present its hero as if he were a modern novel's chief character. The minutest details of Mahomet's daily life are carefully recorded; and the larger and more important aspects of his religious teaching, his political tactics, even his vigour and insight as a master of strategy are much neglected. . . M. Dermenghem has endeavoured to strike a happy mean between picturesque legend and sober fact. He has not been altogether successful; he continually sacrifices coherency for a wealth of detail."
— New Statesman 35:128 My 3 '30 500w
Pratt p35 autumn '30
St Louis 28:301 D '30

"This book has no claim to real scholarship—a circumstance which in this particular instance lends usefulness to it on account of its being more readily followed by the average reader—but its author has achieved a notable success in handling a very difficult subject extraordinarily well." I. A. Shah
+ Sat R 149:529 Ap 26 '30 600w

"M. Dermenghem has drawn his material from the original sources, and weighed his material by the research of modern critics. He does not lack an eye for color or detail, and he is intrigued by the domestic scenes in the life of the only mortal who could silence the wrangling of his wives by revelations from Heaven. While his book does not present new findings, and will not take the place of Caetani's or Huart's, for example, it is full and informative and will appeal to those who enjoy that odd corner of the world where truth has always been a matter of argument, and the straight way goes roundabout, and prophets still speak in parables." Harold Lamb

DERMENGHEM, EMILE—Continued

+ Sat R of Lit 7:469 D 20 '30 500w

"Islam, the submission of the man to the Divine Will, is far closer to Christianity than either the Byzantine polemists or the early commentators of the Koran would have us believe. M. Dermenghem in this remarkable book emphasizes the similarities rather than the differences. . . Whatever small faults there may be in this book, we must thank M. Dermenghem for the light he has shed on a man who loved greatly and was greatly loved." F. Y.-B.

+ Spec 144:sup621 Ap 12 '30 600w

"An attractive and sprightly account of the greatest Arabian, with vivid characterizations and dialogues on the one hand and some learned moralizing on the other. . . M. Dermenghem has a turn for taking hold of and making the most of picturesque and dramatic episodes."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p450 My 29 '30 1000w

DE ROBECK, NESTA. Among the Franciscan tertiaries. 271p $3.75 Dutton [10s 6d Dent]

271.3 Franciscans [30-16463]

An account of the origin of the Third Order of St Francis and of its famous devotees and members. The seven to whom the author gives special attention are: Angela of Foligno, St Margaret of Cortona, St Louis IX of France, Ramon Lull, St Bridget of Sweden, Ippolito Galantini, and Giuseppe Benedetto Cottolengo.

Books p15 Jl 20 '30 150w

Christian Century 46:691 My 28 '30 100w

Outlook 155:24 My 7 '30 30w

"Her studies of seven great Tertiaries should really add to the popular understanding of St. Francis himself. The account of that remarkable woman St. Bridget is specially vivid and interesting. But the great success of this book is undoubtedly its last section; devoted to the amazing philanthropist, Giuseppe Cottolengo (1786-1842), founder of the 'Piccola Casa' of Turin, and its still existent work." Evelyn Underhill

+ Spec 144:280 F 22 '30 600w

Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 29 '30 380w

"These studies of tertiary saints are wholly devotional in tone, and are published with the sanction of [the] Church. It is in a devotional spirit that they should be read, these records of beautiful lives nobly, sometimes heroically, lived."

Times [London] Lit Sup p241 Mr 20 '30 450w

DEUTSCH, BABETTE (MRS AVRAHM YARMOLINSKY). Fire for the night. 77p $2 Cape

811 30-10499

"'Fire for the Night,' is aptly named. It is flame throughout, even where it is, as it frequently is, grieving, astringent and intellectual. . . These poems are the work of a modern mind, a modern poet and a modern woman. The touch of distinctive modernity in Miss Deutsch's verse is not in any bizarrerie of form; there is a noble touch of tradition in her own unmistakable music. Her modernity consists rather in that troubled conflict between flesh and spirit, a reach toward altitudes and a sense of corruption, a dreaming of eternities and a biting sense of time."—Books

Booklist 26:387 Jl '30

"This is Miss Deutsch's third book of poems, and it has the maturity to be expected of a poet whose work has been familiar for more than a decade to all who read contemporary verse. Like all her work, it shows fine and swift intelligence coupled with extreme subtlety of emotion."

+ Bookm 72:187 O '30 480w

"The quality of Babette Deutsch's poetry is fortunately already established and familiar. This book serves merely, but in many ways more deeply, to certify to and to exemplify her rare talent. . . More than any poet of our time Miss Deutsch moves with passion and deftness in the complex world of contemporary attitudes and ideas." Irwin Edman

+ Books p6 Ap 20 '30 850w

Reviewed by E. L. Walton

Nation 130:736 Je 25 '30 650w

"Some of the best qualities of Miss Deutsch's first book of verse, 'Banners,' persist in this one, her third. They are excellent qualities of the second rank: boldness of expression, clear outline, courage in protest and attack. In a first book these count for much, but their further exploitation calls for closer scrutiny. Her present volume is mainly a matter of repetition and variations. Without the enthusiasm and vanity of youthful expression, her verse must submit to several criticisms which apply to the general run of poetic journalism." M. D. Zabel

+ — New Repub 63:25 My 21 '30 580w

"The pages exhibit the same care for poetic perfection which has marked Miss Deutsch's previous work. And the book is crowned with the same measure of achievement. The sonnet-sequence 'Time and Spirit,' a series of fifteen sonnets which concludes the book, is especially worthy of note."

+ N Y Times p18 Ap 27 '30 250w

"Miss Deutsch has accepted a definite range of thought and emotion, and has explored and mastered it. Within that range her insight is impressively sure. The most remarkable quality of Miss Deutsch's poetry is, perhaps, the balancing of emotion and intellect. She does not suppress or evade her emotions, but she does hold them in subjection to her sense of proportion. In the first group of poems, all elegiac, she tempers her melancholy by regarding it objectively. She will not cry out from the depths when it is a case of 'autumn not yet come, and summer quietly going.' The result is a peculiar poignancy which a more abandoned display of feling could not give." Granville Hicks

+ N Y World p5m Jl 27 '30 400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:82 N '30

St Louis 28:268 N '30

"This is by far the best of Babette Deutsch's three volumes of poetry, and yet one lays it down with a sigh and a gesture of frustration. For all its excellencies, it leaves one unsatisfied. The mood throughout is one of seriousness, high seriousness, but a seriousness that sinks to sombreness and, at moments, even to drabness. Here are thoughts of a woman growing older." J. S. Untermeyer

— + Sat R of Lit 7:24 Ag 2 '30 600w

DEUTSCH, BABETTE (MRS AVRAHM YARMOLINSKY). Potable gold; some notes on poetry and this age. (New arts) 96p $1.25 Norton

808.1 Poetry—History and criticism 29-29134

Five critical essays on poetry and poets by an American poet and critic. Miss Deutsch writes of the reasons for poetry, the poet and his audience, poetry and the modern machine age, the future of poetry, and of certain important contemporary poets.

Booklist 26:306 My '30

"Miss Deutsch's volume is better than its affected title would lead one to believe. Unhappily, Miss Deutsch involves herself in a lot of cant about machinery and the machine age being inimical to poetry. After belaboring this subject for a while she dons the prophet's robes and essays a number of guesses about the future of poetry. The last chapter, containing discussions of a few poets such as Yeats, Synge, Laforgue, Eliot and Jeffers, is thin." Edgar Johnson

— + Books p25 F 16 '30 80w
Cleveland Open Shelf p21 F '30
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:42 My '30
St Louis 28:76 Mr '30

DEVAL, JACQUES. Wooden swords; tr. by Lawrence S. Morris. 270p $2.50 Viking press
30-17506

A humorous narrative of the war which tells the story of a near-sighted Frenchman in the supply service. In his rôle of glorified errand boy, the hero of Wooden Swords fights the enemy with a mop and a typewriter, and observes many comically curious things.

Booklist 27:103 N '30

"It is regrettable that there are not more of such graceful trifles as Wooden Swords. This is no book of roaring humor to put beside such tall tales as Schweik, The Good Soldier. It is sly, restrained, but there is merriment in every page of it." Guy Holt

+ Bookm 72:xviii S '30 150w

" 'Wooden Swords' has something that [other war books] miss: it has the true essence of laughter. It has a keen, unquenchable humor: the power to see the world as a magnificent farce, without glamor and without bitterness. It has the quality of thoughtful laughter that has been named high comedy. It supplements and balances the war books on my shelf." R. B. Sanborn

+ Books p3 Jl 6 '30 800w
Boston Transcript p2 Ag 9 '30 300w

"It is not a new formula, even as applied to the war. Both E. E. Cummings and Jaroslav Hasek have applied it before, the one to his experiences in 'The Enormous Room,' and the other to the adventures of 'The Good Soldier, Schweik.' Simple justice might ask an explanation of why Mr. Cummings's eight-year-old book has been delicately accepted as caviar while M. Deval's pleasant but inferior offering becomes the meat loaf of the season's reading. But the answer need interfere with no one's enjoyment of a moderately entertaining book."

Nation 131:132 Jl 30 '30 180w

"Although this is an absorbingly interesting autobiography of a man physically unfit for active duty in the Army Zone, the much advertised humor seems incidental to the ironic attitude of the narrative. Jacques Deval has seemingly composed an ironic comedy." Edwin Clark

N Y Times p4 Je 29 '30 470w

"Being French, it has nothing in common with the slapstick of Leonard Nason and other noisy American humorists. It is rather quiet fun, with a play on word and situation, and a relief from the noisy bragging of Corporal, Sergeants and buck privates. . . The humor is in the situation, and rarely forced." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p9 Jl 5 '30 1000w

"This delightful book does not let the reader down. It starts funny and it stays that way. The fine gallic touch, delicate and daring, strokes and flicks the slight material of the story into a perfect piece of cheerfully ironic nonsense, which pokes effective fun at all the solemn hullabaloo of militarism. The literary quality of the original is preserved in Lawrence Morris' excellent translation." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 155:386 Jl 9 '30 250w

"Somehow it seems like turning back the clock to revive the almost purely humorous war story, and one is not quite convinced of the authenticity of Jacques Deval's adventures as a myopic member of the Service of Supplies. It all happened a long time ago and the episodes lack the freshness and spontaneity of, for example, André Maurois's Colonel Bramble stories. Nevertheless, 'Wooden Swords' is readable enough and some of its incidents will call forth quiet chuckles from those who remember the 'wrangling' and graft that went on in every army in the securing of 'cushy' jobs." Stanley Went

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1203 Jl 19 '30 250w

"Deval has a keen wit and the ability to escape vulgarity while daring to make an approach to it. The escape is accomplished, however, and the daring results in native gayety of the most sparkling order."

+ Springf'd Republican p9e Ag 17 '30 180w

DEVANNY, JEAN. Bushman Burke. 320p $2 Macaulay [7s 6d Duckworth]
30-20585

"Burke, son of the New Zealand bush, inherits a fortune and is taken up by the young society set of Wellington. Flo, his lawyer's daughter and one of the hardest of the modern sophisticates, marries him for his money. Burke finds that he is unable to adapt himself to the life led by Flo's friends and that his wife is unwilling to make any concession to his wishes. Caught by the strength of her attraction for him, Burke stays on until he learns of her affair with Rangi, then he returns to the bush. Flo follows, still interested only in his money, but in the bush she learns the true values of life."—N Y Times

---

Boston Transcript p2 O 15 '30 300w

"The book is badly written and Miss Devanny fails to make her unusual background assume the importance it should in her narrative."

— N Y Times p18 S 7 '30 180w
Times [London] Lit Sup p216 Mr 13 '30 200w

DEWEY, ALEXANDER GORDON. Dominions and diplomacy; Canadian contribution. 2v 375; 397p $15 (45s) Longmans

971 Canada—Foreign relations. Great Britain—Foreign relations. Great Britain—Colonies
30-6046

From the viewpoint of a Canadian Nationalist, this account of the present controversy with regard to the British dominions and the Commonwealth is presented in the light of similar controversies during the past thirty years. Special attention is given to the evolution of Dominion status, and to developments—especially with regard to Canada—in the direction of world politics since the War.

"Details have been so multiplied that the narrative drags at times, because of unnecessary repetition. Many quotations and long passages paraphrasing speeches might have been shortened or even omitted without serious damage to the book. The fact remains, however, that we have here a most thorough and scholarly piece of work, so exhaustive in its treatment of the history of the Britannic question of the last thirty years that hardly a detail is left untouched." Carl Wittke

+ — Am Hist R 35:619 Ap '30 1000w

"The book proceeds at a leisurely pace. Curiously, the introductions to each of the several topics appear much better done than the concluding paragraphs. The author frankly admits as a deliberate major limitation of the work the absence of any analysis of economic as distinct from political factors. Furthermore, while he is fully justified in emphasizing the part played by Canada as regards pre-war days in the movement away from colonialism, it is doubtful whether his claim is quite so justified in recent years." E. S. Griffith

Am Pol Sci R 24:753 Ag '30 700w
Nation and Ath 46:898 Mr 29 '30 100w
St Louis 28:148 My '30
Sat R 148:678 D 7 '29 460w
Spec 143:951 D 21 '29 100w

DEWEY, JOHN. Individualism, old and new. 171p $2 Minton

323.4 Individualism. United States—Civilization. United States—Social conditions 30-27111

Professor Dewey's book is made up of essays, with some new matter added, which originally appeared in the New Republic. The underlying theme is the submergence of the individual in our predominantly business civilization. Contents: The house divided against itself; "America"—by formula; The United States, incorporated; The lost individual; Toward a new individualism; Capitalistic or public socialism; The crisis in culture; Individuality in our day.

Booklist 27:188 Ja '31

Reviewed by Andre Maurois
Books p1 N 23 '30 2050w

Reviewed by S. G. Cole
Crozer Q 8:128 Ja '31 600w

"The present volume is disappointing first of all because the final impression it leaves is an extremely vague one. For an explanation of this we may turn first to Mr. Dewey's style. That style is notoriously careless and fuzzy. . . His confusion of style is sometimes, I suspect, a symptom of confusion of thought. . . I closed this book without a clear idea of what Mr. Dewey means either by the old or the new individualism." Henry Hazlitt
Nation 131:446 O 22 '30 1350w

Reviewed by John Chamberlain
N Y Times p2 D 21 '30 900w

" 'Individualism, Old and New,' analyzes the present, probes it and discovers its inadequacies. It offers us a technique for evolving a new individualism. It is at once a small book and a most profound one. And it is a most effective counterblast to humanism. Persons wandering in a maze but honestly looking for a way should not overlook it." C. H. Grattan
+ N Y World p3e O 19 '30 750w

DEWEY, JOHN. Quest for certainty: a study of the relation of knowledge and action. (Gifford lectures, 1929) 318p $4 Minton [10s 6d Allen, G.]

191 Knowledge, Theory of. Philosophy. Science—Philosophy 29-23500

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:144 Ja '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p70 My '30

"Far from being a mere reiteration of his earlier convictions, The Quest for Certainty is Mr. Dewey's first resolute frontal attack upon an issue that is so important, not only for his system but for the whole of contemporary thought, that it is doubtful if Mr. Dewey has done anything of equal importance, at least since he set forth the basic principle of instrumentalism." C. E. Ayres
+ Int J Ethics 40:425 Ap '30 3400w

"The present volume reinforces Dewey's position as the most original and important American thinker of our time. . . Yet the very importance of Dewey's thought makes his shortcomings more evident. Most of these lie in his style, not only in its diction and sentence structure, but in its larger elements. Mr. Dewey's argument is carried forward too exclusively in abstract terms; his work would gain immensely in vividness and conviction if he kept returning to concrete illustrations and verifications. . . The writing in detail, while it is not devoid of occasional felicitous phrases, is for the most part clumsy and careless. . . All this results in a disproportionate wear and tear on the mind, which tends to make one's reading of Dewey, in spite of the importance of what he has to say, a duty rather than a delight." Henry Hazlitt
+ — Nation 130:100 Ja 22 '30 900w

Reviewed by Kenneth Burke
New Repub 64:77 S 3 '30 2400w

"Professor Dewey's treatment of this subject is fresh and interesting; he has important things to say about the development of science, and in criticism of traditional views."
+ New Statesman 34:748 Mr 15 '30 550w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:5 Ja '30

Pratt p6 summer '30

St Louis 28:3 Ja '30

"Apart from the technical merits of the theory propounded, the book deserves great praise for its penetrating analysis of the present state of philosophical thought, and clear presentation of the problems with which what Professor Dewey calls the traditional philosophies are beset." C. E. M. Joad
+ Spec 144:sup619 Ap 12 '30 850w

Times [London] Lit Sup p238 Ap 17 '30 580w

Wis Lib Bul 26:37 Ja '30

"Outwardly Dr. Dewey's book has little emotional pull, and one finds it stiff reading. But in its underlying emphasis on the worth of the individual and his ability to find an understanding of himself and society through action, the work fires one's imagination. In his own example the author, as no other living philosopher, has inspired men to strive for a more brotherly society by means of which a more intelligent humanity may be evolved." H. Y. Williams
+ World Tomorrow 13:89 F '30 600w

DHALA, MANEKJI NASARVANJI. See Mānekjī Nasarvānjī Dhālā.

DIBELIUS, WILHELM. England; tr. from the German by Mary Agnes Hamilton; with an introd. by A. D. Lindsay. 569p $5 Harper [15s Cape, J.]

914.2 England. National characteristics, English 30-8619

A comprehensive interpretation of England as to her national characteristics, politics and government, literature, religion and education, beginning with the historical background and ending with England and the world of the present day. The author is professor of English in the University of Berlin. The book was written in 1923 and was designed to help the German people "to understand the people with whom they have been fighting." The present work is translated from the fifth German edition.

"There is keen comment, but no attempt at mere cleverness. The book has been compared to Bryce's American Commonwealth, and not without justification." E. P. H.
+ Am Pol Sci R 24:512 My '30 170w

Booklist 26:390 Jl '30

"With admirable restraint, with unusual scope and balance in depth and breadth of treatment, with sober thoroughness, Professor Dibelius has weighed the factors that have made England. . . It has taken a German to evaluate England, as it took an Englishman, not long ago, to evaluate the American commonwealth." Irving Astrachan
+ Bookm 71:347 Je '30 430w

"Wilhelm Dibelius's book at once suggests comparison with Lowell's 'Government of England' and Bryce's 'American Commonwealth,' the two most notable works which in a half century have attempted a similar comprehensive survey of a nation and its institutions. The book bears such comparison well. It is less scholastic and more human than Lowell, and at least as profound in its general observations and as detached in its criticisms as Bryce. Moreover, where Lowell and Bryce, in their respective fields, are now much in need of revision, Dibelius's book is very much up to date. From whatever point of view it is regarded, whether of breadth of learning or of keenness of observation, or of clear understanding of the country and its people, it is far and away the most thorough, the most sympathetic, the most thoughtful and the most critical study of England and the English that we have." William MacDonald
+ Books p18 Ap 6 '30 1000w

"Profound and simple at the same time, this book is a most valuable and suggestive portrayal of a unique people." W. E. Dodd

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p14 Ap 26 '30 600w

Cleveland Open Shelf p140 N '30

"For vivid, fearless, objective writing on the spirit and genius of a great contemporary people, Dibelius's England promises long to stand unmatched." F. A. Ogg

+ Current Hist 32:836 Ag '30 1300w

"An interesting and able study."

+ Foreign Affairs 8:679 Jl '30 20w

"It is probably no exaggeration to say that Professor Dibelius's book on England is not only far the most important work of the kind produced during this period, but that it is one of the few books of enduring importance written by a foreigner about another nation. The translator and the publishers have therefore rendered a signal service to the American public by making this volume accessible at a time when the comprehension of foreign nations has become of overwhelming practical and cultural importance. The book was written clearly, vigorously, and concisely in the original German; Mrs. Hamilton has done her work so skilfully that the reader is unaware of the fact that he is reading a translation." Abraham Flexner

+ Nation 130:397 Ap 2 '30 750w

"Professor Dibelius's book is extremely interesting. It is a perfect example of German thoroughness and intelligence. Merely as an account of the governmental and social and industrial system of this country at the present time it could hardly be equalled. The quantity and accuracy of his knowledge are almost alarming, and it seems a miracle that a foreigner should know so much and misunderstand so little. Indeed, it is quite a relief when one finds that Professor Dibelius does occasionally make mistakes." Leonard Woolf

+ — Nation and Ath 46:770 Mr 8 '30 950w

"A nation acts wisely in looking from time to time in the unflattering glass held by foreign observers like Professor Dibelius. The Englishman who submits himself to his diagnosis will discover the kind of figure which he cuts in the eyes of an unusually well-informed and intelligent German, who has not only taken immense pains to master the facts, but has performed the more difficult feat of fusing his raw material into a synthesis, which, whether adequate or not, is subtle and comprehensive. Nor is it the least of the merits of his book that the Englishman who reads it with discrimination will learn much, not only about England, but about Germany. The author's criteria and standards of value are, very properly, not concealed, and some of his judgments are based on an antithesis which is not the less obvious because it is not laboured."

+ New Statesman 34:816 Mr 29 '30 1300w

"A book which, for depth and completeness, is rivaled by the works of few foreign students of England, or, for that matter, by not so very many volumes on that formidable theme by Englishmen themselves. . . But there is a lack of cohesion in the book. Again and again one feels that, for the proper guidance of the reader through the English labyrinth, there should be more 'pulling together' of detached deductions, more summarizing, more fusing into a whole. This shortcoming, however, pales into insignificance beside the salient characteristic of Professor Dibelius's book: its depth. One is constantly struck with amazement at the incredible amount of research of which it gives evidence. For the translation of the book Miss Hamilton deserves a great deal of credit. The reader never feels that he is reading a translation—and that is high praise indeed." T. R. Ybarra

+ — N Y Times p1 Mr 30 '30 1300w

Pratt p30 summer '30

St Louis 28:246 O '30

"This book deserves a place among the dozen best studies of foreign countries produced in our time. . . It is designed to be not a complete statement of facts but a critical examination of those which reveal most clearly the character of the British nation." T. E. Welby

+ Sat R 149:168 F 8 '30 1350w

"Dr. Dibelius's book is somewhat fairer and far more learned than Englishmen writing about Germany in the past. We except Mr. Gooch. Dibelius has reviewed English history, mastered the English Law and Constitution, analysed English religion often brilliantly, criticized English education and reduced his sheaves to general conclusions and personal epigrams. Often he shows an insight which makes it fascinating to see how others see us. At other times he makes an amusing miss. He has probed the meaning of British hypocrisy, and he has revealed the English gentleman. These are only two of the themes that he has treated with consummate skill. The book, calm and professorial, has an undercurrent of grim irony at England's expense, though it is Englishmen who will laugh most." Shane Leslie

+ Sat R 149:359 Mr 22 '30 1450w

"This remarkable book, which has been most admirably translated, is, I think, the most valuable single work published on its subject in recent times. . . I am inclined to compare it with Bryce's 'American Commonwealth,' and to urge that it comes out well from a comparison which is itself a verdict of high quality." H. J. Laski

+ Sat R of Lit 6:795 Mr 8 '30 1650w

"This book by Professor Dibelius has a touch of genius in it. The author is not merely a keen critic and a clear thinking psychologist: he can balance apparently contradictory elements in the English character and produce an excellent portrait of England. There are some small mistakes with regard to facts; but they are very unimportant. Indeed, the exactness of description is amazing in an account covering so many different issues—from local government to Scottish Church reform and University developments. . . His book is full of that sound common sense which is the best psychology." C. D. Burns

+ Spec 144:237 F 15 '30 1100w

"This is one of the most dispassionate and searching examinations of national character and institutions written in the present century. Careful (though not infallibly accurate) in data, penetrating in generalizations and lucid in style (despite minor lapses in translation), it may be commended to Americans as a vastly interesting and informing book."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 9 '30 1400w

Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 6 '30 450w

"It is a most admirably constructed picture of England. Written by a German for Germans, it will neverthless prove equally enlightening for Englishmen and Americans. . . It will be of value to Americans on account of its balanced insight into a society which has so much in common with their own that one might almost say they see England with English eyes." H. M. Clokie

+ Survey 64:322 Jl 1 '30 500w

"An English critic must bear in mind that he is dealing with a book written by a German for Germans, and that it was written at a time when Germany was still painfully recovering contact with the world about her. It is thus a little out of date in matter—for, after all, England has changed a good deal in the ten years which must have elapsed since Dr. Dibelius began to work on his accumulated material—and still more in spirit. There are too many traces of the harsh War mentality. It is because the book is so good, so full of light and stimulus for its English readers, that its occasional flaws jar so strongly. Its illuminating quality is most apparent in the section on politics, where it deals with much that the Englishman takes for granted."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p175 Mr 6 '30 2000w

World Tomorrow 13:347 Ag '30 480w

DICE, CHARLES AMOS. New levels in the stock market. 264p $2.50 McGraw

332.6 Stocks. Stock exchange 29-20705

"This volume was prepared primarily for the general public. Its object is to describe and outline the causes of what the author calls 'a mightly revolution in industry, in trade, and in finance,' which 'has been making all things new in the United States,' and which has brought about 'a new day' in the stock market. The movement of stock prices from 1900 to the middle of 1929 is portrayed in a dramatic manner, in language almost as spectacular as the behavior of the market itself. The various periods are described as 'The McKinley-Roosevelt Boom,' 'The Coolidge Boom,' and 'The Hoover Boom.' "—Am Econ R

Reviewed by C. S. Tippetts
Am Econ R 20:113 Mr '30 500w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:4 Ja '30

"By far the best part of Dr. Dice's book is the descriptive material contained in the later chapters. He gives a very good picture of the revolutionary changes which have taken place in the production and distribution of products and in the financing of enterprise. His chapters dealing with brokers' loans and investment trusts are very enlightening. Recent developments appear to indicate, however, that he underestimated the effect upon the stock market of withdrawing from the loan field those brokers' loans made for the account of 'others.' " W. I. King
+ — Pol Sci Q 45:123 Mr '30 950w
St Louis 28:5 Ja '30

DICHMAN, ERNEST WYKEHAM. This aviation business. 274p il $3.50 Brentano's

629.13 Aeronautics 29-21064

"An attempt to give a true picture of the present status of the aviation business, dealing with the history of aviation, commercial development, safety, aviation as a career, the financial situation, aeronautical engineering, and speculations on the future."—Cleveland Open Shelf

---

Booklist 26:266 Ap '30

"From the time when a book is completed by its author until the time when it is released by its publisher is not a great interval as measured by the calendar, but it is long enough to permit many things to happen in the domain of aeronautics. Mr. Dichman's book is as up to date as one could reasonably expect and yet the development of transcontinental air and rail service has taken form since the completion of these chapters. As a general survey of the field, and particularly for its review of the period of evolution and of the notable flights in flying history, the book possess high merit."
+ Books p25 N 24 '29 150w
Cleveland Open Shelf p137 N '30

"His work ought to do much toward putting the public into a less emotional state about aviation and opening its mind to plain truth and accurate facts. He knows his subject thoroughly and he treats it dispassionately and in a wholly judicial temper."
+ N Y Times p30 N 3 '29 180w
Pratt p19 summer '30
St Louis 28:9 Ja '30

DICKINSON, CHARLES HENRY. Social aims of Jesus. 310p $2.50 Smith, R.R.

232 Jesus Christ—Teaching. Sociology, Christian 30-9624

In this conservative and balanced discussion of the social attitudes of Jesus, the author takes up the social necessity of New Testament criticism, Jesus as an interpreter of law, and his creative fulfilments of humanity and of our time.

"The volume is not one to stir enthusiasm, but it challenges respect for its earnestness, reverence and the exhaustive treatment of its theme." J. H. Holmes
+ — Books p11 Ag 3 '30 180w

"The author is informed on the latest contentions of Biblical scholarship, and he has no glaring prejudices. He does no special pleading for any cause. He has some very sensible ideas concerning methods for reaching those unlearned in Bible study and interpretation. Every chapter is suggestive and worth reading for many reasons. Each has been the product of study and meditation. It comes as one of the most reliable and well-balanced books that have recently been published on this important subject, upon which so much that is deeply misleading has been written."
+ Boston Transcript p2 S 10 '30 300w
Christian Century 47:1496 D 3 '30 80w
St Louis 28:203 S '30

DICKINSON, EMILY NORCROSS. Poems; ed.
2 by Martha Dickinson Bianchi and Alfred Leete Hampson. Centenary ed 401p $4 Little

811 30-26084

The centenary edition, containing nearly 800 poems, includes those which appeared in the three early volumes, Poems (first, second, and third series); as well as those in The Single Hound (1914); and Further Poems of Emily Dickinson (1929). With an introduction by Martha Dickinson Bianchi.

Booklist 27:219 Ja '31
Boston Transcript p2 D 27 '30 650w
Cleveland Open Shelf p153 D '30
New Repub 65:119 D 10 '30 30w
Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p9 D 10 '30 900w
Sat R of Lit 7:443 D 6 '30 230w

DICKINSON, LAWRENCE SUMNER. The lawn; the culture of turf in park, golfing and home areas. (Farm and garden lib.) 128p il $1.25 Judd [7s 6d Routledge]

712 Lawns 30-26559

A practical book on the making and upkeep of lawns, giving instructions on kinds of grasses to use in different soils and locations, fertilizers, amount of seed needed, treatment of weeds, etc. Illustrated from photographs, with many useful tables of mixtures.

Booklist 26:347 Je '30
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:80 N '30
St Louis 28:213 S '30
Springf'd Republican p9e Ag 17 '30 100w

DICKSON, ALBERT JEROME. Covered wagon days; a journey across the plains in the sixties, and pioneer days in the Northwest; from [his] private journals; ed. by Arthur Jerome Dickson. 287p pl $6 Clark, A.H.

917.8 Overland journeys to the Pacific. West—Description and travel 29-11983

"The journals of Albert Jerome Dickson which have been edited by his son and published under the title, Covered Wagon Days. These related the experiences of the Ridgley party in 1864 during an ox-team journey from La Crosse, Wisconsin, across the plains to Virginia City and the Gallatin Valley in Montana. Here we get a precise and unembellished account of everyday life in a wagon train, of the way the train was directed—in short, of the technique of the trail in the pioneer period." R of Rs

---

"As a painstaking account in the minutest details of daily life of the drivers of the covered wagons, of the roads by which travellers reached the new frontier, and of the farmers who were to be the real builders of a new commonwealth in an important period of American history, Covered Wagon Days is a work of great merit. It is refreshingly far more considerate of the point of view of the Indian than such works usually are." E. J. Benton

+ Am Hist R 35:180 O '29 400w

Boston Transcript p2 S 18 '29 350w

"If ever a comprehensive history of the West is written, this volume, and others like it, will furnish valuable material. Meanwhile, it may be read with profit by those who desire first-hand information about many aspects of life in the trans-Mississippi at the close of the American Civil War.'

+ Hist Outlook 21:83 F '30 120w

Reviewed by R. C. B. Brown

N Y Evening Post p6m Je 29 '29 80w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 34:66 O '29

"A real contribution to the pioneer history of Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, and Colorado."

+ R of Rs 81:21 Ja '30 160w

DICTIONARY of American biography, under the [2] auspices of the American council of learned societies; ed. by Allen Johnson and Dumas Malone. 20v v 3-5 618;638;616p subs per set $250 Scribner [subs per set 45 gns Oxford]

920 United States—Biography (28-28500)

An authoritative, scholarly dictionary of biography comparable to the English Dictionary of National Biography, which includes in its scope all persons who have made some distinct contribution to American life and history. No living persons are included.

Reviewed by A. M. Schlesinger

Am Hist R 35:624 Ap '30 950w (Review of v 3)

"The 'Dictionary' is continuously readable, as the finest works of reference always are. It is not merely that high standards of research prevail and that the approach is almost always rigorously critical. These qualities, new in American compilations of such a kind, demonstrate clearly enough that intelligence and erudition can move the emotions—the emotions of curiosity, affection, sympathy, contempt—as well as command respect. But there is also the fact that the editor encourages, even requires, the touch of imagination, so that we get picturesque and telling details whenever they were available. He never edits out the sense of humor, either." Mark Van Doren

+ Books p10 Ja 12 '30 750w (Review of v 3)

"Here they are in a state of excellent preservation, laid away—at least for a generation —with taste or wisdom or scholarship, and in certain cases with a combination of all three of those qualities so desirable in biographers. The expert hand, which is the kind of hand the editors of this compilation seek, is generally in evidence and always when it is so it demonstrates its advantages." Mark Van Doren

+ Books p16 Mr 23 '30 850w (Review of v 4)

Reviewed by Mark Van Doren

Books p20 S 14 '30 800w (Review of v 5)

Boston Transcript p1 Ag 30 '30 1350w (Review of v 1-5)

"The third volume of the 'Dictionary of American Biography' maintains, if, indeed, it does not raise the singularly high standard of scholarship and literary quality set by the two preceding volumes." M. K. M.

+ Current Hist 31:858 F '30 450w (Review of v 3)

"This book it would well repay the layman as well as the scholar to devote considerable time to reading, if not straight through the volume, at least a large part of it. If the average reader should have time for the entire volume, he will close it with a sense of intimate personal contact with the history of these United States since the first settlements in the late sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries." M. K. M.

+ Current Hist 32:411 My '30 800w (Review of v 4)

Reviewed by M. K. Munroe

Current Hist 32:1052 S '30 550w (Review of v 5)

N Y Times p5 Je 1 '30 520w (Review of v 3 and 4)

"The biographies aim at impartiality. Not one is a tombstone epitaph. Merit is recognized and achievement is measured by the standards of our age. Many of the sketches reveal how adventurous the career of the average man can become in this land." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p11 D 26 '29 900w (Review of v 3)

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p9 Ag 20 '30 850w (Review of v 5)

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 81:10 Ap '30 520w (Review of v 3 and 4)

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:8 Ag '30 450w (Review of v 5)

Reviewed by Allan Nevins

Sat R of Lit 7:283 N 1 '30 1500w (Review v 3-5)

Reviewed by C. H. Judd

School R 38:548 S '30 500w (Review of v 1-5)

"So far the volumes have disclosed very few weak spots. Most of the sketches have shown careful preparation and sound judgment. The amount of spirited and authoritative writing is as high as could be expected."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 26 '30 800w (Review of v 3)

Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 2 '30 800w (Review of v 4)

Times [London] Lit Sup p144 F 20 '30 550w (Review of v 3)

DIEMER, HUGO, ed. Wage-payment plans that [2] reduced production costs. 272p il $2.50 (12s 6d) McGraw

331.2 Wages. Factory management. Efficiency, Industrial 30-824

"A discussion of the basic considerations underlying the installation of wage incentive plans, a description of the fundamental and best known plans and examples of incentive systems as described by practical men in charge of them."—Pratt

---

"The bulk of the book, 220 pages, consists of articles by 35 factory managers and industrial engineers describing their experience with incentive plans. These provide excellent case material of particular value to the executive and engineer." William Haber

+ Am Econ R 20:757 D '30 250w

Booklist 27:12 S '30

Pratt p10 summer '30

DILLINGHAM, ROBERT BARCLAY, pseud. See Foulke, W. D.

DILLON, EMILE JOSEPH. Russia: today and yesterday; an impartial view of soviet Russia. 325p $3.50 Doubleday, Doran [16s Dent]

914.7 Russia—Description and travel. Russia —Social conditions. Bolshevism—Russia 30-9747

The author of this book, an Englishman who in various public capacities has spent the greater part of his life in Russia, and who revisited Soviet Russia in 1928, contrasts the old Russia with the new. With regard to the latter, he describes changes brought about in education, the arts, amusements, government, the status of women, working conditions and other sociological problems. Dr Dillon notes and comments upon the chief characteristics of Bolshevism in the manner of an impartial observer of the good and the bad, rather than as a partisan of the cause.

DILLON, E. J.—Continued

"He presents such a picture of Bolshevism at work as could have been drawn only by one who knew the old Russia and was able to make illuminating comparisons with the new." W. J. Abbot
+ Atlantic Bookshelf p24 My '30 550w
Booklist 26:391 Jl '30

"A very interesting book; interesting not for the new things he tells about Soviet Russia; but for the spirit in which he tells them, the spirit of inordinate admiration." Joshua Kunitz
+ Books p23 Ap 27 '30 700w
Boston Transcript p2 Ap 30 '30 850w

"Dr. Dillon's book, despite his experience in Russia, seems to be objective in character, and wholly free from prejudice. The chapters dealing with the peasants, with the cultural campaign and with the condition of women, are of the utmost importance, and wholly instructive. . . Intelligent people see in Russia perhaps the greatest economic and social experiment now in progress in the world. Books like Dr. Dillon's help residents of other lands to understand how this experiment is progressing." W. J. A.
+ Christian Science Monitor p10 My 17 '30 450w
Cleveland Open Shelf p74 My '30

Reviewed by V. F. Calverton
Current Hist 32:634 Jl '30 350w

Reviewed by O. G. Villard
Nation 130:492 Ap 23 '30 420w

"Dr. E. J. Dillon has known Russia since 1877, having lived there as student, university professor, and journalist. The present volume is more concerned with the Russia of to-day than with that of yesterday, and if it is a panegyric of to-day, it has exceptional justification, coming from a man with such a thorough and various knowledge of yesterday." William Plomer
+ Nation and Ath 46:408 D 14 '29 550w

Reviewed by F. L. Schuman
New Repub 63:51 My 28 '30 220w
New Statesman 34:334 D 14 '29 750w

Reviewed by H. R. Knickerbocker
N Y Evening Post p10m My 10 '30 300w

"Dr. Dillon finds it possible to write always with tolerance and quite frequently with sympathy of a revolution which has made a clean sweep of the Russia he knew. Yet one cannot say that a unified impression or a clear-cut judgment really emerges. His findings are not always correlated." Simeon Strunsky
+ — N Y Times p3 My 11 '30 320w

Reviewed by Bernard Smith
N Y World p10m Ap 13 '30 650w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:8 Jl '30 130w

"Dr. Dillon's is an interesting and instructive book, really intended for students of sociology, history and economics. It is written with quietude by one whose years enable him to stand outside and above things. But the optimistic conclusions to which Dr. Dillon comes in many respects and his attempt to idealize Soviet rule as actually practised in Russia will certainly not be accepted by those who have to live in Soviet Russia and therefore must submit to the realities of Soviet rule." M. J. Larsons
+ — Sat R 149:112 Ja 25 '30 850w

"A curious unreality pervades the whole work. Dr. Dillon speaks of this and that as if he had actually seen and touched it, and doubtless he did, but it is plain that the actualities of revolutionary Russia are not real to him in the sense that they are real to those who are creating them or to those of the present generation who visit Russia. He sees things as a very old man might see young lovers or children at play."
Sat R of Lit 7:27 Ag 2 '30 500w

"Dr. Dillon went back in the autumn of 1928 to the country of his adoption, completely unknown to the 'new men,' to see for himself the inside of the Medea's cauldron. With such antecedents one expects to hear at least accents of horror or bewilderment at the conditions of this huge Topsyturvia. Instead, we get a sympathy with and enthusiasm for what the Bolshevists are trying to do, which certainly reflects great credit on Dr. Dillon and his love of Russia, but which is almost valueless to the ordinary person who has not had a similar baptism of Russian experience."
Spec 143:821 N 30 '29 550w

"From his experience of Russia under three Tsars Dr. Dillon is well qualified to note the changes which the new order has brought, and to judge which of those changes are likely to be permanent. He has no cause to love the Soviet leaders: 'Not only did they seize and confiscate my life savings, but indirectly they deprived me of one near and dear, whose loss all the money in the world cannot make good.' It is therefore remarkable, even after reading a book which at times becomes a panegyric of the Soviet system, to find him affirming at the end his belief that Bolshevism has 'a mission on earth, and a mission which will undoubtedly be fulfilled.' "
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p992 N 28 '29 800w

Reviewed by G. Vernadsky
Yale R n s 20:202 autumn '30 650w

DILNOT, FRANK. Lady Jean. 301p $2.50 Holt [7s 6d Brentano's]
30-10258

The Lady Jean was a vivacious Kentish beauty with whom His Highness, Charles Stuart, Prince of Wales, fell in love. The Duke of Buckingham hired a stout fellow, Tarver, from Newgate prison, to abduct the Lady Jean and keep her safely in hiding until the marriage between the Prince and the French Princess Henriette Marie was arranged. Tarver did his work right well, so well indeed that he won the love of Lady Jean and the forgiveness of the Prince.

Booklist 26:396 Jl '30
Bookm 71:xiv Je '30 80w

"Mr. Dilnot knows history and he knows how to write a true and exciting tale."
+ Books p21 Mr 30 '30 250w

"Among the countless number of historical romances the story of Lady Jean must take its place. These stories which combine history with imagination provide pleasant reading. A dash of nobility and royalty, a sprinkling of historical plot and counter-plot, plus a generous portion of dangerous adventure and glowing romance will tone up the monotony of dull life on the cloudiest of days. And if all such tales incorporate a lady so provocative as the Lady Jean and hero so grim and mysterious, yet so gallant and grave withal as John Tarver, let the days of centuries gone inspire many another story of villainy thwarted and tender passion satisfied." T. S. L.
+ Boston Transcript p3 Ap 18 '30 500w
Cleveland Open Shelf p80 My '30
N Y Evening Post p9m My 31 '30 60w
N Y Times p9 My 25 '30 200w

"Mr. Dilnot gives us pleasant glimpses of well-known men of the times of Charles I, and charming views of Kent and Kentish life. The main characters are very definite people on whom we can rely to play their parts unerringly. Whether the Lady Jean Bevill as here portrayed would really have been so absolutely irresistible is a matter for considerable doubt."
+ — Sat R 149:397 Mr 29 '30 120w

"Mr. Dilnot writes with grace, his characters have character, and he has a really first-class tale to tell."
+ Spec 144:792 My 10 '30 130w
Times [London] Lit Sup p354 Ap 24 '30 150w

DIMOCK, HEDLEY SELDON, and HENDRY, CHARLES E. Camping and character; a camp experiment in character education; with a foreword by William H. Kilpatrick. 364p il $3.50 Assn. press

796.54 Camping. Character education

29-13082

"This is not a book about camping, but a book about the building of character and the improvement of personality traits through the skilful use of the resources afforded by organized camps for boys. Its value is primarily to camp counsellors and directors."—Christian Century

"By recording systematically the actions of youngsters engaged in project promotion, by testing them periodically (and in a non-academic manner) for the acquisition of knowledges, by discovering their mastery of camp skills and finally by discussing with them their ideals, the authors have managed to trace with considerable accuracy the development of the youngsters' characters during the camping period. Sample records and ratings and interesting case material make the authors' technique readily understandable. Their volume will appeal to all those who have ever gone to camp, who send their children to camp or who would like to know how to modernize camping procedure."

+ Bookm 69:x Jl '29 220w

"Based upon sound pedagogical principles and employing a thoroughly modern technique of individual case studies and records, it is altogether the most serious and scholarly treatment that has so far been published in this field of education."

+ Christian Century 47:818 Je 25 '30 80w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:9 F '30

Pratt p25 winter '30

"The book is carefully and lucidly written and contains sections that should be in the hands of every camp director and counselor; especially worthwhile are the sections on 'organizing for cooperative living,' the 'control of camp curriculum' and the chapters on 'cooperative government.'" Joshua Lieberman

+ Survey 64:199 My 15 '30 380w

DINGLE, AYLWARD, E. Seaworthy. 275p $2 [2] Houghton [7s 6d Paul, S.]

How sea life aboard the whaling ship Cuttyhunk made a man of young Dick Edwards. The story takes up Dick's numerous adventures during the Cuttyhunk's four-year cruise in the Pacific, including a treasure hunt, mutiny, and a South Sea island romance.

"A tale of deep water worthy of your perusing—as what yarn by Captain Dingle isn't?" Will Cuppy

+ Books p23 N 16 '30 200w

"This is a very good sailorman's yarn, full of salt and spice and adventure."

+ Boston Transcript p2 D 13 '30 300w

"'Seaworthy' is a sort of 'Captains Courageous' of the whaling fleet. The captain has not Kipling's power to write tense narrative—few, if any, have. But he spins a good yarn."

+ — N Y Times p9 D 14 '30 320w

"The author of this story of Pacific whaling shows familiarity with all the details of life on a whaler."

Times [London] Lit Sup p725 S 19 '29 150w

DIPLOMAT, pseud. Murder in the embassy. 250p $2 Cape

30-24621

His Imperial Highness, Prince Hojo, visiting at the Washington embassy, is murdered just at a time when relations between Japan and America are most delicate. But Dennis Tyler manages to keep the news from breaking until the murderer is discovered, and the honor of Lord Robert Murry (who has been strongly implicated) is cleared.

"Diplomat is developing an interesting and unusual form of mystery tale on the lighter and brighter side—one that will veer more and more toward farce unless we miss our guess. In his latest work he skirts the edge of burlesque, falls in, jumps out, and so forth, most amusingly, though with some violence to the classic categories of authorship. Readers of the irreverent shocker will find him no mean satirist. He can't seem to take Washington, satire or murder seriously—which is well enough for a change." Will Cuppy

+ Books p18 O 5 '30 300w

Boston Transcript p5 D 3 '30 200w

"The author displays a close knowledge of the diplomatic service and a sense of humor that is refreshing in the serious business of concocting successful mystery tales." Bruce Rae

+ N Y Times p22 O 19 '30 200w

"A swift tale, with an undertone of pleasant impertinence and raillery." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 156:192 O 1 '30 120w

DIPLOMAT, pseud. Murder in the State department. 253p $2 Cape

30-11382

The murder of an under secretary of state brings to light some rather shady transactions between certain national and international diplomats, leading to a horrible conspiracy against our government. A rival under-secretary on roller skates, a villainous Bolshevik parading as an equally villainous pacifist named Brown, a deadly gas called somnine, which turns its victims a beautiful indigo blue, and a blithe detective of the Philo Vance variety are the main ingredients in this tale of Washington diplomatic circles.

Bookm 71:xvii Jl '30 100w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p14 Je 22 '30 200w

"Without being extremely ludicrous, the yarn is funny enough to cause the reader many an appreciative chuckle and occasional hearty laugh. There is really a mystery not more absurd than many contained in the popular thrillers and quite as absorbing."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Je 11 '30 200w

Reviewed by Dashiell Hammett

N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 26 '30 80w

"The author of this amusing yarn proves himself a real American diplomat by the care with which he avoids all foreign entanglements."

+ N Y Times p25 My 4 '30 220w

"Amusing, highly improbable, and guaranteed to hold your interest firmly to the last chapter." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 155:26 My 7 '30 120w

DIX, TENNILLE. Black Baron; the strange life of Gilles de Rais. 362p il $3.50 Bobbs

B or 92 Rais, Gilles de Laval, seigneur de

30-24454

"The life of Gilles de Rais, companion in arms of Jeanne D'Arc, Marshal of France, and murderer, the dungeons of whose castles held heaps of bones of the children he had slain, has been set forth in The Black Baron. It is a grim and terrible story, and Mr. Dix has written it in an easy and readable style, with much attention to exactitude of external detail."—Outlook

Boston Transcript p2 O 8 '30 550w

"A great deal of energy has gone into the book, and some erudition, especially in the realm of medieval sorcery, but also there has gone a great deal of undergraduate writing. In places the prose is as flamboyant as the Marshal's favorite architecture, but not perhaps so interesting. The volume is over long." Cuthbert Wright

— + New Repub 65:53 N 26 '30 380w

"The novelized form in which the book is written, while adding to the dramatic force and colorfulness, permits the author to take many liberties with the facts. . . For those who want their history tempered with imagination and romance, Mr. Dix's will provide a fascinating and not too misleading evening."

DIX, TENNILLE—Continued
+ N Y Times p10 S 14 '30 600w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 156:160 S 24 '30 120w

"The author is fortified by a wealth of data, well versed in the curious period, and has a peculiar charm of expression. The verified horrors of the story are treated with delicacy, and the biography has the appeal of a novel. Here is sensational history, rationally unfolded." W. B. Shaw
+ R of Rs 82:21 O '30 150w

DIXON, CHARLES. Parachutes for airmen. 124, 30p il $2.50 (7s 6d) Pitman
629.167 Parachutes 30-24026

A technical discussion of the modern types of parachutes, their packing and maintenance, latest developments in the improved pilot chute, and the technique of jumping.

Cleveland Open Shelf p137 N '30

N Y New Tech Bks 15:36 Jl '30

Reviewed by T. J. C. Martyn
N Y Times p4 Jl 13 '30 650w

St Louis 28:236 O '30

"Exceptionally well written: every one of the adventures described—and many have befallen those who have jumped from aeroplanes—is so graphically recorded that the reader's heart stands still. There are also some exceptionally good photographs, and much information of an unusual kind."
+ Spec 145:508 O 11 '30 100w

"A lucid and non-technical description of the principal types of parachute, explaining their method of operation and removing some misapprehensions about the courage needed to use one."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p463 My 29 '30 200w

DIXON, CLARICE MADELEINE. Children are like that. 206p il $2.50 Day
136.7 Child study. Nursery schools. Carson college for orphan girls, Flourtown, Pa. 30-8253

The recorded play-life of pre-school children. In this nursery school the children were divided into three groups, according to age. Guided, without compulsion, by adult directors, the children learn companionship-sharing in play first of all. Under "the universe explored," the author describes small excursions of nature study into the outside world, and the contacts of the children with pets and other animals. There are also descriptions of physical experiencing thru games and work, and expression thru a fundamental approach to the arts.

Booklist 26:379 Jl '30

Bookm 71:vi Je '30 80w

N Y Times p20 Mr 9 '30 350w

"To the reader who appreciates the gossamer texture of a little child's unfolding life, the exquisite sensitiveness with which Miss Dixon has fulfilled her aim is evident. . . Whether the reader is interested in the world of childhood from an aesthetic or a pragmatic point-of-view, this book will furnish him with abundant satisfaction." Edith Day
+ Survey 64:280 Je 15 '30 250w

DIXON, WILLIAM MACNEILE. Hellas revisited. 209p il $4.20 Longmans [10s 6d Arnold, E. & co.]
914.95 Greece—Description and travel [30-6650]

A record of travel in Greece, descriptive of the countryside and famous historical places.

"It is neither an ordinary guide-book nor a watered-down guide-book to the country; but a charming and well-written commentary on the Grecian scene, by one who has drunk deeply of ancient Greek civilisation. The itinerary is sound, and the book has uncommon dignity and quality."
+ New Statesman 34:542 F 1 '30 80w

"In [this volume] history, literature, philosophy, art and science are interwoven into a magic whole. . . Whether read for the purpose of seeing Greece through the eyes of a lover, or for the purpose of preparing to travel in Hellas, this volume will instruct and delight and inspire." W. H. Dunn
+ N Y Times p5 D 22 '29 750w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:27 Mr '30

St Louis 28:145 My '30

"For all his jolly enthusiasm and his obvious material advantages, he is a scholar, and in his book he illumines the innumerable places he visits with the torch of his learning. It is a vivid book which will make the imaginative feel that they are travelling through Mr. Dixon's beloved Hellas and living in memory its ancient history. The less imaginative it will spur to visit the country and explore its myriad places of beauty and historic interest, and, if they do so, they will reread Mr. Dixon's book on their way out."
+ Spec 143:953 D 21 '29 130w

"Professor Dixon's book may well become a bible for Hellenic travellers. It would be sad if the new Greece deprived his successors of the delightful discomforts and deliberate wanderings which, in the absence of railways or good roads through the interior, make his adventures so romantic."
Times [London] Lit Sup p916 N 14 '29 600w

DOBIE, JAMES FRANK. Vaquero of the brush country; partly from the reminiscences of John Young. 314p il $3.50 Southwest press
976.4 Frontier and pioneer life—Texas. Ranch life. Cowboys. Texas rangers 29-27914

"The book possesses a double appeal in that it is ostensibly the personal narrative of the exciting and marvelously adventurous experiences of a single real vaquero and ranchman, Mr. John Young of Alpine, Texas, while it is at the same time a scholarly and authoritative interpretation of the history and social life of a little known, or rather a falsely known, section and a business now long since vanished or relegated to the realm of cheap romance. Mr. Young wanted to make a record of his long and varied contact with the cattle business, and he appealed to Mr. Dobie to put his material into literary form. The results of this combination of the talk of a real vaquero and the accumulated knowledge and interpretative comment of an experienced writer and scholar who is himself an experienced cow man, is a happy one."—Sat R of Lit

"The old cowman's story would have been interesting if it stood alone, but Dobie has filled in liberally from his own extensive acquaintance with the history of the country, with the result that the book has gained merit as real society history. The style is vigorous, vivid, and piquant, and the book will be treasured by students of western lore. Its value is further enhanced by good typography, excellent illustrations, an appendix of sources for the chapter on 'The Bloody Border', and a good index." C. W. Ramsdell
+ Am Hist R 35:679 Ap '30 650w

Booklist 26:275 Ap '30

"Dobie puts his characters down on the printed page exactly as they were in real life. He is a writer of absolute integrity. He is not only instructive but illuminating. His book tells with admirable clarity and veracity of a vanished Texas and a very real West." C. J. Finger
+ Books p15 Ja 19 '30 500w

"One may doubt if any more intimate and authentic depiction of the range has ever been given. Certainly there is nothing on the subject more delightfully written, or more handsomely put into print." W. J. Ghent

+ Nation 130:371 Mr 26 '30 250w

Reviewed by P. H. Boynton
New Repub 63:213 Jl 9 '30 200w

N Y Evening Post p14m N 23 '29 100w

"A book that those interested in the Southwest will find different from other works about that section, since it deals with a little known part of it and does so with a very successful effort to portray and interpret its distinctive spirit and features."

+ N Y Times p34 N 24 '29 180w

"The book reads like a romance from beginning to end, and yet it is in reality a serious, sober, and dependable interpretation of an epoch and an industry. Both the tang of the real speech and thought of a pioneer cowboy and the actual atmosphere of a romantic period are here remarkably well presented. Humor, pathos, exciting adventure, hardships, pleasures, personal anecdotes, and historic facts are admirably blended in the account." L. W. Payne, Jr.

+ Sat R of Lit 6:695 F 1 '30 550w

Reviewed by Clifton Blake
Yale R n s 19:855 summer '30 500w

DOBREE, BONAMY. Restoration tragedy, 1660-1720. 189p $3 (7s 6d) Oxford

822.09 English drama—History and criticism
30-14609

In a companion volume to Restoration Comedy, Bonamy Dobree traces the development of English tragic drama through the period of Dryden, Lee, Otway, Rowe, Congreve and Addison, and relates it to the drama of the twentieth century.

"It is a companion volume to the author's Restoration Comedy, and exhibits once more his thorough knowledge of the period, and critical acumen. It well represents that scholarly literary criticism, at once authoritative, discriminating and graceful, in which English men of letters so generally excel us." A. R. Thompson

+ Bookm 71:229 Ap '30 550w

"It is not Mr. Dobrée's purpose to supersede any or all of the general or highly specialized studies of the period. His book is for those whose knowledge of the field will enable them the more readily to realize the vividness of his comment and the soundness of his analysis." D. A. Roberts

+ Nation 131:275 S 10 '30 700w

"Mr. Bonamy Dobrée's 'Restoration Tragedy' concludes the excellent series of essays on the drama of the late seventeenth century, issued by the Clarendon Press, which includes his earlier study of 'Restoration Comedy' and Mr. Bateson's 'Eighteenth Century Comedy.' The earlier volumes are recognized as the best introductions to their respective and much-neglected subjects; the latest deserves similar recognition."

+ Nation and Ath 46:461 D 28 '29 750w

"Mr. Dobrée, in this sensible and unpretending volume, treats his subject as clearly and fully as the average student can desire. He does not aim at the vague thing called 'completeness,' wisely confining himself to half a dozen representative names. The small fry he leaves to the writers of degree-theses, and plainly holds that the mere permanence of an author's tools is no reason why we should remember him when his work is worthless. He has thus relieved his book of a mass of unnecessary matter."

+ New Statesman 34:336 D 14 '29 950w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1025 D 5 '29 1900w

"Mr. Dobrée's style is perfectly suited to his subject matter; it is uncannily penetrating at some times, at others full of sound and fury." W. T. Perry

+ Yale R n s 20:421 winter '31 100w

DODD, EDWARD HOWARD, jr. Great dipper to Southern cross. 332p il $3.50 Dodd

910.4 Voyages and travels. Chance (schooner)
30-31008

How five Yale graduates, having purchased the schooner Chance, sailed from New London to Bermuda, thence to the South Seas thru to Australia, with Sydney their stopping point. All the interesting events and adventures of the trip are recounted.

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice
Bookm 72:xvii D '30 120w

"A well written account of a diverting, if not highly important, adventure." Arthur Warner

+ Books p7 D 28 '30 550w

"His companions were fortunate in having Mr. Dodd to chronicle their experiences. He tells the story of the cruise, whose occasional monotony even was lazily provocative, with blithe abandon, which, however, holds much shrewd comment and estimate." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p1 N 15 '30 900w

"A well written, interesting account of a collegiate cruise, though more sedate than one would expect from so young an author. It has map end papers and is well illustrated with photographs by the author." Al Chase

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p16 N 29 '30 80w

DONOVAN, JOSEPHINE. Black soil. 320p $2.50 Stratford [7s 6d Methuen]

30-18866

The Connors, of good Irish stock, were among the first emigrants to the newly opened prairie lands of northwestern Iowa. This is the story of their lean and struggling but heroic years—a struggle to win and convert the black soil in spite of drought, insect devastation, the cold of winter, and all the hardships of pioneer life. Gradually, with the arrival of German, Dutch, and Austrian neighbors, the little community of settlers grows, times become easier, and Tim Connor's increasing family gets a little more from life than bare necessities. The character of Nell Connor, a heroine among women of the best pioneer type, is especially well done.

Reviewed by Guy Holt
Bookm 72:207 O '30 50w

Books p10 O 5 '30 250w

Reviewed by Richard Strachey
Nation and Ath 48:169 N 1 '30 80w

"Miss Donovan's study of pioneer life in the American prairie-land of Iowa some fifty years ago has the advantage of telling one more than its story. One learns, with the family of Irish Catholic Connors, what it is like to be lost in a world of snow between home and the township-school; and how a black cloud in the sky can descend in the form of millions of grasshoppers on the crops that represent life for the winter to come, leaving behind a stealthy larva to undermine the promising wheat of the following year; and how finally the coming of the railway can bring the promise of fewer perils in the future."

+ New Statesman 35:680 S 6 '30 120w

"This first novel is a competent narrative of pioneer days on an Iowa farm. That it is without particular distinction of style, that it has not made the most of some of its dramatic incidents and has slightly sentimentalized others will scarcely disturb those whose memories are piqued by the simple details of a vanished past in the land of the tall corn and the waving wheat and wild mustard."

+ — N Y Times p6 O 5 '30 480w

"The story is one of atmosphere, essentially. It will remind many readers of 'My Antonia,' and as a picture of foreign-born pioneers it is not wholly over-shadowed by Miss Cather's novel. Though it is never written with quite the skill that was necessary if we were to feel exactly as Miss Donovan wished us to, 'Black Soil' is usually pointed, so to speak, in the right direction. Miss Donovan is straightforward and honest; it is too bad that she lacks so many of the qualities that might have given her novel real effectiveness." R. B. Macdougall

DONOVAN, JOSEPHINE—Continued
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:122 S 13 '30 370w
Times [London] Lit Sup p784 O 2 '30 180w

DORAU, HERBERT BENJAMIN. Materials for the study of public utility economics. (Social science text-books) 975p il $5 (21s) Macmillan
380.16 Public utilities 30-4528

"A collection of readings in which the major emphasis is on the growth, organization, and management of utilities, and problems of governmental control. There are a number of selections on the legal status of public service industries, alternative forms of regulation, valuation and rate-making, taxation, and public ownership."—Am Pol Sci R

"A very comprehensive and useful collection of readings. The author has attempted to select material representing various points of view with respect to these controversial subjects. The wide scope of the book has necessitated the use of somewhat brief excerpts, but these have been judiciously selected. There is here much of value for courses in economics or political science dealing with public utility problems."
+ Am Pol Sci R 24:794 Ag '30 130w

"The work of Dr. Dorau and his associates is to be commended as valuable pioneer classification of sources and materials—the sort of work that is of value to teachers and students in the field of public utility economics and to employees of public service companies who are—or should be—seeking a broader view of their work and problems." G. L. Wilson in Lefax p29 Ap '30 360w
+ Special Libraries 21:343 N '30 180w

DORR, MRS RHETA LOUISE (CHILDE). Drink: coercion or control? 330p $2.50 Stokes
351.761 Prohibition. Temperance. Liquor problem 29-29367

A study of the problem of prohibition in the United States by the author of "Susan B. Anthony." Mrs Dorr contends that coercion has failed of its object. A discussion of temperance education in Sweden, and of the Quebec system in dealing with the liquor question is included.

Booklist 26:188 F '30
Reviewed by W. M. Houghton
Books p10 F 9 '30 180w
Boston Transcript p5 Ja 11 '30 400w
Cleveland Open Shelf p72 My '30

"Mrs. Dorr and her publishers are both very sure that there is no propaganda in the book. To a certain extent that is true, but it is also true that the author, being a person of vigorous mental endowments, holds vehement opinions on the matter of the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead act and does not hesitate to express them. Nevertheless, her book is a sane, constructive and illuminating contribution to a discussion that is sadly in need of those qualities."
+ N Y Times p23 Ja 19 '30 600w
St Louis 28:64 Mr '30
Reviewed by A. G. Fox
Survey 63:597 F 15 '30 140w
Wis Lib Bul 26:37 Ja '30

"While the book is undoubtedly a valuable contribution to this perplexing subject, it does not go to the root of the problem." H. S. Ross
+ — World Tomorrow 13:471 N '30 550w

DORRANCE, JAMES FRENCH. Forbidden range. 307p $2 Macaulay 30-17937

A western adventure story featuring Tommy Cravens, cowboy scientist, and his discoveries in the Yellowstone region—not the least of which discoveries is a pretty and spirited ranch girl.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p10 Jl 20 '30 130w
Boston Transcript p2 Ag 6 '30 380w
N Y Evening Post p12 S 20 '30 100w
N Y Times p16 Ag 10 '30 120w

DORTHY, R. D. Above and below. 268p $2.50 Holt [7s 6d Secker]

An afternoon in London, culminating in a small dinner party, circumscribes this study of the emotional and mental conflicts of a few chosen people: Beatrice and Stephen Andrews; Frederick Lee, in love with Beatrice; Helen, and her husband Marley, whom nobody likes very much. The relationships of these characters, their varied reactions to each other, make up the substance of the novel.

"The reader is insulated from emotional contact with the people of the story, and even the final scene, admirably conceived as it is, fails in its effect." Guy Holt
— Bookm 71:351 Je '30 200w

"However tenuous the tale, its author has achieved a quiet, lucid analysis. Without too great mental effort, you can follow the flux of thought and emotion and, better still, you can understand it. A current of clear air permeates the dark waters of these human reactions. . . Yet a flaw exists which deprives the book of force. The author, who creeps into the minds of some five persons, seems to have selected them at random."
+ — Books p12 Ap 20 '30 380w

"The book is an interesting experiment, sensitively and intelligently carried out. It has serious imperfections, such as a seemingly haphazard selection of the particular minds which shall be revealed to the reader, an undue emphasis on characters not integral to the drama. But the author's technique of analysis, more lucid and clear-edged than that of the stream-of-consciousness school, is conspicuously successful."
+ — New Repub 63:134 Je 18 '30 150w

" 'Above and Below' barely escapes being a parody of Mrs. Woolf's style, which could be considered a misfortune, not for Mrs. Woolf, but for this novel, except that there is nothing in the book to warrant any concern for it whatever."
— N Y Times p22 Mr 30 '30 400w
Sat R of Lit 6:1115 Je 7 '30 280w

DOS PASSOS, JOHN. 42nd parallel. 426p $2.50 Harper [7s 6d Constable] 30-5538

Taking his title from a book on climatology, which states that storms in America travel from west to east on a track roughly corresponding to the 42nd parallel, Mr Dos Passos deals kaleidoscopically with the lives and fortunes of Mac, Janey, Eleanor, Ward and Charlie, who are blown on the storm track of this parallel New Yorkward. Technically, the novel resembles the author's "Manhattan Transfer," but its method is more intricate. The five main threads, dealt with successively, are interwoven in their separate flash-like instalments with the nineteen "newsreels," or snatches of headlines, popular songs, etc.; with the twenty-seven sections entitled the Camera eye, consisting of cross-section character sketches; and nine biographical studies of American leaders such as Eugene Debs, Luther Burbank, Edison, Carnegie, and Bill Haywood.

"A novel that excites and satisfies more thoroughly than almost any other of its time. It is not a book that would meet the tests that Mr. Griswold set in a recent Atlantic, and those who hold for propriety in literature had best beware of it. It transfers life to the page by avoiding nothing true which is also relevant—and in lives like these much ugliness is relevant. By never forgetting that these lives are important to those who live them, Dos Passos follows them through futility and commonplaceness—to the final futility of the war—with an irony and understanding that give them meaning, and with a sense of aliveness that quickens every page." M. A. Best

+ Atlantic Bookshelf p18 Je '30 800w

Booklist 27:28 S '30

Bookm 71:210 Ap '30 550w

"Such a book abandons the ordinary structures of fiction for a form as intricate as that of a symphony. It gives no satisfaction at all for those who would know how the story 'comes out.' Its main theme would seem to be nothing less than life in America through three decades, with a range from coast to coast, from top to bottom of the economic scale, from the sublime to the ridiculous in emotions. If 'Manhattan Transfer' was baffling in the almost indiscriminate richness of its texture, 'The 42nd Parallel' is doubly so, in its added range of time and place, its bombardment of ideas, types, social movements and individual lives. One cannot but admire the range of perception and sympathy that makes possible such a book, the stimulating courage that essays a synthesis of time, class, geography and social theory." Mary Ross

+ Books p3 F 23 '30 1300w

"The technique is unquestionably fascinating. The reader's impression is of the extreme hodge-podginess, the lack of direction, of modern life. But Mr. Dos Passos does not, to this reader at least, make his experiment wholly successful, as he did in 'Manhattan Transfer.' 'The 42d Parallel' is, instead of being the masterpiece which it might have been, a brilliant tour de force." Fanny Butcher

+ — Chicago Daily Tribune p15 Mr 1 '30 600w

Christian Century 47:562 Ap 30 '30 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p111 Jl '30

"Mr. Dos Passos is a writer of extraordinary talent; he knows American cities, he knows a great deal about life, he has a shrewd insight into men and women. 'The 42nd Parallel' is full of amusing incidents, and at times, particularly in the early pages, it is absorbing. But it leaves one wondering whether Dos Passos's present method is not more a handicap than a help to him. This kaleidoscopic shaking of the fragments of several novels into one no longer has the attraction of novelty, and its other advantages are not always clear. . . I must, however, bear witness to the fascination of the nineteen 'newsreels' scattered through the book. Here the kaleidoscopic method achieves some brilliant effects." Henry Hazlitt

+ — Nation 130:298 Mr 12 '30 850w

"Mr. Dos Passos has removed the conception of historic time out of his main story, and bracketed it off into sections entitled 'Newsreels.' It is doubtful if one obtains a better perspective of the events of the century in relation to the progress of his characters by means of these interpolations complete in themselves. But it is at least an interesting experiment. Throughout the book one is intensely aware of the restless energy of a great country, which the author so ably conveys as much by his direct and harsh style as by the subject-matter of his work. No library of modern American literature is complete in which Mr. Dos Passos is not represented." Richard Strachey

+ Nation and Ath 48:170 N 1 '30 200w

" 'The 42nd Parallel,' when it is finished, may well turn out to be the most important novel which any American of Dos Passos's generation has written. . . Dos Passos, who has read as much and traveled as widely as Wilder, does not always avoid spinning literature when he should give us a first-hand impression of reality; and, in consequence, he is sometimes flimsy, where Dahlberg dealing with a similar subject, would be authentic and hard. But though in intensity and execution 'The 42nd Parallel' is not superior to Hemingway, for example, from the point of view of its literary originality and its intellectual interest, it seems to me by far the most remarkable, the most encouraging American novel which I have read since the War." Edmund Wilson

+ — New Repub 62:157 Mr 26 '30 1200w

"This is certainly one of the most racily intelligent and authentic American novels of the past few years, and marks its author as a steady, surehanded craftsman whose work is likely to maintain its solid quality. All round, the metal rings true."

+ New Statesman 35:622 Ag 23 '30 600w

Reviewed by John Chamberlain

N Y Times p5 Mr 2 '30 1000w

"Despite his interest in commonplace lives, Mr. Dos Passos has described them in no commonplace way." Harry Hansen

N Y World p11 F 19 '30 650w

Sat R 150:345 S 20 '30 800w

"Mr. Dos Passos is, like all the modern American realists, a reporter, a community singer, who is obsessed with the idea that he has got to shout the whole history of the United States since 1900 through a megaphone. He has no emotions, only moods: moods of revulsion, satire, lyricism, sensuality. He writes with startling, kaleidoscopic vividness. He has vitality. The opening chapters suggest that, if he abandons mechanical stunts and devices, and leaves American history and biography to look after themselves, he has the makings of a first-class picaresque novelist—American literature's greatest present need. At the moment he is like a man who is trying to run in a dozen directions at once, succeeding thereby merely in standing still and making a noise. Sometimes it is amusing noise and alive; often monotonous." V. S. Pritchett

Spec 145:422 S 27 '30 250w

"Mr Dos Passos started with an interesting scheme, but the material to realize it is lacking."

— + Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 2 '30 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p698 S 4 '30 650w

DOSTOEVSKI, FEDOR MIKHAILOVICH. Letters to his wife; tr. from the Russian by Elizabeth Hill and Doris Mudie; and with an introd. by Prince D. S. Mirsky. 392p il $5 Smith, R.R. [21s Constable]

B or 92 30-17750

"This volume contains the complete collection of letters (one hundred and sixty-two in number) which Dostoyevsky wrote to Anna Grigorievna, his second wife. She preserved them in her buckram wallet and annotated them with utmost care. Together with her notes and the notes added to them by the Russian editors, they now appear in English translation, most of them for the first time."—N Y Times

Booklist 27:36 S '30

"Here is a volume which at once illumines Dostoevsky's private life and adds to the difficulty of plumbing his personality." Avrahm Yarmolinsky

+ Books p4 Je 29 '30 970w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 26 '30 700w

"There is something slightly dubious about this literary vivisection. One can only say, as the upstart modern school of criticism searches these letters for its purpose: 'Much joy may you get out of them.' The innocent will remember that, while these detailed, fussy, harassed and intimately affectionate sheets were being written, something vastly more important and interesting was being produced by their writer: 'The Idiot' and 'The Brothers Karamazov.' " V. S. P.

Christian Science Monitor p5 Mr 8 '30 600w

"One would expect to find in his letters abandonment and gloom, nobility and spiritual understanding. There is plenty of abandonment and plenty of gloom, but the compensation of breadth and power is absent. Something pathetically comic clings to the fussy and irritable traveller, with his miserable journeys, his bad hotels, his churlish fellow guests, his toothache or cold in the head, and the breakdown in his postal arrangements. These letters, uni-

DOSTOEVSKII, F. M.—Continued
form in tone whatever their occasion, have the nightmarish atmosphere of strain and difficulty over trifles which is the mark of nervous disorganization. They make, in this really excellent English translation, a book which is as monotonous and interesting as life itself." Barrington Gates

Nation and Ath 46:808 Mr 15 '30 900w

New Statesman 34:504 Ja 25 '30 600w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p8m Je 28 '30 180w

"In these letters no startling revelations of the great writer are to be found, yet they add to Dostoyevsky's familiar figure a number of characteristic additional traits and details that have great documentary value." Alexander Nazaroff

+ N Y Times p10 Ap 27 '30 900w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:67 O '30

St Louis 28:218 S '30

"The letters are indispensable for the study of Dostoyevsky's life."

+ Sat R 149:170 F 8 '30 650w

"We read on. Something holds us; some feeling that, after all, this is not morbid, not quite the mere egotism of a bore whom it would be impossible to live with. His wife treasured these letters, annotating them with care. She lived through the torturing anxiety of the mad years portrayed in them, and her love and reverent devotion suffered no hurt. Gradually we begin to share her feelings, discovering in these wild dithyrambs a profound sincerity and effort to tear down those barriers of spirit, mind, and flesh which keep one human being from another." Richard Church

+ Spec 144:95 Ja 18 '30 1050w

Times [London] Lit Sup p55 Ja 23 '30 1550w

DOTTERER, RAY HARBAUGH. Philosophy by way of the sciences; an introductory textbook. 469p $2.50 (10s 6d) Macmillan

100 Philosophy. Science 29-23502

"A textbook for beginners, based on material used by the author, Professor of psychology in Franklin and Marshall College, in his introductory courses. It is a survey of results achieved in the several fields of scientific research as a preliminary to a study of philosophy."—Times [London] Lit Sup

---

Reviewed by C. M. Perry
Int J Ethics 41:133 O '30 220w

"One of the chief virtues of the work is that the author is not trying, at all costs, to indoctrinate the reader with a philosophical viewpoint. Where he has definite opinions to present they are suggested to the mind of the student after discussion, rather than being featured as the only possible position. The chief defect of the book is the omission of systematic discussion of the social sciences. . . The difficulties facing the writer of a textbook for the survey course are so many and so varied, however, that Professor Dotterer deserves to be congratulated upon a capital piece of work." P. W. Ward

+ — J Philos 27:303 My 22 '30 700w

"Dr. Dotterer is, of course, not the first teacher to have led his students to approach 'philosophy by way of the sciences'. But we do not recall any introductory text-book which conducts its reader along this road so thoroughly and competently as the book under consideration. . . To make philosophical discussions clear to the general reader is not an easy task, but it is here accomplished. The author writes lucidly and forcibly, and his criticism is always marked by modesty and sanity."

+ Nature 125:521 Ap 5 '30 900w

St Louis 28:91 Ap '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p170 F 27 '30 50w

DOTTRENS, ROBERT. New education in Austria; ed. by Paul L. Dengler. 226p $3 Day

370.9436 Education—Austria 30-17717

"A study of the wide reforms and progressive changes in Austrian education, relating it to education in the United States."—Publishers' Weekly

---

Bookm 72:iv S '30 280w

Reviewed by Emanuel Blum
Books p21 S 14 '30 600w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 2 '30 330w

Churchman p28 Ag 2 '30 80w

"The Austrian volume, substantively a valuable account of one of the most interesting educational experiments in Europe, is edited in so awkward a fashion and presented in so crude an English dress (the book would appear to have been written first in French) as to place it at a marked disadvantage in point of readableness and general interest." William MacDonald

+ — N Y Times p10 Jl 6 '30 400w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:13 Ag '30 150w

"The volume is on the whole an undistinguished presentation of little more than the school reform as seen by a schoolman with scarcely any attempt to paint in the background of the social, economic, and political forces without which an interpretation of modern educational reforms is almost unintelligible."

— Sat R of Lit 7:91 Ag 30 '30 280w

"A vivid and adequate picture of a radical, widespread, and successful educational revolution. Unfortunately, Dr. Dengler's editing is singularly inept. He interrupts Dr. Dottren's narrative with lengthy parentheses, the material of which ought to have been relegated to the appendix or to an occasional footnote. And yet he passes by such expressions as 'feminine education' and is himself guilty of many lengthy circumlocutions." L. L. W. Wilson

+ — Survey 65:230 N 15 '30 500w

DOUGHERTY, RAYMOND PHILIP. Nabonidus and Belshazzar; a study of the closing events of the Neo-Babylonian empire. (Yale oriental ser. Researches) 216p $3 Yale univ. press [13s 6d Oxford]

935.4 Babylonia—History. Cuneiform inscriptions. Nabonidus, king of Babylonia. Belshazzar 29-15069

"Professor Dougherty has availed himself of access to the large Yale Babylonian Collection to prepare, upon the original texts copied from all available Neo-Babylonian material, a monograph detailing Belshazzar's role in history. The whole work is a study of the closing events of the Neo-Babylonian Empire and material not to be found in the Yale Collection has been drawn upon to supply lacunae in previous records. The political life of this period is examined in detail and non-cuneiform literature is first arrayed and made to yield a background for later, detailed texts. The lists of Neo-Babylonian kings led naturally to a discussion of the noble and exalted ancestry of Nabonidus and the prominence of Belshazzar before his father became king."—Times [London] Lit Sup

---

"Much technical material is in the footnotes, but the author is a teacher as well as scholar. The excellent summaries, lucid style, page indentation, and convenient form of the volume make it a genuine asset to the thinking man's library." C. S. Knopf

+ Christian Century 47:786 Je 18 '30 300w

"Notwithstanding the elaborate arguments and the expenditure of labor and ingenuity, this book fails to prove its point. The admirable Introduction by Professor Montgomery to his critical commentary on Daniel still remains the very last word that can be said on the subject. And this is not because of any fault of the author. He has done everything that it was possible to do, and as well as it could be done. But no one, however skilful and thorough, can be successful with an argument of this type.

Apologetics and unbiased scientific presentation are most difficult to mix." Edward Chiera

J Religion 10:401 Jl '30 2000w

St Louis 28:53 F '30

"The translations of cuneiform texts are uniformly excellent and a full index follows the series of careful essays. This book is a worthy member of the Yale Oriental Series and the book is so arranged that the historian who is not an Assyriologist can profit by every step in the author's argument."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p823 O 17 '29 250w

DOUGLAS, LLOYD CASSEL. Magnificent obsession. 330p $2.50 Willett

29-22201

The "magnificent obsession" that was the secret of the famous Dr Hudson's success—a newly interpreted Christian teaching—was put into practice at Dr Hudson's death by the young man who became his successor as a brain-specialist, Bobby Merrick. Bobby, by continuing his "personality-investments" in the way of secret philanthropies, as advocated by Dr Hudson's formula, miraculously succeeds, and makes a famous surgical invention with which he is able to save the life of the woman he loves.

"Told in half the space which the novelist occupies, 'Magnificent Obsession' might be ticketed as an entertaining product, but Mr. Douglas never uses one word when five will serve."

— Books p13 F 2 '30 140w

"It is a good story, not one to read when seeking slumber, but first-class reading for the tired man or woman who cannot forget the business worries of the day, for it quickly absorbs one's entire attention."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 15 '30 170w

"In the pulpit, Dr. Douglas is a good preacher, but in this novel he is no preacher at all. Though this is his first novel, he is here all novelist. He can create characters who seem as real as anyone you know. He can create situations of dramatic intensity, and he can weave his people and incidents into a plot which is a going concern right up to the last page. If it were a play, I would say that it was good to the last drop—of the curtain. Above all, he can write dialogue with more skill than any but a very few of the first rank novelists." W. E. Garrison

+ Christian Century 46:1378 N 6 '29 1250w

+ N Y Times p9 Ja 12 '30 260w

"The fault with many a modern novel is that in it nothing happens. It is one merit of 'Magnificent Obsession' that it really has a plot in the sense that older novelists understood that word. Incident follows incident with impelling force. Love, finance, accident, injury and death all play their part in depicting a character controlled by a great ideal." E. C. Marriner

+ Portland Evening News p5 Ja 22 '30 180w

DOUGLAS, NORMAN. Good-bye to Western culture; some footnotes on East and West. (Eng title: How about Europe?) 241p $3 Harper [7s 6d Chatto]

901 Civilization, Occidental. India—Social conditions. Europe—Social conditions. Mayo, Katherine 30-22087

In a series of approximately a hundred brief essays, notes and marginal jottings, Norman Douglas, the well-known English author, indicts the social, political and moral evils of continental Europe, as compared with those oriental evils exploited in Katherine Mayo's Mother India. Mr Douglas believes that the black marks upon our Western records outnumber those of Eastern countries; he cites specific instances and statistics concerning Western prostitution, child marriages, disease, uselessly harmful laws, institutions, etc.

"This is one of those rare books we can read profitably for the sheer delight of the author's cleverness and style. Norman Douglas, author of that tour de force, South Wind, is worth reading not for the wisdom of his observations, the excellence of his plots, or the emulation which might be accorded his example. But he is unquestionably worth reading for his pungent phrase, his sardonic and caustic wit, and his habit of standing every conventional idea upon its head."

+ Bookm 72:196 O '30 380w

"Mr. Norman Douglas is angry. Some time ago a friend who was seeing him off on a railway journey thrust a copy of 'Mother India' into his hand. Reading it made him angry and led him to make footnotes. Long after he has expanded these hundred-odd notes of his, separated them with triple asterisks and called them 'Goodbye to Western Culture.' Why should Norman Douglas want to write on any subject in Menckenese? A bludgeon in the hands of a finished swordsman jars one's sensibilities. . . His book is a thoroughly amusing one to read: how could anything he wrote fail to be amusing? But he wasted the time of a first-rate ironist when he wrote it." Stringfellow Barr

— + Books p3 S 7 '30 900w

Boston Transcript p2 S 24 '30 500w

Reviewed by C. M. Perry

Int J Ethics 41:272 Ja '31 380w

"Mr. Douglas, as a social observer, is the bohemian par excellence. His learning is episodic, irresponsible, clever, empty. His philosophy of criticism is 'Ain't we got fun?' And the courage of his 'Good-Bye to Western Culture' is really but an au revoir until we meet him in his next book. Let's hope it will be as good as 'South Wind' in the field of little esoteric souls whom he knows with such delicate perfection. Even in this book, so empty and so smart, his long and exact and intimate mastery of the English tongue occasionally throws up a sentence of such unimprovable felicity that it is a joy in itself." Benjamin Stolberg

+ — Nation 131:351 O 1 '30 1050w

Reviewed by Raymond Mortimer

Nation and Ath 47:570 Ag 2 '30 750w

Reviewed by Saxon Salgood

N Y Times p1 S 7 '30 1250w

"You cannot fail to be impressed with Mr. Douglas's indictment. Goodbye to Western Culture is something like an equivalent in book form for the Americana department in the American Mercury. It should have been entitled Occidentalia. It is, indeed, a group of footnotes for a book which we hope Mr. Douglas will write some day." Harry Salpeter

N Y World p11 S 4 '30 600w

"There is not the slightest doubt but that the charges preferred against western culture are in the main true, and when compiled as they are here they make reading matter that is as startling as it is terrifying. The individual who is not made to think by reading this book is dead with prejudice and immune to reason. Moreover, the style of the study is faultlessly catching and in makeup Harpers never did a neater piece of work." A. W. P.

+ Outlook 156:108 S 17 '30 280w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:89 D '30

St Louis 28:274 N '30

Reviewed by Osbert Burdett

Sat R 149:791 Je 21 '30 1150w

"In this book, he indulges himself in a leisurely, humorous way, by attacks upon the habits, beliefs, governments, intellectual attainments, social ideals, and moral hypocrisies—in short, the scale of values by which life is lived in Europe and England today: and though he does not as yet 'know' America, his standards of criticism are as perfectly applicable to this country as those in which he has lived. He writes with rigorous candor, a very lively wit, and occasional bursts of really fine invective." Muriel Draper

+ Sat R of Lit 7:359 N 22 '30 1100w

Spec 144:943 Je 7 '30 220w

"Mr Douglas often writes with the combined ease and pungency that would be expected of the author of 'South Wind.' But he would be more convincing if he were less petulant and if he had undertaken to show how some of the aberrations he declaims against can be checked or corrected."

DOUGLAS, NORMAN—Continued

Springf'd Republican p10 S 12 '30 750w

DOUGLAS, O. pseud. See Buchan, A.

DOUGLAS, PAUL HOWARD. Real wages in the United States, 1890-1926. (Pollak publications) 682p il $7.50 Pollack foundation; Houghton

331.2973 Wages. Cost and standard of living. Labor and laboring classes—United States 30-12884

The author, professor of industrial relations in the University of Chicago, attempts in this book to measure the material progress which the American workers have obtained during the years from 1890 to 1926. By working out new indexes of the cost of living, new and refined series of wage-rates, and averages of worker's earnings it has been possible to get a measurement of the relative purchasing power, thruout the period, of hourly and weekly wage-rates, of the annual earnings of the employed and of the yearly income of the working-class as a whole.

"Professor Douglas has thoroughly and skillfully exhausted the available sources on wage incomes from 1890 to 1926. . . The results achieved are, however, in some respects at least, more negative than positive. . . Mr. Douglas' structures against Brissenden's unemployment study are admirable. But had he applied the same critical judgment to his own methods it is questionable whether any chapter on unemployment estimates would have appeared in his book. . . The really valuable parts of the book are those dealing with money wages and earnings. Of even more interest and service than the index numbers are the figures giving the absolute average wages or earnings hourly, weekly or annually from year to year. This work is done with such thoroughness and skill as to command the utmost confidence. . . The chief criticism is the failure to distinguish with sufficient clarity the conclusive from the doubtful." A. H. Hansen

+ — Am Econ R 20:747 D '30 1400w

Booklist 27:50 O '30

"In finally evaluating the description of wage levels and tendencies, which is the great contribution of this book, one must not claim for it more than it actually does achieve. It gives an excellent panorama, but at the same time certain things are necessarily sacrificed to breadth of view and simplicity of treatment." J. A. Flexner

+ — Books p13 Je 15 '30 920w

"It is a scholarly work of marked and permanent value, intended not simply for reading but for constant reference." F. L. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 23 '30 800w

"It is a monumental work—the last word on the question, a source book for students and publicists, an authoritative statistical report on the fluctuations in wages and an analysis in terms of the actual wage of the whole working class in this country, measured by annual income and its capacity to purchase the goods required to live." A. W. Taylor

+ Christian Century 47:967 Ag 6 '30 650w

Reviewed by John Cummings

Ind & Eng Chem 22:917 Ag '30 500w

Reviewed by Hazel Kyrk

J Home Econ 22:686 Ag '30 850w

"With inadequate and puzzling raw materials he has painted the most complete picture of the course of American wages we have yet had: and by his courage and ingenuity he has made a contribution to American economic history that should place all students deeply in his debt." Leo Wolman

+ New Repub 64:53 Ag 27 '30 1200w

"Professor Douglas has analyzed the existing material with his usual painstaking care, has reconstructed incomplete statistical series and has pieced together disjointed statistical fragments into continuous indexes which enable his readers to see a definite picture of probable or possible changes in real incomes of workers from 1890 to 1926 inclusive. In magnitude, his work is comparable to the labors of Hercules, while in social value, it far transcends the fabulous stunts performed by that Greek hero. . . His book must be recognized as the most profoundly scientific and thorough-going study in the field of wages and incomes of workers which has thus far appeared." Royal Meeker

+ N Y Times p12 Jl 13 '30 1150w

"There is the germ of an economic revolution in the findings of this significant book." John Carter

Outlook 155:108 My 21 '30 200w

St Louis 28:205 S '30

"A remarkable book and it should be so heralded. It is remarkable because of the boldness and enormous industry employed by the author in bringing together a mass of statistical material bearing on hours of labor, earnings, and unemployment in a great variety of industries in the United States, also in the simplifying of these materials into a few index numbers. For the first time we are shown in a year-by-year measurement the changing social and economic welfare of our laboring classes." W. F. Ogburn

+ World Tomorrow 13:426 O '30 750w

DOWNING, ELLIOT ROWLAND. Science in the service of health. (Longmans' school science ser.) 320p il $2 Longmans

610.9 Hygiene—History. Infection and infectious diseases 30-14869

A textbook combining the essentials of bacteriology and a study of the functions of the human body. The first part of the book treats of the war on disease and the effects of important bacteriological discoveries. The last chapter contains a discussion of modern discoveries in problems of nutrition and growth.

"The book is written in popular language; the facts are correctly stated; and a great deal of interesting history is given. There are some unfortunate misprints. Some of the most interesting histories, like that of anthrax, for example, which was the first germ ever proved to be the cause of a disease, and the study of which has taught us much about bacteriology, are inadequate. In general, the book belongs to the better class of its kind. The printing is excellent." M. P. Ravenel

+ — Am J Pub Health 20:1167 O '30 200w

"There have been few contributions of the type of this book. The author sets a very high standard for those that are to follow. The book is well written in language that is forceful yet simple enough for junior high school pupils. The interest is sustained throughout, and it is a book that will stimulate further reading and study and encourage independent investigation." M. M. Wyman

+ El School J 31:234 N '30 850w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:17 Ap '30

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:74 O '30

St Louis 28:210 S '30

DOYLE, SIR ARTHUR CONAN. Complete Sherlock Holmes; with a pref. by Christopher Morley. memorial ed 2v $3.75 Doubleday, Doran

30-23546

"Here, in two moderate-sized volumes, is every tale of Sherlock Holmes that Conan Doyle has set down. From that memorable day in 1891 when 'The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes' appeared, nine volumes devoted to the greatest figure in detective fiction have come from the press. They are all here, printed in clear, large type on India paper, a total of about 2,000 pages."—N Y Times

Booklist 27:164 D '30

Bookm 72:xx S '30 300w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p10 S 7 '30 1100w
Chicago Daily Tribune p13 O 4 '30 80w

"This is a set of books which every lover of the detective story will wish to have."
+ N Y Times p33 O 19 '30 80w

"Between the covers of two neatly bound volumes appear all the stories in which Conan Doyle's incomparable detective plays a role. Surely here is a royal feast to set before the lover of detective literature."
+ Sat R of Lit 7:122 S 13 '30 80w

DOYLE, SIR ARTHUR CONAN. Edge of the unknown. 332p $2.50 Putnam [7s 6d Murray, J.]

133.9 Spiritualism [30-24063]

In this, his last work before death, Conan Doyle sets forth the results of his investigations, from a rationally intelligent viewpoint, upon the subject of spiritualism. Like Sir Oliver Lodge, Doyle believed in the possibility of psychic revelation thru seances, prophetic dreams and other methods of communication. The opening chapter of the book contains an interesting interpretation of Houdini's remarkable talents. Other chapters of interest are those entitled: The law of the ghost; Dwellers on the border; The half-way house of matter; A new light on old crimes.

Booklist 27:186 Ja '31
Books p12 Ja 4 '31 200w
N Y Times p32 N 9 '30 200w

"Unfortunately his eagerness to believe weakens the proofs he offers. There are certain scientific explanations of various phenomena which he ignores. A greater knowledge of abnormal psychology and an understanding that good faith is not always proof of absence of trickery, would have made him a more reliable observer." W. R. Brooks
— Outlook 156:391 N 5 '30 100w

"The longest essay is entitled 'The Riddle of Houdini,' and as a study of that very remarkable man by an antagonist who had met him on terms of intimacy it possesses considerable interest. The rest of the volume is made up of psychic experiences in narrative form, some few of them personal to the author. These, though pleasantly told, offer little that is novel and nothing that is convincing, for Sir Arthur's enthusiasm for the cause he espoused seems to have warped his judgment in almost every direction."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p600 Jl 24 '30 450w

DRAKE, HENRY BURGESS. Korea of the Japanese. 225p il $4 Dodd

915.19 Korea

The author of this book on Korea and its people was for some time a professor of English at the preparatory school of Keijo Imperial University. He writes therefore from close first-hand observation of his subject, describing among other things, the inns, graves, shops, schools, sports, and missions of this comparatively little visited country.

Books p30 D 7 '30 150w

"His entire story is readable and well balanced."
+ Boston Transcript p2 D 24 '30 450w

"Anyone interested in the Orient will find here only so much rubbish. . . I do not doubt that Mr. Drake has been to Korea in the flesh. He must surely have smelled kimchi, the native pickle, however dulled his nostrils in the smelling of his favorite cheese. But certainly he has never smelled the poetry of Korea, or the painting, or any of the antique native art. Probably no man visiting Korea has been better equipped with easy, enticing language for an imaginative volume, and no man has made poorer use of good style in describing, not Korea, but some cloudy personal spot in his own mind." Younghill Kang
— New Repub 65:224 Ja 7 '31 500w

"It is written in charming English and its very interesting illustrations are reproduced from the author's photographs. One gets from the book, notwithstanding the fact that it is sketchy and fragmentary, a clear and vivid conception of the people and their relation to Japan, and many graphic portrayals of scenes and life."
+ N Y Times p20 D 21 '30 200w
St Louis 28:300 D '30

"A light but very pleasing addition to the somewhat copious literature on the subject of what was once called the Hermit Kingdom, a country which now, however, possesses for the world a very special importance."
+ Spec 145:472 O 4 '30 260w

"The reader who wishes to know Korea, not too intimately and certainly not in his own body, cannot do better than read 'Korea of the Japanese.' The traveller who eventually hopes to tread the bright red soil of Chao Hsien should have read it before he lands in the peninsula. The book is admirably illustrated from photographs taken by the author."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p929 N 13 '30 650w

DREISER, THEODORE. Gallery of women. 2v 823p $5 Liveright [10s Constable]

29-27590

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Reviewed by Mary Ross
Atlantic Bookshelf p28 Ap '30 400w
Booklist 26:234 Mr '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p61 Ap '30

"Mr. Dreiser is a master of that style of narrative which achieves its vividness by a personal contact with the reader: a gossipy, familiar style at times. This informality is often enough ungainly and amateurish; yet it makes his points with a startling accuracy. Without a strong connecting interest, this very uniform technique is inclined to pall: 550 pages of these stories are enough to induce slight mental indigestion." H. J. B. Lintott
+ — Nation and Ath 47:58 Ap 12 '30 150w

"A Gallery of Women is not a good collection of stories. . . It is not only with Mr. Dreiser's stories, or, rather, story that we are quarrelling. We could forgive the story, if there was much in the way of successful characterisation, if one got more than crumbs of truth. But one only does get crumbs of truth."
— New Statesman 35:84 Ap 26 '30 320w

"With an indescribable lightness of touch Mr. Dreiser goes far beneath the surface and touches the sensitive strings of human hearts. . . To doubt the veracity and sincerity which permeate the telling of these stories would be impossible; and our interest is held as by a charm throughout the many and varied stages of the book."
+ Sat R 149:492 Ap 19 '30 520w

"Nobody questions the existence of plenty of women who are thus definitely out for blood. But when such an overwhelming number appear in one group, it begins to look less like the chance of observing and more like premeditation. It gives the impression that the author is supporting a thesis." R. W. Brown
Sat R of Lit 6:707 F 8 '30 1600w

"A Gallery of Women is long, too long perhaps, and continued application to it breeds a certain suspicion of the author's completeness as a short story writer. . . He writes always with a fresh outlook on life and an easy tolerance which is pleasantly unobtrusive. Moreover, he is sufficiently self-critical to know in which direction his talents lie, and A Gallery of Women has a certain consistency of method, as well as subject, which relates it at once to the novel, and lends it an estimable solidity of character." I. M. Parsons
+ — Spec 144:634 Ap 12 '30 220w

DREPPERD, CARL W. Early American prints. (Century lib. of Am. antiques) 232p il $4 Century

760 Engravings, American. Lithographs, American 30-10916

A book for collectors on the art of engraving in America from colonial times to the Civil war. The author deals in chronological order with various print-making processes. There are chapters on the golden age of American engraving, the development of Currier and Ives prints, book and magazine illustrations, and early American caricatures.

Booklist 26:384 Jl '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p150 D '30

"The work will have very great value for collectors, while all who are interested in American prints will find it a fascinating book not only because of Mr. Drepperd's extensive and accurate knowledge of his subject, but also because he presents it in his general text as significant, each phase in its own era, of the current life and spirit of the nation."

+ N Y Times p26 Je 1 '30 180w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:14 D '30 50w

DRESBACH, GLENN WARD. Wind in the cedars. 106p $2 Holt

811 30-7020

As in his two previous volumes, In Colors of the West, and The Enchanted Mesa, Mr Dresbach's lyrics are descriptive of the southwestern scene of desert and mesa. These nature lyrics are for the most part conventional in form and descriptive or reflective in subject matter.

Booklist 26:349 Je '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p92 Je '30

Reviewed by E. L. Walton

Nation 130:736 Je 25 '30 100w

"Dresbach is one of our competent but not especially distinguished poets. . . He writes honestly and well of what he sees, but he sees only what is visible to any one." Granville Hicks

+ — N Y World p11m Mr 16 '30 80w

Reviewed by L. T. Nicholl

Outlook 154:549 Ap 2 '30 80w

"As time goes on, Mr. Dresbach emphasizes by sheer volume his claim to a high place among lyric poets of the middle-western plains and the far-western deserts and mountains. . . There is a certain monotony in his work, and many poems seem a kind of dilution which weakens in the reader's mind the impact of those deserving to be remembered." H. M.

+ — Poetry 36:43 Ap '30 650w

"Although Mr. Dresbach paints his small canvases with workmanlike clarity, his verses are seldom noticeable for the startling phrase, the unusual epithet. Here and there a fine picture is evolved in a phrase but these instances are rare enough to be remarkable. Mr. Dresbach has a slight tendency to philosophize, or rather to moralize, as he transcribes what he observes. But as he lacks the concentrated passion that lifts the didactic into the ecstatic or the prophetic, this is a tendency he would do well to restrain." J. S. Untermeyer

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:872 Mr 29 '30 450w

DREW, MRS MARY (GLADSTONE). Mary Gladstone (Mrs Drew) her diaries and letters; ed. by Lucy Masterman. 492p il $6 Dutton [21s Methuen]

B or 92 30-15761

A vivid picture of Victorian London and of the great personages, both political and literary, of that epoch is presented through these letters and diaries of Mary Gladstone, the daughter of William E. Gladstone, the prime-minister.

Booklist 27:24 S '30

Reviewed by Frances Winwar

Bookm 71:559 Ag '30 230w

"While the diaries are not principally interesting for any special intelligence or charm in the diarist, Mrs. Drew was an independent woman of considerable ability, if of desultory education. She had her opinions and tastes and she stated them severely when she wanted to. There are occasional signs of a direct mind and a keen tongue, and once in a while a description such as 'thin blue lady Mary' stands out sharply from mere gossip." F. K. Brown

Books p3 My 25 '30 900w

"The Diary never gives the impression of having been written for publication—more for reference, and we therefore appreciate the difficulties Mrs. Masterman had to encounter in the arranging of her material. The lack of an index is a drawback, but with such crowds of illustrious personages flitting across almost every page, we realize how much an index would have added to an already heavy work." E. M. W.

+ Cath World 132:120 O '30 320w

"As it presents vividly the whole of a long life in ordered extracts from diaries and letters. Mrs. Masterman is really to be congratulated on a brilliant exercise in the unobtrusive art of selection and compression.

+ Christian Science Monitor p13 S 27 '30 420w

"It is a pleasant book, well worth an evening's reading."

+ Current Hist 31:1031 Ag '30 280w

"Mary Gladstone's diary and letters are extremely interesting, and they could not well be anything else. She lived in the centre of those two remarkable families, the Gladstones and the Lytteltons. . . She was a woman of considerable intelligence and force of character, who, within the limits set by Victorian tradition, was capable of thinking and acting for herself." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 47:178 My 10 '30 700w

"Flashes of her gay radiance and gusto come back cross the diaries and letters which Mrs. Masterman has now most admirably edited. And yet there seems something missing. Hitherto posterity had viewed her in a glass darkly; had divined her out of the correspondences lavished on her by great men much older than herself—by Lord Acton and Ruskin. From the depth of these one inferred a similar depth in the girl to whom they were addressed; a range of unworldly thought, a spirituality, like that in the Burne-Jones drawing of her which here stands as a frontispiece. But her own pen gives little trace of it. She reports deep sayings of others; she essays none herself. The sparkle and swiftness of her diary are those of a shallow stream."

+ — New Statesman 34:844 Ap 5 '30 1300w

"Very little indeed passed unheeded before Mary Gladstone. Amiable and sympathetic though she was, she was also a person of very decided opinions which she did not hesitate to express. In spite of the brevity of her comment, a brevity often regrettable from the point of view of the contemporary reader, she has left us a vivid and inimitable picture of a London already vanished, or rapidly vanishing." Margaret Wallace

+ N Y Evening Post p9m My 24 '30 600w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p3 My 25 '30 2200w

"Entirely delightful. . . There is less actual literary merit in her own writing than there is in the admirable explanatory paragraphs by which the editor keeps the narrative flowing. But the diary and the letters have that great and increasingly rare quality, gusto. We venture to predict that everyone who starts this book will finish it." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 155:145 My 28 '30 400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:67 O '30

Pratt p35 autumn '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 81:12 Je '30 100w

St Louis 28:218 S '30

